(b) the employee is deployed to a Canadian Forces operation inside Canada that is or will be providing assistance in dealing with an emergency or with its aftermath; or

(c) the prescribed circumstances apply.

(2) Participation, whether inside or outside Canada, in pre-deployment or post-deployment activities that are required by the Canadian Forces in connection with an operation described in clause (1) (a) is considered deployment to the operation for the purposes of that clause.

On December 3, 2007, the ESA 2000 was amended by the Fairness for Military Families Act (Employment Standards and Health Insurance), 2007, SO 2007, c 16 to create a new leave entitlement called reservist leave. This new standard gives an employee, who is a reservist, the right to a leave of absence if the employee will not be performing the duties of his or her position because the employee is deployed to specified Canadian Forces operations. A "reservist" is defined as a member of the reserve force of the Canadian Forces as referred to in s. 15(3) of the National Defence Act, RSC 1985, c N-5.

Sections 50.2(1) and (2) provide that an employee who is a reservist will be entitled to the leave if:

1. The employee cannot perform the duties of their position because:
    - Of a deployment to a Canadian Forces operation outside Canada;
    - Of a deployment to a Canadian Forces operation inside Canada that is or will be providing assistance in dealing with an emergency or with its aftermath; or
    - Prescribed circumstances that may apply; or
2. The employee is participating in pre or post-deployment activities required by the Canadian Forces in connection with a Canadian Forces operation outside of Canada.

With respect to s. 50.2(1)(b), the term "emergency" is defined in s. 50.2(11) to mean:

- A situation or an impending situation that constitutes a danger of major proportions that could result in serious harm to persons or substantial damage to property and that is caused by the forces of nature, a disease or other health risk, an accident or an act whether intentional or otherwise; or
- A situation in which a search and rescue operation takes place.

At the time of writing, there are no prescribed circumstances that apply pursuant to s. 50.2(1)(c).

Section 50.2(2) states that the participation in pre-deployment or post-deployment activities that are required by the Canadian Forces in connection with an operation outside of Canada is considered deployment to the operation. This provision extends the period during which an employee is entitled to take reservist leave to include time engaged in any pre- or post-deployment activities required by the Canadian Forces in connection with an operation outside of Canada.

Restriction – s. 50.2(3)

50.2(3) An employee is not entitled to begin a leave under this section unless he or she has been employed by the employer for at least the prescribed period or, if no period is prescribed, for at least six consecutive months.

To be eligible for reservist leave, the employee has to have been employed by the employer for at least six consecutive months. As of the time of writing, no alternative period has been prescribed.

It is not necessary that the employee be actively working for all or any part of the qualifying period prior to commencing the leave. For example, the employee could be off receiving short-term disability benefits, on a Part XIV leave, on vacation, or on lay-off during the six month qualifying period. As long as there has been no break in the employment relationship within the preceding six month period, the employee is entitled to commence a leave.

Length of Leave – s. 50.2(4)

50.2(4) An employee is entitled to take leave under this section for the prescribed period or, if no period is prescribed, for as long as clause (1)(a) or (b) or the circumstances set out in a regulation made under clause(1) (c) apply to him or her.

Section 50.2(4) provides that an employee's entitlement to reservist leave lasts for the prescribed period or, if no period is prescribed, for as long clause (1)(a) or (b) or (c) apply to the employee. At the time of writing, there has been no period prescribed nor have circumstances been set out for the purposes of clause (1)(c) – therefore, the length of the leave will be as long as clause 50.2.1(a) or (b) applies to the employee (i.e., deployment to a Canadian Forces operation outside Canada or to one inside Canada that is dealing with an emergency or its aftermath. Note that s. 50.2(2) provides that participation in pre-deployment or post-deployment activities required by the Canadian Forces in connection with an operation outside of Canada is treated as deployment to such an operation for the purposes of s. 50.2(1)(a).

Advising Employer Re Start of Leave – ss. 50.2(5), (6)

50.2(5) An employee who intends to take a leave under this section shall give his or her employer the prescribed period of notice of the day on which he or she will begin the leave or, if no notice period is prescribed, reasonable notice.

(6) Despite subsection (5), if the employee must begin the leave before advising the employer, the employee shall advise the employer of the leave as soon as possible after beginning it.

Section 50.2(5) requires an employee who intends to take reservist leave to give their employer the prescribed period of notice of the day on which the employee will begin the leave or, if no notice period is prescribed, reasonable notice. At the time of writing, there has been no prescribed period of notice, therefore an employee is required to give their employer reasonable notice in advance that the employee intends to take reservist leave. In circumstances where that cannot be done, the employee is required pursuant to s. 50.2(6), to advise the employer as soon as possible after beginning the leave. The employee is required to advise the employer in writing pursuant to s. 50.2(10).

An employee does not lose their right to reservist leave if the employee fails to comply with ss. 50.2(5) or (6). An employee's entitlement to reservist leave arises where an employee meets the qualifying conditions in s. 50.2(1). It is the Program's position that the failure to advise the employer before or as soon as possible after the leave begins does not negate that entitlement. This approach is consistent in the context of the other statutory leaves, where the structure of the entitlement and notice provisions are similar to these. See for example ESA Part XIV, ss. 46(4) and 48(4).

Similarly, the question may arise as to whether an employer can penalize an employee for failing to give advance notice that the employee will be absent from work (as may be required under an employer policy), where the time off is a reservist leave under the ESA 2000. Section 50.2 sets out the conditions for an employee's eligibility for reservist leave. Section 50.2(5) requires the employee taking reservist leave to advise the employer that the employee is taking the leave, and s. 50.2(6) provides that "if the employee must begin the leave before advising the employer, the employee shall advise the employer of the leave as soon as possible after beginning it." It is clear from s. 50.2(6) that the Act contemplates situations where the employee would be unable to advise the employer in advance of commencing the reservist leave - however, it also clear from s. 50.2(5) that an employee who can give advance notice must do so. Consequently, the failure to give notice in advance of taking leave, when it would have been possible for the employee to do so, can be the subject of disciplinary action by the employer without violating s. 74. However, the following points should be borne in mind:

- The employee's failure to give advance written notice would not be a lawful basis on which to deprive the employee of the right to take the leave if the qualifying conditions in s. 50.2(1) have been met. An employer could not, for example, take the position that failure to give advance notice when it would have been possible for the employee to do so will result in the time taken off not be considered as reservist leave.

- Any discipline for failing to provide notice in situations where such notice is required under s. 50.2(5) (i.e., where s. 50.2(6) does not apply) would have to be appropriately linked to the failure to give advance written notice and must not, in effect penalize the employee for exercising the right to leave. The motive for any discipline that the employer does impose must clearly be the employee's failure to give advance written notice and not the taking of the leave itself.

In addition, where s. 50(2)(6) does apply, an employer would be able to impose discipline if an employee fails to provide written notice of the reservist leave after the leave commences, or if the employee provides notice of the leave so late that one would not reasonably be able to say that it falls within s. 50.2(6). However, the employer's disciplinary action would have to be appropriate, and in no way a penalty or reprisal for the employee having taken the leave, but only for the failure to give notice.

Evidence of Entitlement – ss. 50.2(7), (8)

50.2(7) An employer may require an employee who takes a leave under this section to provide evidence that the employee is entitled to the leave.

(8) When evidence is required under subsection (7), the employee shall,

(a) provide the prescribed evidence, or evidence reasonable in the circumstances if no evidence is prescribed; and

(b) provide the evidence at the prescribed time, or at a time reasonable in the circumstances if no time is prescribed.

Section 50.2(7) gives an employer the ability to require an employee to provide proof that the employee is or was entitled to take reservist leave. Where an employer does require evidence, section 50.2(8) states that the employee shall:

- Provide the prescribed evidence, or evidence reasonable in the circumstances if no evidence is prescribed; and
- Provide the evidence at the prescribed time, or at a time reasonable in the circumstances if no time is prescribed.

At the time of writing, there has been no prescribed evidence or prescribed time. Therefore, where evidence is required, it must be evidence that is reasonable in the circumstances. Evidence of entitlement to reservist leave may be a document, notice or other kind of confirmation from the Canadian Forces that one of the qualifying conditions set out in s. 50.2(1) applies to the employee. The evidence that would be considered "reasonable in the circumstances" will depend upon all of the circumstance in any given situation.

Further, the employee is obliged to provide the evidence at a time that is reasonable in the circumstances. The corollary of this is that timelines imposed by the employer for providing such evidence must be reasonable in the circumstances.

Advising Employer Re End of Leave – s. 50.2(9)

50.2(9) An employee who intends to end a leave taken under this section shall give his or her employer the prescribed period of notice of the day on which he or she intends to end the leave or, if no notice period is prescribed, reasonable notice.

Section 50.2(9) requires an employee who has taken reservist leave and intends to end the leave, to give their employer the prescribed period of notice of the day on which the employee intends to end the leave, or if no notice period is prescribed, reasonable notice. At the time of writing, no period of notice has been prescribed; therefore an employee shall give their employer reasonable notice in advance of the day on which the employee intends to end the leave. The employee is required to advise the employer in writing pursuant to s. 50.2(10).

Note however that pursuant to s. 53(1.1), an employer of an employee who has been on a reservist leave may postpone the employee's reinstatement until:

1. A prescribed day; or
2. If no day is prescribed, the later of,
    - The day that is two weeks after the day on which the leave ends; and
    - The first pay day that falls after the day on which the leave ends.

Consequently, even though an employee has provided notice of their intended return date from leave in accordance with s. 50.2(9), the employer may postpone the employee's reinstatement under s. 53(1.1). As no day has been prescribed under s. 53(1.1)(a), the employer may postpone the reinstatement to the later of the day that is two weeks after the day the leave was to end or, the first pay day that falls after the day on which the leave was to end as per the employee's notice.

Written Notice – s. 50.2(10)

50.2(10) Notice under subsection (5), (6) or (9) shall be given in writing.

Section 50.2(10) requires that notice under s. 50.2(5) and (6) (advising the employer regarding start of leave) and s. 50.2(9) (advising the employer re: end of leave) must be given in writing. This is in contrast to the requirement to advise the employer in the sick leave, family responsibility leave or bereavement leave contexts. In those contexts, the notice may be given in writing or orally.

Definition, Emergency – s. 50.2(11)

50.2(11) In clause (1) (b),

"emergency" means,

(a) a situation or an impending situation that constitutes a danger of major proportions that could result in serious harm to persons or substantial damage to property and that is caused by the forces of nature, a disease or other health risk, an accident or an act whether intentional or otherwise, or

(b) a situation in which a search and rescue operation takes place.

Section 50.2(11) defines what "emergency" means in s. 50.2(1)(b) with respect to Canadian Forces operations inside Canada. Example of emergencies that could meet the requirements under s. 50.2(1)(b) are Canadian Forces search and rescue operations and operations to provide assistance in dealing with natural disasters or their aftermath.

Transition – s. 50.2(12)

50.2(12) This section applies only if,

(a) the deployment described in subsection (1) begins on or after the day the Fairness for Military Families Act (Employment Standards and Health Insurance), 2007 receives Royal Assent; and

(b) notice under subsection (5) or (6) is given on or after the day described in clause (a).

Section 50.2(12) states that the reservist leave provisions only apply if the deployment described in s. 50.2(1) began on or after December 3, 2007, the day the Fairness for Military Families Act (Employment Standards and Health Insurance), 2007 received Royal Assent and further requires that notice of the leave be given on or after that date, in accordance with ss. 50.2(5) or (6).

As a consequence of this provision, an employee is not entitled to reservist leave in respect of a deployment that commenced before December 3, 2007.

ESA Part XIV Section 51 - Rights During Leave

51(1) During any leave under this Part, an employee continues to participate in each type of benefit plan described in subsection (2) that is related to his or her employment unless he or she elects in writing not to do so.

This section allows an employee on a Part XIV leave to continue to participate in all the types of plans listed in s. 51(2), unless he or she elects in writing not to do so. In other words, unless the employee advises in writing to the contrary, the employer must assume that the employee will continue to participate in the benefit plans, and therefore both the employer and the employee will continue to make their respective contributions.

Special rules apply to reservist leave - see ss. 51(4) and (5) below.

The employee on leave continues to participate in the specified benefit plans, even if all the employees in the employee's department are laid off, go on strike, or are locked out while he or she is on leave, and the benefits of those other employees are cut off. He or she has the right to have the employer pay its share of the contributions during the entire leave - subject to the provisions of s. 51(3).

An employee may already be on lay-off, on strike or locked out when he or she commences the leave, and his or her benefits may have been suspended when the lay-off, strike or lock-out began. However, when the employee begins the leave, he or she has the right to begin participation again in the benefit plans and require the employer to pay its share of the contributions during the entire leave - subject to the provisions of s. 51(3).

Note: participation in certain benefit plans is fundamentally different from the right to continue to accrue credit for length of service (and seniority and length of employment) during a leave, as provided in s. 52. Typically, the right to ongoing participation in a benefit plan is not a function of length service, length of employment or seniority. It is simply an arrangement for the payment or sharing of the payment of a premium. As a result, the rights to continue to participate in these plans are set out separately from the right to accrue service (and seniority and length of employment) while on leave.

However, the right to begin participating in a benefit plan may be tied to length of service or length of employment. It is not unusual, for example, for the terms of a benefit plan to require the employee to have been employed for three months or to have completed three months of service before he or she will be eligible for benefits under the plan. In that case, time spent on leave would count towards the length of service or length of employment required for participation in the plan.

Benefit Plans - s. 51(2)

51(2) Subsection (1) applies with respect to pension plans, life insurance plans, accidental death plans, extended health plans, dental plans and any prescribed type of benefit plan.

Under s. 51(1), an employee who is on a Part XIV leave (with some exceptions that apply to reservist leave - see s. 51(4) and (5)) has the right to continue to participate in certain benefit plans. This section lists the plans to which s. 51(1) applies:

- Pension plans;
- Life insurance plans;
- Accidental death plans;
- Extended health plans;
- Dental plans;
- Any other plans that are prescribed by regulation (as of the date of writing, no other plans have been prescribed).

There are no specific definitions of these plans for the purposes of Part XIV (Leaves of Absence). However, the terms "pension plan" and "life insurance plan" are defined in s. 1 of O Reg 286/01, and it may be helpful to refer to those definitions should an issue arise as to whether a plan is a pension plan or an insurance plan.

Subsection 51(2) itself gives an employee the right to continue to participate only in the types of plans listed in the subsection. If the employer provides other types of plans, it would not be a violation of the subsection for the employer to discontinue the employee's participation in those plans for the length of the leave. The most significant types of plans that are not listed in this section (and that are often provided by employers) are short-term and long-term disability plans. However, s. 51(1) should be read in conjunction with s. 10 of O Reg 286/01, which provides as follows:

10 (1) A benefit plan to which Part XIII of the Act applies shall not disentitle an employee who is on a leave of absence described in subsection (2) from continuing to participate in the benefit plan during the leave of absence, if the benefit plan entitles an employee who is on a leave of absence other than one described in subsection (2) to continue to participate.

(2) This subsection applies to,

(a) a leave of absence under Part XIV[1] of the Act; and

(b) any longer leave of absence that the employee has applied for under a provision in the contract of employment that prevails under subsection 5(2) of the Act.

The effect of s. 10 of O Reg 286/01 is to require short-term and long-term disability benefits to continue to be provided to employees on Part XIV leave (and any longer leave that constitutes a "greater right or benefit" under s. 5(2) of the Act) if the employer's plan provides such benefits to employees on leaves other than Part XIV leaves (e.g., education leave). (Note that all references to a Part XIV leave in this and the next paragraph include a leave that constitutes "a greater right or benefit".) Only if the plan denies access to disability benefits during non-Part XIV leaves can the employee be denied access to disability benefits while on a Part XIV leave.

Further, even in this latter case (where a plan denies access to disability benefits during non-Part XIV leaves and s. 10 of O Reg 286/01 therefore does not apply), a female employee on a pregnancy or parental leave can access short-term and long-term disability benefits that she would have had access to had she not been on a pregnancy or parental leave during that portion of the leave in which she is unable to work for health reasons related to pregnancy or childbirth. This is because of the Supreme Court of Canada decision in Brooks v Canada Safeway Ltd., [1989] 1 SCR 1219, 1989 CanLII 96 (SCC), in which the Court held that because discrimination on the basis of pregnancy is discrimination on the basis of sex, it is discriminatory to deny women short-term or long-term disability benefits that they otherwise would have been entitled to had they not been on the leave during that portion of a leave in which they are unable to work for health-related reasons related to pregnancy or childbirth, as these constitute a valid-health related reason for an absence from work. As a result, it would constitute discrimination on the basis of sex to deny a female employee disability benefits for that period of the leave. For other court decisions respecting the right to disability benefits for female employees during the "health related" portion of a pregnancy leave, see Alberta Hospital Association v Parcels, 1992 CanLII 6106 (AB QB) and O.S.S.T.F., District 34 v. Barton.

Note that this requirement to permit a female employee on a pregnancy or parental leave access to short-term and long-term disability benefits during that portion of the leave that she is unable to work for health reasons related to pregnancy or childbirth applies only if the employee would otherwise have had access to the plan had she not been on leave. If the employee could not have had access even if she had not gone on leave, there would be no requirement to provide plan benefits. Consider the example of an employer who offers only a modest short-term disability plan (say, three days per year) and no long-term plan who closes its operations from November to March every year. The employer puts all of its employees on temporary lay-off during this time, and discontinues its provision of short-term disability benefits for all employees during the lay-off. If an employee began her pregnancy leave on December 1, it would not be a violation of the Act if she cannot access the disability benefits for the portion of her leave in which she is unable to work for health reasons related to pregnancy and childbirth, because she would not have had access to those benefits even if she had not taken leave.

[1] Although s. 10(2)(a) refers to all leaves of absences under Part XIV, it must be noted that s. 51(4) provides specifically that employees on reservist leave do not continue to participate in the plans listed in s. 51(1). It is the Programs position that s. 10 of O Reg 286/01 cannot be used to provide a right to such plans to those employees. However, where an employer provides other types of benefit plans (other than the plans enumerated in s. 51(2)), to employees on a leave other than a leave under Part XIV (e.g. education leave), then s. 10 would operate to entitle employees on a reservist leave to participate in those other plans.

51(3) During an employee's leave under this Part, the employer shall continue to make the employer's contributions for any plan described in subsection (2) unless the employee gives the employer a written notice that the employee does not intend to pay the employee's contributions, if any.

Pursuant to this provision, an employer will be relieved of the obligation to make the employer portion of contributions to the benefit plans listed in s. 51(2) only if the employer has obtained a written notice from the employee that he or she will not be paying his or her portion of the contributions. (This provision must be read in conjunction with s. 51(4) and (5), which establishes special rules for reservist leave.)

Although, generally, obtaining the written notice that the employee will not make contributions is an administrative problem for the employer rather than a matter of interpretation under the Employment Standards Act, 2000, an officer may have to determine whether such a notice might have been obtained under duress.

An employer may find it helpful to provide employees with sufficient information to enable the employee to make an informed decision to continue paying the contributions to reduce the possibility of a claim that the employee was "tricked" into giving the notice.

Example 1

Employee A gives the employer written notice that she does not intend to continue paying her share of the contributions, if any, during her pregnancy and parental leave. The employer will not continue its share during the leave and A's coverage will lapse during the leave. The group insurance plan may also require that A, after the end of her leave, undergo a waiting period before becoming re-enrolled in the plan.

Example 2

Employee B gives the employer written notice that he wishes to pay his share of the contributions to continue coverage during his parental leave (or does not give any notice at all), but B turns out to be unable to pay the contributions during the leave. The employer may pay both the employer and employee share during the leave and then, with B's written authorization, deduct B's share of the contributions from his wages after he returns to work. If the employer does not pay both the employer's and B's shares in this manner, the employer will, in the case of non-pension benefits, pay both the employer's and B's share, but for a pro-rated portion of the leave. For example, if the employer's share is 50 per cent, the employer would pay 100 per cent, but only for half of the leave. There would be no coverage during the second half of the leave and the employee may be required to undergo a waiting period after the end of the leave before becoming re-enrolled in the plan. With pension benefits, the employer would pay its share during the whole leave, and B, to the extent that the plan allowed, would have the right to make up his share after the leave.

Contribution Calculations

If the employer's benefit plan contributions are a percentage of the employee's wages, the employer is still obligated to make contributions during the leave, even though the employee is not receiving any wages from the employer during that time. The amount of the contributions would be determined with reference to the wage rate that the employee received prior to going on leave. If this prior wage rate fluctuated and the employment contract did not stipulate how contributions are to be determined, a reasonable average should be calculated in order to determine the base on which the contributions are computed. Officers may consider it appropriate to calculate the average regular wage over the 12 weeks, a period used in the context of Part XV of the Act (Termination and Severance of Employment), preceding the commencement of the leave. Where a wage increase is given to other employees during the leave and the employee would have received such an increase if he or she had not gone on leave, the employer contributions during the leave in regards to the employee should be adjusted upwards to reflect the increase.

Some employers do not offer benefit plans. Rather, they pay directly to the employee some amount of money instead of making contributions to a plan. These are often known as "percentage in lieu of benefits" arrangements. As such payments are not contributions to a benefit plan, an employer is not required to continue making them during the course of a Part XIV leave.

Annual contributions to group Registered Retirement Savings Plans ("RRSP") are limited to an amount related to wages received. The continuation of contributions to a group RRSP while an employee is on leave and not receiving any wages may result in an over-contribution to the plan. This possible result does not absolve the employer of its obligation to continue contributions throughout the leave. If an over-contribution does result, the recovery rules of the plan or of the Canada Revenue Agency ("CRA") will apply. However, where employees are participating in deferred profit-sharing plans, CRA has the authority to revoke the plan when contributions exceed the maximum allowable. Therefore, Program policy is that employers may cease making contributions to these plans, but only once they reach the maximum amount allowable under CRA rules.

If the employer is a member of a Multi-Employer Benefit Plan, and contributions are not required to be made to the plan in order to continue the employee's coverage during the leave, the employer will still be required to make contributions during the leave, except in cases where the employee is not required to draw on his or her benefit credits, if any, during the leave.

Reservist Leave - ss. 51(4), (5)

51(4) Subsections (1), (2) and (3) do not apply in respect of an employee during a leave under section 50.2, unless otherwise prescribed.

(5) Despite subsection (4), subsections (1), (2) and (3) apply in respect of an employee during a period of postponement under subsection 53 (1.1), unless otherwise prescribed.

An employee who is on a statutory leave other than reservist leave continues to participate in all types of benefit plans listed in s. 51(2) (e.g., pension plans, life insurance plans, accidental death plans, extended health plans, and dental plans) unless he or she elects not to do so. Pursuant to s. 51(4), an employee on reservist leave does not have the right to continue to participate in such benefit plans and the employer is not required to make contributions to the specified plans during an employee's reservist leave. However, if an employer elects to postpone the employee's return date pursuant to s. 53(1.1) (see ESA Part XIV s. 53 for a discussion), s. 51(5) entitles an employee to resume participating in the plans during the postponement period, unless he or she elects not to do so, and correspondingly requires the employer to resume making its contributions to the plans.

The special rules regarding benefit plan participation during reservist leave and the postponement period set out in ss. 51(4) and (5) apply unless otherwise prescribed. At the time of writing, no other rules had been prescribed.

ESA Part XIV Section 51.1 – Leave and Vacation Conflict

Leave and Vacation Conflict – s. 51.1(1)

51.1(1) An employee who is on leave under this Part may defer taking vacation until the leave expires or, if the employer and employee agree to a later date, until that later date if,

(a) under the terms of the employee's employment contract, the employee may not defer taking vacation that would otherwise be forfeited or the employee's ability to do so is restricted; and

(b) as a result, in order to exercise his or her right to leave under this Part, the employee would have to,

- i. forfeit vacation or vacation pay, or
- ii. take less than his or her full leave entitlement.

This provision was introduced by the ESA 2000. It addresses the situation where an employment contract places restrictions on the ability to defer taking vacation entitlements, such that a conflict between the right to vacation and the right to take a Part XIV leave is created. Specifically, it applies where an employment contract restricts or forbids the deferral of taking vacation, and, as a result, an employee on a Part XIV leave would have to either take less than their full Part XIV leave entitlement or give up some or all of their vacation or vacation pay entitlement under an employment contract. In this case, the employee has the option of deferring taking the vacation until the leave is over, or to a later date agreed upon in writing by the employer and employee. See ESA Part I, s. 1(3) and s. 1(3.1) for more information on agreements in writing. Section 51.1(2) addresses conflicts between vacation and Part XIV leaves that arise because of the statutory deadline for taking vacation. See subsection (2) below.

For example, an employment contract provides an employee whose period of employment is less than five years with three paid weeks of vacation per year. With respect to the one week that is over and above the ESA 2000's minimum standards, the contract has a "use it or lose it" clause that stipulates the extra week of vacation must be used by December 31 of each year. A recently hired employee is on a combined pregnancy and parental leave from July 1, 2018, to July 1, 2019. She had not taken any of the extra week of vacation before going on leave. Section 51.1(1) provides that the employee has the option of taking that extra week when her leave ends on July 1, 2019, or to a later date if she and the employer agree.

This section should be read in conjunction with s. 51.1(3), which allows an employee to forego vacation time (but not vacation pay), if the employee's employer agrees (in writing) and the Director of Employment Standards approves the agreement. See subsection (3) further below.

Leave and Completion of Vacation Conflict – s. 51.1(2)

51.1(2) If an employee is on leave under this Part on the day by which his or her vacation must be completed under paragraph 1 of section 35 or paragraph 1 of subsection 35.1(2), the uncompleted part of the vacation shall be completed immediately after the leave expires or, if the employer and employee agree to a later date, beginning on that later date.

This provision addresses the situation where the s. 35 or s. 35.1 deadline for taking vacation entitlements under the ESA 2000 comes up while an employee is on a Part XIV leave. In this case, the vacation is to be taken immediately upon the expiry of the leave, or, if the employer and employee agree in writing on a later date. See ESA Part I, s. 1(3) and s. 1(3.1) for more information on agreements in writing. Section 51.1(1) addresses conflicts between vacation and Part XIV leaves that arise because of contractual restrictions on deferring vacation entitlements - see subsection (1) above.

For example, an employee is entitled to two weeks of vacation provided for in s. 33 (1) of the ESA 2000. The employee started work on January 1, 2016. The deadline for completing the vacation earned from January 1, 2016, to December 31, 2016, is, pursuant to s. 35, October 31, 2017. The employee is on a combined pregnancy and parental leave from February 1, 2017, to January 31, 2018 (however, note that a combined pregnancy and parental leave may be longer than 52 weeks, up to a maximum entitlement of 78 weeks). She had not taken any vacation prior to her leave. Section 51.1(2) provides that the two weeks of vacation will be taken immediately after her leave expires, i.e., the two weeks' vacation must start on February 1, 2018. If the employee and employer agree in writing, the employee can take her vacation at a later date.

This section should be read in conjunction with s. 51.1(3), which allows an employee to forego vacation time (but not vacation pay), if the employee's employer agrees (in writing) and the Director of Employment Standards approves the agreement. See subsection (3) below.

51.1(3) An employee to whom this section applies may forego vacation and receive vacation pay in accordance with section 41 rather than completing his or her vacation under this section.

This provision was introduced by the ESA 2000. It provides that an employee to whom s. 51.1 applies (i.e., an employee on a Part XIV leave whose leave creates a conflict with his or her vacation rights) can, instead of taking his or her vacation at the end of the leave (or at a later date agreed to with the employer) as provided for in s. 51.1(2) and (3), forego the vacation time and receive only the vacation pay. This alternative right can only be exercised in accordance with s. 41 of the ESA 2000, i.e., if the employer agrees in writing to the plan, and the Director of Employment Standards approves the agreement. See ESA Part I, s. 1(3) and s. 1(3.1) for more information on agreements in writing.

Length of Employment – s. 52(1)

52(1) The period of an employee's leave under this Part shall be included in calculating any of the following for the purpose of determining his or her rights under an employment contract:

1. The length of his or her employment, whether or not it is active employment.

2. The length of the employee's service, whether or not that service is active.

3. The employee's seniority.

Section 52(1) requires employers to give employees on Part XIV leave credit toward length of employment, length of service and seniority for the purpose of determining the employee's rights under an employment contract. This provision should be read in conjunction with the exception contained in s. 52(2) of the ESA 2000 regarding completion of probationary periods.

In other words, if rights or other entitlements are earned by way of length of employment, length of service or seniority, these rights or entitlements will continue to accrue during periods of Part XIV leave.

An attempt to exclude periods of Part XIV leave from the calculation of length of service, seniority and length of employment and corresponding entitlements to rights or benefits will be considered null and void, as an attempt to contract out of the ESA 2000. A proration clause will be void if its effect is to remove the period (or portion thereof) of Part XIV leave from the calculation of length of service, seniority or length of employment and by extension, reduce an entitlement that normally accrues through length of service, seniority or length of employment. It may even be considered an attempt to penalize the employee for having exercised the right to leave and thereby constitute a violation of s. 74 of the ESA 2000.

Note, however, that in the context of the requirement that time spent on leave be included when determining the employee's length of service, it is the policy of the Program that employees will earn credit only for length of service, but not for service itself, i.e., the employee is not treated as if they had actually been at work during the leave. This reflects a change in past policy. For more details, see the discussion under the heading "Vacation Entitlements" further on in this section.

History

Section 42(4) of the former Employment Standards Act, which was the predecessor to s. 52(1) of the ESA 2000, was amended effective December 1, 1996, by the Employment Standards Improvement Act, 1996, SO 1996, c 23. The earlier version of s. 42(4) read as follows:

42(4) Seniority continues to accrue during pregnancy leave or parental leave.

The amendment codified the Program's original policy position (held between December 1990 and November 1995) regarding the interpretation of the word "seniority" in the pre-1996 version of s. 42(4). During that period, the Program took the view that seniority included the concept of service and, therefore, employees accrued not only seniority but also credit for service during periods of pregnancy and parental leave. However, that interpretation was not supported by adjudicators and referees, and the policy was changed on November 15, 1995. From November 15, 1995, until s. 42(4) was amended by the Employment Standards Improvement Act, 1996 on December 1, 1996, the Program's position was that the word seniority could not be interpreted to include the concept of "service".

On December 1, 1996, the "new" s. 42(4) came into force, specifically requiring employers to credit employees not only for seniority but also for length of service (as well as "length of employment") during periods of pregnancy and parental leave (the only two leaves available under the ESA 2000 at that time).

Calculation of Service – Transitional Issues

All employees on leave as of December 1, 1996, began accruing credit for length of service as of that date, even though the leave commenced prior to that date. For example, an employee who was on a leave from August 1, 1996, to February 1, 1997, would not receive any credit for length of service for the period August 1 to November 30, 1996, but would accrue such credit for the period December 1, 1996, to February 1, 1997.

In this example, the employee also accrued credit for seniority and length of employment for the entire period of leave (August 1, 1996 to February 1, 1997).

The phrases in paragraphs 1 and 2 and s. 52(1), "whether or not it is active employment" and "whether or not that service is active" indicate that for purposes of contractual provisions that refer to, say, "length of active employment" or "length of active service", time spent on a Part XIV leave will be counted in determining the employees length of active employment or length of active service, even though the period of an employee's pregnancy or parental leave, for example, might not ordinarily be considered to be a period of active employment or active service. The effect is that the employer cannot prorate entitlements that are dependent upon length of employment or length of service because the employee was not working during the period of leave.

For example, a contract provides that employees who have provided "two years of active service" are eligible for a Christmas bonus. A two-year employee who was away on pregnancy and parental leave for one of those two years will be eligible for the bonus. (Note: it does not matter if the bonus falls within the definition of wages in s. 1 of the ESA 2000 or not. Any entitlement driven by length of service, length of employment or seniority continues to accrue under this section).

However, the contract further provides that the amount of the bonus is to be calculated as a percentage of wages earned during the last two years. Where the amount of the bonus is calculated as a percentage of wages earned, the bonus could be reduced proportionally to reflect the fact that the employee only worked for part of that period.

Length of Employment

The Program has always taken the position that statutory leaves had no impact on an employee's length of employment, because a leave did not sever the employment relationship. The employee remained "employed" during the leave, even though they were not actively at work. Entitlements or rights that were earned after the employee had been employed for a specified length of time were therefore unaffected by the fact that an employee had taken a leave. Section 52(1) confirms this policy position and also precludes prorating rights or entitlements by using language in the contract that attempts to distinguish between "active" and "inactive" periods of employment.

Length of Service

Section 52(1) also precludes employers from prorating rights or entitlements that are dependent on the length of an employee's service under a contract of employment. Whereas length of employment is generally understood to mean the length of time elapsed since the date of hire, "length of service" is more likely to mean the period that an employee is providing services to the employer. Where an entitlement under an employment contract is dependent upon length of service, s. 52(1) requires that the time an employee spent on a Part XIV leave be included, even though they were not actually working during the leave period. Contract language that attempts to exclude inactive service from the calculation of length of service will be ineffectual.

Seniority

Seniority is a term frequently used in collective agreements and will often determine such things as order of lay-off or recall, or confer entitlements to job promotions and increases in annual vacation entitlements.

Under s. 52(1), entitlements that accrue through "seniority" under a contract will continue to accrue during periods of Part XIV leave.

Vacation as per Part XI of ESA 2000

Under Part XI of the ESA 2000, vacation is composed of two separate elements – vacation time and vacation pay.

Vacation Time:

Vacation time accrues on the basis of completion of a vacation entitlement period. Under s. 33(1), employees whose period of employment on completion of a vacation entitlement year is less than five years are entitled to two weeks of vacation after each vacation entitlement year and employees whose period of employment on completion of a vacation entitlement year is more than five years are entitled to three weeks of vacation after each vacation entitlement year. Under s. 34(2) and (3), employees whose period of employment on completion of a stub period is less than five years are entitled to a pro-rated amount of two weeks of vacation time and employees whose period of employment on completion of a stub period is more than five years are entitled to a pro-rated amount of three weeks of vacation time in respect of the stub period.

Section 33(2) and s. 34(4) provide that inactive as well as active periods of employment be included in the 12-month vacation entitlement year for the purpose of determining an employee's entitlement to vacation time. Consequently, an employee who takes a Part XIV leave during a vacation entitlement year will still have completed 12 months of employment during a vacation entitlement year even if they were not at work for much of that time, as the case may be in the context of a combined pregnancy and parental leave. In addition, the period of time spent on leave will count towards the employee's period of employment for the purposes of determining the amount of vacation (two or three weeks) to which the employee is entitled.

Vacation Pay:

Vacation pay is calculated under s. 35.2 of the ESA 2000 as a percentage of gross wages excluding vacation pay earned in the period during which the vacation time was earned. Employees who are not earning wages (which will include employees on pregnancy and parental leave under Part XIV) will not have earned any vacation pay during their leave.

Example 1

An employee whose period of employment is more than five years is entitled to three weeks of vacation after each year of employment and vacation pay at 6% of gross wages earned in that year. If the employee was on pregnancy and parental leave for all 52 weeks of the year (), they would be entitled to three weeks' vacation time at the end of the year but her vacation pay, calculated as 6% of the wages earned in the year, would amount to zero.

Example 2

The contract of employment provides a greater right or benefit than the minimum standard for vacation by giving the employee four weeks of vacation after each year of employment and vacation pay at 8% of gross wages earned in that year. This greater right is enforced as per s. 5(2) of the ESA 2000. If the employee was on a Part XIV parental leave for 37 weeks of the year, he would be entitled to the full four weeks of vacation time at the end of the year; however, the vacation pay would be just 8% of the wages earned during the 15 weeks the employee was not on leave (because the employee was not earning wages during the 37 weeks of leave).

Vacation Time Earned Through Service and Vacation Pay Earned as a Percentage of Wages

As noted earlier, it is now the policy of the Program that employees who are on Part XIV leave will earn credit for length of service; they are not earning credit for the service itself. In other words, the employee is not treated for all purposes as if they had actually been at work providing service throughout the leave, but only for purposes of those rights that depend upon length of employment or length of service. The impact of this policy change may be seen where vacation time is earned through service during the year rather than "length of service" or length of employment (which would be measured from when service or employment first began).

Example

The contract of employment provides that employees whose period of employment is less than five years are entitled to three weeks of vacation for every year of service (i.e. it is driven by service, rather than "length of service") and accrue vacation pay at the rate of six per cent of gross wages. The employee was on parental leave for 37 weeks in a year.

Vacation Time

Because the employee is not providing service during the leave, the employment contract would result in vacation time off being calculated as follows: 3 weeks x (15 weeks worked divided by 52 weeks) = .87 weeks of vacation time accrued.

Although, on its face, the vacation time provisions of the contract of employment might appear at first to provide a greater right or benefit than the employment standard set out in s. 33(1)(a) of the ESA 2000, in our example, the contract does not in fact provide a greater right or benefit. Consequently, the employment standard in s. 33(1)(a) should be applied to provide the employee with two weeks of vacation time for the vacation entitlement year.

Previously, under the former Employment Standards Act, it was the policy of the Program that the employee would be entitled to the full three weeks of vacation time in this example, because the policy was that the employee was to be credited for service during the leave for all purposes, i.e., the employer could not pro-rate the employee's entitlement because they had to be treated as if the employee had actually worked through the leave. The Program's position now under the ESA 2000 is that the employee earns credit for length of service, but not for service per se, i.e., the employee is not treated for all purposes as if they had actually been at work during the leave.

Vacation Pay

In this example, the employee's vacation pay entitlement under the employment contract is 6% of the wages he earned during the 52 weeks. This would be a greater right or benefit than the employment standard set out in ESA Part XI, s. 35.2, and thus would prevail. As the employee only earned wages for 15 weeks of the year, his vacation pay would be a little less than one week's pay, i.e. 6% of the 15 weeks' wages.

Vacation Time and Vacation Pay Earned Through Service

Some contracts of employment provide for "paid vacations" earned through service. In these contracts, both vacation time and vacation pay are earned together as a function of service. Once again, the new policy of the Program is that employees who are on leave will earn credit for length of service but they are not earning credit for the service itself. In other words, the employee is not treated for all purposes as if they had been actually at work throughout the leave, but only for purposes of rights that depend upon length of employment or length of service. Where both vacation time and vacation pay are earned through service, the determination must be made as to whether the contractual provisions provide the employee with a greater benefit than the employment standards in ESA Part XI, s. 33 (1)(a) or s. 33(1)(b), s. 34(2) or s. 34(3) and s. 35.2.

Example

An employee is on pregnancy and parental leave for 39 weeks during a vacation entitlement year. The employment contract states that employees are entitled to 1.5 paid vacation days for each month of active service during the year (18 days per year). Under the contract, the calculation of her vacation time for the year in which they took the leave would be as follows: 3 months (i.e. 52 weeks minus 39 weeks = 13 weeks = 3 months) x 1.5 vacation days = 4.5 paid vacation days.

Vacation Time:

Because the employee is not credited with actual service during the leave (only "length of service" as per s. 52(1)), the vacation entitlement under the contract is only 4.5 vacation days. Since this is less than what the ESA 2000 provides, the contract will not prevail over the ESA 2000. Consequently, the employment standard in s. 33(1) should be applied to provide the employee with two weeks or three weeks of vacation time for the vacation entitlement year as determined by her period of employment upon completion of the vacation entitlement year.

Vacation Pay:

The 4.5 days of vacation pay would likewise have to be compared to the minimum entitlement under the ESA 2000 to determine whether it was a greater right than the 4% or 6% of wages otherwise earned under s. 35.2. In all likelihood it would be, in which case the contractual entitlement would prevail.

In contrast to the above example, it should be noted that there may be situations where the terms of the employment contract provide a greater right or benefit in that they specifically allow the employee on leave to accrue entitlements during a period of leave, that otherwise accrue through service. For example, in Drake International Inc. v Fernandez, 2005 CanLII 25327 (ON LRB) the issue was whether the employee had accrued paid vacation days during a period of leave. The Ontario Labour Relations Board found that issue did not entail an interpretation of the provisions of the ESA 2000 since the arrangement between the employer and employee exceeded the ESA 2000’s entitlements. The Board noted that the employee's letter of hire provided that paid vacation days accrued through months "worked" and the Employee Guide provided that vacation credits accrued based on "service". However, the Employee Guide went on to say that vacation benefits would continue to accrue during maternity/parental leave. As a result, the Board found that the employee accrued both the vacation time off and the vacation pay during the leave. The employer argued that the Employee Guide was intended to refer only to a right to accrue vacation time and that the company's payroll clerk had credited the employee with vacation pay in error but the Board noted that the employer could not demonstrate an occasion where vacation was accrued "correctly". As a consequence, the Board concluded that the specific terms of the contract allowed the employee to accrue 1.25 paid vacation days for each month they were on leave.

Other Issues

Two issues that have arisen deal with the impact of leaves of absence on attendance management programs and perfect attendance bonuses. Although s. 52(1) does not impact on these matters, questions often arise about them in this context. The impact of leaves of absence on attendance management programs and perfect attendance bonuses are complex issues where it is often difficult to determine what is required under the ESA 2000.

Perfect Attendance Bonuses

Many employers have programs whereby employees are awarded a bonus for perfect attendance during the year. How should absences due to a Part XIV leave be treated for the purposes of such programs? Where an employer awards a bonus to employees for perfect attendance, on the one hand, an employee taking a Part XIV leave should not be disqualified from the bonus. Such disqualification would likely be found to be a penalty for having taken the leave and, consequently, a violation of s. 74 of the ESA 2000. On the other hand, it would seem absurd to count the time off on the leave of absence as "perfect attendance". Two ways in which an employer could deal with perfect attendance bonuses in such a way as to avoid difficulty with s. 74 of the ESA 2000 are as follows - note that the examples below are based on the assumption that perfect attendance is determined on a calendar year basis:

Prorated amount for the part of the year the employee worked, both before and after the leave.

For instance, if Jane took a combined 52-week pregnancy and parental leave (note that the entitlement to a combined leave is generally longer – up to 78 weeks) from July 1, 2014, to June 30, 2015, and if she would have been eligible for the perfect attendance bonus prior to going on her pregnancy leave, then she would be awarded a bonus, prorated for 2014. Similarly, if her attendance from June 30, 2015 to the end of 2015 would entitle her to a bonus (had that been her record for the entire year), then she would be awarded a bonus, prorated, for the months she were in attendance during 2015.

All Part XIV leave absences could be treated in a similar fashion. For example, days taken off as sick leave would not disentitle the employee from the bonus, but the amount of the perfect attendance bonus could be a prorated amount to reflect the fewer number of days in attendance. Or, time taken off as family medical leave would not disentitle the employee from the bonus, but the amount of the bonus could be a prorated amount to reflect the fewer number of days in attendance. This approach was cited with approval by the arbitrator in Fleetwood Canada Ltd. v. Union of Needletrades, Industrial and Textile Employees, Local 1381. In that case, the employer provided a weekly attendance bonus only to those employees who maintained perfect attendance during the week. The union argued that employees who took the previous personal emergency leave (then called "emergency leave") should still be allowed to collect the attendance bonus, pro-rated to reflect the number of days they actually worked in a week if they had otherwise had perfect attendance in that week. The arbitrator agreed with the union's approach, taking the position that disqualifying the employees from the bonus because of personal emergency leave absences was a penalty and therefore, a violation of s. 74 of the ESA 2000.

Extend the period of time considered when determining whether an employee is eligible for a bonus.

If we take the same example as above, the employer could consider Jane's attendance during the six months in 2014 prior to her leave and extend the year for six months after her return. If during that combined 12-month period Jane met the criteria to receive the bonus, they would receive the full amount of the bonus. Note that where the eligibility period is extended in this way, the next eligibility period will have to commence on the date it would ordinarily have commenced, notwithstanding the extension. In other words, while Jane's bonus for the year 2015 will be based on the two periods July 1, 2015, to December 31, 2015, and January 1, 2016, to June 30, 2016, her bonus for the year 2016 will have to be based on the period January 1, 2016, to December 31, 2016, even though there is some overlap. This is because if the starting date of all subsequent eligibility periods is set back six months, Jane would, over the course of her time with her employer, lose out on a possible six months of bonus eligibility; that would constitute a penalty and would thus be prohibited. Other Part XIV leaves would be treated in the same way. For example, if an employee with otherwise perfect attendance took three days of sick leave during the year, then the year during which his attendance would be considered for the perfect attendance bonus would be extended by three days. If an employee with otherwise perfect attendance took eight weeks of family medical leave during the year, then the year during which her attendance would be considered for the perfect attendance bonus would be extended by eight weeks.

It should be noted that although the approaches set out above do not treat the period of an employee's Part XIV leave as actual service, there is no conflict with the requirement in s. 52(1) that the period of leave be included in calculating the length of an employee's service for the purpose of determining the employee's rights under an employment contract. An attendance bonus program does not award a bonus based on length of service, but on actual attendance at work. In the examples considered here, the entitlement to the bonus of a 25-year employee would be the same as the entitlement of a two-year employee. Not including the period of leave as actual service for the purposes of the attendance bonus program would not affect the accrual or calculation of the length of the employee's service, nor of any rights the employee has which are dependent upon the length of service.

Attendance Management Programs

The second issue deals with "attendance management programs". Attendance management programs frequently set out a series of steps of escalating seriousness, up to and including dismissal, for employees who miss too many days of work. Each step in these programs is triggered by absenteeism.

For the reasons set out above in the context of perfect attendance bonuses, attendance management programs would not encounter difficulties with s. 52 of the ESA 2000, because s. 52 does not require that Part XIV leave days be considered days of actual service. The more difficult question is how attendance management programs should treat Part XIV leave days to avoid violating the anti-reprisal provisions in s. 74 of the ESA 2000.

The first, and less problematic, option is to not include any absences due to a Part XIV leave towards the threshold to reach the next step in an attendance management program.

Theoretically, an employer could take a different approach, e.g., the employer would count days absent due to a Part XIV leave toward the threshold to reach the next step in an attendance management program. However, extreme care would have to be taken to ensure that the steps in the program are set out in such a way that an employee is not penalized, intimidated, threatened, or disadvantaged for having taken Part XIV leave days under the ESA 2000. While in theory attendance management programs are non-disciplinary, counting time taken, say, for sick leave under the ESA 2000 in assessing whether an employee's absenteeism rate meets the threshold for entering the initial or a subsequent stage of an attendance management program may be found to be a reprisal for exercising the employee's Part XIV right, depending on the structure of the program. For example, an attendance management program may violate s. 74 if it was structured in such a way that a reasonable person in the shoes of the employee would hesitate to take sick leave days under the ESA 2000 for fear of triggering (or coming closer to triggering) the next stage of the program. In order to avoid difficulty with s. 74, the program would require at minimum that the interviews be conducted in a non-threatening, non-intimidating, non-disciplinary manner; and where sick leave is concerned, that the threshold number of absences be higher than the number of sick leave days permitted under the ESA 2000 and justifiable based on the overall average of absences in a particular workplace, the structure of the attendance management program and the particular circumstances of the individual; and that in the final stages of the program where an employee could be dismissed for innocent absenteeism, the threshold should be much higher than the three sick leave days that an employee is entitled to take under the ESA 2000 – a threshold that could result in dismissal if an employee missed only one or two days beyond the sick leave days covered by s. 50 would very likely be seen as penalizing the employee for having taken the sick leave days. In this regard, the arbitrator's decision in Natrel Inc. v Milk and Bread Drivers, Dairy Employees, Caterers and Allied Employees, Local Union No. 674, 2004 CanLII 55036 (ON LA) is relevant, although it was decided in the context of personal emergency leave, which was in force prior to January 1, 2019. In that case, the employer had implemented an attendance management program with the threshold for participation in the program being triggered (at the employer's discretion) by a single absence in excess of a plant average. Personal emergency leave days (then known as "emergency leave" days) were counted as absences for the purposes of the program. One employee was in the program and had been continued in the program for a second three-month period because of a single day of personal emergency leave. The first step of the program was a non-disciplinary interview and a three-month monitoring period with a follow-up letter. Additional absences within the three months could result in a second interview where the employee would be informed of the consequences of additional absences and a requirement that the employee provide a doctor's note for any absences in the next 12 months. If attendance did not improve in the three months following the second interview there would be a third interview and the employee would be required to provide a medical assessment of their fitness to perform their duties. A poor prognosis for regular attendance or where there was continued unsatisfactory attendance could result in termination. The arbitrator concluded that continuing the affected employee in the attendance management program and requiring him to produce a medical certificate for every absence by reason of having exceeded the threshold because of taking a day of personal emergency leave would constitute a reprisal under section 74 of the ESA 2000.

Likewise, an attendance management program that counts pregnancy, parental, family caregiver, family medical, critical illness, crime-related child disappearance, child death, domestic or sexual violence, family responsibility, bereavement, organ donor, or reservist leave absences towards the threshold to enter into the next stage would be problematic in most cases. Employees who take such leave would presumably exceed the threshold number of days to move to the next step in any attendance management program. To bring such employees in for an interview to discuss their attendance, where most or all of their absence was due to being on leave, could very well be seen as a reprisal for having taken the leave.

The first, less problematic, option described earlier (that is, to not consider any absences due to a Part XIV leave as absences that count towards the threshold to the next stage of an attendance management program) would avoid the challenges of structuring attendance management programs in such a way as to avoid violating s. 74 of the ESA 2000, and would also give consistent treatment to all Part XIV leaves.

Exception – s. 52(2)

52(2) The period of an employee's leave shall not be included in determining whether he or she has completed a probationary period under an employment contract.

Section 52(2) provides that, despite s. 52(1) (which provides that time spent on Part XIV leave counts for purposes of length of employment, length of service and seniority), time spent on Part XIV leave will not count towards the completion of probationary periods.

A probationary period typically means a term at the front end of an employee's employment during which their suitability as a permanent staff member can be assessed. As well, a period during which an employee is being assessed in a "new" position, where satisfactory completion of the assessment period will result in the "permanent" placement of the employee in that new position, is also considered to be a "probationary period" under s. 52(2). While the beginning of the probationary period in this case does not coincide with the start of employment, it does coincide with the start of a new contract, and for that reason can be considered to be a "probationary period under an employment contract".

It should be noted that periods of leave do not count towards the completion of "disciplinary probationary periods", as such periods do not coincide with the start of employment or an employment contract and so may be seen as being driven by actual service rather than "length of employment, length of service or seniority". Employees do not earn credit for actual "service", as opposed to length of employment, length of service or seniority while on leave.

ESA Part XIV Section 52.1 – Leave Taken in Entire Weeks

52.1(1) If a provision in this Part requires that an employee who takes a leave to provide care or support to a person take the leave in periods of entire weeks and, during a week of leave, an employee ceases to provide care or support,

(a) the employee's entitlement to leave continues until the end of the week; and

(b) the employee may return to work during the week only if the employer agrees, whether in writing or not.

(2) If an employee returns to work under clause (1)(b), the week counts as an entire week for the purposes of any provision in this Part that limits the employee's entitlement to leave to a certain number of weeks.

This provision came into force on October 29, 2014. It establishes a rule relating to leaves that are required to be taken in periods of entire weeks. At the time of writing, only Family Medical Leave must be taken in periods of entire weeks. Accordingly, s. 52.1 only applies to Family Medical Leave. See the discussion of the effect of s. 52.1 on the Family Medical Leave entitlement in ESA Part XIV, s. 49.1(7).

ESA Part XIV Section 53 - Reinstatement

Reinstatement - s . 53(1)

53(1) Upon the conclusion of an employee's leave under this Part, the employer shall reinstate the employee to the position the employee most recently held with the employer, if it still exists, or to a comparable position, if it does not.

To Position Most Recently Held

At the conclusion of an employee's leave under this Part, the employer must reinstate the employee to the position he or she held at the commencement of the leave. In contrast to some of the earlier pregnancy leave provisions, the employee must be reinstated to the position he or she held before the leave if it still exists. In Car Park Management Services Limited v Sze (April 30, 1996), ESC 96-87 (Muir), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, the employer argued that the employee's position no longer existed because some aspects of the work had been computerized while she was on leave and the employee did not have computer training. See also Imapro Corporation v Fawcett (September 14, 1995) ESC 97-43 (Randall) in which the employer reinstated the employee to a new position because he intended to terminate her with notice contrary to s. 44 of the former Employment

Standards Act (corresponding to s. 74 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000). Her previous position required long-term involvement on projects that would have run longer than the notice period. In both of the above decisions, the employer was found to be in violation of the obligation to reinstate under the former Employment Standards Act.

The option of reinstating the employee to a comparable position is available only if the employee's own position is no longer there. In Gorrell, Grenkie, Leroy and Remillard v Vaughan (November 22, 1993), ESC 3296 (Novick), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, the referee stated that the employer was obliged to reinstate the employee to her own position and that the employee was entitled to refuse an offer of a comparable position (at another office) because her own position still existed. An employer may argue that an employee's position no longer exists because another person (either a reassigned employee or a replacement) is now performing his or her work. This is not a valid reason for not reinstating the employee to the position previously held. If the job is still there, if the same work is being done, the employee has a right to be reinstated to perform the same work, regardless of the fact that another person is now, and has been, performing it.

With respect to the question of "what is the position the employee most recently held", see the following decisions under the former Employment Standards Act: Canadian Holidays Ltd. v Bartol (July 31, 1995), ESC 95-147 (Novick); Woodbridge Inoac Inc. v Frayne (May 2, 1995), ESC 95-86 (Novick); and Martel v 785364 Ontario Inc. o/a Sunny's Restaurant (June 9, 1995), ESC 95-109 (Novick). Also see O.P.S.E.U. Local 458 v Open Hands Inc. (unreported) where the Divisional Court found that the employer violated the former Employment Standards Act when it reinstated an employee to the same job she held before her leave but at a different location.

It should be noted that in determining "what is the position most recently held" that the terms of the employment contract (whether or not it is in writing) are relevant and that the duties and functions being performed (or the location of their performance) prior to the commencement of the leave are not necessarily determinative of the issue.

For example, in a decision under the current Act, the question of "what is the position most recently held" was considered by the Court of Appeal in Elementary Teachers Federation of Ontario v Toronto District School Board, 2005 CanLII 36712 (ON CA). In that case, a board of arbitration had dismissed a grievance arising from the reinstatement of a teacher returning from pregnancy and parental leave. The employee had been teaching Senior French when she went on her leave and was informed that she would be teaching Senior Science when she returned. She declined the assignment. Her collective agreement provided that staffing was to be determined for each year by a process requiring the principal to consider the preferences, abilities, qualifications and experience of the teachers in assigning teaching duties. Her union argued that she should have been reinstated to the French teaching position she held prior to going on leave but the board of arbitration concluded that under the collective agreement the teacher had no right to a particular teaching assignment from year to year or a reasonable expectation to continue teaching the same subject every year. In other words, when the terms of the employment contract (collective agreement) were considered, the employee’s position was not that of "a Senior French teacher" but more broadly that of "a teacher". Despite the fact that she had been teaching French just prior to the commencement of her leave, she did not have a right to reinstatement as a Senior French teacher. The union sought judicial review but the application was dismissed by Divisional Court in Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario v Toronto (District) School Board, 2004 CanLII 1652 (ON SC). On appeal of that decision, the Court of Appeal affirmed the Board's decision as reasonable.

In some instances, a pregnant employee during the period prior to her leave is unable to perform her normal job due to the pregnancy. Therefore, the employee is given another job for several weeks before she goes on leave. At the end of her leave, the employee must be reinstated to her original, normal job. The employer's offer of the other job on a temporary basis was due to the employer's duty to accommodate under the Human Rights Code, RSO 1990, c H.19.

Section 53 governs the rights of employees after a leave has been taken. There can therefore be no violation of s. 53 before an employee takes a leave. There can, however, be a violation of s. 74 before an employee takes a leave. See the discussion at ESA Part XVIII, s. 74.

Although not directly related to s. 53, (as it is not truly a "reinstatement" issue), one issue that arises frequently is whether an employer is obligated to provide an employee with a part-time position, rather than his or her earlier full-time position, at the employee's request. Clearly, there is no such obligation under the ESA 2000.

Where an employer and employee have reached a pre-leave agreement that the employee will return only on a part-time basis, and the employee changes his or her mind and wants his or her previous position back, Program policy requires that he or she must be given it back. See also Goode v S&E Management Ltd. (October 29, 1996), ES 96-227 (Novick) in which the claimant, before the expiry of her leave, requested that upon her return she be placed in a different position which allowed for better hours, or alternatively, a further four-month leave of absence. The employer was found to be in violation of the former Employment Standards Act by having refused and terminated the employee without allowing her the opportunity to exercise her right to be reinstated to her previous position. The s. 53 protection gives the employee the right to be reinstated to her previous position upon the conclusion of her leave. Any alternate arrangement that does not allow her to exercise that right or that excuses the employer from meeting its obligation to reinstate (such as agreement, prior to the leave, to reinstatement to part-time duties) is seen as a contracting out of the s. 53 employment standard, and hence, by virtue of s. 5(1) of the Act, is null and void.

One issue related to reinstatement to the "same" position concerns the application of the Ontario Human Rights Code provisions that prohibit discrimination on the basis of "family status" and impose a duty of accommodation on the grounds of family status. An employee who seeks such accommodation (for example, an employee may request a change in her shift schedule or a reduction in hours because of difficulties with child care arrangements etc.) and who believes he or she has experienced discrimination may be referred to Ontario's Human Rights Legal Support Centre for assistance.

To a Comparable Position

If the employee's position no longer exists, the employer must reinstate the employee to a position comparable to his or her former one. The employer can reinstate the employee to a comparable position only if the employee's former position no longer exists; if the former position still exists, the employer has no choice but to reinstate the employee to it. It should also be noted that there is no positive obligation on the employer to create a comparable position in circumstances where the employee would otherwise have been terminated for reasons completely unrelated to the leave. For example, an employer will be obliged to reinstate to a comparable position where the position most recently held by the employee has been modified to the extent that it could no longer be considered the same position, and the employee would have otherwise moved into the "comparable" position had he or she not been on leave. Another example is where an employee's position has been eliminated, and the employee would have been transferred to the same position at a different location had the employee not been on the leave. See discussion on s. 53(2) below.

In order to meet the obligation to reinstate an employee to a comparable position, it is clearly not sufficient merely to offer a position with the same wages and benefits - see C.L.C. (Can Workers' Union, Local 354) v American Can Canada Inc., 1983 CanLII 935 (ON LRB) and Hobbs and Jaciw Investments Limited v Reed (July 11, 1978), ESC 533 (Egan), both cases under the former Employment Standards Act). Rather, one must look at a number of factors, including all the aspects of the new, allegedly comparable job that might make it more or less appealing than the claimant's original job, viewed objectively from the perspective of an employee in a similar position to that of the claimant.

The factors to consider, as originally enunciated by Referee Picher in C.L.C. (Can Workers' Union, Local 354) v American Can Canada Inc. and adopted by the Program are:

1. Location of Job: If the "comparable" work offered by the employer exists in another city or town, the work may or may not be comparable. For example, if commuting would be impossible or would involve a substantial increase in travel time, the work is unlikely to be comparable. In determining whether the work is comparable, the officer should consider the circumstances of the employee in question. The test to be applied is how a reasonable person in the employee's circumstances would view the change. For example, commuting may be possible for an employee with a driver's license, but impossible for an employee without one. It should also be noted that even if the employment contract permitted the employer to transfer the employee to another city and, assuming no negative changes in the terms and conditions of employment, such a transfer therefore constituted "reasonable alternative employment" for the purposes of paragraph 5 of s. 2(1) of O Reg 288/01, it does not necessarily mean that the obligation to reinstate the employee to a "comparable" position under this section has been satisfied.
2. Hours of Work: including time of the day and the length of the working day; any shift or weekend work.
3. Quality of Working Environment: office vs. warehouse vs. store vs. factory; degree of luxury; overall atmosphere; privacy vs. group surroundings; comfortable vs. spartan conditions.
4. Degree of Responsibility: including degree of independence and supervision; degree of initiative required; decision-making authority; ability to input own taste or influence; amount of clerical or secretarial functions; job satisfaction.
5. Job Security and Possibility of Advancement: what was/is the likelihood of the job continuing to exist, and the opportunity to progress from that job to a higher position; relationship of background, training and education of employee to position; and development of proper skills for advancement in each position.
6. Prestige and Perquisites: "atmosphere and trappings of an executive" if relevant - e.g., own office; name and title on organization chart; personal or position profile - e.g., opportunity for broader contact with other management and personnel; own business card, expense account, administrative assistant; signing authority; social privileges; immediate supervision or instruction of others.

The importance and weight to be given to each of the foregoing factors will vary from case to case, depending on the particular facts in each situation. The new position may not be quite as attractive as the old job in all respects, but it will be considered a comparable position if, when the various factors are considered in their totality, the position is qualitatively similar, if not superior, to the job the employee had before he or she went on leave. A test of what is comparable is an objective test, based on what a "reasonable employee" in the same circumstances would think.

For example, the employee in C.L.C. (Can Workers' Union, Local 354) v American Can Canada Inc. had previously held an executive position as Communication Co-ordinator. Upon her return at the end of her leave, she was given work consisting mainly of clerical tasks. Although she incurred no loss in wages, benefits or seniority, her new position involved a marked decrease in the degree of responsibility, prestige and perquisites as well as a loss in job security. In addition, her working environment, originally a private office with access to a personal administrative assistant, deteriorated to a secretarial corner. In light of the foregoing, it was found that the new position was not of a comparable nature and compensation/reinstatement was ordered.

A pre-existing job evaluation system may be relevant but is not determinative of the comparability of the two positions. As the referee stated in Reed Inc. v Nidd (December 23, 1986), ESC 2002 (Mitchnick), another decision under the former Employment Standards Act, the evaluation system may be relevant as an "objective" factor. However, "subjective" factors such as humiliation, embarrassment and loss of prestige must be taken into account as well, but from an objective viewpoint. In other words, for example, would a "reasonable employee" have been humiliated in the same circumstances?

Furthermore, it may not be sufficient merely to offer the same wage where the wage range of the new position is inferior. For example, a new position at $25,000 per year at a $20,000 to $25,000 range may not be considered comparable to the wage of $25,000 at the former position that had a range of $24,000 to $29,000.

To illustrate further, in Bronson Bakery Ltd v Melo and Scott (November 27, 1985), ESC 1992 (Fraser), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, neither the somewhat lesser degree of responsibility nor the minor variance in hours of work were sufficient of themselves to render the two jobs incomparable. There were, however, significant reductions in prestige and quality of working environment. Having regard to all of these factors, in sum, the referee determined that the employer was in breach of the reinstatement obligations.

It should be noted that despite what appears to be an emphasis in the cases on the employee’s perspective with respect to these factors, the test is objective, that is, how would a reasonable employee in the same circumstances have viewed the situation?

For example, in C.L.C. (Can Workers' Union, Local 354) v American Can Canada Inc., Referee Picher indicated that the employee found the change of geographical location (from Etobicoke to Brampton) significant, but he felt that there was no substantial difference, on that issue alone, and particularly so in light of the fact that the new position may have been even closer to her residence. However, he saw that her concerns on the issue of "location" were in fact more related to "Quality of Working Environment" and the positions were clearly not comparable on that issue. This matter is more directly dealt with in Bronson Bakery Ltd v Melo and Scott where the employee was reinstated to a retail position as opposed to her previous office position. The employer argued that most people would prefer the open environment of the store and dealing with the public and thus submitted that most people would have a different subjective preference from the claimant. However, the referee found that the employee’s viewpoint had a "reasonable objective basis", i.e., that office work was generally seen to have more prestige than retail sales and a higher quality working environment. Accordingly, there should be a "reasonable objective basis" for a subjective viewpoint on the factors considered.

53(1.1) Despite subsection (1), the employer of an employee who has been on leave under section 50.2 may postpone the employee's reinstatement until,

(a) a prescribed day; or

(b) if no day is prescribed, the later of,

i. the day that is two weeks after the day on which the leave ends, and

ii. the first pay day that falls after the day on which the leave ends.

(1.2) During the period of postponement, the employee is deemed to continue to be on leave under section 50.2 for the purposes of sections 51.1 and 52.

Unlike other types of Part XIV leaves, section 53(1.1) allows the employer of an employee who has been on a reservist leave to postpone the employee's reinstatement until:

- A prescribed day; or
- If no day is prescribed, the later of,
    - The day that is two weeks after the day on which the leave ends, and
    - The first pay day that falls after the day on which the leave ends.

At the time of writing, there has been no prescribed day. As such, an employer may postpone an employee's reinstatement following a reservist leave until the later of two weeks after the day on which the leave ends or the first pay day after the day on which the leave ends.

Therefore, although s. 50.2(9) requires an employee who has taken reservist leave to provide written notice to the employer of the date when he or she intends to end the leave, s. 53(1.1) enables the employer to actually postpone the employee's reinstatement for two weeks following the date set out in the employee's notice or the first pay day that falls after that date, whichever is later.

Section 53(1.2) states that during a period of postponement, the employee is deemed to continue to be on a reservist leave for the purposes of s. 51.1 (leave and vacation conflict) and s. 52 (length of employment).

Note that pursuant to s. 51(4), an employer is not required to continue the employee's participation in the types of benefit plans listed in s. 51(2) (if applicable) during a period of reservist leave. However, should the employer decide to postpone an employee's reinstatement date as permitted by s. 53(1.1), s. 51(5) provides that the employee is entitled to continue to participate in benefit plans pursuant to ss. 51(1) and (2) and the employer is required to make contributions to such plans as required under s. 51(3), during the postponement period.

53(2) Subsection (1) does not apply if the employment of the employee is ended solely for reasons unrelated to the leave.

The right of reinstatement under s. 53 is not absolute. The reinstatement provisions are meant to ensure that an employee who goes on Part XIV leave is in the same position she or he would have been in if she or he had not gone on leave. The provisions are not meant to give a greater right to employees on leave. Where the employer has reasons to terminate an employee's employment that are completely unrelated to the fact that the employee went on a Part XIV leave, reinstatement will not be required. The employer has the onus of proving that the termination was totally unrelated to the fact that the employee took the leave.

The same principle applies with respect to economic downturns or other reasons that lead to layoffs. If at the end of a leave, the position the employee most recently held still exists but is inactive (for example, because the business is not operating or is operating at lower than usual capacity and does not currently have any work for that position), there is no violation of s. 53 where the employer reinstates the employee into his or her most recently held position and then immediately places the employee on a temporary layoff (so long as the layoff does not constitute a reprisal, e.g. if any part of the reason for the layoff was because the employee took the leave). For practical purposes, in the situation where the position is inactive at the time the employee's leave is over, the employer only notionally reinstates the employee; the employee does not need to physically return to the workplace for a shift nor does the employee need to complete any amount of work before being told that he or she is laid off.

While s. 53(2) was introduced in the ESA 2000, it was intended merely to codify Program policy that existed under the former Employment Standards Act. While the cases cited in this section were all decided under the former Employment Standards Act, the principles enunciated in these cases are equally applicable to the ESA 2000.

In determining whether the termination is in contravention of s. 53, the test is, "Would this employee have lost his or her job if he or she had never gone on Part XIV leave?"

This test was used in C.L.C. (Can Workers' Union, Local 354) v American Can Canada Inc. where the referee noted that absent her leave, the employee would still be in her former function. The referee referred to her pregnancy as a "catalyst" for the decision to change the employee's position. See also Wyeth-Ayerst Canada Inc. v Dowd (January 7, 1998), 2466-96-ES (ON LRB), where a bona fide restructuring was held not to prove the employer's case because the evidence disclosed the employee's leave had been a factor in the decision to terminate her. See also Jackson v Elizabeth Arden Salons of Canada Limited (October 20, 1995), ESC 95-175 (Bradbury).

An employer cannot refuse to reinstate an employee where it was discovered during the leave that the employee was in fact dispensable, as it would be the occasion of the leave that gave rise to the reason for the termination (reasoning used in C.L.C. (Can Workers' Union, Local 354) v American Can Canada Inc.). This situation is often encountered where the employer determines during an employee's leave that the operation runs more smoothly without him or her or the temporary replacement performs more satisfactorily. A termination under these circumstances will be a violation, since the purpose of Part XIV of the Act is to ensure that the employee does not "lose out" in the workplace by reason of a Part XIV leave.

The fact that reinstatement at the termination of the leave is at an inconvenient or difficult point in the employer's cycle of operations (e.g., in the final few weeks of a teaching term for a teacher) is not a legitimate basis for non-reinstatement. Clearly, had the employee not gone on a leave, under normal circumstances, he or she would have continued to have been employed.

Again, the exception in s. 53(2) applies only where the reasons for not reinstating were entirely unrelated to the leave.

However, if the reason for the failure to reinstate would have resulted in a termination even if the employee had not gone on leave, there is no violation under s. 53(1). For instance, where the employer undergoes a downsizing or restructuring of its business, there would be no obligation to reinstate if the employee would have lost his or her job regardless of whether he or she had gone on leave. See Littlewood v Birchcliff Heights Child Care Centre (March 27, 1997), 2882-96-ES (Misra), Rahman v York Condominium Corporation 506, 1999 CanLII 19489 (ON LRB), and Singh v George Kent Home Improvements Limited (January 18, 1996), ESC 96-09 (Muir). See also Nygard International Ltd. v Thornton (October 12, 1994), ESC 93-154A (Muir), where an employee is guilty of misconduct that would justify her dismissal, she need not be reinstated.

It should be noted however that even where there is no obligation to reinstate, there may in some situations be an issue of reprisal under s. 74. For example, if it is demonstrated that but for being on the leave, the employee would have been given a choice between accepting termination or being offered another position with the same employer, albeit one that is not comparable with the original position, the employee may be found to have been "penalized" because she had exercised a right to leave - despite not having a right to be reinstated to her job or to a comparable position.

When an employee is hired on a fixed-term contract and the term expires during her leave, the employment relationship generally comes to its natural conclusion with the expiry of the term. In such cases, the reasons for not reinstating are entirely unrelated to the leave and so the employer has no obligation to reinstate under s. 53(1). The employee's employment simply ends when the contract expires. (However, if the evidence showed that the employer chose not to consider the employee for a contract renewal because she was on a leave, that decision not to renew could nevertheless constitute a reprisal under s. 74.)

Where legitimate grounds do exist, the employer may terminate an employee during his or her leave in compliance with Part XV of the Act; the employer need not reinstate and then dismiss the employee. Under the former Employment Standards Act, there were two conflicting lines of authority as to whether the employer is required to pay wages to employees who are entitled to notice of termination, if they are on leave of absence (or otherwise not available to work the notice period for reasons personal to themselves). One line of authority has interpreted the termination provisions in the former Employment Standards Act and regulations as in most instances requiring the employer to pay wages to employees who are entitled to notice of termination but who do not make themselves available to work the notice period for reasons personal to themselves. See MacMillan Bathurst Inc. v Fox (June 13, 1985), ESC 1893 (Egan), Maple Leaf Foods Inc. v Alejandro, 1999 CanLII 2908 (ON CA) and Horizon Poultry Products Inc. v Roth (February 2, 1995), ESC 95-53 (Randall). The second line of cases took the view that employees not making themselves available for work during the notice period ought not be entitled to wages during the notice period. See St. Joseph's Health Centre of London v Vanderwerf (February 10, 1992), ESC 2982 (Novick) and Pioneer Youth Services (Toronto) Inc. v Fitzpatrick, 2000 CanLII 4665 (ON LRB). Although both viewpoints have received some support from the courts on judicial review, it is the Program's position that the better interpretation of the termination provisions is found in the MacMillan Bathurst Inc. v Fox and Maple Leaf Foods Inc. v Alejandro line of cases.

Section 60(1)(b) of the Act provides that the employer shall pay to the employee the wages to which the employee is entitled to receive during the period of notice, "which in no case shall be less than his or her regular wages for a regular work week." Further, s. 61 of the Act provides that an employer may terminate the employment of an employee without notice, but only if it pays termination pay equal to the amount the employee would have been entitled to receive under s. 60 had notice been given, which, as summarized above, provides that the amount will in no case be less than the regular wages for a regular work week.

The purpose underlying the notice of termination provisions is to give employees some breathing room during the notice period (or with the pay in lieu of notice) to reorder their affairs. To interpret the termination provisions in a way that would place employees who are on a leave in a worse position than they would have been in had they not taken the leave would be contrary to the intention of the Act.

Consequently, it is Program policy that unless the employee is otherwise disentitled to termination pay (i.e., by virtue of s. 2(1) of O Reg 288/01), the employer must pay the required wages even if the employee is on leave. The above interpretation follows the reasoning upheld by the Court of Appeal in Maple Leaf Foods Inc. v Alejandro and by the Divisional Court in MacMillan Bathurst Inc. v Fox. Although those cases (which were decided under the former Employment Standards Act) dealt with workers' compensation and sick leave, respectively, the principles are relevant to Part XIV leave. See ESA Part XV ("Termination and Severance of Employment") for a discussion of this issue. See Horizon Poultry Products Inc. v Roth for a decision under the former Employment Standards Act concerning an employee dismissed while on pregnancy/parental leave. Note that Pioneer Youth Services (Toronto) Inc. v Fitzpatrick, also a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, followed the opposing line of cases to find that where an employee is terminated for reasons unrelated to her pregnancy or pregnancy leave and the period of notice that is given coincides with her pregnancy leave, she is not entitled to be paid during the notice period. This decision is contrary to Program policy.

Where legitimate grounds to terminate the employment relationship exist and severance pay is owing, it is Program policy that the "regular work week" that is used to determine the amount of severance pay owing is the employee's "regular work week" that he or she had before the leave began.

Sham Reinstatement

Although s. 53(1) requires reinstatement of the employee, it does not address firings post-reinstatement. Protection in this regard is offered by the Program's position that a "sham reinstatement" will be considered to be no reinstatement at all, and thus a violation of s. 53(1). The right to a Part XIV leave and reinstatement thereafter would be a farce if the employer could get away with firing the employee immediately following a token reinstatement. In Cole v Coates (June 30, 1982), ESC 1241 (Bigelow), although no clear reasons were given by the referee, an employee who was terminated one week after reinstatement was compensated for the violation of her rights under the reinstatement provisions. Clearly, the longer the employee is back at work, the more difficult it is to identify a "sham reinstatement".

Further protection against post-reinstatement firings is provided by s. 74 of the Act, which prohibits employers from dismissing or otherwise penalizing an employee because he or she, among other things, takes a Part XIV leave.

Wage Rate - s. 53(3)

53(3) The employer shall pay a reinstated employee at a rate that is equal to the greater of,

(a) the rate that the employee most recently earned with the employer; and

(b) the rate that the employee would be earning had he or she worked throughout the leave.

Section 53(3) sets out the wage rate that an employee reinstated under s. 53(1) is entitled to receive. This rate is the higher of the rate he or she earned before the leave began, and the wage rate the employee would be earning had he or she continued to work and not gone on leave. The latter provision would apply, for example, if the employee would have advanced to a higher grade in the pay scale for his or her position because he or she had been employed for the requisite amount of time. For example, if there is a grid that provides that an employee's wage rate increases by $0.50 per hour after each of the first five years of employment, and an employee who had been earning $25.00 commences a combined pregnancy and parental leave of one year at the point at which she had been employed for two and one-half years, she would be entitled to a rate of $25.50 when she resumed working at the conclusion of her leave. It would also apply if a union negotiates a pay raise for employees in the bargaining unit it represents. (For example, if the employer grants an across-the-board increase of $1.20 an hour for all office employees that took effect while an employee who works in the office was on leave, that employee would be entitled to earn the increased rate when he or she returned from leave.)

The purpose behind this provision is to prevent an employer from denying a reinstated employee wage increases that, from an objective standpoint, would inevitably have been given to him or her during the time that he or she was on leave had he or she instead continued working. It was not intended to give an employee a right to a wage increase where it is entirely speculative as to whether he or she would have received the increase had he or she continued working.

For example, an employee's contract of employment might provide for a performance review every year in the month following the anniversary of his or her date of hire, with the result of that review determining whether he or she would receive a merit increase. If an employee was hired on June 15, 2010, received favourable performance reviews and, in consequence, merit increases in July of 2011 and 2012, and then went on leave from September 15, 2012, to September 14, 2013, subsection 53(3) does not entitle her to a merit increase immediately upon her return to work on September 15, 2013, even though in the ordinary course she would have had a performance review in July of 2013 that probably would have resulted in a merit increase (based on what happened after her performance reviews in earlier years). This is because the merit increases were not automatic; whether she would have received a merit increase had her performance been reviewed in July of 2013 is conjectural.

Although in the above example there is no entitlement to a merit increase upon the employee's return to work, the employer would be required to schedule a performance review (and provide a merit increase if the results of that review so indicated) in such a way that the employee was not penalized for having exercised her right to take leave; otherwise, there would be a violation of s. 74 of the Act. There are two ways in which the employer can do this and avoid such a violation. The first would be to provide the employee with a review once her post-leave service, when added to any pre-leave service that had not been the subject of a review, equalled the period that would entitle her to a review. Thus, using the example from the preceding paragraph, where the employee is entitled to a review after each 12 months of service and had accumulated three months of service credits towards the 12 months before going on leave, the employer would have to give her a performance review following the completion of a further nine months of service following her return. The further nine months would be completed on May 15, 2014, and so the review would take place in June of 2014; subsequent reviews would take place in June of each year, rather than in July. Alternatively, the employer could give the employee a performance review after the employee returned to work, using what would have been the usual review period of June 15, 2012, to June 14, 2013, but (assuming a favourable review) granting the employee a pro-rated, rather than full, merit increase, based on the fact that she had worked for only one-quarter of that period.

This provision was also not intended to insulate employees from the effects of negative economic downturns at their workplace such as cuts to wage rates that happened during their leave due to their employer’s economic circumstances. This means that while an employer is required to pay a reinstated employee the wage rate the employee most recently earned (or the rate the employee would have earned had the employee worked through the leave, if that is greater), this provision does not prohibit employers from reducing the employee’s wage rate immediately upon reinstating the employee, either permanently or temporarily (so long as reduction does not constitute a reprisal, e.g. if any part of the reason for the reduction was because the employee took the leave). A unilateral reduction of an employee’s wages may, depending on the circumstances, constitute a constructive dismissal and if the employee resigns in response to the reduction within a reasonable time, the employer will be considered to have terminated (and severed) the employee’s employment under the ESA. (Note, though, that temporary wage reductions by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19 do not constitute constructive dismissal under the ESA if they occur during the defined “COVID-19 period” – see O. Reg. 228/20 for details.)

Leaves apply separately – s. 53.1

53.1 For greater certainty, every entitlement to leave under this Part applies separately from, and in addition to, every other entitlement under this Part.

Section 53.1 provides that an employee's entitlement to any Part XIV leave is in addition to any entitlement they may have to any other Part XIV leave. This includes pregnancy leave, parental leave, family medical leave, family caregiver leave, child death leave, crime-related child disappearance leave, critical illness leave, domestic or sexual violence leave, sick leave, family responsibility leave, bereavement leave, organ donor leave, emergency leave and reservist leave.

This provision was added to the ESA 2000 effective January 1, 2019 by the Making Ontario Open for Business Act, 2018. Prior to January 1, 2019, certain individual leave provisions contained similar language to make clear that Part XIV leaves apply independently. With the inclusion of s. 53.1, those individual provisions were no longer necessary and were repealed. The wording “for greater certainty” is used because the Employment Standards Program has always taken the position that an employee’s entitlement to a Part XIV leave is independent from the employee’s entitlement to any other Part XIV leave; this new provision simply codifies that principle.

An employee’s eligibility for more than one leave will depend on the circumstances giving rise to the absence. Take, for example, an employee whose minor child is critically ill with a serious medical condition and has a significant risk of death within 26 weeks. The employee could be eligible for critical illness leave (because the minor child is critically ill), family caregiver leave (because the child has a serious medical condition), family medical leave (because the child has a serious medical condition with a significant risk of death within 26 weeks), and family responsibility leave (because the child has an illness, injury or medical emergency). Taking into account the statutory requirements for each leave, the employee is free to decide when to take each leave and the order in which they’re taken.

ESA Part XV - Termination and Severance of Employment

The notice provisions in Part XV of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 ensure that employees are given some minimum amount of advance warning of termination of employment (or pay in lieu of notice or some combination thereof) so that the employee may make new arrangements for work.

The severance pay provisions Part XV of the Act provide some long-service employees with compensation for loss of seniority and job-related benefits and also for their investment of long service when the employment relationship is severed by the employer. The employer's obligations under the notice and severance provisions are entirely separate and distinct from each other and one cannot be used to offset the other.

ESA Part XV Section 54 - No Termination Without Notice

54 No employer shall terminate the employment of an employee who has been continuously employed for three months or more unless the employer,

(a) has given to the employee written notice of termination in accordance with section 57 or 58 and the notice has expired; or

(b) has complied with section 61.

Section 54 requires employers to provide advance written notice of termination, in accordance with s. 57 or s. 58, or to provide termination pay in accordance with s. 61 when terminating the employment of an employee. Under the former Employment Standards Act, pay in lieu of notice was characterized as a remedy if notice was not given, not an alternative to notice as it is now.

Eligibility for Notice of Termination or Termination Pay

An employee is eligible for notice of termination or termination pay if he or she has been continuously employed for three months or more by his or her employer. A similar eligibility requirement was contained in the former Employment Standards Act. However, the word "continuously" has been added to clarify that the employment relationship must continue for a full three months.

All time spent in an employer-employee relationship will count toward the three-month eligibility requirement. As long as there is no clear termination of the employment relationship, periods of inactive employment (such as lay-off, leave or sick time) must be included as periods of time during which an employee is continuously employed.

The term "period of employment", which is defined in s. 8(2) of O Reg 288/01 to allow separate periods of employment to be added together and treated as one, does not apply with respect to the three-month eligibility requirement for notice in s. 54. Rather, "period of employment" applies to determine the amount of notice the employee is entitled to under s. 57 once it has been established that the employee has met the three-month eligibility requirement.

In addition, when determining the "period of employment", reference must also be made to s. 59, which sets out what is included and excluded time. Although s. 59 generally provides that time spent on leave or other inactive employment is included in determining the period of employment, it excludes time spent on lay-off after a deemed termination date.

Therefore, the time spent on lay-off after the deemed termination date (i.e., the time spent on lay-off from the date the lay-off commenced) would not count in determining the "period of employment" and the amount of notice an employee is entitled to. That time would, however, count in determining whether the employee had completed three months of continuous employment in order to be eligible for notice.

For example: An employee was hired January 1. She was laid off February 1. Thirteen weeks after the layoff began (May 1), her employment is deemed to be terminated as of the date the layoff began (February 1) - see ESA Part XV s. 56(5).

Under s. 54, all employment (whether active or inactive) counts towards the three-month continuous employment eligibility requirement. This employee has met the three months' continuous employment eligibility requirement; she was employed for four months (January 1 to May 1) and so is eligible for notice of termination.

The amount of notice (or pay in lieu in this case) she is entitled to is determined by s. 57 and turns on her "period of employment".

Under s. 57 an employee whose "period of employment" is less than one year is entitled to one week's termination notice.

Under s. 59, "period of employment" does not include periods of layoff after the deemed termination date. This employee's "period of employment" is therefore 1 month (January 1 to February 1). As a result, because she was employed for at least three months and her period of employment is less than one year, she is entitled to one week's termination notice.

Note again that the eligibility requirement is three months of continuous employment and not three months of active service. If an employee started work on July 29 and was still employed for any part of the day on October 28, the employee will have been continuously employed for three months despite having been off sick or on layoff or leave for some time between July 29 and October 28. In this example, if the employer terminated the employee on the 28th of October (regardless of whether the employee had a scheduled shift on that day or had started or completed his or her shift) the employee would be eligible for notice of termination.

When determining whether an employee meets the three-month continuous employment eligibility requirement there is occasionally some debate as to when employment commenced. Generally, the first day of employment will be considered to be the first day of work. Although an offer of employment may be made and a contract of employment entered into some period of time before the employee starts work, the Program's view is that the employment relationship commences on the date the employee starts work unless there is clear evidence to indicate otherwise.

With respect to the three months of continuous employment requirement, regard should also be had to ss. 9(1), 10(1) and 10(2) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, which provide as follows:

9(1) If an employer sells a business or a part of a business and the purchaser employs an employee of the seller, the employment of the employee shall be deemed not to have been terminated or severed for the purposes of this Act and his or her employment with the seller shall be deemed to have been employment with the purchaser for the purpose of any subsequent calculation of the employee's length or period of employment.

10(1) This section applies if the building services provider for a building is replaced by a new provider and an employee of the replaced provider is employed by the new provider.

10(2) The employment of the employee shall be deemed not to have been terminated or severed for the purposes of this Act and his or her employment with the replaced provider shall be deemed to have been employment with the new provider for the purpose of any subsequent calculation of the employee's length or period of employment.

Under these provisions, the employment with the seller or the original service provider and the employment with the purchaser or the new service provider is combined for the purposes of calculating the employee's length of employment, and, therefore, when determining eligibility for notice (as well as for the purpose of calculating "period of employment" when determining the amount of notice to which an employee is entitled.)

Example:

If an employee is employed by Company B for two months and Company B sells the business to Company C who employs the employee for a further period of one month, the employee will have met the three month requirement. Company C will then be required to provide the employee with notice of termination of employment or termination pay calculated on the basis of employment with Company B and Company C. For a more detailed explanation of s. 9 and s. 10, please refer to ESA Part IV (Continuity of Employment).

It is important to note that employment is only counted if it is performed in Ontario, or elsewhere as a continuation of the work performed in Ontario. For example, if an employee works for ABC Inc. for two years in Quebec, then is transferred to Ontario, where he or she works for ABC Inc. for two more months, the employee is considered to have only two months of employment with ABC Inc. for purposes of s. 54.

Where the employee performs work outside Ontario that is a continuation of the work performed in Ontario, the time spent outside of the province will be included in calculating the whether the employee has been employed for three months or more.

Written Notice of Termination

Section 54 requires that the employer provide written notice of termination to an employee who is entitled to notice. Section 4(1) of O Reg 288/01 sets out the manner in which such written notice may be provided - see O Reg 288/01 s. 4(1) for a detailed discussion.

It is the policy of the Program that although s. 54 requires that notice of termination be in writing, if the notice given to the employee is oral, but such notice is greater in length than the required notice under s. 54 (and meets or exceeds the minimum requirements concerning continuation of wages and benefits), it will be considered a greater right or benefit under s. 5(2) of the Act. This policy is supported by the case of Fanaken v Bell, Temple, 1984 CanLII 1856 (ON SC).

Where the employer is alleging that it gave oral notice greater in length than the required minimum written notice, the onus will be on the employer to show that the employee received and understood the oral notice, and that the notice was specific as to the date of termination.

ESA Part XV Section 55 - Prescribed Employees Not Entitled

55 Prescribed employees are not entitled to notice of termination or termination pay under this Part.

This section provides that prescribed employees are not entitled to notice of termination or termination pay under Part XV of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. The prescribed employees are identified in s. 2 of O Reg 288/01. Refer to O Reg 288/01 for a complete discussion of the prescribed employees.

Note: For information on the application of the wilful disobedience exemption established in para. 3 of s. 2(1) of O Reg 288/01 where an employee is not vaccinated against, or tested for, COVID-19 in accordance with the employer's policy, also refer to "ESA Termination and Severance Liabilities Where an Employee is Not Vaccinated Against or Tested For COVID-19".

As with all exemptions from a minimum standard, the onus is on the employer to establish on a balance of probabilities that the exemption applies.

ESA Part XV Section 56 - What Constitutes Termination

What Constitutes Termination - s. 56(1)

56(1) An employer terminates the employment of an employee for purposes of section 54 if,

(a) the employer dismisses the employee or otherwise refuses or is unable to continue employing him or her;

(b) the employer constructively dismisses the employee and the employee resigns from his or her employment in response to that within a reasonable period; or

(c) the employer lays the employee off for a period longer than the period of a temporary lay-off.

This definition is relevant for Part XV, ss. 54 – 62 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 which refer to a termination of the employment relationship for the purposes of an entitlement to notice of termination or pay in lieu, as opposed to ESA Part XV, ss. 63 – 66 which refer to a severance of the employment relationship for the purposes of an entitlement to severance pay. Sections that deal with notice of termination or termination pay entitlement use "terminates" or "terminated". Sections that deal with severance pay entitlement use "severs" or "severed".

The definition of what constitutes a termination in this section is exhaustive. Only those situations specifically described in the definition will be considered to constitute a termination of the employment relationship. The definition has three parts:

1. The employer dismisses the employee or otherwise refuses or is unable to continue employing him or her - s. 56(1)(a)

The term "dismisses" in s. 56(1)(a) means a firing or similar ending of the employment relationship by the employer. It occurs on the initiative of the employer as opposed to the employee. An employer may dismiss an employee expressly, for example, by informing the employee that they are fired. An employer may also dismiss an employee implicitly, for example, by demanding the employee's pass card or by telling the employee to resign or they will be fired.

Clause (a) of the definition will also apply where the employer refuses or is unable to continue employing the employee, even if the situation does not involve an actual firing as such. The clause is very broad in its scope and captures the vast majority of situations in which an employee's employment ceases at the instance of the employer. A discussion of some of the issues that may arise in determining whether or not there has been a dismissal follows:

i. Quit v. Fired

One issue that arises is whether the employee resigned, as opposed to having their employment terminated by the employer. It has generally been held that two things must be established in order to conclude that an employee has quit:

1. A statement by the employee informing the employer of an intention to quit (or, in the absence of any statement, some act from which it may be inferred that the employee intended to quit); and
2. Some action on the part of the employee to carry out that intention.

In this regard see, for example: Grimsby Packaging Ltd. v Prokopp (July 23, 1991), ESC 2881 (Dissanyake); Rock Glen Fruit Farms Limited v Nordstrom (February 26, 1992), ESC 2988 (Roberts); and Deluxe Taxi (Barrie) Ltd. v Employees (April 18, 1973), ESC 125 (McNish).

In certain types of situations, the employee's conduct has been found to be inconsistent with quitting. For example:

- Where the employee says "I quit" in the heat of the moment and quickly withdraws the remark or returns to work shortly after saying it - see Deluxe Taxi (Barrie) Ltd. v Lupo, 2012 CanLII 1120 (ON LRB).

- Where the employee says "I quit" without saying when they will leave and continues to perform their duties - see Nunes & Murphy Restaurants Inc. operating as Harvey's 2513 v Kelly, 2016 CanLII 17266 (ON LRB).
- Where the employer advises the employee that unless they apologize, they will be fired, and the employee as a result, resigns (discussed under constructive dismissal below) – see Brown v Canadian Tire Corp., 2000 CanLII 2305 (ON LRB) and Canadian Debt Recovery Ltd v Landell, 2010 CanLII 67932 (ON LRB).
- Where the employee tells their colleagues that they quit or will quit but does not inform the employer and remains at work and completes their regular duties – see M. Oomen's Glass Ltd v Oomen, 2013 CanLII 76435 (ON LRB).

Certain types of conduct have been found to indicate a resignation. For example:

1. Where the employee states their intention to quit and then requests their Employment Insurance record of employment form – see Re J. Mac D. Thomson.
2. Where an employee fails to return to work after giving notice of intention to quit, coupled with cleaning out their desk and leaving keys behind - see Kingsway Lodge and Nursing Home v Cunningham et al (June 26, 1985), ESC 1906 (Brown).
3. Where the employee emailed their employer to confirm that they were not resigning but did not return to work, despite the employer making it clear that they could return – see Chapman v Martindale Animal Clinic, 2016 CanLII 7070 (ON LRB).

ii. Withdrawing Notice of Termination or Resignation

Notice of termination or resignation of employment, once given, cannot be withdrawn. Whether it is the employer giving notice of termination to the employee or the employee giving notice of resignation to the employer, the cases indicate that the person who gave the notice may not withdraw it unless the other party gives their consent. See Roberts v Creative Hair Design, 2000 CanLII 12795 (ON LRB).The only exception to this is where the termination or resignation announcement is given in the heat of the moment and then withdrawn quickly.

This Program policy reflects the common law. The rationale behind the law and the policy is that the party receiving the notice may have taken certain actions in reliance on it. For example, the employee, after receiving a notice of termination from the employer, may accept a job offer in another city and sell their house. An employer, having received notice of resignation from the employee, may make arrangements to advertise the position or may have actually hired a replacement employee. The cases indicate that it is not necessary to show that the party actually relied on the notice in order to prevent its withdrawal without that party's consent. The possibility of reliance is sufficient. See for example Westburne Central Supply v Green (December 10, 1992), ES 221/92 (Randall).

iii. Employee Fired After Giving Notice of Resignation

Is an employee who gives notice of resignation but whose employer responds by terminating their employment entitled to termination pay? The answer is yes, since what the employer did was to terminate the employee's employment before the employee's notice of resignation could take effect. See for example Leon's Furniture Limited/Meubles Leon Ltée v Aelick, 2016 CanLII 77660 (ON LRB). Also see Quebec (Commission des normes du travail) v. Asphalte Desjardins Inc. (2014 SCC 51): although this decision of the Supreme Court of Canada involved Quebec legislation, it affirms the employment law principle that an employment contract is not automatically ended upon receipt of a notice of resignation, that the relationship continues to exist until the date specified in the notice given by the employee, and that an employer that wishes to terminate the contract before the resignation takes effect is required to provide notice of termination/termination pay.

However, the amount of the employee's termination pay entitlement will be based on the shorter of:

1. The length of the applicable notice period under s. 57 or s. 58; and
2. The length of time between the date of termination by the employer and the effective date of the employee's notice of resignation (i.e., the point at which the employee would have left in any event had the employee's employment not been terminated by the employer).

For example, an employee with a period of employment of ten years gives notice of resignation on June 2, to be effective June 30. The employer immediately terminates the employee's employment. The employee will be entitled to termination pay based on the shorter of:

1. The required notice under s. 57 or s. 58, which for this employee is eight weeks; or
2. The length of time between the termination and the effective date of the employee's notice of resignation, which in this case is four weeks (June 2 to June 30).

Thus, the employee will be entitled to four weeks' termination pay. This is supported by a Divisional Court decision, Re Redpath Industries Ltd. and Ison et al., 1985 CanLII 2192 (ON SC).

Another example is an employee with a period of employment of three years who gives notice of resignation on June 2, to be effective June 30. The employer terminates the employee's employment two weeks into the four-week notice of resignation period. The employee will be entitled to termination pay based on the shorter of:

1. The required notice under s. 57 or s. 58, which for this employee is three weeks; or
2. The length of time between the termination and the effective date of the employee's notice of resignation, which in this case is two weeks (June 16 to June 30).

Thus, the employee will be entitled to two weeks' termination pay.

However, see O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) para. 3 for the discussion in regarding the applicability of the wilful misconduct exemption to employees who have resigned and accepted employment with a competitor but prior to commencing work for their new employer put themselves into a serious conflict of interest with their current employer by, for example, disclosing confidential information to the competitor.

iv. Otherwise refuses or is unable to continue employing

The phrase, "otherwise refuses or is unable to continue employing him or her" includes terminations of employment by operation of law such as those that result from bankruptcy (see the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Limited (Re), [1998] 1 SCR 27) or frustration of contract. An example of the latter situation would be where the employer is required to cease operations as a result of an order issued under the Environmental Protection Act, RSO 1990, c E.19 ("EPA"). At common law, this might arguably be considered to result in frustration of the employees' employment contracts, but the phrase "unable to continue employing" ensures that the situation is treated as involving a termination by the employer, with the result that the employees whose employment is terminated because the employer was required to cease operations under the EPA are entitled to notice of termination. This is so whether or not the cessation of operations is self-induced by the employer. In other words, it applies to situations where the environmental order issued was not the result of actions or omissions of the employer, as well as to situations where the order was the result of the employer's actions or omissions. The broad language of s. 56(1)(a) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 eliminated the need for such a provision.

"Otherwise refuses. . . to continue employing" would also cover the situation of an employee employed on a term contract where the employer technically does not dismiss an employee but simply lets the contract expire without renewing it, although this does not necessarily mean that the employee would be entitled to notice or termination pay - see the discussion of the term or task exemption in O Reg 288, s. 2(1), para. 1.

2. The employer constructively dismisses the employee and the employee resigns from his or her employment in response to that within a reasonable period - s. 56(1)(b)

Section 56(1)(b) provides that a termination occurs where an employer constructively dismisses an employee and the employee resigns their employment within a reasonable period in response to the employer's action.

Note that O. Reg. 228/20 (“Infectious Disease Emergency Leave”) establishes that there is no constructive dismissal under the ESA where a non-unionized employee’s employer temporarily reduces or temporarily eliminates the employee’s wages or hours of work for reasons related to COVID-19 during the defined COVID-19 period, unless the termination resulting from the constructive dismissal occurred before May 29, 2020. See O. Reg. 228/20 for details

Note also that during the first declared emergency for COVID-19 (which commenced March 17, 2020 and terminated July 24, 2020), orders were issued under the Emergency Management and Civil Protection Act (EMCPA) that authorized employers to make some specific unilateral changes to specified terms and conditions of employment. Upon the termination of the first declared emergency for COVID-19 on July 24, 2020, those orders ceased to be orders under the EMCPA and instead continued as time-limited orders under the Reopening Ontario (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020. The orders, including the period of time to which they relate, can be found by visiting the Reopening Ontario (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020 on the Ontario government’s e-Laws website and then selecting the “Regulations under this Act” tab.

In technical terms, a constructive dismissal exists where the employer repudiates the employment contract by committing an actual breach or an anticipatory breach of a fundamental term of the contract. If the breach (whether actual or anticipatory) is substantial and adverse to the employee, they can elect to end the contract by resigning but is treated in law as if they had been dismissed by the employer.

As distinguished from an actual breach that imposes an immediate change in the terms of the employment contract, an anticipatory breach is a change to the contract of employment that will come into effect at some future date. Key to a finding of anticipatory breach is that the employer has unequivocally stated that at some future point it will no longer abide by the terms of the contract as it presently exists. An employer will not have committed an anticipatory breach by simply proposing (even in extremely strong terms) the desirability, from its perspective, of making changes or inviting the employee to consider the proposal or to negotiate.

However, an anticipatory breach that would give rise to a constructive dismissal if the employee resigns within a reasonable period of time must be distinguished from a situation where the employer is terminating the employment relationship by giving proper written notice of a change to the employment contract to occur on a future specified date.

In the latter case, if the employer provides notice in writing clearly indicating that the employer will be making a unilateral change to the employment contract at a future specified date and it is clear that the employee must either agree to the future change or the employment relationship will end on the specified date, the employer is considered by the Program to have effectively provided notice of termination in accordance with ESA Part XV, s. 54 with an offer of re-employment on new terms and conditions.

In other words, even though the notice of a change to the contract may not specifically state that it constitutes notice of termination with an offer of new employment on different terms effective on a future, specified date, if it is clear that a refusal to accept the change on that date will end the employment relationship, the written notice of the change may be treated as working notice of termination under the Act. In contrast to a constructive dismissal flowing from an anticipatory breach, which requires the employee to resign within a reasonable period in response to the employer's actions pursuant to s. 56(1)(b), if the employee were to resign in response to a notice of a future change as described above (i.e., one which is effectively considered a notice of termination), they would forfeit any additional rights to notice of termination under the Act. See the discussion on Notice of Termination & Termination Pay Obligations below for more information. For information on the application of these principles where an employee is not vaccinated against, or tested for, COVID-19 in accordance with the employer's policy, see "ESA Termination and Severance Liabilities Where an Employee is Not Vaccinated Against or Tested For COVID-19".

As noted above, a notice of a future change to a contract will only be considered a notice of termination where it is clear that the current contract of employment will end on a specified date and that the only option available to the employee as of that date is to accept re-employment on the new, amended contract terms. In this regard, see Wronko v Western Inventory Service Ltd., 2008 ONCA 327 (CanLII), in which the Court of Appeal concluded that the employer's notice of a future change did not constitute effective notice of termination. In that case, the employer had provided notice in September 2002 that the employee's contract, which provided for two years termination pay, would be amended in September 2004 to provide a maximum of 30 weeks termination pay. The notice specifically provided that the employee's agreement to the change was "voluntary and is not a mandatory requirement for your continued employment". Over the course of the next two years, the employee on several occasions advised the employer that he would not accept the change. In September 2004, the date the change was to be implemented, the employer advised the employee that if he did not accept the new terms and conditions of his employment, they no longer had a job for him. Despite the employer's argument that the notice of the change which had been given in 2002 constituted notice of termination, the Court of Appeal found that not to be the case on the facts. The Court found that although the employee had made it clear that he would not accept the proposed change to his contract; the employer had failed to make it clear that the refusal to accept the new terms would result in his termination and re-employment would only be offered upon the new terms. The employer was found to have acquiesced to the employee's position and the terms of the existing contract remained in effect. The Court concluded that the case did not involve a constructive dismissal in that the employee did not treat the employment contract as having been repudiated but rather, the employee's employment was terminated in September 2004 and the employer was then liable for two years of termination pay in accordance with the employment contract.

i. Criteria for Constructive Dismissal

The following criteria must be met to establish a constructive dismissal as a result of a change to the employment contract:

1. The change is made unilaterally by the employer, i.e., without the employee's agreement;
2. The change is to a fundamental term or condition of the employee's employment; and
3. The change is substantial and to the employee's disadvantage.

1. The change is made unilaterally by the employer, i.e., without the employee's agreement.

The meaning of the first criterion is self-evident; the second and third criteria are discussed in more detail below.

2. The change is to a fundamental term or condition of the employee's employment.

In determining whether this criterion of the test is met, an officer must first decide whether the term in question is a fundamental term or condition of employment. Terms and conditions of employment may be implicit or explicit. Implicit terms may be established by past practice or custom or judicial ruling. Explicit terms and conditions of employment might be the subject of an oral or written employment contract or may be contained in oral or written workplace policies. Some examples of terms and conditions of employment that would usually be considered fundamental are as follows:

- The core duties and responsibilities of a position;
- The status, perquisites and remuneration associated with a position; and
- In some cases, the geographic location where the duties of a position are to be performed.

3. The change is substantial and to the employee's disadvantage.

Constructive dismissal will only be established if the change is substantial and adverse to the employee.

What constitutes a substantial change to the employee's disadvantage is a factual determination that will vary with the circumstances of each case. In each case, however, the change must be considered with regard to the particular employee's circumstances, but from the perspective of a reasonable person. The test to be applied is how a reasonable person in the employee's circumstances would view the change.

What follows are some examples of substantial changes to terms and conditions of employment that are generally considered fundamental.

- A pay cut of a substantial amount. Generally, pay cuts of up to 10 per cent will not be considered as substantial. However, 10 per cent is not a "magic number" but is just a rough guide. In determining the magnitude of a pay cut, the value of the benefits should be considered. See Ontario Chemists Rx Inc. v Ibrahim, 2007 CanLII 48597 (ON LRB).
- A substantial reduction in hours. See Skelton v 1012311 Ontario Ltd., 2004 CanLII 29465 (ON LRB), in which the Board found a reduction of hours from 40 or more per week to 16 hours per week constituted a constructive dismissal.
- A breach of the requirement to pay wages on a regular basis. Where the employer has for example, failed to pay the employee's wages on time for several pay periods, the employee may be able to resign and claim constructive dismissal. See Ma v VE Collective Inc, 2014 CanLII 39566 (ON LRB) in which the Board found a constructive dismissal arising from the employer having repeatedly missed paying the employee on her pay day by two or three days and in the last of the two pay days before she resigned, having missed her pay day by seven days.–

- Where the delay in payment is lengthy, one such instance, as opposed to repeated ones, may be sufficient to amount to a constructive dismissal. See Di Giuseppe v Hospice Richmond Hill, 2015 CanLII 56255 (ON LRB) where the Board found that by paying the employee 2 weeks late combined with the uncertainty of whether the employer had the ability to pay the employee in the future constituted constructive dismissal.
- A clear demotion, whether or not accompanied by a pay cut, particularly where the employee is stripped of managerial responsibilities or suffers a significant loss of status. See Beck v Hamilton (City), 2007 CanLII 22576 (ON LRB), where the OLRB found that as a result of a reorganization, the terms and conditions of the claimant's position were significantly diminished relative to his peers. He effectively suffered a substantial demotion and a significant diminution in his responsibilities resulting in a constructive dismissal. The Board also noted that the employer's motives were not determinative as a demotion can constitute a constructive dismissal even if there is a legitimate business justification for a reorganization that brings about the demotion and reduction in responsibilities. See also Smith v CPI Corp., 2013 CanLII 14044 (ON LRB).
- There is no demotion, but there is a significant change in duties or responsibilities. For example, if a production manager is reassigned to the position of sales manager, a position that requires different skills and abilities even where there is no change in salary, status or perquisites, the substantial change in the nature of the duties may be a basis on which a constructive dismissal can be founded.
- A change of shift, particularly from a day shift to the night or graveyard shift, unless the change is pursuant to an express or implied provision in the contract of employment. In some cases, the employer may be able to establish the existence of an implied term on the basis of past practices in similar situations or evidence of the expectations of the parties.
- A job transfer to another city or town, where commuting would be impossible or would involve a substantial increase in travel time. For example, commuting may be possible for an employee with a driver's license, but impossible for an employee without one. There is court authority that says an employee's job may be transferred to another location if the right of the employer to make such a transfer is an implied term of the employment contract - see Smith v Viking Helicopter Ltd. (CA), 1989 CanLII 4368 (ON CA). The onus would be on the employer, however, to demonstrate that such an implied term existed. Implied terms to this effect are most likely to be found in cases where the employer is large organization with numerous offices or branches in different cities and the employee is in the managerial category.
- In some cases, a lay-off, even one that lasts no longer than the period of a temporary lay-off. This may be surprising to some, since a temporary lay-off is not in itself considered a termination under s. 56(1)(c). However, in Stolze v Addario, 1997 CanLII 764 (ON CA), the Ontario Court of Appeal held that if the terms of the employee's employment contract do not provide, either expressly or by implication, that they can be laid off, a lay-off, even a temporary one, can constitute a constructive dismissal and will be treated as a termination by the employer if the employee responds by quitting. It should be noted that the employee in Stolze v Addario was a key employee who was paid an annual salary and that the employer had never before laid off any salaried personnel in the 32 years that the employee had been working for the employer. Bearing in mind that a term providing for lay-offs need not be express and that in many cases it may be implied on the basis of past practice, common understandings or custom in the industry or trade concerned, it is likely that few employees could successfully claim constructive dismissal on the basis of a temporary lay-off.

ii. Other Breaches Giving Rise to Constructive Dismissal

Other breaches of the employment contract that may give rise to a constructive dismissal include forced resignations or sustained harassment or abuse.

A forced resignation occurs where the employer puts the employee to a choice between resigning and some even less palatable alternative, such as where the employer says to the employee, "If you don't resign, I'll fire you." If the employee in fact resigns in response to such a statement, the employee will be considered to have been constructively dismissed by the employer.

If the employer harasses or abuses the employee to an intolerable extent and as a consequence the employee resigns, the employee will be considered as having been constructively dismissed. It is not necessary to show intent on the part of the employer to get rid of the employee in order to find a constructive dismissal. Even in the absence of such intent, there will be a constructive dismissal if the employee resigns in response to the employer's behaviour and that behaviour would be unacceptable to a reasonable person in the employee's circumstances.

In Tiny Town Daycare Inc. v Vlahos, 2015 CanLII 67009 (ON LRB), the Board found that the employer's treatment of the employee constituted a constructive dismissal and awarded the employee termination pay. The employer subjected the employee to a sexual and gender-related harassment that created a poisoned work environment, which itself was a fundamental breach of the employment relationship. The employer also accused her of defamation, slander and neglect of duty, and threatened to make a complaint that would result in the employee losing her license. The Board held that the employer's conduct was so reprehensible that the employee felt she had no other alternative than to quit her employment.

Note, however, that unpleasantness, rudeness or misunderstanding of the facts on the part of the employer does not necessarily create the sort of poisoned work environment that can be treated as constructive dismissal by an employee who experiences it – see Mortensen v Convergys CMG Canada Limited Partnership, 2015 CanLII 2630 (ON LRB).

iii. Reasonable Period

As noted above, s. 56(1)(b) specifically provides that an employee who alleges constructive dismissal is required to resign from their employment within a "reasonable period". Although the employee must at some point resign to signal their rejection of the unilateral imposition of new terms by the employer, in order for s. 56(1)(b) to apply, the resignation does not have to be immediate. The reasonable period affords the employee time to consider whether to accept the change. It is an opportunity to try out the new arrangement or assess the future impact of an anticipatory breach before deciding whether or not to resign and claim constructive dismissal.

Where the breach has immediate consequences, the reasonable period will begin to run from the point the breach impacts upon the employee. In cases of anticipatory breach, the reasonable period will be considered to start running when the employer announces its intention.

It is Program policy that this reasonable period under s. 56(1)(b) is not necessarily the same length as the notice period under ss. 57 or 58. What constitutes a reasonable period may vary with the circumstances of each case. For example, if the employee is paid a salary of $1000 per week and the employer unilaterally reduces the salary to $700 per week effective immediately, what would constitute a reasonable period would be quite short, as very little time would be needed by the employee to determine whether the change was acceptable because the impact on them would be quite obvious. On the other hand, if the employee was a sales employee paid on a salaried basis and the employer unilaterally changed the employee's remuneration to a commissioned basis and gave the employee a new sales territory at the same time, what constitutes a reasonable period in those circumstances may be quite lengthy, as the employee may need to try out the new arrangement for a considerable time before being in a position to gauge its impact on their earnings.

It should be noted that in order to preserve rights to a remedy under the common law, an employee may be expected to stay on under the changed terms beyond what would be considered a reasonable try out period. An employee who wishes to claim damages at common law for failure to give reasonable notice of termination has to show that they have made reasonable efforts to mitigate or lessen those damages, otherwise their damages will be offset by the amount that they could have reduced them by using reasonable efforts. The courts have said that this might require the employee to stay on under the new arrangement where it does not involve work that is substantially different or demeaning and where the work relationship is not acrimonious - see Mifsud v MacMillan Bathurst Inc., 1989 CanLII 260 (ON CA).

However, in order to claim a remedy for constructive dismissal under the ESA 2000, the employee would have to resign within a reasonable period. That may mean that the employee has to choose between protecting their remedy under the common law and successfully claiming for termination pay on the basis of constructive dismissal under the ESA 2000.

iv. Notice of Termination & Termination Pay Obligations

An immediate or anticipatory unilateral breach of a fundamental term of the employment contract that has adverse consequences is a constructive dismissal and if it is followed by a resignation within a reasonable period of time it is a termination of employment under the Act. It follows therefore that the employer will have an obligation to provide notice of termination or termination pay in lieu of notice.

However, as discussed above under s. 56(1)(b), if an employer provides proper notice (see below) of a change to the contract that will be implemented on future date, and it is clear that a failure to accept the new terms and conditions of employment on the specified date will result in the existing employment contract being terminated with an offer of re-employment on the amended terms, there is no constructive dismissal. As a factual matter, it is the employer, not the employee who is terminating the employment contract, so the constructive dismissal analysis, which applies when the employee has resigned but is treated in law as if they had been dismissed, is not relevant.

Program policy is that proper notice must also be:

- In writing and specify a date for the contract change;
- Addressed to the employee; and
- Served either personally or in accordance with ESA Part XXI, s. 95.

Where all these conditions are met, the employer's notice of the contract change will be considered to be working notice of termination for the purposes of discharging the employer's liabilities for notice under the Act. If the working notice provided is something less than what is required under s. 57 or s. 58, the employer will be liable for the difference in termination pay in the event the employee does not accept the offer of the "new" contract. The employer's liability will be reduced according to the amount of notice that was given. Further, should the employee resign before the end of the notice period, they will have no further entitlements to payment for the balance of the notice period or to termination pay in lieu of notice.

3. The employer lays the employee off for a period longer than the period of temporary lay-off - s. 56(1)(c)

The provision states that a lay-off that exceeds the period of a "temporary lay-off" is a termination. Section 56(2) defines a temporary lay-off. Please see ss. 56(2), (3.1) and (3.3) - (3.6) for a detailed discussion of a temporary lay-off, and the point at which a lay-off will exceed a period of temporary lay-off thereby triggering a termination under s. 56(1)(c).

Note that O. Reg. 228/20 (“Infectious Disease Emergency Leave”) provides that during the defined COVID-19 period, non-unionized employees whose wages or hours of work are temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated by their employer for reasons related to COVID-19 are not considered to be laid off under the ESA (except where the layoff is because of a permanent discontinuance of all of the employer’s business at an establishment). See O. Reg. 228/20 for details.

As this section provides that a lay-off is a termination only where the period of lay-off exceeds that of a temporary lay-off, it follows that a temporary lay-off is not a termination and that there is therefore no obligation under the Act to give an employee notice of a temporary lay-off. If an employer does provide notice of lay-off and the lay-off ultimately lasts longer than a temporary lay-off and is subsequently deemed to be a termination, the notice of lay-off cannot generally be set-off against the employer's notice of termination obligations.

Ontario Regulation 288/01, s. 4(2) permits notice of indefinite lay-off to fulfil the employer's notice of termination obligations. The ESA 2000 restricts the application of this provision to situations where an employer would be in breach of a collective agreement if it advised employees that their employment was being terminated. This allows an employer bound by such a collective agreement and who anticipates that a lay-off that it is about to implement will end up resulting in termination for the purposes of the Act, to satisfy the Act's notice requirements by giving notice of indefinite lay-off.

It should be noted that while a lay-off that lasts no longer than the period of a temporary lay-off will not be considered a termination under s. 56(1)(c), if the employee's employment contract does not provide, either expressly or by implication (which could be based on past practice, common understandings or custom in the industry or trade concerned) that they may be laid off, a lay-off, even one that would be considered temporary under s. 56(2), may constitute a constructive dismissal; in that case, if the employee responds to the lay-off by quitting within a reasonable period, the situation will be treated as involving a termination by the employer pursuant to s. 56(1)(b). In this regard, see the discussion of the Ontario Court of Appeal decision in Stolze v Addario.

56(2) For the purpose of clause (1)(c), a temporary lay-off is,

(a) a lay-off of not more than 13 weeks in any period of 20 consecutive weeks;

(b) a lay-off of more than 13 weeks in any period of 20 consecutive weeks, if the lay-off is less than 35 weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks and,

- i. the employee continues to receive substantial payments from the employer,
- ii. the employer continues to make payments for the benefit of the employee under a legitimate retirement or pension plan or a legitimate group or employee insurance plan,

iii. the employee receives supplementary unemployment benefits,

iv. the employee is employed elsewhere during the lay-off and would be entitled to receive supplementary unemployment benefits if that were not so,

v. the employer recalls the employee within the time approved by the Director, or

vi. in the case of an employee who is not represented by a trade union, the employer recalls the employee within the time set out in an agreement between the employer and the employee; or

(c) in the case of an employee represented by a trade union, a lay-off longer than a lay-off described in clause (b) where the employer recalls the employee within the time set out in an agreement between the employer and the trade union.

This section defines a "temporary lay-off" for the purpose of s. 56(1)(c), which provides that a termination occurs when an employee is laid off for a period longer than a temporary lay-off. This section must be read in conjunction with s. 56(3.1)-(3.6), which sets out what constitutes a week of lay-off for the purpose of this section.

This section must also be read in conjunction with s. 56(5), which provides that once a termination is triggered by a lay-off that exceeds the period of a temporary lay-off, the termination is deemed to have occurred on the very first day of the lay-off.

1. A lay-off of not more than 13 weeks in any period of 20 consecutive weeks - s. 56(2)(a)

Subject to s. 56(2)(b) and s. 56(2)(c), an employee is considered to be on a temporary lay-off if the employee is on lay-off for no more than 13 weeks within any period of 20 consecutive weeks.

For example, an employee who is laid off for ten weeks, recalled to work for eight weeks and then laid off again for another ten weeks will be temporarily laid off under s. 56(2)(a) because the longest the lay-off lasted in any period of 20 consecutive weeks was 12 weeks. As a result, the employee’s employment would not have been deemed to have been terminated and they would not be entitled to notice of termination or termination pay.

The period of 20 consecutive weeks is a rolling window so that if the employee is laid off for more than 13 weeks in any consecutive 20-week period, the lay-off ceases to be temporary. Neither the employer nor the employee can pick and choose which 20 weeks to use when determining whether the 13-week threshold has been reached. Rather, the threshold is reached and a termination occurs on the first occasion that the layoff exceeds 13 weeks of lay-off in any period of 20 consecutive weeks.

A week of lay-off is defined in s. 56(3.1) with respect to employees with a regular work week and in s. 56(3.3) and s. 56(3.5) with respect to employees who do not have a regular work week.

However, the fact that an employee has a regular work week (i.e., they usually work the same number of hours each week) does not necessarily mean that they usually work the same days each week. Because of this, the point at which the lay-off of an employee with a regular work week will be considered to have exceeded the period of a temporary lay-off so as to trigger a termination may differ according to whether the employee usually works the same days each week or whether the employee instead works different days from week to week.

Similarly, the fact that an employee does not have a regular work week (i.e., they do not work the same number of hours in each week) does not necessarily mean that the employee does not work the same days in each week. Again, the point at which the lay-off of an employee who does not have a regular work week will be considered to have exceeded a period of temporary lay-off so as to trigger a termination will depend on whether the employee usually works the same days each week or works different days each week.

Note that for the purposes of the under 35 weeks in 52 rule, termination is triggered at the point the employee has been on lay-off for a full 35 weeks; thus, the question of when the lay-off exceeds 35 weeks does not arise.

i. Termination Triggered by Lay-off Where Employee Usually Works the Same Days Each Week

For purposes of s. 56(2)(a), known as the 13 weeks in 20 rule, the Program's position is that where an employee usually works the same days each week, the lay-off will exceed 13 weeks at the first moment of the first day in the 14th week on which the employee would normally have been scheduled to work and on which they do not work. Under s. 56(2)(b), the under 35 weeks in 52 rule, termination is triggered at the point the employee has been on lay-off for a full 35 weeks; accordingly, the question of when the lay-off exceeds 35 weeks does not arise.

Consider an employee who usually works Monday through Friday and who is temporarily laid off as defined in s. 56(2)(a). The employee is initially laid off for ten weeks, goes back to work for four weeks (no longer on layoff) and is then laid off again for another three weeks. The employee has at that point been on a temporary lay-off for a full 13 weeks within a 17- week period. If the employee is subsequently on lay-off on any day that would normally be a work day (i.e., a Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday or Friday) within the next three weeks, the lay-off will have exceeded a period of temporary lay-off and a termination will be triggered under s. 56(1)(c).

Note that there would not have to be a full week of lay-off in those next three weeks in order to trigger a termination; the employee has already been on lay-off for a full 13 weeks within the last 17 weeks and so even one second more of lay-off occurring in the next three weeks means that they will have been laid off for more than 13 weeks in a 20-week period.

Although a termination is triggered at this point, the termination is deemed to have occurred on the very first day of the lay-off. In the case of an employee who usually works the same days each week, the first day of layoff can be identified as the first day in the first week of lay-off on which the employee would normally work and on which they did not work. See the discussion of s. 56(5) below regarding deemed termination date.

ii. Termination Triggered by Lay-off Where Employee Does Not Usually Work the Same Days Each Week

For purposes of s. 56(2)(a), known as the 13 weeks in 20 rule, the Program's position is that where an employee does not usually work the same days each week, the lay-off cannot be considered to have exceeded 13 weeks until the end of the 14th week of lay-off. In contrast to the situation of an employee who usually works the same days each week, in the case of an employee who does not usually work the same days each week, no particular day within a week that is a week of lay-off can be identified as a day on which the employee continues to be on lay-off. If the employee sometimes works on Tuesdays but often does not work on Tuesdays, the fact that they do not work on a particular Tuesday does not necessarily mean that they are on lay-off that day. In the result, in order to determine that the lay-off has in fact exceeded 13 weeks, we must wait until the end of the 14th week of lay-off before we can know that the employee has been on lay-off for more than 13 weeks. Under s. 56(2)(b), the under 35 weeks in 52 rule, termination is triggered at the point the employee has been on lay-off for a full 35 weeks; accordingly, the question of when the lay-off exceeds 35 weeks does not arise.

Although a termination is triggered at the end of the 14th week of layoff, the termination is deemed to have occurred on the very first day of the lay-off. In the case of an employee who does not usually work the same days each week, just as there is no particular day in the 14th week of lay-off that we can say is a day on which the employee continues to be on lay-off, likewise there is no particular day in the first week of lay-off that we can say was a day on which the employee was on lay-off. Given this, and given the need to be able to ascertain a deemed termination date, the position of the Program is that the first day of the lay-off (and hence the deemed termination date) for an employee who does not usually work the same days each week is the first day of the first week of lay-off. Since the week of lay-off corresponds to the work week, this means that if the employee's work week is Sunday to Saturday, the first day of the lay-off will be the Sunday. See the discussion in s. 56(5) regarding deemed termination date.

Note that where a termination is triggered because of a layoff that exceeds 13 weeks in a period of 20, the employee is entitled under the Act to their termination pay forthwith, even where the contract or collective agreement provides recall rights. In the case of termination pay, the provisions in the Act requiring an election between retention of recall rights (with the employee's entitlement paid into trust) and giving up recall rights (and receiving the entitlement forthwith) apply only if the termination pay entitlement arises because of a layoff of 35 weeks or more - see ESA Part XV, s. 67(1).

As a consequence, when a termination is triggered because of a lay-off that exceeds 13 weeks in a period of 20 consecutive weeks, an employee is entitled under the Act to be paid their termination pay in accordance with ESA Part V, s. 11(5). Nothing in the Act requires that such an employee choose between receiving termination pay forthwith and retaining their recall rights.

2. A lay-off of more than 13 weeks in any period of 20 consecutive weeks if the lay-off is less than 35 weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks – s. 56(2)(b)

Section 56(2)(b) sets out the six circumstances in which a lay-off of more than 13 weeks in any consecutive 20-week period but less than 35 weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks is still considered to be a temporary lay-off:

i. The employee continues to receive substantial payments from the employer,

ii. The employer continues to make payments for the benefit of the employee under a legitimate retirement or pension plan or a legitimate group or employee insurance plan,

iii. The employee receives supplementary unemployment benefits,

iv. The employee is employed elsewhere during the lay-off and would be entitled to receive supplementary unemployment benefits if that were not so,

v. The employer recalls the employee within the time approved by the Director, or

vi. In the case of an employee who is not represented by a trade union, the employer recalls the employee within the time set out in an agreement between the employer and the employee.

It should be noted that the period of 52 consecutive weeks is a rolling window. Neither the employer nor the employee can pick and choose which 52 weeks to use when determining whether the 35-week threshold has been reached. Rather, the threshold is reached and a termination occurs on the first occasion of there being 35 weeks of lay-off in a period of 52 consecutive weeks. As the termination is triggered at the point the employee has been on lay-off for a full 35 weeks; the question of when the lay-off exceeds 35 weeks does not arise.

In addition, the word "any" in s. 56(2)(b) means, in the case of an employee who accepts a recall, that time spent on lay-off prior to the recall is taken into account in determining whether a post-recall lay-off has triggered a termination (or severance). In other words, both the time spent on lay-off prior to the recall and the time spent on lay-off where the employee is laid off again following the recall is counted in determining whether the employee has been laid off for at least 35 weeks in any 52-week period.

See the Court of Appeal decision in United Steel v National Steel Car Limited, 2013 ONCA 401 (CanLII) and ESA Part XV, 63(1) for a discussion of this case.

The six circumstances in which a lay-off of more than 13 weeks in any period of 20 consecutive weeks but less than 35 weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks is still considered to be a temporary lay-off are:

i. The employee continues to receive substantial payments from the employer.

Section 56(2)(b)(i) provides that a lay-off of more than 13 weeks in any 20 consecutive week period but less than 35 weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks is still considered to be a temporary lay-off if the employer continues to provide the employee with substantial payments during the period of lay-off.

It is Program policy that the term "continues" indicates that the employer must make ongoing payments to the employee during the entire period of temporary lay-off, including the first 13 weeks of lay-off, in order for this clause to apply. If the employer stops making the payments at any time, the lay-off will cease to be a temporary lay-off under this clause.

The use of the plural as opposed to the singular form of the word "payment" reinforces that the employer must make multiple and continuous payments to the employee during the entire period of temporary lay-off.

Section 56(2)(b)(i) has not been interpreted by a referee, adjudicator, OLRB or court, so employment standards officers may wish to contact the Employment Practices Branch for assistance in the event they are required to consider the application of this provision.

ii. The employer continues to make payments for the benefit of the employee under a legitimate retirement or pension plan or a legitimate group or employee insurance plan.

Section 56(2)(b)(ii) provides that a lay-off of more than 13 weeks in any 20 consecutive weeks but less than 35 weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks is still considered to be a temporary lay-off if the employer continues to make payments under a legitimate retirement or pension plan or a legitimate group or employee insurance plan during the period of lay-off.

Where the employer's pension or benefit plan contributions are based on a percentage of the employee's wages, the contributions would continue to be made on the basis of the wages the employee was earning prior to the lay-off.

It is Program policy that the words "continues" and "legitimate" indicate that the employer must make ongoing payments for the entire period of the temporary lay-off (including the first 13 weeks) and the employer's payments must be made pursuant to plan provisions that were in existence before the commencement of the lay-off, unless the employee has specifically agreed to an amendment to the plan or the amendment was necessitated by a legitimate cause such as a legislative change.

If, for example, a plan provides that the coverage will end after 26 weeks of lay-off, the employer will not be able to continue to make payments to a legitimate plan after the 26th week and, therefore, the employee will cease to be on a temporary lay-off when the employer stops making the payments. Note however, that with respect to a group or employee insurance plan comprised of multiple plans (e.g., a package consisting of life insurance, extended health accidental death and a long-term disability plan) the discontinuance of one of those plans may, in certain circumstances, not trigger the end of a temporary lay-off. See the discussion of such package plans below.

If the employer, with employee agreement, renegotiated the terms of the plan after the commencement of the lay-off to extend the coverage from 26 weeks to 35 weeks, the employee would continue to be on a temporary layoff for up to 35 weeks after the lay-off began. However, if the terms of the plan were renegotiated without employee agreement, the employee would cease to be on a temporary lay-off at the point the employer began making payments pursuant to the new extended plan. This is because the employer is not continuing to make payments pursuant to the plan, so much as starting to make new payments not previously required. Also, it might be inferred that the employer has taken such action in an attempt to extend the temporary layoff past 13 weeks and therefore the requirement that the plan be legitimate is not met. In this regard see Stanton Pipes Ltd. v Turk et al (February 5, 1986), ESC 2035 (Egan).

Another point in regard to these payments is that they must relate to the period of employment after the lay-off began. If, for example, pension plan contributions made during the period of lay-off are in respect of service accrued prior to the commencement of the lay-off, those contributions will not be considered as payments within the meaning of this section.

It is Program policy that there is no requirement that an employer who offers both an insurance plan or plans and a pension plan must continue payments under both the insurance plan or plans AND the pension plan. The employer could continue payments under just the pension plan or just the insurance plan or plans. However, if the employer offers a pension plan and more than one type of insurance plan, and it does not continue payments under the pension plan, it is Program policy that s. 2(b)(ii) will generally not apply unless payments are continued under ALL the insurance plans. Likewise, if the employer does not offer a pension plan but does offer more than one type of insurance plan, s. 2(b)(ii) will generally not apply unless payments are continued under ALL the insurance plans. Thus, if the employer continues only part of the insurance coverage (e.g., just life insurance while dropping health insurance) this clause, generally speaking, will not apply.

However, where an employer continues to provide the insurance plan package but through no fault of the employer and for otherwise legitimate reasons part of that coverage (e.g., disability insurance) is subsequently discontinued, the temporary lay-off will continue despite the discontinuance of such coverage. For example, consider an employer who provides a group insurance plan package that includes disability benefits. It may be that an insurer will not provide coverage for disability after a certain point in the layoff and that the terms of the policy specifically state this. In that situation, if disability insurance payments are not continued beyond the point at which coverage under the plan ends, but the employer has other insurance plans under which payments continue to be made, it is the Program's view that the situation will still be covered by s. 2(b)(ii). This assumes that the length-of-coverage provision in the plan was not specifically negotiated by the employer in anticipation of or in response to the lay-off and that the employer could not, prior to the lay-off, have arranged for disability insurance with a different insurer who was willing to offer lengthier coverage. Note, however, that if there are no other insurance plans, the cessation of coverage under the disability plan will mean that s. 2(b)(ii) no longer applies.

The issue has arisen as to what happens in a situation where the plan provides that both the employer and the employee make contributions to the plan, e.g., employer 50 per cent and employee 50 per cent, and the employee is requested to make their share of the contribution and refuses. In such situations, the insurer will not normally accept a partial premium (i.e., only the employer's payment) as sufficient to maintain the plan and may suspend or cancel the plan. In such a situation, should the employee be able to consider themselves as terminated after 13 weeks of lay-off even though that is the result of the employee's failure to pay half the insurance premium? The Program's policy is that if the employee does this and the employer is prevented as a result from continuing its payments under the plan because the insurer has suspended or cancelled the plan, this clause will apply and the lay-off will still be considered to be temporary past the 13-week point. In this situation however, it is Program policy that the employer should do everything reasonably possible to ensure continued coverage for the employee, such as taking advantage of any grace periods and contacting the employee to ensure the employee's failure to pay was not due to an oversight.

iii. The employee receives supplementary unemployment benefits.

Section 56(2)(b)(iii) provides that a lay-off of more than 13 weeks in any 20 consecutive week period but less than 35 weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks is still considered to be a temporary lay-off if the employee is in receipt of supplementary unemployment benefits.

Supplementary unemployment benefits ("SUBS") are amounts that the employer pays to the employee to top up the employee's unemployment benefits. For example, the employee is receiving $300 a week in benefits under the Employment Insurance Act, SC 1996, c 23, and the SUBS plan provided by the employer entitles the employee to a top up of a further $100 a week while they are on lay-off. The term supplementary unemployment benefit is not defined in the ESA 2000. However, it is defined in s. 145(1) of the Income Tax Act, RSC 1985, c 1 (5th Supp) ("ITA") as follows:

Supplementary unemployment benefit plan means an arrangement, other than an arrangement in the nature of a superannuation or pension fund or plan or an employees profit sharing plan, under which payments are made by an employer to a trustee in trust exclusively for the payment of periodic amounts to employees or former employees of the employer who are or may be laid off for any temporary or indefinite period.

If the employer's SUBS plan does not meet the definition in the ITA, with the result that the payments would not be considered supplementary unemployment benefits under s. 56(2)(b)(iii), the payments the employer makes may instead satisfy the conditions in s. 56(2)(b)(i), if the plan is bona fide and the payments continue to be made through the period of lay-off.

iv. The employee is employed elsewhere during the lay-off and would be entitled to receive supplementary unemployment benefits if that were not so.

Section 56(2)(b)(iv) provides that a lay-off of more than 13 weeks in any 20 consecutive week period but less than 35 weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks is still considered to be a temporary lay-off if the employee is employed elsewhere during the lay-off and would have received SUBS had they not been so employed.

v. The employer recalls the employee within the time approved by the Director.

Section 56(2)(b)(v) provides that a lay-off of more than 13 weeks in any 20 consecutive week period but less than 35 weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks is still considered to be a temporary lay-off if the employer recalls the employee within the time approved by the Director of Employment Standards. There is no requirement that the employee be in receipt (or entitled to) any of the payments described in ss. 56(2)(b)(i)-(iv) during the lay-off.

Some of the factors the Director or their delegate (see Delegation of Powers) may consider in determining whether to provide approval are:

- The reason for the lay-off:
- The length of the lay-off;
- The financial situation of the employer;
- The view of the union (if there is one).

Note that this list is not intended to be exhaustive.

vi. In the case of an employee who is not represented by a trade union, the employer recalls the employee within the time set out in an agreement between the employer and the employee.

Section 56(2)(b)(vi) provides that a lay-off of more than 13 weeks in any 20 consecutive week period but less than 35 weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks is still considered to be a temporary lay-off if the employer recalls the employee within the time set out in an agreement between the employer and the employee. This provision only applies to an employee who is not represented by a trade union. The agreement must be in writing in accordance with ESA Part I, s. 1(3).

There is no requirement that the Director of Employment Standards approve the agreement. There is also no requirement that the employee be in receipt (or entitled to) any of the payments described in ss. 56(2)(b)(i)-(iv) during the lay-off.

3. In the case of an employee represented by a trade union, a lay-off longer than a lay-off described in clause (b) where the employer recalls the employee within the time set out in an agreement between the employer and the trade union - s. 56(2)(c)

Section 56(2)(c) provides that a temporary lay-off can last for a period that is longer than the period described in s. 56(2)(b) if the employee is represented by a union and the employer recalls the employee within the time set out in an agreement between the employer and the union. However, in National Automobile, Aerospace Trans-portation and General Workers Union of Canada (C.A.W. - Canada) Local No. 27 v London Machinery Inc., 2006 CanLII 8711 (ON CA), the Ontario Court of Appeal held that in order for s. 56(2)(c) to apply, the employee must be recalled before the lay-off has reached a total of 35 weeks in a 52 week period.

There is no requirement that the Director of Employment Standards have approved the agreement in order for it to be effective. Further, there is no requirement that any of the conditions set out in ss. 56(2)(b)(i) to (iv) have been met.

Definition - s. 56(3)

56(3) In subsections (3.1) to (3.6),

"excluded week" means a week during which, for one or more days, the employee is not able to work, is not available for work, is subject to a disciplinary suspension or is not provided with work because of a strike or lock-out occurring at his or her place of employment or elsewhere.

Section 56(3) defines "excluded week" as a week during which the employee did not work for one or more days because the employee is not able or available to work, is subject to disciplinary suspension or is not provided with work because of a strike or lock-out occurring at their place of employment or elsewhere.

Lay-off, Regular Work Week - s. 56(3.1)

56(3.1) For the purpose of subsection (2), an employee who has a regular work week is laid off for a week if,

(a) in that week, the employee earns less than one-half the amount he or she would earn at his or her regular rate in a regular work week; and

(b) the week is not an excluded week.

Subsection 56(3.1) defines what constitutes a week of lay-off in the case of employees who work a regular work week for the purpose of determining whether a period of temporary lay-off as defined in s. 56(2) is exceeded, thereby triggering a termination as per s. 56(1)(c). The point at which a temporary lay-off ceases to be temporary and triggers a termination is discussed in detail in s. 56(2) above.

Subsection 56(3.1) refers to regular rate and regular work week, which are defined terms in s. 1 as follows:

"Regular rate" means, subject to any regulation made under paragraph 10 of subsection 141 (1),

(a) for an employee who is paid by the hour, the amount earned for an hour of work in the employee's usual work week, not counting overtime hours,

(b) otherwise, the amount earned in a given work week divided by the number of non-overtime hours actually worked in that week;

"Regular work week", with respect to an employee who usually works the same number of hours each week, means a week of that many hours but not including overtime hours;

Refer to ESA Part I, s. 1 for a detailed discussion of these terms.

For an employee who has a regular work week, a "week of lay-off" is a week, other than an excluded week, in which the employee receives less than 50 per cent of the wages they would earn at their regular rate for a regular work week. This means that an employee may be deemed to be on a lay-off for purposes of s. 56 even though they are still doing some work.

In determining what seven-day period should be looked at for the purpose of determining whether there has been a week of lay-off, reference should be made to the same seven-day period as would make up the employee's work week, i.e., a recurring period of seven consecutive days selected by the employer for the purpose of scheduling work, or, where the employer has not selected such a period, a recurring period of seven days beginning on Sunday and ending on Saturday.

It should be borne in mind that a week of lay-off does not include an excluded week, as defined in s. 56(3). In other words, where:

1. The employee is not able to work;
2. The employee is not available to work;
3. The employee is subject to disciplinary suspension; or
4. Because of a strike or lock-out.

These are discussed in detail below.

1. The employee is not able to work.

Any week in which an employee is not able to work because they are, for example, off on sick leave, workers' compensation, or is otherwise unable to work for medical reasons will not be a week of layoff.

2. The employee is not available to work.

Any week in which an employee is unavailable for work (for example, because they are in jail, or on a personal emergency leave, pregnancy or parental leave) will not be a week of lay-off.

Where an employee has found work with another employer during the lay-off, the employee may, depending on the facts, still be considered to be available for work with the employer that laid them off, regardless of whether the new employment is of a temporary or a permanent nature. Any week during which the employee is employed by another employer would be considered a week of lay-off as regards the employer who had laid them off provided that the employee would, if recalled by the employer during that week, be able to immediately return to work for that employer or at least be able to return to work on the same day as the recall.

3. The employee is subject to disciplinary suspension.

Any week in which an employee is on disciplinary suspension is not a week of lay-off. It is important to ensure, though, that the disciplinary suspension is bona fide and is within the employer's express or implied authority under the contract of employment.

4. Because of a strike or lock-out.

Any week in which an employee is not provided with work by the employer due to a strike or lock-out at the employee's place of employment, or elsewhere, is not a week of lay-off.

It is important to note that the strike or lock-out need not be at the employee's place of employment. For example, if there is a strike or lock-out at a supplier, and the employer is a manufacturer dependent upon the supplier for its parts, that employer may be forced to close down until the strike or lock-out is over or a new supplier can be found. In that case the employees of the manufacturer are not considered to be on a lay-off during the temporary closure that occurs as a result.

It is the Program's position that if an employee's employer is not providing work because it is the one doing the locking out, the lock-out must be a lock-out that is legal under the Labour Relations Act, 1995, SO 1995, c 1, Sch 1, in order for an affected week to be considered an excluded week. In those circumstances, the employer's failure to provide work flows from the right to lock out the employees under the Labour Relations Act, 1995 and the employer should not suffer any adverse consequences for exercising that right.

On the other hand, if the lock-out is by the employee's employer and is illegal, the Program's position is that a week in which the employees are illegally locked out is a week of lay-off and not an excluded week. However, a week of strike, whether illegal or legal, will be considered by the Program to be an excluded week (i.e., not a week of layoff) because the employer does not in those circumstances have any control over whether work is provided.

In regard to termination and strike or lock-outs, note that O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) para 8 establishes an exemption from the notice obligations under the Act where an employee has been terminated during or as a result of a strike or lock-out at their place of employment.

Effect of Excluded Week - s. 56(3.2)

56(3.2) For the purposes of clauses 2(a) and (b), an excluded week shall be counted as part of the periods of 20 and 52 weeks.

This subsection provides that an excluded week is included in counting the periods of 20 and 52 consecutive weeks used to determine whether a layoff is a temporary lay-off, as defined in s. 56(2).

Lay-off, No Regular Work Week - ss. 56(3.3)-56(3.6)

56(3.3) For the purposes of clauses (1)(c) and (2)(a), an employee who does not have a regular work week is laid off for a period longer than the period of a temporary lay-off if for more than 13 weeks in any period of 20 consecutive weeks he or she earns less than one-half the average amount he or she earned per week in the period of 12 consecutive weeks that preceded the 20-week period.

56(3.4) For the purposes of subsection (3.3),

(a) an excluded week shall not be counted as part of the 13 or more weeks but shall be counted as part of the 20-week period; and

(b) if the 12-week period contains an excluded week, the average amount earned shall be calculated based on the earnings in weeks that were not excluded weeks and the number of weeks that were not excluded.

56(3.5) For the purposes of clauses (1)(c) and 2(b), an employee who does not have a regular work week is laid off for a period longer than the period of a temporary lay-off if for 35 or more weeks in any period of 52 consecutive week she or she earns less than one-half the average amount he or she earned per week in the period of 12 consecutive weeks that preceded the 52-week period.

56(3.6) For the purposes of subsection (3.5),

(a) an excluded week shall not be counted as part of the 35 or more weeks but shall be counted as part of the 52-week period; and

(b) if the 12-week period contains an excluded week, the average amount earned shall be calculated based on the earnings in weeks that were not excluded weeks and the number of weeks that were not excluded.

Subsections 56(3.3) to (3.6) effectively define what constitutes a week of lay-off with respect to an employee who does not have a regular work week for the purposes of determining whether a period of temporary lay-off, as defined in s. 56(2), is exceeded, thereby triggering a termination as per s. 56(1)(c). Note that the point at which a temporary lay-off ceases to be temporary and triggers a termination in accordance with s. 56(2) is discussed in detail in s. 56(2) above.

In applying these provisions, the Program takes the position that a week of lay-off is identified by reference to the seven-day period in which the employer schedules work (the work week) for employees who do not have a regular work week. Note that the definition of work week in ESA Part I, s. 1 states that if the employer has not selected a seven-day period for the purposes of scheduling work, the work week is considered to be Sunday to Saturday.

Subsection 56(3.3) provides that an employee who does not have regular work weeks will have been laid off for more than the period of a temporary lay-off (i.e., their employment will be terminated) if for more than 13 weeks in a period of 20 consecutive weeks the employee earns less than one-half the average amount they had been earning per week in the 12 consecutive weeks preceding the first week of lay-off in the 20-week period.

Likewise, s. 56(3.5) provides that an employee who does not have regular work weeks will have been laid off for more than the period of a temporary lay-off (i.e., their employment will be terminated) if for at least 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks the employee earns less than one-half the average amount they had been earning in the 12 consecutive weeks preceding the first week of lay-off in the 52-week period.

In other words, for an employee who does not have a regular work week, the first week of a lay-off will be the first work week in which the employee earns less than 50 per cent of the average earned per week over the 12-week period preceding the 20- or 52-week period.

Note however that s. 56(3.4)(b) and s. 56(3.6)(b) provide that if the 12-week period referred to in either s. 56(3.3) or s. 56(3.5) contains an excluded week, the average amount earned is to be calculated based on the earnings in weeks that were not excluded weeks divided by the number of weeks that were not excluded weeks.

Subsections 56(3.4)(a) and 56(3.6)(a) provide that excluded weeks are not counted as weeks of lay-off for the purpose of determining whether the employee has been laid off for a period than a temporary lay-off (i.e., for more than 13 weeks in a period of 20 consecutive weeks or for at least 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks) under s. 56(1)(c), s. 56(2)(a) and s. 56(2)(b). However, excluded weeks do count as part of the 20-week and 52-week period referred to in s. 56(2)(a) and s. 56(2)(b).

56(4) An employer who lays an employee off without specifying a recall date shall not be considered to terminate the employment of the employee, unless the period of the lay-off exceeds that of a temporary lay-off.

Section 56(4) permits employers to place employees, unionized or otherwise, on a temporary lay-off without having to provide the employee with a date of recall.

This section clarifies that the employment of employees who are laid off without a recall date is not terminated, provided that the period of temporary lay-off does not exceed that of a temporary lay-off as defined in s. 56(2).

Section 56(4) reverses Program policy under the former Employment Standards Act, which was adopted in response to a decision of the Court of Appeal in Stolze v Addario. The Court had found that because a "notice of indefinite lay-off" was deemed to be a notice of termination under s. 8(3) of O Reg 327 under the former Employment Standards Act, a lay-off without a recall date was, in effect, an immediate termination. Under the ESA 2000, a notice of indefinite lay-off will be considered to be a notice of termination only where an employer who is bound by a collective agreement is precluded by that agreement from giving an employee notice of termination despite the employer's intention to lay the employee off for a period longer than a temporary lay-off. See the detailed discussion at O Reg 288/01, s. 4(2).

Deemed Termination Date - s. 56(5)

56(5) If an employer terminates the employment of an employee under clause (1)(c), the employment shall be deemed to be terminated on the first day of the lay-off.

Section 56(5) provides that where the lay-off ceases to be temporary, the employee's employment will be deemed to be terminated as of the first day of the lay-off, not the date on which the lay-of ceased to be temporary. In other words, once a lay-off exceeds a period of temporary lay-off as defined in s. 56(2) and a termination is triggered, it is necessary to identify the first day of the lay-off as this will be the deemed termination date in accordance with s. 56(5). See the discussion in s. 56(2), which defines a temporary lay-off and discusses at what point a temporary lay-off is exceeded and thus when a termination is triggered.

In the case of an employee who usually works the same days each week, the Program's position is that the first day of the lay-off is the first day in the first week of lay-off on which the employee would normally work and on which they did not work.

Consider for example an employee whose employer schedules work on a Monday through Sunday basis and who regularly works Monday through Friday.

- On Monday March 1 the employee works his regularly scheduled shift but is told that he is being laid off as of Tuesday, March 2. The first week of lay-off is the week of March 1 to March 7.
- The employee continues to be on a lay-off for a full 13 weeks to May 30 and continues to be on lay-off the next day, which is Monday, May 31.
- A termination is therefore triggered at the start of the employee's regular shift on Monday May 31.

Pursuant to s. 56(5), the employee is deemed to have been terminated back on Tuesday, March 2.

In the case of an employee who does not usually work the same days each week, no particular day in the first week of lay-off can be said to be the first day on which the employee was laid off as a factual matter. The position of the Program, however, is that where it is necessary to identify some day as the first day of the lay-off and hence the deemed termination date, the only sensible approach is to consider it to be the first day of the first week of layoff. Bearing in mind that a week of lay-off should correspond to the work week, if the work week is from Sunday to Saturday, the first day of the lay-off will be considered to be the Sunday of the first week of lay-off, and that day will be the deemed termination date. See the discussion at ss. 56(3.1), (3.3) to (3.6) on what constitutes a week of lay-off with respect to an employee who does not have a regular work week for the purposes of determining whether a period of temporary lay-off.

As a consequence of a combination of this deeming provision and s. 59(2), the amount of the entitlement to pay in lieu of notice for individual terminations (that is, where the mass notice entitlements are not triggered) under ESA Part XV, s. 61 is based on the period of employment as it stood on the day the lay-off began.

Note that this is so even though the employee worked some days after the lay-off commenced. For example, consider an employee whose work week is from Sunday to Saturday and who normally works five days a week, Monday to Friday:

Example 1:

Week beginning Sunday, January 9:

- Employee commenced a lay-off on Monday and was laid off for four weeks;
- Returned to work for six weeks;
- Laid off for nine weeks;
- Returned to work for a week, then laid off again.

Example 2:

Week beginning Sunday, May 22:

Once the lay-off continues into this week (i.e., into the first instant of the first day of the week which would normally be a work day) the employee has been laid off for more than 13 weeks in a 20-week period. As a result, employment is deemed to have been terminated as of January 10, the first day of lay-off.

The period of employment for the purposes of calculating this employee's notice/pay in lieu entitlement will be considered to have ended on January 10 even though the employee did some work after that date.

Note, however, that the entire period of lay-off will be included in determining the employee's length of employment for the purposes of determining whether the employee has been continuously employed for three months or more in order to qualify for notice or termination pay under ESA Part XV, s. 54.

As s. 56(1)(c) provides that a termination only occurs where the period of lay-off exceeds that of a temporary lay-off, it follows that a temporary layoff is not a termination and that there is no obligation under the Act to give an employee notice of a temporary lay-off. If an employer does provide notice of lay-off and the lay-off is subsequently deemed to be a termination, the notice of lay-off cannot be set-off against the employer's notice of termination obligations, except where O Reg 288/01, s. 4(2) applies.

57 The notice of termination under section 54 shall be given,

(a) at least one week before the termination, if the employee's period of employment is less than one year;

(b) at least two weeks before the termination, if the employee's period of employment is one year or more and fewer than three years;

(c) at least three weeks before the termination, if the employee's period of employment is three years or more and fewer than four years;

(d) at least four weeks before the termination, if the employee's period of employment is four years or more and fewer than five years;

(e) at least five weeks before the termination, if the employee's period of employment is five years or more and fewer than six years;

(f) at least six weeks before the termination, if the employee's period of employment is six years or more and fewer than seven years;

(g) at least seven weeks before the termination, if the employee's period of employment is seven years or more and fewer than eight years;

(h) at least eight weeks before the termination, if the employee's period of employment is eight years or more.

This section is similar to part of the corresponding provision (s. 57(1)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 57 establishes the length of notice of termination that an employee is entitled to under s. 54. This section also establishes the notice period for the purpose of s. 60 (requirements during notice) and s. 61 (calculation of termination pay in lieu of notice). This section must be read in conjunction with s. 59 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 and s. 8 of O Reg 288/01, which set out what time must be included in the period of employment, and the start and end date of the period of employment, respectively, for the purposes of calculating the employee's entitlement.

Section 59(1) of the Act provides that time on leave, lay-off and other inactive employment (e.g., vacation, sick time) is included in determining the period of employment for purposes of calculating the amount of the employee's notice entitlement. However, under s. 59(2) time spent on lay-off after the deemed termination date (i.e., from the day after the date the lay-off commenced is not included). For a detailed discussion refer to ESA Part XV, s. 59.

Period of employment is defined in s. 8(1) of O Reg 288/01 as the period beginning the day the employment most recently commenced and ending the day notice of termination was provided (if it was provided in accordance with Part XV) or the day the employee's employment is terminated (if notice was not given in accordance with Part XV). Two successive periods of employment that are not more than 13 weeks apart are to be added together and treated as a single period of employment under s. 8(2) of O Reg 288/01. For a detailed discussion refer to O Reg 288/01, s. 8.

Section 4(1) of O Reg 288/01 sets out the manner in which the notice must be given. Please see O Reg 288/01, s. 4.

ESA Part XV Section 58 - Notice, 50 or More Employees

Notice, 50 or More Employees - s. 58(1)

58 (1) Despite section 57, the employer shall give notice of termination in the prescribed manner and for the prescribed period if the employer terminates the employment of 50 or more employees at the employer's establishment in the same four-week period.

Section 58(1) provides for longer periods of notice in so-called "mass termination" situations than is provided in s. 57. The section must be read in conjunction with s. 3(4) of O Reg 288/01, which sets out an exception (i.e., the 10% rule) to the application of s. 58. See O Reg 288/01, s. 3(4) for a discussion.

The prescribed period of notice that must be given once s. 58 is triggered is set out in s. 3(1) of O Reg 288/01. The prescribed manner in which the notice must be given is set out in s. 4 of O Reg 288/01. Refer to O Reg 288/01 for a discussion of those provisions.

A mass termination under s. 58 is considered to have occurred when all of the following conditions are met:

1. The employment of 50 or more employees is terminated;
2. The terminations occur at the employer's establishment; and
3. The terminations occur within a four-week period.

Each condition is discussed below.

1. The employment of 50 or more employees is terminated.

This condition is met when 50 or more employees have their employment terminated. The "50 or more" threshold is based on the number of employees whose employment is terminated in the same four-week period and not on the number of employees who are given notice of termination in the same four-week period as was the case under the corresponding provision of the former Employment Standards Act.

Questions sometimes arise as to whether employees whose employment is terminated but who are not themselves entitled to notice (for example, because they have been employed for less than three months or because they are exempt under s. 2 of O Reg 288/01) are included in the count for purposes of determining whether the "50 or more" threshold has been met. It is Program policy that all employees to whom the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies (which does not include those individuals set out in ss. 3(2), (3) and (5) of the Act) and whose employment is terminated are included the count. Note, however, that employees of temporary agencies are employees of the agency, and would only be counted for the purpose of determining whether the agency has hit the 50-employee threshold - they would not be counted for the purpose of determining whether the agency client in whose workplace the agency employee was placed has hit the 50-employee threshold.

2. The terminations occur at the employer's establishment.

This condition requires that the terminations all occur at the same "establishment". "Establishment" is defined in s. 1 of the Act as a location where the employer carries on business. Separate locations are considered to be one establishment if they are located in the same municipality. Locations in different municipalities are considered to be one establishment if one or more employees at a location in one municipality have bumping rights to a location in a different municipality.

For example, if XYZ Company has four plants in Toronto, and a plant in Barrie to which the employees in Toronto may bump, then the establishment as defined in the Act will consist of the four Toronto plants as well as the Barrie plant. The "establishment" will include unionized as well as non-unionized employees at the locations in question, even if the latter group does not have bumping rights.

Please refer to ESA Part I, s. 1 for further discussion of the term "establishment".

3. The terminations occur within the same four-week period.

This condition requires that the terminations all occur within the same four-week period.

The four-week period is a "rolling window". The employer cannot, however, pick and choose which four-week period to use when determining whether the 50-termination threshold has been reached. Rather, the threshold is reached and a mass termination occurs on the first occasion of there being 50 or more employees terminated in any four-week period. Where terminations are triggered by a lay-off that exceeds a period of temporary lay-off, the deemed termination date (the first day of lay-off) is considered to be the termination date for the purposes of determining whether 50 or more employees have been terminated within the same four-week period. See the discussion at ESA Part XV, s. 56.

58(2) An employer who is required to give notice under this section,

(a) shall provide to the Director the prescribed information in a form approved by the Director; and

(b) shall, on the first day of the notice period, post in the employer's establishment the prescribed information in a form approved by the Director.

This section provides that an employer who is required to give notice under s. 58(1) (i.e., where there is a mass termination) shall provide prescribed information to the Director of Employment Standards in a form approved by the Director. It further requires the employer to post in the employer's establishment on the first day of the notice period the prescribed information in the form approved by the Director. It should be noted that the posting of the form does not relieve the employer of the obligation to provide individual written notice to each employee where such individual notice is required (see s. 4 of O Reg 288/01); note also, however, that s. 5 of O Reg 288/01 provides that individual notice is not required in certain circumstances where employees have bumping rights. See the discussion of these provisions in O Reg 288/01.

Section 3(2) of O Reg 288/01 prescribes the information that is to be provided and posted (see O Reg 288/01). The form that has been approved by the Director for this purpose is the "Form 1". The Form 1 may be downloaded from the Ministry of Labour's website.

Section 58(5) of the Act sets out where and for how long the employer must post the Form 1 - see subsection (5) below for a discussion). Note that where an employer pays termination pay in lieu of providing mass notice that the employer will still be required to provide a Form 1 to the Director but will not be required to post it. See the discussion of s. 61(2) of the Act in ESA Part XV, s. 61.

As with individual notice of termination, nothing precludes an employer from providing a greater right or benefit with respect to mass notice (whether orally or in writing). However, the employer would not thereby be relieved of the obligation to file a Form 1 and post the information by the first day of the statutory portion of the notice period. In addition, that part of the notice period that would be the statutory notice period - i.e., that part equal to the notice required under Part XV and ending on the termination date (see definition of "statutory notice period" at ESA Part I, s. 1) would not start running until a Form 1 was received by the Director, pursuant to s. 58(4).

One question that arises is what level of detail must be provided in the Form 1 before it is considered to fulfil the s. 58(2) requirement. The employer need not complete Form 1 in exhaustive detail. However, the employer must provide an answer to all the questions. For example, it is sufficient to answer the question regarding the economic circumstances surrounding the terminations with "business slowdown".

58 (3) The information required under subsection (2) may include,

(a) the economic circumstances surrounding the terminations;

(b) any consultations that have been or are proposed to take place with communities in which the terminations will take place or with the affected employees or their agent in connection with the terminations;

(c) any proposed adjustment measures and the number of employees expected to benefit from each; and

(d) a statistical profile of the affected employees.

This section is substantially the same as the corresponding provision (s. 57(5)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

This section sets out the types of information that may by regulation be required to be provided to the Director and posted in the employer's establishment pursuant to s. 58(2). Section 3(2) of O Reg 288/01 is the provision that prescribes the specific information that is to be provided and posted - see the discussion at O Reg 288/01.

When Notice Effective - s. 58(4)

58(4) The notice required under subsection (1) shall be deemed not to have been given until the Director receives the information required under clause (2)(a).

This section states that notice of mass termination shall not start running until the Director of Employment Standards receives the completed Form 1. Section 3(3) of O Reg 288/01 sets out how the form is to be delivered. Refer to O Reg 288/01 for a discussion of that section.

The financial consequences to an employer who does not deliver the Form 1 prior to or at the time of giving notice to employees under s. 58(1) may be significant. For example, an employer is required to give 16 weeks' mass notice to 550 employees. It does so, but does not deliver the Form 1 until 8 weeks later. The employer in this case will be liable for eight weeks' pay in lieu of notice to 550 employees. Assuming a 40-hour work week paid at minimum wage, this would amount to approximately $2 million dollars. Accordingly, employers should be advised to take care in ensuring that the Form 1 is properly delivered in accordance with s. 3(3) of O Reg 288/01.

58(5) The employer shall post the information required under clause (2)(b) in at least one conspicuous place in the employer's establishment where it is likely to come to the attention of the affected employees and the employer shall keep that information posted throughout the notice period required under this section.

Section 58(5) provides that the employer shall post the Form 1 in at least one conspicuous place in the employer's establishment where it is likely to come to the attention of the affected employees.

This section also requires the employer to keep the Form 1 posted throughout the required notice period. This period corresponds to the "statutory notice period" - see Part I, s. 1 for a discussion of the definition.

The fact that an employer failed to post or keep posted a copy of the Form 1 will not prevent the notice period from running so long as the form was received by the Director of Employment Standards - see St. Laurent and Nacci v Kelsey Hayes Canada (March 10, 1997), ESC 95-02B (Muir).

Employee Notice - s. 58(6)

58(6) An employee to whom notice has been given under this section shall not terminate his or her employment without first giving the employer written notice,

(a) at least one week before doing so, if his or her period of employment is less than two years; or

(b) at least two weeks before doing so, if his or her period of employment is two years or more.

This section, when read together with s. 58(7), is substantially the same as the corresponding provision (s. 57(15)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 58(6) requires an employee who has received notice of mass termination under s. 58(1) to give one or two weeks' written notice to the employer (depending on the employee's period of employment) if the employee wishes to resign before the mass notice period expires. This requirement is subject to the exception set out in s. 58(7). See subsection (7) below for a discussion.

The purpose of this provision is to enable an employer that is, for example, closing down a plant, to know from week to week what its work force will be so that it can close the facility in an orderly manner.

Exception - s. 58(7)

58(7) Subsection (6) does not apply if the employer constructively dismisses the employee or breaches a term of the employment contract, whether or not such a breach would constitute a constructive dismissal.

This section, when read together with s. 58(6), is substantially the same as the corresponding provision (s. 57(15)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 58(7) creates an exception to the requirement in s. 58(6) that employees who have received notice of mass termination must give notice to the employer of their intention to resign before the mass notice period expires (see subsection (6) above for a discussion). The exception applies where the employer has constructively dismissed the employee, or has breached a term of the employment contract, whether or not that breach constitutes a constructive dismissal. See ESA Part XV, s. 56(1) for a detailed discussion of the concept of constructive dismissal.

ESA Part XV Section 59 - Period of Employment: Included, Excluded Time

Period of Employment: Included, Excluded Time - s. 59(1)

59(1) Time spent by an employee on leave or other inactive employment is included in determining his or her period of employment.

Section 59(1) states that time spent by an employee on leave (e.g., the Part XIV statutory pregnancy, parental, family medical, family caregiver, critically ill child care, crime-related child death or disappearance, organ donor, personal emergency, emergency, and reservist leaves, and any other type of leave of absence such as educational leave) or other inactive employment (e.g., temporary lay-off, vacation, sick time) is included when determining an employee's period of employment. This is relevant for purposes of calculating the amount of the employee's notice entitlement (see s. 57).

This section must be read in conjunction with s. 59(2), which provides that time spent on lay-off after the deemed termination date (i.e., from the day after the date the lay-off commenced) is not included when determining an employee's period of employment.

This provision must also be read in conjunction with s. 8 of O Reg 288/01. Section 8(1) defines "period of employment" as the period beginning the day the employment most recently commenced and ending the day notice of termination was provided (if it was provided in accordance with Part XV) or the day the employee's employment is terminated (if notice was not given in accordance with Part XV). Section 8(2) provides that two successive periods of employment that are not more than 13 weeks apart are to be added together and treated as a single period of employment. Refer to section O Reg 288/01 for a detailed discussion of s. 8 of O Reg 288/01.

59(2) Despite subsection (1), if an employee's employment was terminated as a result of a lay-off, no part of the lay-off period after the deemed termination date shall be included in determining his or her period of employment.

Section 59(2) provides that in circumstances where a "temporary lay-off becomes a termination, none of the period of lay-off after the "deemed termination date" (which is, pursuant to s. 56(5), the first day of lay-off) is included in the employee's "period of employment".

The "period of employment" determines the amount of notice the employee is entitled to under s. 57 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. However, it is important to note that eligibility for notice does not depend on "period of employment" but rather is determined by whether the employee has three months of "continuous employment" as per s. 54 of the Act.

As a consequence, time spent on layoff after a deemed termination will not be included in the period of employment for the purposes of determining the amount of notice the employee is entitled to, whereas the time spent on layoff after the deemed termination date will count towards the completion of the three months eligibility requirement for notice under s. 54 of the Act.

For example: An employee was hired January 1. She was laid off one month later on February 1. Thirteen weeks after the layoff began on May 1, her employment is deemed to be terminated as of the date the layoff began on February 1 - see s. 56(5).

Under s. 54, all employment (whether active or inactive) counts towards the three month continuous employment eligibility requirement. This employee has met the three months continuous employment requirement; she was employed for four months from January 1 to May 1 and so is eligible for notice of termination.

The amount of notice (or pay in lieu in this case) she is entitled to is determined by s. 57 and turns on her "period of employment".

Under s. 57 an employee whose "period of employment" is less than one year is entitled to one week's termination notice.

Under s. 59, "period of employment" does not include periods of layoff after the deemed termination date. This employee's "period of employment" is therefore one month (January 1 to February 1). Accordingly, she will be entitled to one week's pay in lieu of notice.

ESA Part XV Section 60 – Requirements During Notice Period

60(1) During a notice period under section 57or 58, the employer,

(a) shall not reduce the employee's wage rate or alter any other term or condition of employment;

(b) shall in each week pay the employee the wages the employee is entitled to receive, which in no case shall be less than his or her regular wages for a regular work week; and

(c) shall continue to make whatever benefit plan contributions would be required to be made in order to maintain the employee's benefits under the plan until the end of the notice period.

Section 60(1) sets out the employer's obligations with respect to maintaining terms and conditions of employment and payment of wages and benefit plan contributions during the statutory notice period where notice of termination is given. The obligations set out in this section apply only to the statutory notice period. Where an employer gives notice that is greater in length than the statutory notice, these obligations will not apply to the part of the notice period that precedes the statutory notice period. The statutory notice period is defined in ESA Part I, s. 1 as the period equal to the employee's entitlements under the ESA 2000 that ends on the termination date specified in the notice (i.e., the last part of the notice period). For example, where the employer gives 12 weeks' notice, and the notice entitlement is eight weeks, the above-noted obligations would apply only to the last eight weeks of the 12 weeks of notice. Refer to ESA Part I, s. 1 for further discussion of statutory notice periods.

It should also be noted that under O Reg 288/01, s. 7, an employer is not permitted to schedule an employee's vacation during the statutory notice period, unless the employee, after having received the notice agrees to take their vacation during the notice period. Even if the vacation had been scheduled prior to the employer's decision to give notice of termination, the employee's consent would have to be obtained, after the employee received the notice.

Finally, if an employee resigns during the statutory notice period or is terminated in circumstances that would exempt the employee from notice of termination under O Reg 288/01, s. 2, the employer will cease to have any obligations under this section at the point that the employment relationship ends.

No reduction of wage rate or alteration of any other term or condition of employment

Under s. 60(1)(a), an employer is prohibited from reducing the employee's wage rate or altering any other term or condition of employment during the statutory notice period.

This section prevents an employer from modifying the employee's duties during the notice period (which would include laying the employee off), unless the modifications were permitted pursuant to a term or condition of employment. If the employee had been performing the allegedly "new" duties for some time prior to receiving the notice to the degree that the new duties form part of the employment terms or conditions, there would not be a violation of this provision.

For example, in Royal Oak Mines Inc. v Battochio (October 30, 1992), ES 189/92 (Muir), a case decided under the former Employment Standards Act, an employer gave notice of termination to an employee working in northern Ontario, but required them to work out the notice period at the employer's mine in the Northwest Territories. The referee found that prior to receiving the notice of termination, the employee had travelled back and forth between Ontario and Northwest Territories on a regular basis in connection with their job duties. On that basis, the referee concluded that the employer had not altered the underlying terms of employment in requiring the employee to work out their notice in the Northwest Territories location.

Pay the employee the wages they are entitled to receive

Under s. 60(1)(b), an employer is required to pay during each week of the statutory notice period, the greater of the wages the employee is entitled to receive (i.e., what was actually earned in each week) and the employee's regular wages for a regular work week. It is the Program's position that because these wages are earned (either actually or notionally) during the notice period, they will also attract vacation pay. If the employee's contract of employment provides for vacation pay to be calculated at a greater rate than the minimum standard, the contract rate will apply.

Where the employee does not have a regular work week, s. 60(2) sets out a method for calculating the entitlement under s. 60(1)(b) by averaging the wages earned in the weeks worked within the 12-week period preceding the date notice was given.

One question that may arise is what are the regular wages for a regular work week when the employee suffered a pay cut or, conversely, a pay increase a short time prior to being given notice? For example, what would the regular wages for a regular work week be for the purposes of the notice period if, a short time prior to the notice being given, the employer had cut the employee's hours by 20 per cent because of a shortage of work that ultimately led to the employee's termination?

Where an employee's hours or pay rate is changed (whether an increase or a decrease) a short time prior to the notice being given, an issue may arise as to whether the resulting change in the employee's earnings changes what would otherwise constitute their regular wages for a regular work week for the purposes of s. 60(1)(b) or whether the pre-change regular wages for a regular work week should be used. This is a question of fact, which can only be answered on a case-by-case basis. Although a change that occurs just prior to termination may look suspicious, the critical factor is not when the change occurred but whether or not the change was bona fide and intended to be permanent. See the following decisions under the former Employment Standards Act: Ingersoll Rand : Proto Canada, Division of Ingersoll-Rand Canada Inc. v United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America et al (May 12, 1983), ESC 1421 (Roberts) and Mothers Inc., Little Caesars of Canada and Little Caesars International Inc. v Fraser et al (September 11, 1991), ESC 2907 (Barton).

Another question that may arise concerns work sharing programs under the federal employment insurance legislation, under which employees' hours are reduced and the resulting reduction in pay is topped up by employment insurance benefits. As work sharing programs are intended to be temporary, the Program does not consider the reduction in wages paid by the employer to affect what would otherwise constitute the employee's regular wages for a regular work week.

It is the Program's position that s. 60(1)(b) means that an employee is to be paid during the notice period whether or not they performed work, and that payments pursuant to a pension, sickness or disability plan or worker’s compensation legislation cannot be used to offset the employer’s obligations with respect to notice of termination or pay in lieu of notice. Section 60(1)(b) requires the employer to pay no less than the amount that would equal an employee's regular wages during the whole of the notice period. The provision does not require the employee to earn any wages during this notice period. See Loeb Packaging Ltd. v Lacroix, 2016 CanLII 32625 (ON LRB), in which the Board upheld the Program's interpretation of s. 60(1)(b).

In addition, because payments such as pension benefits, employment insurance benefits, short-term disability benefits and worker's compensation benefits are not wages under ESA Part I, s. 1, and therefore could not be considered to represent any portion of the regular wages for a regular work week to which the employee is entitled, they could not be used to offset the employer's obligation under s. 60(1)(b). Therefore, the employer is required to pay the greater of the wages actually earned and the employee's regular wages for each week of the notice period, whether the employee was on contractual short-term disability leave, or any other type of leave, such as education leave, or any statutory leave under ESA Part XIV, and whether or not they were in receipt of any benefits, employment insurance benefits or worker's compensation payments.

However, note that if an employee took paid personal emergency leave between January 1, 2018 and December 31, 2018 during the statutory notice period, the employee had an entitlement to personal emergency leave pay as per the provisions that were in force at that time (ESA Part XIV, ss. 50(9), (10) and (11)). This is because personal emergency leave pay was included in the definition of wages (but not regular wages). The personal emergency leave pay would be counted in the wages the employee was entitled to receive in assessing whether the employee received their regular wages for a regular work week.

However, the employer will not be required to continue to pay wages to an employee during any portion of what would have been the notice period that follows the employee's resignation or a termination by the employer for conduct that constitutes wilful neglect of duty, wilful misconduct or disobedience that was not condoned by the employer. For example, if an employee is not on a contractual or statutory leave of absence during the notice period and the employee simply refuses to come in to work during the notice period, the employee would be guilty of wilful neglect of duty and would not be entitled to notice of termination (or pay in lieu of notice) provided that the employer had not previously condoned such behaviour.

Continue to make benefit plan contributions

Under s. 60(1)(c), an employer is required to continue to remit all of the contributions necessary in order to maintain all of the employee benefit plans for the entire notice period. Under this provision, the employer is obliged to continue remitting the employer's share of the contributions to the employee's benefit plans as well as the employee's share (if any) in order to maintain the benefit plans to the end of the notice period.

Assuming the employer had the necessary written authorization, the employer would simply deduct the employee's share of the benefit plan contributions from the wages paid during the notice period and would then remit both the employer and employee share to the insurer to ensure coverage was maintained throughout the notice period.

If the employer does not remit its share of the benefit plan contributions as required by this section, s. 60(3) deems the contributions to be wages (which are otherwise not defined as such under ESA Part I, s. 1) for the purposes of ESA Part XXII, s. 103, which provides the power to issue an order to pay wages against the employer. However, it is important to note that such an order to pay is limited to the amount of the employer's share of the unpaid benefit plan contributions.

If coverage was not maintained during the notice period and the employee incurred costs as result, the order to pay against the employer would not compensate the employee for the value of the benefits that the employee would have enjoyed had the coverage been maintained because such benefits are not wages under ESA Part I, s. 1, although the employee may be able to pursue a civil action to recover those amounts.

Where No Regular Work Week – s. 60(2)

60(2) For the purposes of clause (1)(b), if the employee does not have a regular work week or if the employee is paid on a basis other than time, the employer shall pay the employee an amount equal to the average amount of regular wages earned by the employee per week for the weeks in which the employee worked in the period of 12 weeks immediately preceding the day on which notice was given.

Section 60(2) sets out a method for calculating the employee's pay during each week of the notice period for the purposes of s. 60(1)(b), when the employee does not have a regular work week and where the employee earns wages on a basis other than time (e.g., employees who earn commissions or are paid on a piece rate basis).

Under s. 60(2), the regular wages earned by the employee in the 12-week period preceding the day on which notice of termination was given, are averaged over the weeks worked within the 12-week period. See ESA Part I, s. 1 for a discussion of the term regular wages. This formula is similar to that used for calculating pay in lieu of notice (for employees who do not have a regular work week or who are paid on a basis other than time) where the employee does not receive notice of termination or receives less than the required statutory notice. In ESA Part XV, s. 61(1.1), the wages are averaged over the weeks worked within the 12-week period immediately preceding the date of termination rather than the date notice of termination was given.

It is important to note that s. 60(2) refers to the average amount of regular wages earned in the weeks in which the employee has worked. If the employee has not worked certain weeks during the 12-week period, those weeks are not included in the calculation. For example, if the employee was on a contractual short-term disability leave for one of the 12 weeks prior to being provided with notice, the employee's entitlement would be determined by averaging the regular wages earned over the 11 weeks during which the employee worked. Weeks where the employee was on a leave under ESA Part XIV, contractual leave or other approved leave, vacation, or lay-off is considered as weeks not worked.

The question arises, however, as to how to calculate the minimum weekly entitlement for the notice period if the employee did not work any of the weeks within the designated 12-week period because, for instance, the employee was on a contractual short-term disability leave for the entire designated 12-week period. Because s. 60(2) does not provide a mechanism to calculate the average wages in such a situation, Program policy is that the employer must continue to look back in blocks of 12 weeks, until a 12-week period can be found in which the employee has weeks worked and then average the wages earned over that 12-week period.

For example, an employee was on pregnancy and parental leave for 52 weeks and immediately on her return to work was given notice of termination. The employer looks back in 12-week blocks until it finds a 12-week block that contains at least one week worked by the employee. In this case, the employer looks for:

- 0 to 12 weeks prior to notice being given – no weeks worked

- 12 to 24 weeks prior to notice being given – no weeks worked
- 24 to 36 weeks prior to notice being given – no weeks worked
- 36 to 48 weeks prior to notice being given – no weeks worked
- 48 to 60 weeks prior to notice being given – eight weeks worked

The 12-week block to be used will be the period of time that was 48 through 60 weeks prior to the date notice was given. The employee worked eight weeks during that time, so her regular wages for a regular work week will be the average of her regular wages over those eight weeks.

Benefit Plan Contributions – s. 60(3)

60(3) If an employer fails to contribute to a benefit plan contrary to clause (1)(c), an amount equal to the amount the employer should have contributed shall be deemed to be unpaid wages for the purpose of section 103.

Section 60(3) deems the benefit plan contributions that the employer should have made during the statutory notice period, pursuant to s. 60(1)(c), to be wages for purposes of s. 103, which permits an order to pay wages to be issued to an employer. See also the discussion in ESA Part XV, s. 62(2) regarding benefit plan contributions where the employer has paid termination pay in lieu of giving notice.

It is important to note that this section does not deem the benefits (as opposed to the contributions) to be wages for purposes of ESA Part XXII, s. 103. As a result, an employment standards officer could not issue an order to pay wages for the value of the benefits that the employee would have received had the employer complied with its obligation to continue the contributions during the required period of notice. However, an employee may have a civil remedy with respect to the value of the lost benefits if the employer fails to make the contributions necessary to maintain the benefits during the notice period. See the discussion of s. 60(4) below.

Same – s. 60(4)

60(4) Nothing in subsection (3) precludes the employee from an entitlement that he or she may have under a benefit plan.

Section 60(4) clarifies that s. 60(3) does not prohibit an employee from pursuing a civil remedy with respect to any benefits that they may have otherwise been entitled to under a benefit plan that would have been continued during a period of notice under ESA Part XV, s. 57 or s. 58. See also the discussion at ESA Part XV, s. 62(3) regarding benefit plan contributions where the employer has paid termination pay in lieu of giving notice.

For example, an employee's entitlement to a benefit under a plan may be lost because the employer failed to make the contributions necessary to maintain the benefit plans during the notice period. In this situation, s. 60(3) only provides a remedy for the employer's unpaid contributions as wages. It does not provide a remedy to recover the value of the benefits the employee might have been entitled to under a benefit plan that was discontinued contrary to s. 60(1). Section 60(4) makes it clear that the remedy under s. 60(3) does not in any way restrict an employee's right to seek a remedy elsewhere with respect to the value of the lost benefits.

Pay Instead of Notice – s. 61(1)

61(1) An employer may terminate the employment of an employee without notice or with less notice than is required under section 57 or 58 if the employer,

(a) pays to the employee termination pay in a lump sum equal to the amount the employee would have been entitled to receive under section 60 had notice been given in accordance with that section; and

(b) continues to make whatever benefit plan contributions would be required to be made in order to maintain the benefits to which the employee would have been entitled had he or she continued to be employed during the period of notice that he or she would otherwise have been entitled to receive.

This section specifically permits an employer to pay termination pay in lieu of the notice the employee would have been entitled to receive under ESA Part XV, s. 57 or s. 58.

An employer may terminate an employee's employment under this section if the employer:

- Pays a lump sum payment equal to the amount the employee would have received had the notice been given in accordance with ESA Part XV, s. 60; and
- Continues to make all the contributions necessary in order to maintain all of the employee benefit plans for the entire notice period. The contributions that may be necessary also include contributions from the employee, if any.

As noted in the discussion at ESA Part XV, s. 60(1)(b), an employee who is given notice of termination while on sick or other leave, is entitled to be paid their regular wages during the notice period if the contract of employment is not frustrated or impossible of performance and the employee is not otherwise exempt. This same principle applies to employees who are terminated instead with termination pay under s. 61 as this section requires the calculation to be based on the amount the employee would have received had the employee been given notice in accordance with s. 60.

Where the employer does not give the employee the full notice of termination required under ESA Part XV, s. 57, and continues the employee's regular wages during that partial notice, it is Program policy that such payments reduce the employer's obligations with respect to the pay in lieu owing under s. 61. For example, consider the situation where the employee is entitled to eight weeks' notice of termination under s. 57. The employer provides them with four weeks' notice of termination and continues his or her regular wages during the four weeks. It is the Program's position that the employee is entitled only to an additional four weeks' pay in lieu rather than a full eight weeks.

Sometimes situations will arise in which the employee is terminated without statutory notice, and then the next day obtains new employment at the same or better pay than they received before. Employers will sometimes argue in such a situation that the employee should not receive pay in lieu of notice under s. 61 because the termination did not put the employee "out of pocket". The answer to this is that the legislation does not permit the employer to reduce the pay in lieu obligation under s. 61 by any earnings that the employee is able to earn from a new employer. The termination pay is not compensation for damages and therefore not subject to mitigation. It is a fixed payment that must be made where the employer does not give notice in accordance with ESA Part XV, s. 57. See for example, McDonnell Douglas Canada Ltd. v Topham (April 22, 1993), ES 93-74 (Randall), a case under the former Employment Standards Act. This also applies where the employee has been terminated with pay in lieu of notice but is hired back by the employer at some point during what would have been the statutory notice period. Once the employment relationship is terminated, crystallizing the termination pay entitlement, the employer may not reduce the termination pay by any subsequent earnings.

The question may arise as to whether a Cost of Living Allowance ("COLA") should be included in the termination pay. In Falconbridge Nickel Mines Limited v Sudbury Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers' Union, Local 598 (July 13, 1981), ESC 1021 (Egan), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, the referee held that the calculation of the regular non-overtime rate for purposes of s. 57(14) of the former Employment Standards Act should not include the COLA component on the basis that the collective agreement only provided for the COLA increase to be added to the straight time rate when the employee was actually working (as opposed to when they were entitled to pay under the collective agreement but not actually working, e.g., jury duty). However, the Divisional Court in an unreported decision and the Court of Appeal in Re Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd. and Egan et al., 1983 CanLII 1931 (ON CA) held the contrary. Thus it is Program policy that the regular rate for the purposes of determining the entitlement to termination pay under s. 61(1) (where the employee has not worked through a notice period) should be adjusted upwards to reflect COLA awards just as it would where the employee had been given notice of termination in accordance with ESA Part XV, s. 57.

Vacation pay is to be paid on an employee's termination pay. In this regard, see Inco Ltd. v. U.S. W.A., a case under the former Employment Standards Act. For example, an employee whose vacation pay entitlement is four per cent and is entitled to $1,000 pay in termination pay would be entitled to a further amount of $40 as vacation pay. If the employee's contract of employment provides for vacation pay to be calculated at a greater rate, e.g., eight per cent, then the vacation pay should be calculated accordingly. If the employer provides, however, a greater amount of termination pay than required under this section vacation pay will only be payable on the statutory portion of the termination pay paid in lieu of notice.

61(1.1) For the purposes of clause (1) (a), if the employee does not have a regular work week or is paid on a basis other than time, the amount the employee would have been entitled to receive under section 60 shall be calculated as if the period of 12 weeks referred to in subsection 60 (2) were the 12-week period immediately preceding the day of termination.

Subsection 61(1) provides for payment of termination pay in a lump sum where an employer terminates the employment of an employee without giving notice or giving less notice than is required under ESA Part XV, ss. 57 or 58. Section 61(1.1) sets out a method for calculating termination pay where the employee does not have a regular work week or is paid on a basis other than time. A similar formula is set out in ESA Part XV, s. 60(2) for calculating the entitlement to pay during the notice period for such employees where notice has been given in accordance with s. 57 or s. 58. However, s. 61(1.1) averages the earnings over the weeks worked in the 12 weeks immediately preceding the date the employee is terminated whereas in s. 60(2) the averaging is done over the 12-week period preceding the date the notice was given. See ESA Part XV, s. 60(2) for the complete discussion.

The question may arise as to how to calculate the termination pay entitlement if the employee did not work any of the weeks within the 12-week period preceding the termination date. For example, where the employer decides to terminate the employment of an employee who has been off sick or on a leave of absence for 12 weeks or more, the formula set out in this section would, on its face, result in a termination pay entitlement of $0. However, the Program's position is that such a result is in implicit conflict with the requirement that an employee whose employment is terminated without notice must be given termination pay. It is therefore Program policy that the employer must continue to look back in blocks of 12 weeks, until a 12-week period can be found in which the employee has weeks worked and then average the wages earned over that 12-week period. See also the discussion at ESA Part XV, s. 60.

61(2) An employer who terminates the employment of employees under this section and would otherwise be required to provide notices of termination under section 58 shall comply with clause 58(2)(a).

Section 61(2) provides that an employer who pays termination pay rather than giving notice in a mass termination context, is required to provide the Form 1 to the Director of Employment Standards, although the employer is not required to post the Form 1 as per ESA Part XV, s. 58(2)(b).

ESA Part XV Section 62 - Deemed Active Employment

Deemed Active Employment - s. 62(1)

62(1) If an employer terminates the employment of employees without giving them part or all of the period of notice required under this Part, the employees shall be deemed to have been actively employed during the period for which there should have been notice for the purposes of any benefit plan under which entitlement to benefits might be lost or affected if the employees cease to be actively employed.

Section 62(1) deems the employee to be actively employed during the period of notice under ESA Part XV, s. 57 or s. 58 that should have been, but was not given by the employer, for purposes of entitlement to benefits. This is because some group insurance policies require that the employee be actively employed in order to have coverage under the policy. In the event the insurer denied benefits to an employee on the basis that they were not actively employed, even though s. 62(1) would deem them to be actively employed, the employee's remedy, if any, would be a civil one.

62(2) If an employer fails to contribute to a benefit plan contrary to clause 61(1)(b), an amount equal to the amount the employer should have contributed shall be deemed to be unpaid wages for the purpose of section 103.

Section 62(2) deems the benefit plan contributions that the employer should have made pursuant to ESA Part XV, s. 61(1)(b) to be wages for purposes of ESA Part XXII, s. 103, which permits employment standards officers to issue orders to pay wages against employers. Therefore, an order to pay may be issued in regard to such contributions. Note that such contributions are deemed wages for the purposes of s. 103 only. They are accordingly deemed to be wages for the purposes of recovery of such monies by way of an order to pay but not for any other purpose, including ESA Part XI, s. 35.2 so they will not attract vacation pay. See also the discussion at ESA Part XV, s. 60 regarding benefit plan contributions where the employer has given notice of termination.

It is important to note that this section does not deem the benefits (as opposed to the contributions) to be wages for purposes of s. 103. Therefore, an officer cannot issue an order to pay wages for the value of the benefits that the employee would have received had the employer complied with its obligation to continue the contributions during the required period of notice. However, an employee may have a civil remedy with respect to the value of the lost benefits if the employer fails to make the contributions necessary to maintain the benefits during what would have been the statutory notice period. See the discussion of s. 62(3) below.

62(3) Nothing in subsection (2) precludes the employee from an entitlement he or she may have under a benefit plan.

Section 62(3) clarifies that s. 62(2) does not prohibit an employee from pursuing a civil remedy with respect to any benefits that they may have otherwise been entitled to under a benefit plan that would have been continued during what would otherwise been a period of notice under ESA Part XV, s. 57 or s. 58. See also the discussion at ESA Part XV, s. 60 regarding benefit plan contributions where the employer has given notice of termination.

For example, an employee's entitlement to a benefit under a plan may be lost because the employer failed to make the contributions necessary to maintain the benefit plans during what would otherwise have been the statutory notice period. In this situation, s. 62(2) only provides a remedy for the employer's unpaid contributions as wages. It does not provide a remedy to recover the value of the benefits the employee might have been entitled to under a benefit plan that was discontinued contrary to ESA Part XV, s. 61(1)(b). Section 62(3) makes it clear that the remedy under s. 62(2) does not in any way restrict an employee's right to seek a remedy elsewhere with respect to the value of the lost benefits.

ESA Part XV Section 63 - What Constitutes Severance

What Constitutes Severance - s. 63(1)

63(1) An employer severs the employment of an employee if,

(a) the employer dismisses the employee or otherwise refuses or is unable to continue employing the employee;

(b) the employer constructively dismisses the employee and the employee resigns from his or her employment in response within a reasonable period;

(c) the employer lays the employee off for 35 weeks or more in any period of 52 consecutive weeks;

(d) the employer lays the employee off because of a permanent discontinuance of all of the employer’s business at an establishment; or

(e) the employer gives the employee notice of termination in accordance with section 57 or 58, the employee gives the employer written notice at least two weeks before resigning and the employee's notice of resignation is to take effect during the statutory notice period.

This section defines when a "severance of employment" has occurred for the purpose of an employee’s entitlement to severance pay. For purposes of determining whether there is an entitlement to notice of termination or termination pay, see ESA Part XV, s. 56, which defines what constitutes a termination of employment.

The definition in this section is exhaustive. Only situations that are specifically described in the definition will be considered to constitute a severing of the employment relationship. Those situations are as follows:

1.The employer dismisses the employee or otherwise refuses or is unable to continue employing the employee - s. 63(1)(a)

Section 63(1)(a) provides that a severance occurs when an employer dismisses or refuses to continue or is unable to continue employing an employee. The term "dismisses" essentially refers to what is commonly known as a "firing". For a detailed discussion of dismisses refer to ESA Part XV, s. 56(1).

This part of the definition also includes the situation where the employer refuses or is unable to continue employing the employee. This phrase captures some situations that would not technically qualify as a dismissal or firing, such as where the employer does not continue the employment of an employee who was on a term contract once the term expires.

The question sometimes arises as to whether an employee is entitled to severance pay where the employee first gives notice of resignation and then the employer terminates the employee prior to the date when the employee would have resigned. For example, the employee gives notice to the employer on March 1 that the employee will resign on May 1. On March 15, the employer tells the employee that the employment relationship is over, effective that day. A literal reading of the legislation might suggest that the employee is entitled to severance pay on the basis that the employer severed the employment of the employee and that the employee's resignation never became effective. However, if the legislation is interpreted purposively, the opposite conclusion should be reached. As the employee would have resigned in any event, it was the employee, not the employer, who precipitated the ending of the employment relationship. Accordingly, the employee is not entitled to severance pay. This is supported by Canada Trust Realty Inc. v Employee (March 12, 1992), ESC 3013 (Novick), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act.

2.The employer constructively dismisses the employee and the employee resigns from his or her employment in response within a reasonable period - s. 63(1)(b)

Section 63(1)(b) is identical in meaning to s. 56(1)(b), the corresponding section in the termination of employment provisions. Constructive dismissal exists where an employee in fact resigns, but in law is treated as if they were dismissed by the employer. Constructive dismissal can arise from a number of situations, including forced resignation (e.g., where the employer says, "Quit or else I'll fire you"), harassment and abuse, failure to meet payroll, and where the employer unilaterally and substantially changes a fundamental or essential term or condition of an employee's employment without the consent of the employee.

In order for a constructive dismissal to be considered a severance, the employee must resign in response to the constructive dismissal within a reasonable period.

Refer to ESA Part XV, s. 56(1) for a detailed discussion of constructive dismissal.

Note that O. Reg. 228/20 ("Infectious Disease Emergency Leave") establishes that there is no constructive dismissal under the ESA where a non-unionized employee's employer temporarily reduces or temporarily eliminates the employee's wages or hours of work for reasons related to COVID-19 during the defined COVID-19 period, unless the severance resulting from the constructive dismissal occurred before May 29, 2020. See O. Reg. 228/20 for details

Note also that during the first declared emergency for COVID-19 (which commenced March 17, 2020 and terminated July 24, 2020), orders were issued under the Emergency Management and Civil Protection Act (EMCPA) that authorized employers to make some specific unilateral changes to specified terms and conditions of employment. Upon the termination of the first declared emergency for COVID-19 on July 24, 2020, those orders ceased to be orders under the EMCPA and instead continued as time-limited orders under the Reopening Ontario (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020. The orders, including the period of time to which they relate, can be found by visiting the Reopening Ontario (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020 on the Ontario government's e-Laws website and then selecting the "Regulations under this Act" tab.

3.The employer lays the employee off for 35 weeks or more in any period of 52 consecutive weeks - s. 63(1)(c)

Section 63(1)(c) applies if the employee is on a lay-off that equals or exceeds 35 weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks. A "week of lay-off is defined in s. 63(2) – refer to the discussion below for a detailed discussion of that term. Note that if the lay-off is as a result of a permanent discontinuance of all of the employer's business at an establishment, then s. 63(1)(d) will apply, rather than s. 63(1)(c). Refer to the discussion of s. 63(1)(d) below.

Note that O. Reg. 228/20 ("Infectious Disease Emergency Leave") provides that during the defined COVID-19 period, non-unionized employees whose wages or hours of work are temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated by their employer for reasons related to COVID-19 are not considered to be laid off under the ESA (except where the layoff is because of a permanent discontinuance of all of the employer's business at an establishment). See O. Reg. 228/20 for details

The 35 weeks of lay-off need not be consecutive, although they must all occur within a period of 52 consecutive weeks. For example, if the employee is laid off for 20 weeks, returns to work for 17 weeks, and then is laid off again for a further 15 weeks, the employee's employment will be deemed to be severed under s. 63(1)(c) because the employee was laid off for a total of 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks.

The 52-week period is a "rolling window". However, neither the employer nor the employee can pick and choose which 52 weeks to use when determining whether the 35-week threshold has been reached. Rather, the threshold is reached and the employment is severed on the first occasion of there being 35 weeks of lay-off in a 52-week period. Consider the following case:

- Employee is laid off for 20 weeks: January 1, 2016 - May 20, 2016
- Employee is laid off for a further 15 weeks: June 26, 2016 - October 9, 2016
- Employee is laid off again for 20 weeks: February 5, 2017 - June 24, 2017

The employee had first been laid off for a total of 35 weeks in a 52-week period as of October 9, 2016. The employee had also been laid off for a total of 35 weeks in the 52-week period ending June 24, 2017.

If the employee had filed a claim in November of 2017, on the basis that the severance pay became due following the severance of their employment on October 9, 2016, the employer could not defeat the employee's claim as being premature by choosing to have the 52-week period run from June 26, 2016, such that the employee had not yet been laid off for a total of 35 weeks within the 52-week period that started running on that date.

It should be noted that in Hagt v E.S. Fox Limited (October 20, 1997), 3833-96-ES (ON LRB), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, the Ontario Labour Relations Board ruled that an employee could choose which 52-week period to base his claim on. There, the employee had been subjected to a series of lay-offs and recalls and, similar to the case of the employee in the hypothetical example above, there were two 52-week periods in which the total number of weeks of lay-off exceeded 35, one of which (the earlier) would make his claim out-of-time and the other of which would put his claim within the limitation period.

The Board's decision was overturned by a 2-1 majority in an unreported decision of the Divisional Court, with the dissenting judge agreeing with his colleagues that the decision was incorrect but asserting that it should nevertheless be upheld because it was not unreasonable. The Court of Appeal in E.S. Fox Limited v Hagt, 2000 CanLII 26962 (ON CA) reversed the Divisional Court, declaring that it agreed with the dissenting judge in the court below that the decision was not unreasonable. In light of the precise grounds offered by the dissenting Divisional Court judge and the Court of Appeal, the Program is of the view that it is not bound to follow Hagt v E.S. Fox Limited, and since the Program is of the view that there are no compelling policy reasons to hold that an employee or an employer can choose which 52-week period to use, Program policy was and remains that an employee becomes entitled to severance pay at the first point at which there have been a total of 35 weeks of lay-off in a 52-week period.

Weeks of Layoff Prior to a Recall Are Included in the Count

Because a severance occurs when the employer lays the employee off for 35 weeks or more in any period of 52 consecutive weeks, there is no basis to exclude any weeks of lay-off just because they may have occurred prior to an employee accepting a recall.

See for example, the Court of Appeal decision in United Steel v National Steel Car Limited, 2013 ONCA 401 (CanLII). In that case, an employee was laid off in May of 2008. In January 2009, once the lay-off had gone on for 35 weeks, it was deemed to have become a severance of employment. At that point, the employee elected to retain his recall rights.

The lay-off continued until March 16, 2010, 22 months after the layoff began, when the employee accepted a recall. He was laid off again on April 19, 2010 after only five weeks of work and a few days later he renounced his recall rights and asked for his severance pay. At that point in time, the total time spent by the employee on lay-off in the preceding 52 weeks was in excess of 35 weeks.

The employer refused to pay the employee. The employee grieved, and the matter went before an arbitrator who held that the employee had no entitlement. In the arbitrator’s view, it was implicit in the Act’s recall rights provisions that an employee who had initially elected to retain his recall rights and who later accepted a recall could not have any of the time spent on lay-off prior to the recall taken into account in determining whether there was a subsequent severance. Under this approach, which disregards the word "any" in s. 63(1)(c), the employee would have had to have spent another 35 weeks on lay-off after the recall in order to be entitled to severance pay.

On judicial review of the arbitrator’s decision, a majority of the Divisional Court in United Steel v National Steel Car Limited, [2012] ONSC 1941 (October 31, 2012) upheld the arbitrator’s decision; however, that Court’s decision was overturned at the Court of Appeal. The Court of Appeal, in adopting the judgment of the dissenting Divisional Court judge, ruled that the recall rights provisions have no bearing on what constitutes a severance within the meaning of s. 63 (or on what constitutes a termination within the meaning of s. 56), and that there is no basis to exclude any weeks of lay-off when determining whether a subsequent severance (or termination) occurred just because they may have occurred prior to an employee accepting a recall.

4.The employer lays the employee off because of a permanent discontinuance of all of the employer's business at an establishment - s. 63(1)(d)

Section 63(1)(d) provides that an employee's employment is severed where the employer lays off the employee due to a permanent discontinuance of all of the employer's business at an establishment. Where this provision applies, the employee's employment is deemed to be severed at the moment the lay-off begins.

For s. 63(1)(d) to apply, the employee must be laid off because of a "permanent discontinuance" of all of the employer's business at an establishment. There is a discussion of the phrase permanent discontinuance in O Reg 288/01, s. 3(4) in the context of the 10 per cent rule and mass notice of termination. The same principles apply, except that the employer's intention with respect to the issue of whether there is a permanent discontinuance may not be as significant in the context of a severance as it is in a mass termination, where the employer is required to give advance notice of the event. In addition, there have been some referee and court decisions on what constitutes a permanent discontinuance for purposes of severance pay. In Agincourt Motor Hotel Limited v Flannigan et al (August 19, 1982), ESC 1272 (Davis), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, the referee held (who was upheld by the court on judicial review) that a sale of a business constitutes a permanent discontinuance of the business of the vendor employer for purposes of s. 58 of the former Employment Standards Act. On the other hand, a contracting out of business previously done "in-house" by an employer (which is generally not considered to be a sale under s. 9 of the Act) will not constitute a permanent discontinuance in that it is open to the employer, at the end of the contract, not to renew it and to have the operations revert back to the employer. In this regard, see Otis Elevator Company Limited v United Steelworkers of America et al (November 5, 1985), ESC 1978 (Davis), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act.

For s. 63(1)(d) to apply, the permanent discontinuance must be of all of the employer's business at an "establishment". Establishment is defined in ESA Part I, s. 1 as follows:

"Establishment", with respect to an employer, means a location at which the employer carries on business but, if the employer carries on business at more than one location, separate locations constitute one establishment if,

(a) the separate locations are located within the same municipality, or

(b) one or more employees at a location have seniority rights that extend to the other location under a written employment contract whereby the employee or employees may displace another employee of the same employer;

An establishment is therefore a location where an employer carries on business. If the employer has more than one location in the same municipality, or a number of locations where seniority rights extend, then these locations will together constitute an establishment.

For example, the employer has three plants in the same municipality. The three plants comprise one establishment. The employer lays off some employees because it is closing down two of those plants. The lay-off will not constitute a severance under s. 63(1)(d), because the employer is not discontinuing all of its business at the establishment. Note, however, that the lay-off may still constitute a severance under s. 63(1)(c) if it equals or exceeds 35 weeks in a 52 consecutive week period. For a detailed discussion of the definition of establishment please see ESA Part I, s. 1.

5.The employer gives the employee notice of termination in accordance with section 57 or 58, the employee gives the employer written notice at least two weeks before resigning and the employee's notice of resignation is to take effect during the statutory notice period - s. 63(1)(e)

Section 63(1)(e) provides that where an employee provides at least two weeks' written notice of resignation after having received notice of termination and the resignation is to take effect during the statutory notice period, this constitutes a severance of the employee's employment. This provision allows employees who have been notified that their employment will end to end the employment relationship earlier than the employer intended without having to forfeit their severance pay entitlement.

The employee must satisfy two requirements in order to avoid forfeiting the right to:

1. The employee provides the employer with at least two weeks' written notice of resignation; and
2. The employee's resignation takes effect during the statutory notice period.

Statutory notice period is defined in ESA Part I, s. 1 as follows:

"Statutory notice period" means,

(a) the period of notice of termination required to be given by an employer under Part XV, or

(b) where the employer provides a greater amount of notice than is required under Part XV, that part of the notice period ending with the termination date specified in the notice which equals the period of notice required under Part XV.

Refer to ESA Part I, s.1 for a detailed discussion of "statutory notice period".

Section 63(1)(e) must be read in conjunction with s. 63(3), which deems the employee's employment to be severed on the day the employer's notice of termination would have taken effect had the resignation not occurred.

Example:

- January 1 - Ten-year employee receives 12 weeks' notice of individual termination (to take effect March 26).
- January 16 - Employee gives two weeks' written notice of resignation (to take effect January 30.
- January 29 - Statutory notice period begins.
- January 30 - Employee's notice of resignation becomes effective.
- March 26 - Deemed severance date.

In this example, the employee is entitled under the Act to eight weeks' notice, so the statutory notice period is the last eight weeks of the 12-week notice period given by the employer. The employee gave two weeks' notice of resignation to the employer and that notice took effect during the statutory notice period. Therefore, this constitutes a severance of employment under s. 63(1)(e).

Since s. 63(3) deems the employee's employment to be severed on the day the employer's notice of termination would have taken effect had the resignation not occurred, in our example, that date, for the dual purpose of determining whether the employee has met the five-year eligibility threshold for severance pay, and for determining the date the employee's entitlement to severance pay arose, is March 26.

Note that s. 65(3) provides that the period between the day the employee's resignation took effect and the day the employee's notice of termination would have taken effect is not included for the purpose of calculating the amount of severance pay. Refer to ESA Part XV, s. 65 for further discussion.

Section 63(1)(e) says that a severance occurs where the employer gives the employee notice of termination "in accordance with s. 57 or s. 58." One question that arises is whether s. 63(1)(e) can apply, thereby allowing an employee who has been notified that their employment will end to resign without forfeiting a severance pay entitlement where the employer has not given the required amount of notice under s. 57 or s. 58. It is Program policy that if the notice given by the employer under s. 57 or s. 58 is deficient, this will not preclude an employee from preserving their entitlement to severance pay so long as they provide at least two weeks' written notice, which is to take effect during that period of statutory notice given by the employer. For example, if the employee was entitled to eight weeks' notice under s. 57 but was given only four weeks' working notice, the employee would be able to retain the right to severance pay by providing two weeks' notice of resignation. To take the opposite view would result in employees being penalized (because they could not resign and retain their severance pay entitlement) because their employer failed to comply with the Act.

63(2) In subsections (2.1) to (2.4),

"excluded week" means a week during which, for one or more days, the employee is not able to work, is not available for work, is subject to a disciplinary suspension or is not provided with work because of a strike or lock-out occurring at his or her place of employment or elsewhere.

Section 63(2) defines "excluded week" as a week during which the employee did not work for one or more days because the employee is not able or available to work, is subject to disciplinary suspension or is not provided with work because of a strike or lock-out occurring at their place of employment or elsewhere. See the discussion of these circumstances in s. 63(2.1) below.

Lay-off, Regular Work Week - s. 63(2.1)

63(2.1) For the purpose of clause 1(c), an employee who has a regular work week is laid off for a week if,

(a) in that week, the employee earns less than one-quarter of the amount he or she would earn at his or her regular rate in a regular work week; and

(b) the week is not an excluded week.

Sections 63(2.1) to 63(2.4) define a "week of lay-off", but only for the purposes of s. 63(1) (i.e., for the purposes of determining whether the employee's employment has been severed). This means that a week of lay-off may be defined differently for other parts of the Act. Specifically, a week of lay-off is defined differently in s. 56(3) to s. 56(3.6) for the purposes of notice of termination.

Section 63(2.1) provides that a week of lay-off where an employee has a regular work week is a week in which the employee receives less than 25 per cent of the wages they would earn at their regular rate in a regular work week. However, a week of lay-off will not include an excluded week as defined in s. 63(2).

This definition is similar to the definition of week of lay-off in s. 56(3.1) for employees with a regular work week in the notice of termination context, except that the notice of termination definition is based on a threshold of "less than one-half" of what the employee would earn in a regular work week at his or her regular rate.

Section 63(2.1) refers to "regular rate" and "regular work week", which are defined terms in s. 1 as follows:

"Regular rate" means, subject to any regulation made under paragraph 10 of subsection 141 (1),

(a) an employee who is paid by the hour, the amount earned for an hour of work in the employee's usual workweek, not counting overtime hours,

(b) otherwise, the amount earned in a given work week divided by the number of non-overtime hours actually worked in that week;

"Regular work week", with respect to an employee who usually works the same number of hours each week, means a week of that many hours but not including overtime hours;

Refer to ESA Part I, s. 1 for a detailed discussion of these terms.

For an employee who has a regular work week, a week of lay-off is a week in which they receive less than 25 per cent of the wages they would earn at their regular rate for a regular work week, unless the week is one in which any of the following four circumstances are present:

The employee is not able to work.

An employee who, for example, is unable to work because of sickness or an injury will not be considered to be on a week of lay-off.

The employee is not available for work.

An employee who, for example, is unavailable for work because they were exercising a right to a statutory leave or on jury duty will not be considered to be on a week of lay-off.

Where an employee on a lay-off has found work with another employer during the lay-off, the employee is not considered not available to work (i.e., they are considered to be available for work with the employer that laid them off, so that time is considered to be weeks of lay-off). This is so whether the new employment is of a temporary or a permanent nature. This is also so with respect to the reasonable period of time an employee takes to return to work after being recalled. The employee would be considered "not available to work" only if the employee is unwilling to return to work for the employer who laid them off within a reasonable time.

The employee is subject to disciplinary suspension.

An employee who is on disciplinary suspension is not on a week of lay-off. It is important to ensure, though, that the disciplinary suspension is bona fide and is pursuant to established company rules and procedures or a contract of employment.

Because of a strike or lock-out.

Where the employee is not provided with work by the employer due to a strike or lock-out at the employee's place of employment, or elsewhere, the employee is not on a week of lay-off.

It is important to emphasize that the strike or lock-out need not be at the employee’s place of employment. For example, if there is a strike or lock-out at a supplier, then the manufacturer that depends upon the supplier for its parts may be forced to close down until the strike or lock-out is over or a new supplier can be found. In this case the employees of the manufacturer are deemed not to be on a lay-off during the temporary closure that occurs as a result.

It is the Program's position that in order to characterize a week of lockout as an excluded week, the lock-out by the employer must be a legal one under the Labour Relations Act, 1995, SO 1995, c 1, Sch A ("LRA 1995"). In those circumstances, the employer's failure to provide work flows from the right to lock out the employees under the LRA 1995 and the employer should not suffer any adverse consequences under the ESA for exercising that right.

On the other hand, if the lock-out is illegal, the failure to provide work is not permissible under LRA 1995. As a consequence, the Program's position is that a week in which employees are illegally locked out is a week of lay-off. However, a week of strike, whether illegal or legal, will be considered by the Program to be an excluded week (i.e., not a week of lay-off) because the employer does not in those circumstances have any control over whether work is provided.

63(2.2) For the purposes of clause 1(c), an excluded week shall be counted as part of the period of 52 weeks.

This subsection provides that an "excluded week" is included in counting the period of 52 weeks referred to in s. 63(1)(c).

Lay-off, No Regular Work Week - s. 63(2.3); Effect of Excluded Week - s. 63(2.4)

63(2.3) For the purpose of clause (1)(c), an employee who does not have a regular work week is laid off for 35 or more weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks if for 35 or more weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks he or she earns less than one-quarter the average amount he or she earned per week in the period of 12 consecutive weeks that preceded the 52-week period.

63(2.4) For the purposes of subsection (2.3),

(a) an excluded week shall not be counted as part of the 35 or more weeks, but shall be counted as part of the 52-week period; and

(b) if the 12-week period contains an excluded week, the average amount earned shall be calculated based on the earnings in weeks that were not excluded weeks and the number of weeks that were not excluded.

Where employees who do not have regular work weeks, for the purposes of the rule in s. 63(1)(c) that deems an employee's employment to have been severed if they are laid off for 35 weeks or more in any period of 52 consecutive weeks, s. 63(2.3) provides that a week of lay-off is a week in which the employee earns less than one-quarter the average weekly wages that they earned in the 12-week period preceding the commencement of the 52-week period.

Clause 63(2.4)(b) provides that if the 12-week period contains an excluded week, the average amount earned is to be calculated based on the earnings in weeks that were not excluded weeks divided by the number of weeks that were not excluded weeks.

Clause 63(2.4)(a) provides that excluded weeks are not counted as weeks of lay-off for the purposes of determining whether an employee who does not have a regular work week has been laid off for 35 or more weeks under s. 63(1)(c) and s. 63(2.3). However, excluded weeks do count as part of the 52-week period.

Resignation - s. 63(3)

63(3) An employee's employment that is severed under clause (1) (e) shall be deemed to have been severed on the day the employer's notice of termination would have taken effect if the employee had not resigned.

Section 63(3) provides that where an employee's employment is severed under s. 63(1)(e) (i.e., an employee who has been given notice of termination in accordance with s. 57 or s. 58 has resigned by giving two weeks' written notice that will take effect within the statutory notice period), the employee's employment shall be deemed to be severed on the day that the employer's notice of termination would have taken effect had the employee not resigned. This is relevant for determining whether the employee has met the five-year eligibility threshold for severance pay. Section 63(3) must be read together with s. 65(3), which provides that the period between the date the employee's resignation took effect and the date the employer's notice of termination would have taken effect is not included in the calculation of the amount of the employee's severance pay.

Example:

- January 3 - Ten-year employee receives 12 weeks' notice of individual termination, effective March 28.
- January 28 - Employee gives two weeks' written notice of resignation, effective February 11.
- January 31 - Statutory notice period begins.
- February 11 - Employee's notice of resignation becomes effective.
- March 28 - Employee's deemed severance date

In this example, the employee has resigned within the statutory notice period in accordance with s. 63(1)(e), so the resignation is considered to be a severance of the employment relationship under s. 63(1). The date the employee's employment is deemed to be severed for the purpose of determining whether the employee has met the five-year eligibility threshold for severance pay, and also for determining the date the employee's entitlement to severance pay arose is March 28, not February 11.

ESA Part XV Section 64 – Entitlement to Severance Pay

Entitlement to Severance Pay – s. 64(1)

64(1) An employer who severs an employment relationship with an employee shall pay severance pay to the employee if the employee was employed by the employer for five years or more and,

(a) the severance occurred because of a permanent discontinuance of all or part of the employer's business at an establishment and the employee is one of 50 or more employees who have their employment relationship severed within a six-month period as a result; or

(b) the employer has a payroll of $2.5 million or more.

This section sets out the requirements that must be met for an employee to qualify for severance pay. An employee who is not otherwise exempt from the severance provisions of the ESA 2000 qualifies for severance pay when their employment is severed and they:

1. Have five or more years of employment with the employer; and
2. Were employed by an employer who:
    - Has a global payroll of at least $2.5 million, or
    - Severed the employment of 50 or more employees in a six-month period because of a permanent discontinuance of all or part of the business at an establishment.

The requirements are discussed below

Five or More Years of Employment

An employee must have been employed for at least five years at the time of the severance. It should be noted that only employment in Ontario (or work outside of Ontario that is a continuation of work in Ontario) is considered in determining eligibility for and the calculation of severance pay. For example, if an employee works for ABC Inc. in England for five years and then is transferred to Ontario and has their employment severed two years later, he employee will be considered to have only two years of employment for the purposes of the ESA 2000, including the severance provisions.

Time that will be included in the calculation of the five-year qualifying period is set out in ESA Part XV, s. 65(2) as follows:

65(2) All time spent by the employee in the employer's employ, whether or not continuous and whether or not active, shall be included in determining whether he or she is eligible for severance pay under subsection 64(1) and in calculating his or her severance pay under subsection (1).

Under s. 65(2), all periods of employment (whether active or inactive) are added together for the purposes of determining both eligibility for and the amount of severance pay to which the employee is entitled. Examples of periods of inactive employment that must be included are time spent on layoff, vacation, and leave of absences such as educational, or any leave under Part XIV. However, it is Program policy that time spent on lay-off after the lay-off becomes a severance under ESA Part XV, s. 63(1)(c) (i.e., it equals or exceeds 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks) and the time subsequently spent waiting for a recall to work is not counted as employment for the purposes of either eligibility for severance under s. 64(1) or the calculation of the amount of severance pay in s. 65(1).

Multiple periods of employment with the same employer must be added together for the purposes of both eligibility for, and the calculation of, severance pay, regardless of the amount of time between the periods of employment or the reason any of the periods of employment came to an end (e.g., whether the employment ended at the employer's behest or the employee resigned). For a detailed discussion of the time included in determining eligibility for, and the calculation of, severance pay see ESA Part XV, s. 65.

Where an employee's employment is severed under ESA Part XV, s. 63(1)(e) and the employer gives notice of termination and the employee provides two weeks' written notice of resignation that takes effect in the statutory notice period, the date of severance is deemed under ESA Part XV, s. 63(3) to be the date the employer's notice would have taken effect. Therefore, when determining the length of employment for the purposes of the five-year qualifying period, the period of time between the date of resignation and the date the employer's notice would have taken effect (the deemed severance date) is included. However, when it comes to calculating the amount of severance pay, ESA Part XV, s. 65(3) provides that the period between the date the resignation takes effect and the date the termination would have taken effect is not to be used.

Where an employee's employment is severed without the required written notice under ESA Part XV, s. 57 or s. 58, ESA Part XV, s. 65(4) specifically requires that the period of notice that should have been provided be included in calculating the amount of severance pay. It is Program policy that this period must also be included for the purpose of determining whether the five-year threshold for eligibility for severance pay has been met; otherwise, the employee's severance pay entitlement would be calculated as zero, which would be contrary to the direction in s. 65(4) that it be calculated as if the employee had continued to be employed for the period of notice that should have been given.

$2.5 Million Payroll Test or Severance of 50 or More Due to Closure

Where an employee has five or more years of employment with the employer at the time the severance occurred and either of the two requirements set out in s. 64(1)(a) or (b) is met, the employee will be entitled to severance pay.

$2.5 Million Payroll Test

If the employment of an employee who has been employed for five years or more is severed by an employer with a global payroll of $2.5 million or more, the employee will be entitled to severance pay. The $2.5 million dollar payroll test in s. 64(1)(b) is the condition that triggers most severance pay entitlements and is therefore considered first. If this condition is met there is no need to consider the test in s. 64(1)(a). (Note that it was long-standing Program policy that the $2.5 million threshold was based solely on an employer's payroll in Ontario. The Ontario Superior Court considered this position in the decision of Hawkes v. Max Aicher (North America) Limited, 2021 ONSC 4290, and found that it was unreasonable. The Program consequently changed its policy and the $2.5 million threshold is now based on the employer's global payroll.)

Section 64(2) defines payroll as follows:

64(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), an employer shall be considered to have a payroll of $2.5 million or more if,

(a) the total wages earned by all of the employer's employees in the four weeks that ended with the last day of the last pay period completed prior to the severance of an employee's employment, when multiplied by 13, was $2.5 million or more; or

(b) the total wages earned by all of the employer's employees in the last or second-last fiscal year of the employer prior to the severance of an employee's employment was $2.5 million or more.

See the detailed discussion of the definition of "payroll" below.

Severance of 50 or More Due to Closure

If an employer does not have a global payroll of at least $2.5 million, an employee will still be entitled to severance pay if the employment of 50 or more employees is severed within a six-month period because of a permanent discontinuance of all or part of the employer's business at an establishment.

Prior to 1987, when the severance pay provisions in the former Employment Standards Act were amended to extend severance pay to employees of employers with a $2.5 million payroll or more, employees had to satisfy substantially the same test as is set out in s. 64(1)(a). As a result, most of the cases involving this test arose prior to 1987, especially since, due to wage increases over the years, many employers severing the employment of 50 or more employees in a six-month period will satisfy the payroll test. However, there may be some instances in which an employer who does not meet the payroll threshold will sever the employment of 50 or more employees in a six-month period.

Some of the issues regarding this test in the pre-1987 cases under the former Employment Standards Act may still be relevant today. For example, there is the issue of whether or not the six-month period has to be immediately prior to the permanent discontinuance or whether it can be any six-month period as long as the severances are caused by the discontinuance. The Program policy on this issue is that the six-month period need not be immediately prior to the permanent discontinuance, and that any six-month period can be used as long as the severances were caused by the permanent discontinuance.

Another issue regarding this test is the count issue, i.e., did 50 or more employees have their employment severed? The question here is whether or not exempt employees should be included even though they themselves are not entitled to severance pay.

In Dominion Stores Ltd. v. Butcher et al (ON SC), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, the Divisional Court upheld a decision that these employees should be included in the count. This case upheld as reasonable the referee's decision in Dominion Stores Ltd. v Butcher et al (February 17, 1987), ESC 2215 (Brown) that stated that exempt, elect-to-work employees should be included in the count for purposes of severance pay. There is, however, another Divisional Court decision that upheld as reasonable a referee's decision that said the exact opposite, United Steelworkers of America, Local 14097 v. Franks (Div. Ct.), 1990 CanLII 6666 (ON SC), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act. This decision was appealed to the Ontario Court of Appeal, which held in United Steelworkers of America, Local 14097 v Franks, 1994 CanLII 8708 (ON CA) that the proper standard of review of referees' decisions was reasonableness, rather than the stricter correctness test, and therefore declined to comment on whether or not the referee was correct in law. Thus, the Court of Appeal's decision did not necessitate a change to the Program policy that exempt employees are to be included in the count for purposes of s. 64(1)(a).

A further issue concerning the determination of the count is whether or not employees should be included in the count if they are employees who, having been given notice of termination by the employer, resign before that notice of termination becomes effective. For example, the employees are given, on March 1, eight weeks' notice of termination to be effective on April 25. One of those employees, having found other employment, gives two weeks' notice and resigns on March 15, in accordance with ESA Part XV, s. 63(1)(e). Should that employee be included in the count for purposes of determining whether or not the threshold of 50 severances in s. 64(1)(a) has been met? An examination of s. 64(1)(a), read in conjunction with s. 63(1)(e), would indicate that such an employee must be included. It is the number of employees whose employment is severed by an employer that must be included in the count under s. 64(1)(a) and the employment of an employee who resigns in the above manner is considered to have been severed by their employer under s. 63(1)(e). In contrast, an employee who resigns and does not meet the requirements of s. 63(1)(e) would not be included in the count.

Permanent Discontinuance

Other issues regarding s. 64(1)(a) involve what constitutes a permanent discontinuance and also what constitutes "part of the business of the employer". For a detailed discussion of those terms refer to O Reg 288/01, s. 3(4) in the context of the 10 per cent rule and mass notice of termination. The same principles apply, except that the employer's intention with respect to the issue of whether there is a permanent discontinuance may not be as significant in the context of a severance as it is in the context of a mass termination, where the employer is required to give advance notice of the event. In addition, there have been some referee and court decisions on what constitutes a permanent discontinuance for purposes of severance pay.

In Agincourt Motor Hotel Limited v Flannigan et al (August 19, 1982), ESC 1272 (Davis), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, the referee held (who was upheld by the court on judicial review) that a sale of a business constitutes a permanent discontinuance of the business of the vendor employer for purposes of s. 58 of the former Employment Standards Act. On the other hand, a contracting out of business previously done "in-house" by an employer, which is generally not considered to be a sale under ESA Part IV, s. 9, will not constitute a permanent discontinuance in that it is open to the employer, at the end of the contract, not to renew it and to have the operations revert back to the employer. In this regard, see Otis Elevator Company Limited v United Steelworkers of America et al (November 5, 1985), ESC 1978 (Davis), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act.

Payroll – s. 64(2)

64(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), an employer shall be considered to have a payroll of $2.5 million or more if,

(a) the total wages earned by all of the employer's employees in the four weeks that ended with the last day of the last pay period completed prior to the severance of an employee's employment, when multiplied by 13, was $2.5 million or more; or

(b) the total wages earned by all of the employer's employees in the last or second-last fiscal year of the employer prior to the severance of an employee's employment was $2.5 million or more.

The definition of payroll is used to determine whether an employer meets the $2.5 million payroll threshold set out in s. 64(1)(b). The employer is considered to meet the threshold if either the calculation in s. 64(2)(a) or (b) produces a sum of $2.5 million or more.

Where associated or related businesses can be treated as one employer under ESA Part III, s. 4, the payrolls of each individual business are added together to determine whether the $2.5 million payroll threshold is met. This applies whether or not the section 4 associated or related businesses fall within Ontario jurisdiction.

(Note: it was previously Program policy that only the payroll of the individual associated or related businesses that fall under Ontario jurisdiction were included in determining whether the payroll of the employer meets the $2.5 million threshold. This Program policy was changed as the result of the Ontario Superior Court decision of Hawkes v. Max Aicher (North America) Limited, 2021 ONSC 4290, which held that the $2.5 million threshold must be based on the employer's global payroll – including the payroll of associated or related businesses within the meaning of s. 4 that fall outside of Ontario jurisdiction.) The definition of payroll requires an examination of the wages earned by employees during three distinct periods preceding a severance. The three periods are:

- Wages earned in a specified four-week period (multiplied by 13)
- Wages earned for the last complete fiscal year, and
- Wages earned for the second-last complete fiscal year.

The employer is considered to have a payroll of $2.5 million or more if the calculation for any one of these three periods results in an amount of $2.5 million or more.

For example, an employer might have had a $2.5 million payroll in the second-last completed fiscal year preceding a severance. Despite the fact that the payroll for the last completed fiscal year is less than $2.5 million, the employer would meet the $2.5 million payroll threshold in s. 64.

Similarly, an employer may not have had a $2.5 million payroll in the last or second last fiscal year, but if the projected payroll for the current year based on the calculation in s. 64(2)(a) exceeds $2.5 million the employer would meet the $2.5 million payroll threshold.

Wages are defined in ESA Part I, s. 1:

"wages" means,

(a) any monetary remuneration payable by an employer to an employee under the terms of an employment contract, oral or written, express or implied,

(b) any payment required to be made by an employer to an employee under this Act, and

(c) any allowances for room or board under an employment contract or prescribed allowances, but does not include,

(d) tips or other gratuities,

(e) any sums paid as gifts or bonuses that are dependent on the discretion of the employer and that are not related to hours, production or efficiency,

(f) expenses and travelling allowances, or

(g) subject to subsections 60(3) or 62(2), employer contributions to a benefit plan and payments to which an employee is entitled from a benefit plan;

Exceptions – s. 64(3)

64(3) Prescribed employees are not entitled to severance pay under this section.

This section provides that prescribed employees are not entitled to severance pay under s. 64. The prescribed employees are identified in O Reg 288/01, s. 9. Refer to O Reg 288/01 for a complete discussion of the prescribed employees.

Note: For information on the application of the wilful disobedience exemption established in para. 6 of ss. 9(1) of O Reg 288/01 where an employee is not vaccinated against, or tested for, COVID-19 in accordance with the employer's policy, also refer to "ESA Termination and Severance Liabilities Where an Employee is Not Vaccinated Against or Tested For COVID-19".

As with all exemptions from a minimum standard, the onus is on the employer to establish on a balance of probabilities that the exemption applies.

Location Deemed an Establishment – s. 64(4)

64(4) A location shall be deemed to be an establishment under subsection (1) if,

(a) there is a permanent discontinuance of all or part of an employer's business at the location;

(b) the location is part of an establishment consisting of two or more locations; and

(c) the employer severs the employment relationship of 50 or more employees within a six-month period as a result.

Section 64(4) applies where the employer has a global payroll of less than $2.5 million and so what is at issue is whether or not the employer has severed the employment of 50 or more employees in six months or less because of a permanent discontinuance of all or part of the business of an employer at the establishment.

ESA Part I, s. 1 defines an establishment as a single location or in certain circumstances two or more locations. Despite this definition, s. 64(4) deems a single location that is part of an establishment under the s. 1 definition to be an establishment for the purpose of determining whether an employer is liable to pay severance pay under s. 64(1)(a).

This section addresses a situation where, for example, the employer has two or more locations in the same municipality, and hence together they comprise one establishment as that term is defined in ESA Part I, s. 1. If the employer moves all or part of its production from location A to location B, there is a permanent discontinuance at location A, but, applying the s. 1 definition, there is no such discontinuance at the establishment as a whole. In this situation, s. 64(4) deems location A to be a separate establishment for the purposes of severance pay if the employment of 50 or more employees is severed in six months or less because of the permanent discontinuance at location A.

ESA Part XV Section 65 – Calculating Severance Pay

Calculating Severance Pay – s. 65(1)

65(1) Severance pay under this section shall be calculated by multiplying the employee's regular wages for a regular work week by the sum of,

(a) the number of years of employment the employee has completed; and

(b) the number of months of employment not included in clause (a) that the employee has completed, divided by 12.

This section determines the amount of severance pay to which a qualified employee is entitled. It provides that an employee will be entitled to an amount equal to the employee's regular wages for a regular work week multiplied by the sum of the employee's completed years, and completed months not included in a completed year divided by 12. However, this section must be read in conjunction with s. 65(5), which sets out a maximum amount of severance pay an employee is entitled to under s. 65(1). It caps the entitlement at an amount equal to the employee's regular wages for a regular work week for 26 weeks.

For example, if the employee has 10 years, and 6 ¾ months of employment and the employee's regular wages for a regular work week is $1,000, the employee's severance pay will be $10,500. The calculation is as follows:

1. Regular wages for a regular work week: $1,000
2. Number of completed years of employment: 10
3. Number of completed months divided by 12: 6/12 = 0.5

4. Add the number from #2 to the number from #3: 10 + 0.5 = 10.5
5. Multiply regular wages for a regular work week by number arrived at in #4: $1,000 x 10.5 = $10,500

Regular wages and regular work week are defined in ESA Part I, s. 1 as follows:

"regular wages" means wages other than overtime pay, public holiday pay, premium pay, vacation pay, domestic or sexual violence leave pay, termination pay, severance pay and termination of assignment pay, and entitlements under a provision of an employee's contract of employment that under subsection 5(2) prevail over Part VIII, Part X, Part XI, section 49.7, Part XV or section 74.10.1;

"regular work week", with respect to an employee who usually works the same number of hours each week, means a week of that many hours but not including overtime hours;

Also see ESA Part XV, s. 60(1)(b) for a discussion of Program policy regarding the interpretation of the phrase "regular wages for a regular work week" when there have been changes to an employee's pay and/or hours of work shortly before the employment relationship is terminated. This policy also applies to the calculation of severance pay.

Section 65(6) sets out how to determine "the employee's regular wages for a regular work week" for employees who do not have a regular work week or are paid on a basis other than time. See s. 65(6) below for a detailed discussion.

Length of Employment

The determination of an employee's length of employment for the purposes of calculating the amount of severance pay under s. 65(1) is not necessarily identical to the determination of whether the employee has met the five-year threshold to qualify for a severance entitlement. See the discussion ESA Part XV, s. 64(1) with respect to employment that is considered in determining eligibility for severance pay.

It should be noted that only employment in Ontario (or work outside of Ontario that is a continuation of work in Ontario) is considered in determining eligibility for and the calculation of severance pay. For example, if an employee works for ABC Inc. in England for five years and then is transferred to Ontario and has their employment severed two years later, the employee will be considered to have only two years of employment for the purposes of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, including the severance provisions.

Under s. 65(2), all periods of employment (whether active or inactive) are added together for the purposes of determining both eligibility for and the amount of severance pay to which the employee is entitled. Examples of periods of inactive employment that must be included in these determinations are: time spent on lay-off, vacation and leave of absences such as educational leave and leaves under Part XIV.

However, it is Program policy that time spent on lay-off after the lay-off becomes a severance under ESA Part XV, s. 63(1)(c) (i.e., it equals or exceeds 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks) and the time subsequently spent waiting for a recall to work is not counted as employment for the purposes of either eligibility for severance under s. 64(1) or the calculation of the amount of severance pay under s. 65(1).

Multiple periods of employment with the same employer must be added together for the purposes of both eligibility for, and the calculation of the amount of, severance pay, regardless of the amount of time between the periods of employment or the reason any of the periods of employment came to an end (e.g., whether the employee quit or had their employment severed at the employer's behest). See s. 65(2) below for a detailed discussion on the time included in determining eligibility for and the calculation of the amount of severance pay.

Where the employment of an employee is severed under ESA Part XV, s. 63(1)(e) (i.e., the employer provides notice of termination and the employee provides two weeks' written notice of resignation that takes effect in the statutory notice period), the date of severance is deemed under ESA Part XV, s. 63(3) to be the date the employer's notice would have taken effect. Therefore, when determining the length of employment for the purposes of determining eligibility to severance pay (i.e., for purposes of the five-year qualifying period), the period of time between the date of resignation and the date the employer's notice would have taken effect (the deemed severance date) is included.

However, when it comes to calculating the amount of severance pay, s. 65(3) provides that the period between when the resignation takes effect and when the termination would have taken effect is not to be used. See s. 65(3) below for further discussion.

Where an employee's employment is severed without the required written notice under ESA Part XV, ss. 57 or 58, s. 65(4) specifically requires that the period of notice that should have been provided be included in calculating the amount of severance pay. It is Program policy that this period must also be included for the purpose of determining whether the five-year threshold for eligibility for severance pay has been met; otherwise, the employee's severance pay entitlement would be calculated as zero, which would be contrary to the direction in s. 65(4) that it be calculated as if the employee had continued to be employed for the period of notice that should have been given. See s. 65(4) below for a detailed discussion.

Severance Pay for Seasonal Employees

One question that arises is how to calculate severance pay for seasonal employees. In Standard Commercial Tobacco Co. of Canada Ltd. v Canadian Union of Operating Engineers and General Workers, [1988] 31 OAC 74 (Ont Div Ct), the Ontario Divisional Court upheld the decision of referee Brown in Standard Commercial Tobacco Co. of Canada Ltd. v Canadian Union of Operating Engineers and General Workers (March 18, 1987), ESC 2225 (Brown), a decision made under the former Employment Standards Act, which considered the situation of seasonal employees in the tobacco industry who were laid off at the end of each season with recall rights under the terms of the collective agreement, and then recalled at the beginning of the next season of work. The employment relationship continued during the period of lay-off. The referee held that in such a situation, the employees' number of years of employment should be determined by including the active seasons as well as the non-active seasons in which the employees were on lay-off. However, the referee went on to say that, in determining what the employees' wages were for a regular non-overtime work week, for purposes of severance pay, the officer should take the number of hours worked by the employee in the year in which they are entitled to severance pay, and then divide that figure by 52 weeks.

For example, if a seasonal employee is entitled to severance pay in 2012 and during that year they worked 1560 hours at $20 an hour, the employee's wages for a regular non-overtime work week would be 1560 divided by 52 = 30 times the hourly rate of $20 which comes to $600. This would be the result according to the Standard case, even though the employee's non-overtime wages while they were working were higher, e.g., $1000 a week. Standard Commercial Tobacco Co. of Canada Ltd. v Canadian Union of Operating Engineers and General Workers thus has the effect of prorating the seasonal employee's actual wages for purposes of severance pay because the employee does not work the entire year.

Although the Divisional Court in upholding the referee's decision did not consider this particular point, the Program has adopted the referee's method of calculating severance pay for seasonal employees in situations that closely match the situation in Standard Commercial Tobacco Co. of Canada Ltd. v Canadian Union of Operating Engineers and General Workers. For example, the workers in the case were employees who had an established seasonal work cycle from year to year and whose employment relationship did not end at the end of each season. Thus the method that effectively prorates the employee's regular wages for a regular work week should be applied in similar situations where the employees have a very specific regular pattern of seasonal work and whose employment relationships are not severed at the end of each season. This method should not be used in situations where the seasonal employees do not have a regular yearly cycle, i.e., where the season varies in length from year to year or whose employment relationships are severed at the end of each season.

No Vacation Pay on Severance Pay

It should also be noted that, although it is the policy of the Program that the statutory minimum of four or six per cent for vacation pay as determined in accordance with ESA Part XI, s. 35.2 (or, where there is a greater right or benefit respecting vacation pay, that greater amount) should be levied on the employee's termination pay, it is also the policy of the Program that the employee's severance pay, on the other hand, will not attract vacation pay. For example, if the employee's employment is terminated and severed and the employee is owed $4,000 termination pay and $5,000 severance pay, vacation pay (in this example the statutory entitlement is four per cent) will be levied on the termination pay but not the severance pay, so the total owing will be $9,160. If the employee's contract of employment provides for vacation pay to be calculated at a greater amount than the employee's statutory entitlement under s. 35.2, the amount (paid in respect of termination pay only) will be increased accordingly. For a discussion of the rationale for levying vacation pay on termination pay refer to ESA Part XV, s. 61(1).

Non-Continuous Employment – s. 65(2)

65(2) All time spent by the employee in the employer's employ, whether or not continuous and whether or not active, shall be included in determining whether he or she is eligible for severance pay under subsection 64(1) and in calculating his or her severance pay under subsection (1).

This provision defines the time that is to be included in determining an employee's length of employment for the purpose of determining if an employee qualifies for severance and, if they do, the time that is included to determine the amount of severance pay to which the employee is entitled. All time spent in the employer's employ, whether continuous or not, whether active or not, shall be included. It should be noted, however, that only employment in Ontario or work outside of Ontario that is a continuation of work in Ontario is considered in determining eligibility for and the calculation of the amount of severance pay.

For example, if an employee works for ABC Inc. in England for five years and then is transferred to Ontario and has their employment severed two years later, the employee will be considered to have only two years of employment for the purposes of the Act, including eligibility for and the calculation of the amount of severance pay under ESA Part XV, s. 64(1) and s. 65(1). See Singer v Tullett & Tokyo Forex (Canada) Ltd. (July 26, 1996), ESC 96-167 (Novick), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act.

Whether or Not Active

Examples of periods of inactive employment that must be included are time spent on lay-off, vacation and leaves of absence such as educational leave or leaves under Part XIV. The only exception to this is where the lay-off becomes a severance under ESA Part XV, s. 63(1)(c) (i.e., a lay-off that lasts 35 weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks) and the employee retains the right to be recalled. The time spent waiting to be recalled beyond the point of the severance will not be counted as employment for purposes of ESA Part XV, s. 64(1) or s. 65(1).

In Brock Telecom (Northern Telecom Canada Limited) and Microtel Limited v Communications and Electrical Workers of Canada Union, Local 526 (August 5, 1991), ESC 2893 (Haefling), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, the referee held that all of the time spent on layoff with recall rights, even if beyond the 35-week point, should be included in length of employment. However, this case does not represent Program policy and should not be followed, as it would result in the inclusion of time in the calculation of the length of employment that accrued after the employment relationship was explicitly considered to have been severed under the ESA 2000.

Note that the provision that states that a lay-off becomes a severance when the lay-off has lasted 35 weeks in any period of 52 consecutive weeks (the 35 week rule) in ESA Part XV, s. 63(1)(c) only applies to lay-offs that commenced on or after June 15, 1987. The reference to the requirement that the lay-off commence on or after June 15, 1987, appeared in the legislation when it became law in 1987, but was removed when the statute was re-issued in the Revised Statutes of Ontario 1990. The removal of the reference to June 15, 1987, did not mean that the 35 week rule can be applied to lay-offs commencing prior to June 15, 1987, however, since the Statute Revision Commissioners preparing the RSO 1990 did not have the mandate to change the meaning or content of the statute, but only to perform a "clean-up" and renumber the statutes. Likewise, the absence of the reference to lay-offs commencing on or after June 15, 1987, in the Employment Standards Act, 2000 does not mean that the 35 week rule can be applied retroactively. Therefore, if a lay-off commenced prior to June 15,1987, the entire length of the lay-off (whether it exceeds 35 weeks or not) is included in length of employment for purposes of determining eligibility for and the calculation of the amount of severance pay.

Example 1:

- Employee is hired September 2, 2000
- Employee is laid off January 1, 2008
- 35 weeks of lay-off expire and severance pay paid into trust September 2, 2008
- Employee is recalled and severance pay returned to employer September 2, 2009
- Employee is laid off January 1, 2013
- 35 weeks of lay-off expire and severance pay paid into trust September 2, 2013
- Employee renounces recall rights and receives severance pay June 1, 2014

In this case, the employee's length of employment for purposes of severance pay would be the period from September 2, 2000, to September 2, 2008, plus the period from September 2, 2009, to September 2, 2013, for a total of 12 years of employment. (Although the employee retained the right to recall between September 2, 2008, and September 2, 2009, and again between September 2, 2013, and June 1, 2014, this time is not included because the lay-off in both cases became a severance under s. 63(1)(c).) Thus the employee in this example would be entitled to 12 weeks of severance pay.

Example 2:

- Employee is hired September 2, 1980
- Employee is laid off with recall rights January 1, 1987
- Employee is recalled to work January 1, 1989
- 35 weeks of lay-off expire and severance pay paid to Director in trust September 2, 2014
- Employee renounces recall rights and receives severance pay June 1, 2015

In this example, the entire length of the first lay-off would be included, but only the first 35 weeks of the second lay-off would be included in calculating length of employment for purposes of s. 64(1) and s. 65(1). Thus, in this example, the employee's length of employment for purposes of s. 64(1) and s. 65(1) would be from September 2, 1980, to September 2, 2014, i.e., 34 years.

Whether Continuous or Not

Multiple periods of employment with the same employer must be added together regardless of the amount of time between the periods of employment or the reason any of the periods of employment came to an end (e.g., whether the employee resigned or had their employment severed at the employer's behest). Situations sometimes arise where an employee works on and off for an employer over time. The employee returns to work with this same employer and then the employment is subsequently severed. How is the calculation of the employee's length of service made in this type of situation? The employee's length of service is calculated by adding together all stretches of employment, regardless of how long the gap(s) between periods of employment was or why the employment relationship had previously ended. This is so even if the earlier employment was with a different company that was subsequently purchased by the current employer. See National Electrical Carbon Canada/Morganite Canada Corporation o/a Thermal Ceramics v Reader (July 23, 1998), 0744-97-ES (Sargeant), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act.

Where the employee's first stretch of employment ended in a resignation rather than a dismissal, the two stretches of employment must be added together to determine the employee's length of employment for purposes of calculating the amount of severance pay. This is supported by two unreported Divisional Court cases, Re Oakridge Ford Sales (1981) Ltd. and Re Standard Tube Canada Inc., both issued under the former Employment Standards Act. It should be noted that, prior to those court cases, there was at least one referee's decision to the contrary on that particular point - for example, see Canada Trust Co. v Holmes (June 13, 1990), ESC 2710 (Brown), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act. However that decision is contrary to the two court cases above and should not be followed.

In a case where the employee had already received severance pay in regards to a previous stretch of employment, the amount of severance pay already paid may be deducted from the severance pay owing pursuant to paragraph 3 of s. 65(8). For more information on deductions from severance pay, refer to s. 65(8) below.

The issue arises whether an employee who is employed on a series of fixed-term contracts or is a seasonal employee is entitled to severance pay. Whether the terms are consecutive or broken, s. 65(2) requires that all this time shall be included in determining whether the employee is eligible for severance pay under s. 64(1) and in calculating the amount of their severance pay under s. 65(1). Therefore, if the employee's length of employment meets or exceeds the five-year requirement set out in s. 64(1), they will be entitled to severance pay in accordance with their length of employment as determined under s. 65(1).

65(2.1) Despite subsection (2), when an employee in receipt of an actuarially unreduced pension benefit has his or her employment severed by an employer on or after November 6, 2009, time spent in the employer's employ for which the employee received service credits in the calculation of that benefit shall not be included in determining whether he or she is eligible for severance pay under subsection 64(1) and in calculating his or her severance pay under subsection (1).

This subsection was added by the Good Government Act, 2009, SO 2009, c 33, and applies to employees whose employment is severed on or after November 6, 2009. Under this subsection, if an employee is receiving an actuarially unreduced pension benefit and then has their employment severed, time employed with the employer for which they received service credits that were used to calculate the pension benefit, will not be included in determining whether the employee is eligible for severance meeting the five year threshold as per ESA Part XV, s. 64(1) or for the purposes of calculating the amount of the severance entitlement under s. 65(1).

This subsection applies, for example, to situations where an employee had previously retired on an actuarially unreduced pension and is subsequently rehired by the employer and then later still has their employment severed (on or after November 6, 2009).

This provision is not to be confused with the exemption from severance in O Reg 288/01, s. 9(1) paragraph 3 that applies to an employee who, on having their employment severed, retires and receives an actuarially unreduced pension benefit. See the discussion regarding this exemption at O Reg 288/01, s. 9(1) para. 3.

Section 65(2.1) is not an exemption from severance. It applies to exclude time for which the employee has received service credits in the calculation of their actuarially unreduced pension for the purposes of determining eligibility for and quantum of severance pay.

Example 1

Employee A is employed by Company A for 25 years. Their employment is then severed but they are able to and does then retire with an actuarially unreduced pension benefit that reflects any service credits that they would have been expected to have earned in the normal course had their employment not been severed. Assume 25 years' worth of service credits in this example. O Reg 288/01, s. 9(1) paragraph 3 applies to exempt employee A from severance pay.

Employee A is subsequently rehired by Company A and works seven more years for the company. Their employment is again severed. Because they were in receipt of an actuarially unreduced pension benefit BEFORE being severed this second time, the exemption in O Reg 288/01, s. 9(1) paragraph 3 has no application. Employee A is not exempt from severance entitlements.

However, because the service credits for the previous 25 years of employment had been included when calculating their actuarially unreduced pension benefit, they are not, as per s. 65(2.1) included when determining whether they meet the five year eligibility threshold under ESA Part XV, s. 64(1) or for calculating the quantum of his severance pay as per s. 65(1). Only their most recent seven years of employment will be considered. Assuming the employer has a global payroll of $2.5 million or more, this employee will be entitled to severance pay (having met the five year eligibility threshold) and the quantum will be calculated as seven weeks of severance pay.

Employee B worked for company B for 30 years and retired with an actuarially unreduced pension benefit based on 30 years' worth of service credits. There was no severance pay payable at this time because their employment was not severed by their employer.

Employee B was subsequently rehired by company B and worked for an additional three years. Their employment was then severed. Because they were in receipt of an actuarially unreduced pension benefit BEFORE being severed, O Reg 288/01, s. 9(1) paragraph 3 does not apply to exempt them from severance entitlements.

However, as the service credits for the previous 30 years employment had been included when calculating their actuarially unreduced pension benefit, they are not, as per s. 65(2.1), included when determining eligibility for severance under ESA Part XV, s. 64(1) or calculating quantum of severance pay under s. 65(1). They are considered to have only three years of employment with company B for the purposes of determining severance entitlements and therefore does not meet the five year threshold for eligibility.

Where Employee Resigns – s. 65(3)

65(3) If an employee's employment is severed under clause 63(1)(e), the period between the day the employee's notice of resignation took effect and the day the employer's notice of termination would have taken effect shall not be considered in calculating the amount of severance pay to which the employee is entitled.

Section 65(3) creates an exception to s. 65(2) with respect to employment included in the calculation of severance pay. This exception applies when an employee resigns during a statutory notice period in accordance with ESA Part XV, s. 63(1)(e).

Under ESA Part XV, s. 63(1)(e) and s. 63(3), an employee who has been given notice of termination in accordance with ESA Part XV, s. 57 or s. 58 and who provides two weeks' notice of resignation that takes effect during the statutory notice period, is deemed to be severed on the date the employer's notice would have taken effect. Further, s. 65(2) provides that the period of employment up to the date of the deemed severance (i.e., the date the employer's notice would have taken effect) is included in determining eligibility for severance pay (i.e., the five-year employment threshold) as well as the calculation of the amount of severance pay.

However, s. 65(3) provides that the period of time between the date the employee's notice of resignation takes effect and the date the employer's notice of termination would have taken effect (the deemed date of severance) does not count in the calculation of the amount of severance pay owing (although this period continues to count with respect to determining eligibility for severance pay).

For example, an employee was provided with eight weeks' written notice of termination that would end on March 28. The employee provides two weeks' written notice of resignation on February 1 (the effective date of which falls within the statutory notice period). For the purpose of calculating the amount of severance pay owing, the employee's length of employment is counted only up to February 14, the employee's last day of work. No account is taken of the period between February 15 and March 28 for the purposes of calculating the amount of severance pay, even though March 28 is deemed to be the severance date by ESA Part XV, s. 63(3).

However, under s. 65(2), the length of employment for the purpose of determining eligibility for severance pay includes the inactive time up to the deemed severance date. In the above example, the employee's employment is deemed severed on March 28. Therefore, account is taken of the period between February 15 and March 28 for the purpose of determining whether the employee is eligible for severance pay.

In summary, in determining eligibility for severance pay, the period after the resignation takes effect is included under ESA Part XV, s. 63(3) and s. 65(2). In calculating the amount of severance pay, the period after the resignation takes effect is excluded as per s. 65(3).

Termination Without Notice – s. 65(4)

65(4) If an employer terminates the employment of an employee without providing the notice, if any, required under section 57 or 58, the amount of severance pay to which the employee is entitled shall be calculated as if the employee continued to be employed for a period equal to the period of notice that should have been given and was not.

This section provides that where notice of termination required to be given under ESA Part XV, s. 57 or s. 58 is not provided, the period of the notice that should have been provided is to be included in the employee's length of employment for purposes of calculating the amount of severance pay under s. 65(1).

For example, where an employee, who was terminated on February 1 should have been provided with eight weeks' written notice of termination, the employee's length of employment for the purpose of calculating the amount of severance pay will include the period up to March 28.

It is Program policy that this period must also be included for the purpose of determining whether the five-year threshold for eligibility for severance pay has been met; otherwise, the employee's severance pay entitlement would be calculated as zero, which would be contrary to the s. 65(4) direction that it be calculated as if the employee had continued to be employed for the period of notice that should have been given.

Limit – s. 65(5)

65(5) An employee's severance pay entitlement under this section shall not exceed an amount equal to the employee's regular wages for a regular work week for 26 weeks.

This section sets out a maximum amount of severance pay an employee may be entitled to under s. 65(1). It caps the entitlement at an amount equal to the employee's regular wages for a regular work week for 26 weeks.

Regular wages and regular work week are defined in ESA Part I, s. 1 as follows:

"regular wages" means wages other than overtime pay, public holiday pay, premium pay, vacation pay, domestic or sexual violence leave pay, termination pay, severance pay and termination of assignment pay, and entitlements under a provision of an employee's contract of employment that under subsection 5 (2) prevail over Part VIII, Part X, Part XI. section 49.7, Part XV or section 74.10.1;

"regular work week", with respect to an employee who usually works the same number of hours each week, means a week of that many hours but not including overtime hours;

See also s. 65(1) above for a discussion of Program policy regarding the phrase "regular wages for a regular work week" in the context of severance pay calculations.

Where No Regular Work Week – s. 65(6)

65(6) For the purposes of subsections (1) and (5), if the employee does not have a regular work week or if the employee is paid on a basis other than time, the employee's regular wages for a regular work week shall be deemed to be the average amount of regular wages earned by the employee for the weeks in which the employee worked in the period of 12 weeks preceding the date on which,

(a) the employee's employment was severed; or

(b) if the employee's employment was severed under clause 63 (1) (c) or (d), the date on which the lay-off began.

This section outlines how to determine an employee's regular wages for a regular work week where the employee does not have a "regular work week" or is paid on a basis other than time.

Regular wages and regular work week are defined in ESA Part I, s. 1 as follows:

"regular wages" means wages other than overtime pay, public holiday pay, premium pay, vacation pay, domestic or sexual violence leave pay, termination pay, severance pay and termination of assignment pay, and entitlements under a provision of an employee's contract of employment that under subsection 5 (2) prevail over Part VIII, Part X, Part XI, section 49.7, Part XV or section 74.10.1;

"regular work week", with respect to an employee who usually works the same number of hours each week, means a week of that many hours but not including overtime hours;

Section 65(6) provides for an averaging of the employee's regular wages received over the 12 weeks worked immediately preceding the day the employee's employment was severed or, where the employee's employment was deemed severed as a result of being on a lay-off, the day the lay-off began.

The formula requires that only the weeks in which the employee worked be included. Therefore, if the employee has not worked at all during certain weeks in the designated 12-week period, then those weeks are not included in the calculation. For example, if the employee was on a contractual short-term disability leave for one of the 12 weeks and did not work at all during that week, their regular wages would be determined by averaging the regular wages earned over the 11 weeks in which they worked. Weeks where the employee was away from work all week on a leave under Part XIV, contractual leave, other approved leave, vacation or lay-off are considered weeks not worked. As noted above, where the employment was severed as a result of a lay-off under ESA Part XV, ss. 63(1)(c) or (d), the 12-week period precedes the date on which the lay-off began.

The question arises as to how to complete the calculation where the employee who does not have a regular work week or is paid on a basis other than time was, for example, on a contractual short-term disability leave or other leave for the entire designated 12-week period. Because s. 65(6) does not provide a mechanism to calculate the average wages in that situation, Program policy is that the employer must continue to look back in blocks of 12 weeks, until a 12-week period can be found in which the employee has at least one week worked and then average the wages earned over the number of weeks worked in that 12-week period.

For example, an employee was on pregnancy and parental leave for 52 weeks prior to her employment being severed. Note that a combined pregnancy and parental leave may be longer than 52 weeks, up to a maximum entitlement of 78 weeks. The employer looks back in 12-week blocks until it finds a 12-week block that contains some weeks worked by the employee. In this case, the employer looks:

- 0-12 weeks prior to the severance – no weeks worked
- 12-24 weeks prior to the severance – no weeks worked
- 24-36 weeks prior to the severance – no weeks worked
- 36-48 weeks prior to the severance – no weeks worked
- 48-60 weeks prior to the severance – eight weeks worked.

The 12-week block to be used will be the period of time that was 48 through 60 weeks prior to the severance. The employee worked eight weeks during that time, so her regular wages for a regular work week will be the average of her regular wages over those eight weeks.

In Addition to Other Amounts – s. 65(7)

65(7) Subject to subsection (8), severance pay under this section is in addition to any other amount to which an employee is entitled under this Act or his or her employment contract.

This section provides that severance pay is payable in addition to any other payment owing under the Act. For example, if an employee was dismissed without notice after 10 years of employment, they would be entitled to eight weeks' termination pay under ESA Part XV, s. 61(1) and 10 weeks of severance pay under ESA Part XV, s. 64(1). This section provides that the eight weeks of termination pay (an amount the employee is entitled to under the Act) is payable in addition to the 10 weeks of severance pay, preventing one from being set-off against the other. Further, this section provides that severance pay is payable in addition to any payments owing under a contract of employment.

This section is subject to s. 65(8), which permits certain set-offs/deductions from severance pay.

Set-off, Deduction – s. 65(8)

65(8) Only the following set-offs and deductions may be made in calculating severance pay under this section:

1. Supplementary unemployment benefits the employee receives after his or her employment is severed and before the severance pay becomes payable to the employee.

2. An amount paid to an employee for loss of employment under a provision of the employment contract if it is based upon length of employment, length of service or seniority.

3. Severance pay that was previously paid to the employee under this Act, a predecessor of this Act or a contractual provision described in paragraph 2.

Section 65(8) outlines the set-offs and deductions that may be made when calculating an employee's severance pay. Three types of set-offs/deductions are permitted: supplementary unemployment benefits, contractual amounts for the loss of employment and severance pay previously paid under the former Employment Standards Act or the ESA 2000.

Deductions for Supplementary Unemployment Benefits

Paragraph 1 of s. 65(8) provides that supplementary unemployment benefits ("SUBs") that an employee receives after the employment is severed and before the severance becomes payable may be set-off/deducted when calculating severance pay.

SUBs are amounts that an employer pays to an employee to top up the employee's employment insurance benefits. For example, if the employee is receiving $300 a week under the Employment Insurance Act, the SUBs plan that the insurer has set up might entitle the employee to a further $100 a week while they are unemployed. The term "supplementary unemployment benefit" is not defined in the Act. However, it is defined in the federal Income Tax Act, RSC 1985, c 1 (5th Supp). It is still possible for a plan that does not meet the definition in the Income Tax Act to be considered a SUBs plan for purposes of s. 65(8). If the plan is a bona fide plan and is for the purpose of topping up the employee's employment insurance benefits then the SUBs will be deductible.

Example:

- January 6 - Employee is laid off
- January 20 - SUBs commence
- September 6 - Employee's employment deemed severed under ESA Part XV, s. 63 and severance pay is paid in trust
- November 1 - Employee renounces recall rights and severance pay paid to employee; SUBs end

In this situation, the first question is whether the employer can deduct from the severance pay the SUBs that were paid to the employee between January 20 and September 6. The answer is no, since s. 65(8) refers to SUBs received after the employment is severed but before the severance pay becomes payable. In the above-noted example only the SUBs received by the employee between September 6, the date the severance occurs, and November 1, the date the severance pay becomes payable, can be deducted from the severance pay owing to the employee.

Deductions for Contractual Payments

Paragraph 2 in this section provides that an amount paid to an employee for the loss of employment under a contract of employment where the payment is based on length of employment, length of service or seniority may be set-off/deducted from severance pay. For example, an employee whose employment is severed after 25 years of service receives payment of two weeks per year to a maximum of 20 weeks under a contract of employment. Under s. 65(1), the employee is entitled to 25 weeks of severance pay. In this case, s. 65(8) provides that the employer may set-off/deduct the 20 weeks paid to the employee from the severance pay.

Furthermore, if the employer, pursuant to a provision of an employment contract, gives a greater amount of termination pay than is required under the Act, the employer may set-off/deduct the excess termination pay from the severance pay entitlement.

Where the employer agrees to provide salary continuance after termination, and the agreement specifically states that severance pay is included in the amounts paid, ESA Part V, s. 11(5) will not invalidate the agreement.

Deductions for Previously Paid Severance Pay

Paragraph 3 of s. 65(8) provides that an employer may deduct the amount of severance pay paid previously under the Act, a predecessor of the Act or a contractual provision of an employment contract. Under paragraph 3 it is the actual amount of severance pay paid previously that may be set-off/deducted.

Example:

- January 1, 2002 - Employee hired at a salary of $1,000.00 per week
- January 1, 2008 - Employee dismissed and paid $6,000 severance pay (6 years x $1,000)
- January 1, 2010 - Employee rehired at a salary of $2,000 per week
- January 1, 2015 - Employee dismissed

The question arises as to how the employee's severance pay should be calculated for purposes of the 2015 dismissal. In this example, the employee would be considered to have 11 years of employment with the employer (six years during the first period and five years during the second). Based on the employee's length of employment of 11 years and their current salary of $2,000 per week, the employee would be entitled to severance pay in the amount of $22,000 before taking into account any severance pay previously paid. Paragraph 3 allows an employer to take into account the severance pay previously paid by setting-off/deducting the amount paid from the current entitlement. Therefore, the employee is entitled to $22,000 - $6,000 = $16,000 following the 2015 dismissal.

The question sometimes arises as to what happens where the employee is bound by a severance pay settlement with respect to an earlier dismissal, either because the union has entered into such a settlement with the employer or because the employee has entered into such a settlement himself or herself. In this situation, the employer is limited to deducting the actual amount of severance pay that was paid as the settlement. Using the example discussed above, if a settlement of $3,000 had been reached with respect to the first dismissal, the employer would be entitled to set-off/deduct only $3,000 from the $22,000 total, resulting in the employee receiving $19,000 of severance pay following the 2015 dismissal.

The situation may also arise where the amount of the settlement exceeds the amount of severance pay that was required under the statute in force at the time the employment was severed. In this situation, the employer is permitted to deduct the actual amount of the settlement that was for severance pay. Using the example discussed above but with a settlement of $10,000 in respect of the first dismissal, the employer would be entitled to set-off/deduct $10,000 from the $22,000 total, resulting in the employee receiving $12,000 of severance pay following the 2015 dismissal.

Instalments - s. 66(1)

66(1) An employer may pay severance pay to an employee who is entitled to it in instalments with the agreement of the employee or the approval of the Director.

Section 66(1) provides that an employer may pay severance pay in instalments directly to an employee where the employee and employer agree (in writing - see s. 1(3) of the Act) or with the approval of the Director of Employment Standards. See Delegation of Powers for a listing of the persons to whom this power of the Director has been delegated.

Note that where an employer and an employee have agreed to an instalment plan to pay an employee severance pay under this section, the provisions in s. 67 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 regarding the election to retain recall rights or to be paid severance pay forthwith do not apply (see s. 67(2)). Therefore, an employee who agrees to an instalment plan is not required to make an election with respect to the payment of severance pay or retention of recall rights. Consequently, the employee preserves recall rights because he or she is not required to make an election and the employer is not required to pay any unpaid severance pay into trust. Note, however, that s. 67 will continue to apply with respect to an election for the payment of termination pay forthwith or the retention of recall rights.

However, if an employer pays severance pay by instalment to an employee under a plan approved by the Director (as opposed to under an agreement between the employer and employee), s. 67 will continue to apply with respect to the election to be paid severance pay forthwith or to retain recall rights. In this situation, the employee will retain the right to be recalled, unless he or she expressly elects to be paid the severance pay under s. 67(3). Further, in the absence of such an election, the employer will be required to either pay the severance instalments to the Director in trust under s. 67(6) or, if the employee is represented by a trade union, pay the severance instalments in trust as agreed by the union and the employer or to the Director in trust in the absence of such an agreement under s. 67(7). It is important to note that the employer will be required to meet its obligations as set out in ss. 67(6) or (7) unless the employee has expressly elected to accept the severance pay. Hence, an employer may wish to obtain this election from its employees prior to making any severance pay payments.

Some of the factors that the Director may consider in determining whether to approve the instalment plan may include:

1. The possibility that the company would be forced into bankruptcy or receivership if the instalment plan were not granted.
2. The possibility that the employer would not be able to meet all of the instalment payments in a timely fashion.
3. The views of the union, if any, and the employees concerning the proposed instalment plan.
4. Whether there are related companies that may have the funds to pay the severance pay without resorting to an instalment plan.
5. Whether the proposal contains a provision for the payment of interest.
6. The reasons the parties were unable to reach an agreement on their own.

Note: this list is not intended to be exhaustive.

Restriction - s. 66(2)

66(2) The period over which instalments can be paid must not exceed three years.

Section 66(2) places a maximum payment period of three years for an instalment plan.

Default - s. 66(3)

66(3) If the employer fails to make an instalment payment, all severance pay not previously paid shall become payable immediately.

Section 66(3) provides that where an employer fails to make an instalment payment, the remaining severance pay becomes payable immediately.

The question may arise as to what happens to the employee's recall rights where the employer defaults on the plan:

Instalment Plan Based on Employer-Employee Agreement

Where the instalment plan for the payment of severance pay is based on an agreement between the employer and employee, the provisions regarding the employee's election between being paid severance pay or retaining the right to be recalled do not apply (s. 67(2)). Thus the employee maintains recalls rights (unless he or she had already made an election to be paid termination pay forthwith and is deemed to have abandoned recall rights) as well as the entitlement to be paid severance pay in instalments. If the employer defaults on the instalment plan, all outstanding severance pay becomes payable immediately to the employee. The employee's right to be recalled would remain unaffected.

Director-Approved Instalment Plan

Under a Director-approved instalment plan, the s. 67 provisions on the employee's election between recall rights and being paid severance pay do apply. Where the employee fails to make an election or chooses not be paid the severance pay, he or she would retain recall rights. Where the employee elects to be paid the severance pay, pursuant to s. 67(5), the employee is deemed to have abandoned his/her right to recall. However, it is Program policy that the employee could escape from this election, on the basis that it would be either an express or implied condition of the election that the employer completes all of the instalments. If this were not the case, situations of obvious unfairness would arise. For example, consider the following situation: the employee elects to give up recall rights and take severance, a short time later the employer defaults on the instalments, goes into bankruptcy, and some time later a purchaser buys the business and hires back all those employees with recall rights. In that situation, not to allow the employee to consider his or her election void would be to deprive him or her of both severance pay and recall rights, which is not the intent of the section. However, this proposition has not yet been tested before the Ontario Labour Relations Board, an arbitrator or a court. To provide more certain protection against these types of situations it is advisable that instalment plans contain a specific condition that any election to forfeit any recall rights be void if all the severance instalments are not paid by the employer pursuant to the plan.

ESA Part XV Section 67 - Where Election May Be Made

Note: O. Reg. 764/20 establishes a special rule that permits employers and trade unions in the hospitality, tourism, and convention and trade show industries to agree that the regulation applies instead of some of the provisions in s. 67. The special rules lasts from December 17, 2020 until July 30, 2022. See the discussion of O. Reg. 764/20 for details.

Where Election May Be Made - s. 67(1)

67(1) This section applies if an employee who has a right to be recalled for employment under his or her employment contract is entitled to,

(a) termination pay under section 61 because of a lay-off of 35 weeks or more; or

(b) severance pay.

Section 67(1) sets out the circumstances in which the provisions regarding the election of recall rights apply. This section is subject to s. 67(2) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, discussed in subsection (2) below.

Section 67(1) states that s. 67 will apply where an employee has the right to be recalled for employment under a contract of employment (which includes a collective agreement) and either a) or b) below applies:

Termination pay is due under section 61 because of a lay-off of 35 weeks or more - s. 67(1)(a)

Employees who are entitled to termination pay because of a temporary lay-off that equals or exceeds 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks (s. 56(2)(b) or s. 56(2)(c)) are subject to s. 67. In that case, the employer of such an employee is also subject to s. 67.

This section does not apply if the termination pay comes due for reasons other than as a result of a lay-off that equals or exceeds 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks. Therefore, it will not apply where, for example, there is a termination because of a lay-off that exceeds 13 weeks in a 20-week consecutive period (s. 56(2)(a)). In that case, the employee is not required under the Act to make an election in order to receive termination pay after 13 weeks of lay-off and will not be deemed under the Act to have abandoned the right to be recalled in accepting that payment. If the employee is entitled to severance pay, however, he or she will be required to make an election with respect to the payment of the severance pay and the retention of recall rights. It should also be noted that a collective agreement or contract of employment may provide for the loss of recall rights as a consequence of an employee's acceptance of termination pay that comes due other than as a result of a lay-off that equals or exceeds 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks.

Severance pay is due - s. 67(1)(b)

Subject to s. 67(2), employees who are entitled to severance pay under s. 64(1) of the Act are subject to the provisions of s. 67. The employee's employer is likewise subject to the provisions of s. 67.

Typically, a right of recall will be contained in a collective agreement. However, s. 67(1) is not limited to situations where the right of recall is contained in a collective agreement. It is possible that a non-unionized employee might have a right of recall in the terms and conditions of his or her employment. However, these instances will be somewhat unusual. It will have to be demonstrated clearly that the right of recall in a non-unionized situation was formalized as part of the employment contract and not merely ad hoc, in order for the recall rights to be within the meaning of s. 67(1).

67(2) Clause (1)(b) does not apply if the employer and employee have agreed that the severance pay shall be paid in instalments under section 66.

Section 67(2) provides that, despite s. 67(1)(b), the provisions of s. 67 will not apply with respect to the severance entitlement where an employer and an employee have agreed to pay an employee severance pay in instalments under s. 66. See ESA Part XV, s. 66 for a detailed discussion of severance instalment plans under s. 66 of the Act. As such, an employee who agrees to accept severance pay by instalment will not be required to make an election as between the payment of his or her severance pay and retaining the right to recall, and the employer will not be required to pay the severance pay into trust.

However, s. 67 will apply where an instalment plan is in place because the Director has approved the payment of severance pay by instalments (as opposed to it being in place as a result of employee agreement). Accordingly, in that case, the employee must elect either to be paid the severance pay (by instalment) or retain his or her recall rights. If that employee also has the right to termination pay because of a lay-off of 35 weeks or more, the same election must be made with respect to both the termination pay and severance pay entitlements - see s. 67(4). Note that if that employee does not make an election, or elects not to be paid the termination and severance pay, the employee will not be deemed to have abandoned the right to be recalled under s. 67(5) even though the employer pays the employee severance pay by instalment under a plan approved by the Director, since the employee has not expressly elected to be paid the severance pay under s. 67(3).

Nature of Election - s. 67(3)

67(3) The employee may elect to be paid the termination pay or severance pay forthwith or to retain the right to be recalled.

This section is similar to the corresponding provisions (ss. 57(19) and 58(10)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

This section provides that an employee may choose to have termination pay or severance pay paid to them immediately, or instead may choose to retain the right to be recalled.

In Moore Packaging Corp. v Canadian Paperworkers Union, Local 1150 (1993), 34 LAC (4th) 293 (Ont Arb Bd), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, the arbitrator held that an employee must make an express election prior to receipt of the severance pay if he or she is to be deemed to have elected "to be paid the severance pay forthwith". The decision states that if there is no such express prior election and the employer sends the severance pay to the employee, the employee's subsequent cashing of the cheque may not, by itself, constitute an election to receive the severance pay forthwith within the meaning of the section. This is on the basis that the employee, in cashing such a cheque, may not have had the specific intent to elect to choose between severance pay and recall rights. From an employer's perspective, it would make sense, therefore, to attempt to ensure that the employee was given the opportunity to specifically choose between severance pay and recall rights sometime prior to the date for payment, and also to ensure that the employee fully understood the consequences of his or her choice vis-à-vis recall rights, prior to making such a choice.

Note, however, that this provision does not apply with respect to the employee's severance pay entitlement if the employee and employer have agreed to (as opposed to the Director approving) the payment of severance pay by instalment under s. 66 of the Act. In that event, s. 67(2) provides that the provisions of s. 67 (including s. 67(3)) do not apply with respect to the severance pay entitlement.

Consistency - s. 67(4)

67(4) An employee who is entitled to both termination pay and severance pay shall make the same election in respect of each.

This section is similar in part to the corresponding provisions (ss. 57(20) and 58(11)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 67(4) provides that if an employee is entitled to termination pay on or after 35 weeks of lay-off in a period of 52 consecutive weeks and to severance pay, the employee must make the same election with respect to both. Note, however, that this requirement does not apply if the employee and employer have agreed to (as opposed to the Director approving) the payment of severance pay by instalment under s. 66 of the Act. In that event, s. 67(2) provides that the provisions of s. 67 (including s. 67(4)) do not apply with respect to the severance pay entitlement.

Deemed Abandonment - s. 67(5)

67(5) An employee who elects to be paid shall be deemed to have abandoned the right to be recalled.

This section is similar in part to the corresponding provisions (ss. 57(20) and 58(11)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 67(5) provides that where an employee elects to be paid termination pay that became due because of a lay-off of 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks, or severance pay, he or she will be deemed to have abandoned his or her right to be recalled.

Note, however, that this provision does not apply if the employee and employer have agreed to (as opposed to the Director approving) the payment of severance pay by instalment under s. 66 of the Act. In that event, s. 67(2) provides that the provisions of s. 67 (including s. 67(5)) do not apply with respect to the severance pay entitlement.

Employee Not Represented By Trade Union - s. 67(6)

67(6) If an employee who is not represented by a trade union elects to retain the right to be recalled or fails to make an election, the employer shall pay the termination pay and severance pay to which the employee is entitled to the Director in trust.

This section is similar in part to the corresponding provisions (ss. 57(21) and 58(12)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 67(6) provides that where an employee who is not represented by a trade union is entitled to termination pay because of a lay-off of 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks and/or severance pay, and elects to retain the right to be recalled or makes no election, the employer must pay the termination and/or severance pay to the Director in trust.

Section 67(6) only applies where the employee is not represented by a trade union. For trust arrangements for employees who are represented by a trade union, refer to s. 67(7).

It should also be noted that the requirement to pay termination pay and severance pay to the Director in Trust does not apply if the employee and employer have agreed to (as opposed to the Director approving) the payment of severance pay by instalment under s. 66 of the Act. In that event, s. 67(2) provides that the provisions of s. 67 (including s. 67(6)) do not apply with respect to the severance pay entitlement.

Provision for the pay out of monies held in trust is made in ss. 67(8) and (9). Refer to the discussion in subsections (8) and (9) below.

Employee Represented By Trade Union - s. 67(7)

67(7) If an employee who is represented by a trade union elects to retain the right to be recalled or fails to make an election,

(a) the employer and the trade union shall attempt to negotiate an arrangement for holding the money in trust, and, if the negotiations are successful, the money shall be held in trust in accordance with the arrangement agreed upon; and

(b) if the trade union advises the Director and the employer in writing that efforts to negotiate such an arrangement have been unsuccessful, the employer shall pay the termination pay and severance pay to which the employee is entitled to the Director in trust.

This section is similar in part to the corresponding provisions (ss. 57(21) and 58(12)) of the former Employment Standards Act. The requirement that the employer and union attempt to negotiate a trust arrangement was introduced by the ESA 2000.

Section 67(7) provides that where an employee who is represented by a trade union is entitled to termination pay because of a lay-off of 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks and/or severance pay and elects to retain the right to be recalled, or fails to make an election, the employer and the trade union must attempt to negotiate, in good faith, an arrangement for holding the termination and/or severance pay in trust. Where the parties agree to an arrangement, the monies must be held in accordance with the arrangement. Where the parties cannot agree on an arrangement and the trade union advises the Director and the employer in writing that efforts have failed, the employer must pay the termination and/or severance pay to the Director in trust.

Where the parties either do not attempt to negotiate an agreement or the union does not notify the Director and the employer in writing that no agreement could be reached, there will not be an obligation for the employer to pay the monies to the Director and there will not be an obligation for the Director to hold the monies in trust.

It should be noted that this section only applies where an employee is represented by a trade union. For trust arrangements for employees who are not represented by a trade union, refer to s. 67(6).

Provision for the pay out of monies held in trust is made in ss. 67(8) and (9). Refer to the discussion in subsections (8) and (9) below.

Where Employee Accepts Recall - s. 67(8)

67(8) If the employee accepts employment made available under the right of recall, the amount held in trust shall be paid out of trust to the employer and the employee shall be deemed to have abandoned the right to termination pay and severance pay paid into trust.

Section 67(8) provides that where the employee accepts a recall to work, the monies held in trust must be paid out to the employer and the employee is deemed to have abandoned the right to termination and severance pay.

Subsection 67(8) deals only with the issue of what happens to the termination and severance pay that was paid into trust when an employee accepts a recall; neither it, nor any other provision in s. 67, has any bearing on what constitutes a termination within the meaning of s. 56 or what constitutes a severance within the meaning of s. 63. See the Court of Appeal decision in United Steel v National Steel Car Limited, 2013 ONCA 401 (CanLII), where the Court rejected the employer's argument that s. 67 means that an employee who accepts a recall cannot have any of the time spent on lay-off prior to the recall taken into account in determining whether there was a subsequent termination or severance. See ESA Part XV, s. 63(1) for further discussion of this case.

Employee Refuses to Return to Work

Sometimes situations will arise in which the employer recalls an employee who had elected to retain recall rights under s. 67 and the employee refuses to return to work. Because the employee's refusal occurs after the point at which the employee became entitled to termination pay or severance pay, the employee's refusal to accept the recall cannot disentitle him or her to that termination pay or severance pay. Specifically, none of the exemptions in ss. 2(1) or 9(1) of O Reg 288/01 apply to exempt such an employee from termination or severance pay to which he or she is already entitled. While paragraph 7 of s. 2(1) of O Reg 288/01 provides that an employee on a temporary lay-off is exempt from the termination provisions if he or she does not return to work when recalled, it does not apply to a refusal to return to work that occurs after the point at which the right to termination pay has crystallized. Further, there is no exemption from severance pay in O Reg 288/01 that corresponds to paragraph 7 of s. 2(1) of the regulation. Accordingly, an employee who has been recalled after his or her termination or severance entitlements have crystallized may refuse to return to work and then renounce his or her recall rights, in which case he or she will be entitled to receive any termination or severance pay held in trust in accordance with s. 67(9) - see the discussion below. Alternatively, an employee could refuse the recall but choose to retain the recall rights (if he or she did not lose them under the terms of the contract or collective agreement for having refused to return to work when recalled), in which case the money would continue to be held in trust. If the employee's refusal resulted in the automatic termination of recall rights under the terms of the contract or collective agreement, then the result would be the same as if the recall rights had expired, i.e., the money would be paid out of trust to the employee.

Period of Employment Calculation When Termination After Recall

Situations may also arise in which a long service employee who had been laid off for 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks elects to retain recall rights and then, after more than 13 weeks elapse, accepts a recall, only to have the employer terminate the employee's employment two weeks later. How is the employee's length of service calculated for purposes of notice of termination in this case? Because of the "period of employment" rule in s. 8 of O Reg 288/01, only the last two weeks of employment would be considered in calculating the employee's period of employment. As a result, the employee would be entitled to one week's notice or one week's termination pay. While the employee's period of employment is only two weeks, the employee was "continuously employed for three months or more" within the meaning of s. 54 and so is entitled to notice or termination pay in accordance with s. 57(a).

Recall Rights Expired or Renounced - s. 67(9)

67(9) If the employee renounces the right to be recalled or the right expires, the amount held in trust shall be paid to the employee and, if the right to be recalled had not expired, the employee shall be deemed to have abandoned the right.

This section is similar in part to the corresponding provisions (ss. 57(21) and 58(12)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 67(9) provides that where the employee renounces the right to be recalled or the rights expire, the monies held in trust must be paid out to the employee and the employee is deemed to have abandoned the right to be recalled.

Although the section does not identify a specific person as being responsible for making this payment, it is implied that the person who holds the monies in trust is required to make the payment. It may be the Director or another person pursuant to the employer-trade union arrangement who holds the monies in trust.

ESA Part XV.1 Non-Compete Agreements

Part XV.1 of the ESA prohibits, with certain exceptions, employers from entering into employment contracts or other agreements with an employee that are, or that include, a non-compete agreement.

Part XV.1 was added to the ESA 2000 by the Working for Workers Act, 2021 (WFWA). Although the WFWA received Royal Assent on December 2, 2021, Part XV.1 was deemed to have come into force on October 25, 2021 (which was the day that the WFWA was introduced in the Legislature).

As such, Part XV.1 prohibited employers from entering into non-compete agreements starting October 25, 2021, and any such agreements that were entered into on or after October 25, 2021 are void.

Part XV.1 does not prohibit or void non-compete agreements that were entered into prior to October 25, 2021.

Before the WFWA, disputes about enforceability of non-compete clauses were resolved through the courts. Nothing in Part XV.1 prohibits employees and employers from resolving disputes about the enforceability of non-compete agreements in the courts, regardless of when they were entered into, if they choose to do so.

Definitions - s. 67.1

67.1 In this Part, and for the purposes of Part XVIII (Reprisal), section 74.12, Part XXI (Who Enforces this Act and What They Can Do), Part XXII (Complaints and Enforcement), Part XXIII (Reviews by the Board), Part XXIV (Collection), Part XXV (Offences and Prosecutions), Part XXVI (Miscellaneous Evidentiary Provisions) and Part XXVII (Regulations) insofar as matters concerning this Part are concerned,

"employee" means an employee as defined in subsection 1 (1) and includes an applicant for employment;

"employer" means an employer as defined in subsection 1 (1) and includes a prospective employer;

"non-compete agreement" means an agreement, or any part of an agreement, between an employer and an employee that prohibits the employee from engaging in any business, work, occupation, profession, project or other activity that is in competition with the employer's business after the employment relationship between the employee and the employer ends.

Section 67.1 provides enhanced definitions of "employee" and "employer", and a definition of "non-compete agreement", which apply for the purposes of Part XV.1 and the following provisions of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 insofar as matters concerning this Part are concerned:

- Part XVII: Reprisal
- Section 74.12: Reprisal by Client
- Part XXI: Who Enforces this Act and What They Can Do
- Part XXII: Complaints and Enforcement
- Part XXIII: Reviews by the Board

- Part XXIV: Collection
- Part XXV: Offences and Prosecutions
- Part XXVI: Miscellaneous Evidentiary Provisions
- Part XXVII: Regulations

Employee

“employee” means an employee as defined in subsection 1 (1) and includes an applicant for employment;

The definition of "employee" in s. 67.1 expands the definition provided in s. 1(1) of the Act. Section 1(1) defines "employee" as follows:

1(1) "employee" includes,

(a) a person, including an officer of a corporation, who performs work for an employer for wages,

(b) a person who supplies services to an employer for wages,

(c) a person who receives training from a person who is an employer, if the skill in which the person is being trained is a skill used by the employer’s employees, or

(d) a person who is a homeworker,

and includes a person who was an employee.

For matters concerning the Non-Compete Agreements Part of the Act, the definition of "employee" is expanded to include an applicant for employment.

Employer

“employer” means an employer as defined in subsection 1 (1) and includes a prospective employer;

The definition of "employer" in s. 67.1 expands the definition in s. 1(1) of the Act. Section 1(1) defines "employer" as follows:

1(1) "employer" includes,

(a) an owner, proprietor, manager, superintendent, overseer, receiver or trustee of an activity, business, work, trade, occupation, profession, project or undertaking who has control or direction of, or is directly or indirectly responsible for, the employment of a person in it, and

(b) any persons treated as one employer under section 4, and includes a person who was an employer.

For matters concerning the Non-Compete Agreements Part of the Act, the definition of "employer" is expanded to include a prospective employer.

Non-compete agreement

“non-compete agreement” means an agreement, or any part of an agreement, between an employer and an employee that prohibits the employee from engaging in any business, work, occupation, profession, project or other activity that is in competition with the employer’s business after the employment relationship between the employee and the employer ends.

Subsection 67.2(1) prohibits employers, with certain exceptions, from entering into employment contracts or other agreements that are, or that include, a “non-compete agreement”.

“Non-compete agreement” is defined to mean an agreement, or any part of an agreement, between an employer and an employee (which includes a prospective employer and an applicant for employment as per the other definitions in s. 67.1), that prohibits the employee from engaging in any business, work, occupation, profession, project or other activity that is in competition with the employer’s business after the employment relationship between the employee and the employer ends.

“Prohibits”

An agreement, or part of an agreement, is a “non-compete agreement” only if it “prohibits” the employee from engaging in any business, work, occupation, profession, project or other activity that is in competition with the employer’s business after the end of the employment relationship.

It is Program policy that an agreement, or part of an agreement, is a “non-compete agreement” only if it explicitly prohibits the employee from competing.

For example, an employer and an employee enter into an agreement, or part of an agreement, that requires the employee to pay the employer substantial fees to reimburse the employer for training or other costs if the employee quits. That agreement (or part of an agreement) does not explicitly prohibit the employee from competing and as such is not a “non-compete agreement”.

As another example, an agreement, or part of an agreement, that prohibits employees from soliciting the employer’s customers is not a “non-compete agreement”. (See below for more information on “non-solicit” clauses.) It is Program policy that a non-solicit clause will not be considered to be a “non-compete agreement” even if for practical purposes the circumstances (e.g. industry or geography) are such that the non-solicit clause renders it imposible for an employee to start a competing business or to work for a competitor.

For example, an employee is employed to sell a very specialized medical instrument where every potential purchaser of the product is a client of the current employer. The employee and employer entered into a non-solicit agreement that prohibits the employee from contacting any firm that was a customer of the employer at any time during the employee’s employment with the employer for two years after the end of the employment relationship. It is Program policy that this agreement is not a “non-compete agreement” because it does not explicitly prohibit the employee from engaging in any business (work, etc.) that is in competition with the employer’s business, even though for practical purposes the non-solicit clause renders it impossible for the employee to start the employee’s own business that would compete with the employer. (An employee who believes a non-solicit clause is unreasonable may choose to challenge its enforceability in the courts.)

Whether or Not Prohibition is Reasonable is Irrelevant

Disputes between employers and employees about the enforceability of non-compete agreements have historically been adjudicated by the courts, which generally have ruled that such agreements are not enforceable unless they are reasonable and in the public interest. An agreement, or part of an agreement, that fits the s. 67.1 definition of “non-compete agreement” will be considered to be a non-compete agreement whether or not it is reasonable or in the public interest.

Whether or Not Prohibition is Time Limited is Irrelevant

An agreement, or part of an agreement, that prohibits an employee from engaging in any business (work, etc.) that competes with the employer after the end of the employment relationship may be a “non-compete agreement” whether or not the prohibition is time-limited.

For example, an agreement that prohibits the employee from engaging in work that is in competition with the employer’s business for six months after the employment relationship ends is a “non-compete agreement”. An agreement that has no expiry date on the prohibition is also a “non-compete agreement”.

Whether or Not Prohibition is Geographically Restricted is Irrelevant

An agreement, or part of an agreement, that prohibits an employee from engaging in any business (work, etc.) that competes with the employer after the end of the employment relationship may be a “non-compete agreement” whether or not the prohibition is geographically restricted.

For example, an agreement that prohibits the employee from engaging in work that is in competition with the employer’s business after the employment relationships ends within 100 km of the employer’s workplace is a “non-compete agreement”. An agreement that has no geographic restriction on the prohibition is also a “non-compete agreement”.

Non-Compete vs Non-Solicit and Non-Disclosure

Non-compete, non-solicit and non-disclosure clauses or agreements are three main types of what are called restrictrive covenant clauses in employment contracts. A restrictive covenant prevents someone from doing something or from using property in a certain way.

A non-solicit (or non-solicitation) clause or agreement is a provision in an employment contract that prohibits an employee from soliciting – i.e. actively pursuing, sometimes referred to as “poaching” - clients, customers, vendors, business partners or other employees of their employer, during the employment relationship and/or after the employment relationship has ended. Often, but not always, the non-solict provision applies for a specified period after the end of the employment relationship, rather than indefinitely.

A non-disclosure clause or agreement is a provision in an employment contract that prohibits an employee from disclosing proprietary or confidential company information and processes.

The definition of “non-compete agreement” in s. 67.1 does not capture non-solicit agreements or non-disclosure agreements. As such, the prohibition in s. 67.2 with respect to entering into non-compete agreements does not apply to agreements that are non-solicit or non-disclosure agreements.

Some employers and employees may not use precise terminology when drafting their agreements and may use “non-compete” / “compete” incorrectly or interchangeably with “non-solicit” / “solicit” or “non-disclosure”. When determining whether an agreement falls within the definition of a non-compete agreement, the Program looks at what activities the agreement prohibits. For example, an employment contract may have a heading that says “Non-Competition” in relation to a clause that says, “The employee will not, for two years after the end of the employment relationship contact any person, firm, corporation, or governmental agency who was a customer of the employer at any time during the employee’s employment with the employer.” Despite the heading “Non-Competition”, the substance of the clause is about soliciting rather than competing and as such does not fall into the definition of “non-compete agreement”.

Prohibition - s. 67.2(1), (2)

67.2 (1) No employer shall enter into an employment contract or other agreement with an employee that is, or that includes, a non-compete agreement.

(2) For greater certainty, subsection 5 (1) applies and if an employer contravenes subsection (1), the non-compete agreement is void.

Subsection 67.2(1) prohibits employers from entering into an employment contract or any other agreement with an employee that includes a non-compete agreement, or that is a non-compete agreement. "Non-compete agreement" is defined in s. 67.1

For greater certainty, ss. 67.2(2) reinforces that the effect of ss. 5(1) of the ESA (the "no contracting out" provision) is to void any non-compete agreement that was entered into in contravention of ss. 67.2(1).

These provisions must be read in conjunction with ss. 67.2(3) and (4), which establish exceptions to the prohibition.

Subsections 67.2(1) and (2) only prohibit and void the parts/words of an employment contract or other agreement that fit within the definition of "non-compete agreement". This means, for example, that where an employment contract contains both a prohibited non-compete agreement and a non-solicit clause that is not prohibited, only the non-compete agreement is prohibited and voided. (See the definition of "non-compete agreement" in s. 67.1 for a discussion of these terms.)

These subsections, along with the rest of Part XV.1, were added to the ESA by the Working for Workers Act, 2021 (WFWA). Although the WFWA received Royal Assent on December 2, 2021, Part XV.1 was deemed to have come into force on October 25, 2021, which was the day that the WFWA was introduced in the Legislature. As such, employers were prohibited from entering into non-compete agreements starting October 25, 2021, and any such agreements that were entered into on or after October 25, 2021 are void. Non-compete agreements that were entered into prior to October 25, 2021 are not prohibited, and are not voided, by the ESA.

"Employee" and "Employer"

Section 67.1 contains expanded definitions of "employee" and "employer" that apply for the purposes of Part XV.1. The expanded definitions include an applicant for employment and a prospective employer.

As such, the prohibition against entering into non-compete agreements applies even before the employment relationship begins, and if a prospective employer and an applicant for employment enter into a non-compete agreement, it is void.

The definition of "employee" also includes "a person who was an employee". As such, the prohibition against entering into non-compete agreements continues to apply after the employment relationship ends and any non-compete agreement entered after the end of the employment relationship is also void.

Enforcement and Remedies

Disputes between employers and employees about the enforceability of non-compete agreements have historically been adjudicated by the courts, which generally have ruled that such agreements are not enforceable unless they are reasonable and in the public interest.

Part XV.1 does not prohibit employees and employers from resolving disputes about the enforceability of non-compete agreements in the courts. (See s. 8 of the ESA.) Although Part XV.1 creates, with two exceptions, a prohibition against entering into all non-compete agreements on or after October 25, 2021 – regardless of whether a court would have ruled the agreement to be enforceable - parties may wish to go to court to resolve issues about, for example, the enforceability of non-compete agreements that were entered into prior to October 25, 2021, or if there is a dispute as to whether one of the exceptions applies or whether an agreement entered into on or after October 25, 2021 fits within the definition of a prohibited "non-compete agreement".

With respect to the Employment Standards Program, claimants may file a claim alleging, for example:

- that their employer entered into a prohibited non-compete agreement with them, or
- that they were reprised against because they refused to enter into a non-compete agreement, asked their employer to comply with Part XV.1, or engaged in any other protected activity under s. 74.

Because the definition of "employee" in s. 67.1 includes applicants for employment and former employees, the allegations may be made with respect to events that occur before the employment relationship is entered into, during it, or after it ends.

Where an employer is found to have contravened s. 67.2, an Employment Standards Officer may:

- issue a compliance order pursuant to s. 108,
- issue a notice of contravention pursuant to s. 113, and the prescribed penalties in Reg. 289/01 would apply, and/or
- where the officer finds that the employer committed a reprisal, issue an order to compensate and/or an order to reinstate pursuant to s. 104. Note that there is no authority to issue an Order to Hire where the reprisal consisted of the prospective employer refusing to hire the applicant employee.

The officer also has the authority to initiate a prosecution under the Provincial Offences Act (POA). (Note: at the time of writing, there was no authority to issue Part I "tickets" under the POA for contraventions of s. 67.2.)

Exception – sale, etc., of business - s. 67.2(3)

67.2 (3) If there is a sale of a business or a part of a business and, as a part of the sale, the purchaser and seller enter into an agreement that prohibits the seller from engaging in any business, work, occupation, profession, project or other activity that is in competition with the purchaser's business after the sale and, immediately following the sale, the seller becomes an employee of the purchaser, subsection (1) does not apply with respect to that agreement.

Subsection 67.2(3) establishes one of the exceptions to the prohibition against entering into non-compete agreements.

It establishes that where:

1. there is a sale of a business or a part of a businesss, and
2. immediately following the sale the seller becomes an employee of the purchaser, and
3. as part of the sale the purchaser and seller enter into an agreement that prohibits the seller from engaging in any business, work, occupation, profession, project or other activity that is in competition with the purchaser's business after the sale, then the prohibition against entering into non-compete agreements per ss. 67.2(1) does not apply to that agreement.

"Sale" is defined in ss. 67.2(5) to include a lease.

Because of the second condition – that the seller becomes an employee of the purchaser – this exception only applies where the seller is an individual or individuals – i.e. where the business that is sold operated as a sole proprietorship or a partnership. As such, the exception in s. 67.2(3) does not apply in the context of the sale of a corporation and, as such, the purchaser is prohibited by ss. 67.2(1) from entering into non-compete agreements with any employees of the seller that it employs (subject to the "executive" exception in ss. 67.2(4)).

- (Note: the definition of "non-compete agreement" in s. 67.1 applies only to agreements between employees and employers. Agreements prohibiting competition in the context of a sale of a business may be characterized by the parties as agreements between employers and employees, or they may be characterized as something else, such as being part of the sales agreement between the seller and the purchaser. For Part XV.1 purposes, it does not matter how that contractual term is characterized, as the agreement is not prohibited by the ESA in either situation.
    - If it is an agreement between an employee and an employer, it would fit into the definition of "non-compete agreement" but it would not be prohibited by ss. 67.2(1) since the exception in ss. 67.2(3) would apply.
    - If it is any other type of agreement, such as part of the sales agreement between the purchaser and the seller, it would not fit into the definition of "non-compete agreement" and would not be prohibited by ss. 67.2(1).

Exception - executives - s. 67.2(4)

67.2 (4) Subsection (1) does not apply with respect to an employee who is an executive.

Subsection 67.2(4) establishes another exception to the prohibition against entering into non-compete agreements. It provides that the prohibition in ss. 67.2(1) does not apply with respect to an employee who is an executive.

"Executive" is defined in s. 67.2(5). See below for information.

67.2 (5) In this section,

"executive" means any person who holds the office of chief executive officer, president, chief administrative officer, chief operating officer, chief financial officer, chief information officer, chief legal officer, chief human resources officer or chief corporate development officer, or holds any other chief executive position;

"sale" includes a lease.

Subsection 67.2(5) establishes definitions for the terms “executive” and “sale” in s. 67.2. These terms are used in the context of the exceptions set out in ss. (3) and (4) to the prohibition against entering into non-compete agreements.

“Executive” is defined to mean any person who holds the office of chief executive officer, president, chief administrative officer, chief operating officer, chief financial officer, chief information officer, chief legal officer, chief human resources officer or chief corporate development officer, or holds any other chief executive position]

Accordingly, the prohibition in s. 67.2(1) against employers entering into non-compete agreements does not apply with respect to any employee who holds any of the listed offices, or any other chief executive position.

When determining whether the exception to the prohibiton applies, it is the job title held by the employee that matters. The Program does not generally look behind the title and assess whether the employee’s duties appear to be at an executive level.

The exception to the prohibition will apply if the employee holds one of the listed job titles, even if they simultaneously hold other job titles that are not listed.

“Sale” is defined to include a lease. Note that the definition of “sale” for purposes of s. 67.2 is narrower from the definition of “sells” and “sale” in s. 9 of the Act (in Part IV, Continuity of Employment), where it includes a lease, a transfer and a disposition in any other manner.

ESA Part XVI - Lie Detectors

The intent of Part XVI of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 is to prohibit the use of lie detectors by employers and prospective employers for personnel screening purposes. To this end, no one can require, request, enable or influence, indirectly or directly, an employee to submit to a lie detector test.

The Honourable Russell H. Ramsay, then Minister of Labour, on October 25, 1983, in his remarks upon the second reading of Bill 86, Employment Standards Amendment Act, 1983, SO 1983, c 55, provided the following reasons for introducing this legislation:

. . . The use of lie detectors in the work place is unacceptable to the government. They constitute an unwarranted invasion of privacy. They are of questionable accuracy and reliability. They engender a sense of fear in the work place that is destructive to good employer-employee relations.

ESA Part XVI Section 68 - Definitions

68 In this Part, and for purposes of Part XVIII (Reprisal), Part XXI (Who Enforces this Act and What They Can Do), Part XXII (Complaints and Enforcement), Part XXIII (Reviews by the Board), Part XXIV (Collection), Part XXV (Offences and Prosecutions), Part XXVI (Miscellaneous Evidentiary Provisions), Part XXVII (Regulations) and Part XXVIII (Transition, Amendment, Repeals, Commencement and Short Title), insofar as matters concerning this Part are concerned,

"employee" means an employee as defined in subsection 1(1) and includes an applicant for employment, a police officer and a person who is an applicant to be a police officer;

"employer" means an employer as defined in subsection 1(1) and includes a prospective employer and a police governing body;

"lie detector test" means an analysis, examination, interrogation or test that is taken or performed,

(a) by means of or in conjunction with a device, instrument or machine, and

(b) for the purpose of assessing or purporting to assess the credibility of a person.

Section 68 was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009 to incorporate a reference to s. 74.12, which prohibits clients of temporary help agencies from reprising against assignment employees of temporary help agencies.

This provision is similar to s. 46 of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 68 sets out enhanced definitions of "employee" and "employer" and the definition of "lie detector test", which apply for the purposes of the following provisions of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, including Part XVI, as far as matters concerning this Part are concerned:

- Part XVII: Reprisal
- Section 74.12: Reprisal by client
- Part XXI: Who Enforces this Act and What The Can Do
- Part XXII: Complaints and Enforcement

- Part XXIII: Reviews by the Board
- Part XXIV: Collection
- Part XXV: Offences and Prosecutions
- Part XXVI: Miscellaneous Evidentiary Provisions
- Part XXVII: Regulations
- Part XXVIII: Transition

Employee

"employee" means an employee as defined in subsection 1(1) and includes an applicant for employment, a police officer and a person who is an applicant to be a police officer;

The definition of "employee" in s. 68 expands the definition provided in s. 1(1) of the Act. Section 1(1) defines "employee" as follows:

1(1) "employee" includes,

(a) a person, including an officer of a corporation, who performs work for an employer for wages,

(b) a person who supplies services to an employer for wages,

(c) a person who receives training from a person who is an employer, as set out in subsection (2), or

(d) a person who is a homeworker,

and includes a person who was an employee.

"person" includes a trade union.

In s. 68, for matters concerning "lie detectors", the definition of "employee" is expanded to include an applicant for employment, a police officer and a person applying to become a police officer.

Employer

"employer" means an employer as defined in subsection 1(1) and includes a prospective employer and a police governing body;

The definition of "employer" in s. 68 similarly expands the definition in s. 1(1) of the Act. Section 1(1) defines "employer" as follows:

1(1) "employer" includes,

(a) an owner, proprietor, manager, superintendent, overseer, receiver or trustee of an activity, business, work, trade, occupation, profession, project or undertaking who has control or direction of, or is directly or indirectly responsible for, the employment of a person in it, and

(b) any persons treated as one employer under section 4, and includes a person who was an employer.

"person" includes a trade union.

In s. 68, for matters concerning "lie detectors", the definition of "employer" is expanded to include a prospective employer as well as a police governing body (i.e., Police Services Board).

Lie Detector Test

"lie detector test" means an analysis, examination, interrogation or test that is taken or performed,

(a) by means of or in conjunction with a device, instrument or machine, and

(b) for the purpose of assessing or purporting to assess the credibility of a person.

"Lie detector" is a popular rather than scientific term. No machine literally "detects lies." The definition in this provision encompasses any type of test taken or performed in conjunction with any type of device, instrument or machine, and for the purpose of assessing or purporting to assess the credibility of a person.

A "lie detector" commonly refers to a standard field polygraph that monitors several physiological variables by means of separate pens independently recording certain measures on a moving paper chart. The machine is connected to four "involuntary" or "autonomic" response measures and records changes in those measures. The machine does not measure lying. Rather, it indicates variations in physiological responses that are, in theory at least, not subject to the control of the person tested (Royal Commission into Metropolitan Toronto Police Practices, Report of the Royal Commission into Metropolitan Toronto Police Practices (Toronto: The Commission, 1976) at c XXIII). A "lie detector" may also include a "Psychological Stress Evaluator", that is, a voice stress analyser. This instrument is designed to register and measure changes in an individual's stress levels as reflected in his or her voice.

The definition of "lie detector test" does not include surveillance devices that are used to observe employees without assessing or purporting to assess their credibility. In other words, an employer is not precluded from testing an employee by observing and recording his or her actions. This is so, even if it involves the surreptitious observation of an employee by means of a device, since it is the employee's actions that are being observed, rather than his or her credibility in relation to statements the employee makes about his or her actions.

69 Subject to section 71, an employee has a right not to,

(a) take a lie detector test;

(b) be asked to take a lie detector test; or

(c) be required to take a lie detector test

This provision is similar to s. 47(1) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 69 establishes that employees, as defined under s. 68 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, have a right not to take, be asked to take or be required to take a lie detector test.

The only exception to the employee's right not to be asked to take a lie detector test is provided by s. 71 of this Part, which states that a person may be asked by a police officer to take, consent to take and take a lie detector test administered on behalf of or by a member of a police force in Ontario during an investigation of an offence. However, nothing in s. 71 compels an employee to take a lie detector test administered by or on behalf of a police force.

Prohibition: Testing - s. 70(1)

70(1) Subject to section 71, no person shall, directly or indirectly, require, request, enable or influence an employee to take a lie detector test.

This provision is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 47(2)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 70(1) prohibits any person (thus including an employer or any third party) from requiring, requesting, enabling or influencing, directly or indirectly, an employee to take a lie detector test. It is thus clear that a security service, personnel agency or any other third party is equally prohibited from requesting or requiring, whether on its own behalf or on behalf of an employer, an employee to submit to a lie detector test.

According to this section, no person may even request an employee to take a test (subject only to s. 71) since such a request would endanger the employee's statutory right not to take a test. A refusal by the employee might put his or her employment at risk, so the employee's consent might not be "free consent". As a result, an employee's right not to take a test could be compromised.

In addition, by prohibiting any person from enabling or influencing, directly or indirectly, an employee to take a lie detector test, this section implicitly prohibits any person from administering a lie detector test where the employee is unaware that he or she is being examined. For example, an employer could not use a voice stress analyser during a telephone conversation with the employee or on a tape recording of the employee's voice.

Prohibition: Disclosure - s. 70(2)

70(2) No person shall disclose to an employer that an employee has taken a lie detector test or disclose to an employer the results of a lie detector test taken by an employee.

This provision is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 47(3)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 70(2) protects the employee by prohibiting any person, including the employee, from informing an employer that the employee has taken a test, and from disclosing to an employer the test results.

ESA Part XVI Section 71 - Consent to Test by Police

71 This Part shall not be interpreted to prevent a person from being asked by a police officer to take, consenting to take and taking a lie detector test administered on behalf of a police force in Ontario or by a member of a police force in Ontario in the course of the investigation of an offence.

This provision is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 49) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 71 ensures that s. 70(1) will not operate to preclude the voluntary submission by an employee (or any other person) to a lie detector test administered by, or on behalf of, a police force in Ontario in the course of the investigation of an offence

Section 71 allows a police officer to ask a person to take a lie detector test administered on behalf of a police force in Ontario or by a member of a police force in Ontario in the course of an investigation of an offence. Although the test may be administered by any other person (including an employer) on behalf of the police, the request to take the test must be made by a police officer. However, nothing in s. 71 compels an employee to take a lie detector test administered by or on behalf of a police force.

In response to the claim that the equivalent section under the former Employment Standards Act, s. 49, is inconsistent with the other provisions, former Attorney General Roy McMurtry, based on the 1976 Report of the Royal Commission into the Metropolitan Police Practices, stated that:

. . . Polygraphs are not used by the police forces in Ontario as a random screening device. Instead, they are used as only one aspect of an investigation which has focused on one individual, or at most a very small number of individuals. As well, it is sometimes used to assist in determining the credibility of an individual who claims to have been the victim of a specific offence. Such polygraph tests do not result in a sanction, but instead are only one of the factors taken into account in deciding whether to lay charges in a particular situation. The ultimate decision on such charges is made by a court which does not have access to the polygraph results, and accordingly, does not take them into account.

Note: courts in Canada have largely refused to admit polygraph evidence. However, the Quebec Court of Appeal ruled in R c Béland, [1984] CA 443 (QCCA) that the results of a polygraph test are admissible as relevant evidence. This decision was appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada and its decision in R c Béland, [1987] 2 SCR 398, 1987 CanLII 27 (SCC) was released in 1987. The majority of the justices essentially ruled out the use of the lie detector test results as evidence in court. Justice McIntyre stated in the Supreme Court decision supported by five of the seven judges who heard the case: ". . .the polygraph has no place in the judicial process where it is employed as a tool to determine or to test the credibility of witnesses."

ESA Part XVII - Retail Business Establishments

The provisions found in Part XVII (Retail Business Establishments) of the *Employment Standards Act, 20*00 set out the rights of employees working in most retail business establishments to refuse to work on holidays and Sundays.

ESA Part XVII Section 72 - Application of Part

Application - s. 72(1)

72(1) This Part applies with respect to,

(a) retail business establishments as defined in subsection 1(1) of the Retail Business Holidays Act;

(b) employees employed to work in those establishments; and

(c) employers of those employees.

Section 72(1) is similar to s. 50(1) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 72(1) provides that the application of Part XVII is limited to retail business establishments as defined in the Retail Business Holidays Act, RSO 1990, c R.30 ("RBHA"), employees who work in these establishments, and employers of these employees. However, s. 72(1) must be read subject to the exemptions in s. 72(2).

"Retail business establishment" is defined in the RBHA in s. 1(1) as follows:

1(1) "retail business" means the selling or offering for sale of goods or services by retail;

"retail business establishment" means the premises where a retail business is carried on.

An exhaustive list of what constitutes retail business establishments could not possibly be created, as many types of businesses are covered: clothing stores, department stores, supermarkets, pharmacies, laundromats, gas stations, car rental agencies, to name a few. In each case, a determination must be made: are goods or services being sold or offered for sale by retail?

The employees in those retail business establishments described in s. 72(1) - and not exempted under s. 72(2) - will have rights to refuse Sunday and holiday work, even if they are employed in businesses that are allowed to open on holidays under the exemptions in s. 3 of the RBHA, under tourism exemption by-laws prescribed under the RBHA, and employees in stores that open illegally on a holiday, in contravention of the RBHA.

All such employees are covered, both full-time and part-time, including non-sales workers such as cleaners, managers and security guards.

Although supervisors and managers may be excluded from Part VII's Hours of Work provisions by virtue of s. 4(1)(b) of O Reg 285/01 (Exemptions, Special Rules and Establishment of Minimum Wage), this exclusion does not mean that they can be required to work on a Sunday or holiday. If they refuse to work on a Sunday or holiday, then they can only be required to work during the remaining days of the week, although the maximum number of hours to be worked on those days is not governed by the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Security guards are often employed by a security service, which then assigns them to a retail business establishment. Such employees also have the right to refuse to work as this Part applies to "employees . . . in . . . [retail business] establishments".

A shopping mall is a "retail business establishment". Therefore, its employees also have the rights set out in this Part; such employees include the cleaning staff, security guards who patrol the common areas of the mall, the people at the coat check and gift-wrapping services, and the person who works in the information booth.

When a store is closed, it is still a "retail business establishment" even though it is not selling goods or services to the public at that particular time; a retail business establishment is a "retail business establishment" all the time, whether open or closed. Therefore, this Part will apply and an employee may avail himself or herself of the right to refuse to work if asked to do so when the store is closed: for example, if the employer wants to take inventory or reorganize the store.

Exception - s. 72(2)

72(2) This Part does not apply with respect to retail business establishments in which the primary retail business is one that,

(a) sells prepared meals;

(b) rents living accommodations;

(c) is open to the public for educational, recreational or amusement purposes; or

(d) sells goods or services incidental to a business described in clause (a), (b) or (c) and is located in the same premises as that business.

Section 72(2) is virtually identical to s. 50(2) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 72(2) describes hospitality-industry businesses, which are exempt from the provisions of this Part as follows:

1. Sells prepared meals - s. 72(2)(a)

Such businesses include restaurants, cafeterias and cafés.

2. Rents living accommodations - s. 72(2)(b)

Such businesses include hotels, motels, motor lodges, inns, and tourist resorts and camps.

2. Is open to the public for educational, recreational or amusement purposes - s. 72(2)(c)

Such businesses include museums, art galleries, sports stadiums and arenas, video arcades, theatres, movie theatres, zoos, amusement parks, bars, taverns and nightclubs.

3. Sells goods or services incidental to a business described in clause (a), (b) or (c) and that is located in the same premises as the business - s. 72(2)(d)

Employees of a business that merely sells goods or services are usually not exempt from this Part. However, if the business selling goods or services is incidental to one of the enumerated businesses in ss. 72(2)(a), (b) or (c), and is located in the same premises as that business, s. 72(2)(d) exempts its employees. Such businesses would include a gift shop in a museum, or a souvenir store in a hotel lobby or a sports stadium.

With the exception of s. 72(2)(d), the exemptions in s. 72(2) only apply to establishments whose primary retail business is one of those enumerated. Thus, for example, employees at a cafeteria in a department store, or the counter in a supermarket that sells ready-to-eat meals, would not be exempted as the primary business of the department store or the supermarket is not the sale of prepared meals. Such employees would still enjoy the rights prescribed by this Part.

The hospitality industry is exempted because of the nature of the industry. The hospitality industry is one of the corner-stones of the provincial economy, and it has been identified as having special needs that require business operations to continue throughout the week.

ESA Part XVII Section 73 - Right to Refuse Work

Right to Refuse Work - s. 73(1)

73(1) An employee may refuse to work on a public holiday or a day declared by proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor to be a holiday for the purposes of the Retail Business Holidays Act.

Section 73(1) is similar in effect to s. 50.2(l)(b) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 73(1) provides that employees who work in retail business establishments covered under Part XVII have the right to refuse to work on public holidays as listed in s. 1 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 (including Family Day prescribed by s. 1.1 of O Reg 285/01 as a public holiday) and on any day declared by the Lieutenant Governor to be a holiday for the purposes of the Retail Business Holidays Act, RSO 1990, c R.30. At the time of writing, no other holiday had been proclaimed by the Lieutenant Governor.

An employee does not have to give any reason for refusing to work on a holiday.

Employers who are permitted to open on public holidays cannot avoid the application of s. 73(1) through hiring practices for new employees that include stipulations or understandings that public holidays are regular days of work; once hired, the employee's right to refuse to work on a public holiday is absolute. Note that as the provision applies only to persons already working at an establishment, i.e., because it applies to "employees", a person cannot make a complaint under the Act if he or she has not been hired because of a refusal to work on holidays. However, such a person may have legitimate grounds for a complaint under the Human Rights Code, RSO 1990, c H.19 and should be referred to the Ontario Human Rights Commission.

An issue has arisen as to whether an employee who has given up the right to refuse Sunday work (pursuant to s. 10 of O Reg 285/01 - see the discussion at O Reg 285/01 s. 10) has by doing so also given up the right to refuse to work on a public holiday where the public holiday falls on a Sunday. It is Program policy that the answer to this question is no. The right to refuse Sunday work and the right to refuse work on public holidays are two separate rights, although they may sometimes overlap. An employee may give up the right to refuse Sunday work, but the employee continues to have the right to refuse work on any public holiday. Accordingly, an employee who gave up the right to refuse Sunday work will have the right to refuse to work on a public holiday where the public holiday falls on a Sunday.

Beyond the s. 73 rights to refuse work on Sundays and holidays, there is no general right under the Act of an employee to refuse to work on a particular day. However, if an employee refuses to work any other day because of bona fide religious beliefs, for example, he or she may have a complaint under the Human Rights Code. If such is the case, the employee should be referred to the Human Rights Commission.

Same - s. 73(2)

73(2) An employee may refuse to work on a Sunday.

Section 73(2) is similar in effect to s. 50.2(l)(a) of the former Employment Standards Act in permitting retail employees to refuse Sunday work. However, the right to refuse Sunday work under the former Act was absolute, whereas the right to refuse Sunday work in s. 73(2) of the ESA 2000 is subject to the exception set out in s. 10 of O Reg 285/01 as follows:

10(1) Despite section 73 of the Act, an employee in a retail business establishment shall not refuse to work on a Sunday if he or she agreed, at the time of being hired, to work on Sundays.

10(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to an employee who declines to work on a Sunday for reasons of religious belief or religious observance.

10(3) The employer shall not make an employee's agreement to work on Sundays a condition of being hired if the condition would be contrary to section 11 of the Human Rights Code.

Section 10(1) of O Reg 285/01 states that even though retail employees have the right to refuse to work on Sundays under s. 73(2) of the Act, an employee loses this right if he or she had agreed to work on Sundays at the time he or she was hired by an employer. In accordance with s. 1(3) of the ESA 2000, an agreement made at the time of hiring to work on Sundays must be in writing. The exception created by s. 10(1) only applies to such agreements made on or after September 4, 2001 (the date the ESA, 2000 came into effect). Sunday work agreements made prior to the date of proclamation of the ESA 2000, will not be affected by s. 10(1) of O Reg 285/01.

An employee who is hired on or after September 4, 2001, who did not enter into an agreement at the time of hire to work on Sundays, will be able to decline work on Sundays. In addition, the fact that an employee establishes a pattern of working all, many or few Sundays does not compromise his or her right to refuse to work if there was no agreement to work Sundays made at the time of hiring.

Under s. 10(2) of O Reg 285/01, it is possible for an employee hired on or after September 4, 2001 to enter into an agreement at the time of hiring and yet subsequently refuse to work Sundays for religious reasons, provided the employee gives the appropriate 48 hours' notice before the commencement of each Sunday shift. Further information on the notice provisions is contained in the discussion of s. 73(3) below.

Section 10(3) of O Reg 285/01 prohibits an employer from making an agreement to work Sundays a prerequisite to hiring an employee where this requirement would be contrary to the "adverse effect" discrimination provisions contained in s. 11 of the Human Rights Code. "Adverse effect" or constructive discrimination can occur when a workplace practice unintentionally singles out particular persons, which results in their unequal treatment. An employer can, however, establish Sunday work as a condition of employment, provided it is not in violation of this section of the Human Rights Code.

As previously noted, the right to refuse Sunday work under s. 73(2) applies only to persons already working at an establishment (i.e., "an employee"), and therefore a person cannot make a complaint under the Act if he or she has not been hired because of a refusal to work on Sundays. The person may, however, have grounds for a complaint under the Human Rights Code and should be referred to Ontario's Human Rights Legal Support Centre.

Finally, beyond the s. 73 rights to refuse work on Sundays and holidays, there is no general right under the Act of an employee to refuse to work on a particular day. However, if an employee refuses to work any other day because of bona fide religious beliefs, for example, he or she may have a complaint under the Human Rights Code. If such is the case, the employee should be referred to Ontario's Human Rights Legal Support Centre.

Notice of Refusal - s. 73(3)

73(3) An employee who agrees to work on a day referred to in subsection (1) or (2) may then decline to work on that day, but only if he or she gives the employer notice that he or she declines at least 48 hours before he or she was to commence work on that day.

Section 73(3) is similar in effect to s. 50.2(2) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 73(3) provides that an employee who has agreed to work on a Sunday or holiday can subsequently decline to work, provided he or she notifies the employer 48 hours before he or she was to commence work that day.

However, the ability to refuse Sunday work with 48 hours' notice is subject to s. 10 of O Reg 285/01, which precludes employees who had agreed at the time of hiring (on or after September 4, 2001) from refusing to work Sundays except where the employee declines to work on the Sunday for religious reasons (s. 10(2) of O Reg 285/01), or where the agreement to work Sundays was a condition of being hired and such condition would be contrary to section 11 of the Human Rights Code (s. 10(3) of O Reg 285/01). In other words, an employee who had agreed at the time of hiring (on or after September 4, 2001) to work on Sundays could not subsequently refuse to work by providing 48 hours' notice of the refusal, unless s. 10(2) or s. 10(3) of O Reg 285/01 applied.[2]

The notice provision ensures that employees can exercise their rights of refusal while enabling the employer to find replacement employees. At the same time, the notice provision is sufficiently short that an employee with a sudden need for a period free from work on a public holiday or on a Sunday is not denied the right to refuse.

If an employee has previously agreed to work on a public holiday or a Sunday, he or she may subsequently refuse to work only if 48 hours’ notice is given as required by this section (and subject to the limitation on refusing Sunday work established by s. 10 of O Reg 285/01). If the employee gives less than 48 hours' notice or does not give notice at all, and he or she is penalized in some way for the refusal, then the employee has no recourse under the Act, even where the refusal was for religious reasons.

[2] Therefore, if an employee had entered into an agreement under s. 10(1) of Reg. 285/01, he or she could subsequently refuse to work on a Sunday for religious reasons as set out in s. 10(2) of the regulation, but in that case, he or she would be required to give notice under s. 73(3) of the refusal to work. If, under s. 10(3) of Reg. 285/01, an employer was prohibited from entering into a s. 10(1) agreement because such an agreement would be contrary to s. 11 of the Ontario Human Rights Code, an employee could refuse Sunday work he or she had otherwise agreed to perform by providing 48 hours’ notice under s. 73(3).

The notice to decline public holiday or Sunday work does not need to be in writing. Although not necessary, a written notice is of course preferable for evidence purposes in case of a claim.

ESA Part XVIII – Reprisal

Reprisal Prohibited – s. 74(1)

74(1) No employer or person acting on behalf of an employer shall intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize an employee or threaten to do so,

(a) because the employee,

- i. asks the employer to comply with this Act and the regulations,
- ii. makes inquiries about his or her rights under this Act,
- iii. files a complaint with the Ministry under this Act,
- iv. exercises or attempts to exercise a right under this Act,
- v. gives information to an employment standards officer,
- v.1 makes inquiries about the rate paid to another employee for the purpose of determining or assisting another person in determining whether an employer is complying with Part XII (Equal Pay for Equal Work),
- v.2 discloses the employee's rate of pay to another employee for the purpose of determining or assisting another person in determining whether an employer is complying with Part XII (Equal Pay for Equal Work)
- vi. testifies or is required to testify or otherwise participates or is going to participate in a proceeding under this Act,
- vi. participates in proceedings respecting a by-law or proposed by-law under section 4 of the Retail Business Holidays Act,
- vii. is or will become eligible to take a leave, intends to take a leave or takes a leave under Part XIV; or

(b) because the employer is or may be required, because of a court order or garnishment, to pay to a third party an amount owing by the employer to the employee.

Subsection 74(1) prohibits employers and anyone acting on their behalf from taking reprisal action against employees for asking their employers to comply with the ESA 2000, making inquiries about their rights under the ESA 2000, filing a complaint under the ESA 2000, exercising or attempting to exercise their rights under the ESA 2000, giving information to an employment standards officer, making inquiries about or disclosing rate of pay in relation to compliance with Part XII of the ESA 2000 (Equal Pay for Equal Work) or participating in proceedings under the ESA 2000 or s. 4 of the Retail Business Holidays Act, RSO 1990, c R.30. In addition, it prohibits reprisals because an employee is or will be eligible to take, intends to take or takes a leave under Part XIV of the ESA 2000, or because the employee's wages are or may be subject to garnishment or a court order.

Under the ESA 2000 a reprisal contrary to s. 74 may result in the issuance of any or all of the following:

1. A compliance order pursuant to s. 108;

2. An order for reinstatement (or, with respect to the Lie Detector provisions, an order to hire) or compensation or both compensation and reinstatement pursuant to s. 104;
3. A notice of contravention pursuant to s. 113.

A reprisal, like any contravention of the ESA 2000, could also be the subject of a prosecution under the Provincial Offences Act, RSO 1990, c P.33.

Determining Whether a Reprisal Has Occurred - the Four-Step Test

The Program applies a four-step test for determining whether an employer, or a person acting on behalf of the employer has engaged in a reprisal contrary to s. 74(1). This four-step test is set out below:

- Step 1: Is the person alleged to have committed a reprisal the employer or a person acting on behalf of the employee's employer?
- Step 2: Did the employer or person acting on behalf of the employer intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize or threaten to intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize the employee?
- Step 3: Did the employee engage in any of the protected activities set out in clause 74(1)(a) or was the employer required by a court order or garnishment to pay an amount owing to the employee over to a third party as described in clause 74(1)(b)?
- Step 4: Did the employer or person acting on behalf of the employer intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize or threaten to intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize the employee because they engaged in the protected activities described in clause 74(1)(a) or because of a situation described in clause 74(1)(b)?

If all four questions are answered in the affirmative, a breach of s. 74(1) is established. Note that s. 74(2) places the burden of proof on the employer in the context of an allegation of reprisal, except on review of a notice of contravention under s. 122. Each aspect of this test is discussed in more detail below.

Step 1: Is the person alleged to have committed a reprisal the employee's employer or a person acting on behalf of the employee's employer?

The first determination that must be made is whether the person(s) against whom the allegation of reprisal is made is the employee's employer or a person acting on behalf of the employee's employer. There can be no violation of s. 74(1) if the person in question is not the employee's employer or a person acting on behalf of the employee's employer.

This first determination is made up of two parts: first, is the person who is making the allegation an "employee", and second, is the person whose actions are being complained of the "employer" or someone "acting on behalf of [the] employer".

Employee

Former Employees

The definition of employee in ESA Part I, s. 1 includes a person who was an employee. Accordingly, an individual continues to be protected from reprisal by their former employer (and anyone acting on behalf of the former employer) even after the individual's employment has terminated. For example, employers are prohibited from giving negative job references for a former employee if the negative reference is given because the employee had asserted their ESA 2000 rights when employed by that employer.

Some support for this position may be inferred from the decision of the Ontario Labour Relations Board in Chafe v Home Base Non-Profit Housing, 2005 CanLII 9130 (ON LRB). In that case, the employee had filed a complaint under the ESA 2000 that was dismissed by the investigating officer. After she began working for a new employer she received a letter from her former employer that referred to her complaint and that was critical of her, and which led her to believe that the former employer was attempting to jeopardize her new employment relationship. At that point, she applied for review of the officer's decision. Although the Board dismissed her application as being outside the 30-day appeal period, it noted that the former employer's actions were clearly linked to her complaint and suggested that if those actions continued it might constitute an illegal reprisal for having filed the complaint.

Job Applicants

A job applicant will generally fail this step of the test because a job applicant is not an employee. The only exception is in the context of Part XVI, Lie Detectors. An expanded definition of employee in ESA Part XVI, s. 68 that applies only to Part XVI includes an applicant for employment. Accordingly, a job applicant will pass this first step of the test if the reprisal claim is based on the Lie Detectors provisions - see ESA Part XVI for a more detailed discussion of this issue.

Employer

The definition of "employer" is set out in ESA Part I, s. 1(1) as follows:

1(1) "employer" includes,

(a) an owner, proprietor, manager, superintendent, overseer, receiver or trustee of an activity, business, work, trade, occupation, profession, project or undertaking who has control or direction of, or is directly or indirectly responsible for, the employment of a person in it, and

(b) any persons treated as one employer under section 4, and includes a person who was an employer.

An employer is bound by the actions of those persons who act on its behalf. The phrase "person acting on behalf of the employer" is not a defined term. It is Program policy that this phrase be interpreted broadly. Program policy is that persons acting on behalf of an employer may therefore include the following:

- An officer or manager of the employer;
- A person who is part of the directing mind of the employer: for example a controlling shareholder;
- An employee of the employer, if the employee's conduct was authorized, adopted or condoned by the employer;
- A person who, although not an officer, manager, director or employee of the employer, is someone whom the employer has allowed to speak for the employer or carry out actions on the employer's behalf.
    - Without restricting the generality of the foregoing, this could, depending on the particular circumstances, include the spouse of the employer or the spouse of an officer, manager or director of the employer, an independent contractor with whom the employer is in a business relationship, and a consultant retained by the employer.

Step 2: Did the employer or person acting on behalf of the employer intimidate, dismiss, otherwise penalize or threaten to intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize the employee?

Section 74(1) prohibits employers from intimidating, dismissing, otherwise penalizing employees or threatening to do so for enumerated reasons. Such conduct is considered a reprisal and contrary to s. 74(1). Some examples of employer conduct found to constitute a reprisal have included:

- Altering job conditions or responsibilities unfavourably - see Pitts Donut Limited v Smith
- Passing over the employee when offering promotions - see Pitts Donut Limited v Smith
- Branding an employee as a "troublemaker" then unfairly disciplining and harassing the employee because the employee sought to exercise their reinstatement rights - see Pitts Donut Limited v Smith
- Disciplining an employee for poor performance when the work performance was due to pregnancy - see Hernando's Hideaway Inc. v McLeod

The meaning of "intimidate", "dismiss", "penalize" and "threaten" is discussed in greater detail below.

Intimidate

To intimidate is to compel someone, by causing fear in them, to do something or to refrain from doing something. Intimidation can range from the obvious, such as an employer making a public example of employees who have asked about their rights under their Act by terminating them, to the subtle, such as a campaign of veiled threats and innuendos designed to make the employee feel reluctant and fearful about enforcing their rights under the ESA 2000.

For example, a manager might tell employees, "The owner really hates it when you refuse to work extra hours. I would hate to get on his bad side."

For a discussion of prohibited employer actions in the context of attendance management programs and perfect attendance bonuses in relation to statutory leaves of absence, see ESA Part XIV, s. 52(1).

It is Program policy that intimidate is to be interpreted broadly.

Dismiss

To dismiss an employee is to terminate their employment. The term dismissal includes constructive dismissal.

Otherwise Penalize

Generally

The phrase "otherwise penalize" is very broad and will include any punishment or disadvantage imposed on an employee by an employer or a person acting on behalf of an employer. This includes all forms of discipline and any change in the terms and conditions of the employee's employment that are disadvantageous to them, such as lay-offs, pay cuts, reduction of hours, etc. It also includes harassment, such as, for example, where an employer repeatedly addresses an employee who refused to work excess hours as "clock watcher". Any conduct by the employer that has the effect of imposing a penalty (whether large or small) on an employee will come within the meaning of "otherwise penalize".

For a discussion of prohibited employer actions in the context of attendance management programs and perfect attendance bonuses in relation to statutory leaves of absence, see ESA Part XIV, s. 52(1).

Penalty Imposed on Someone Other than the Employee

One question that may arise is whether an employee is otherwise penalized if the employer punishes or imposes a disadvantage on someone other than the employee. It is Program policy that this is possible if the employer's action results in some kind of harm to the employee, whether it be economic, emotional, or has any other effect that harms the employee.

For example, if an employee and the employee's spouse worked for the same employer and the employer fired the employee's spouse because the employee had engaged in a protected activity under s. 74(1)(a), or the employee's wages were subject to garnishment or court order under s. 74(1)(b), the employer could be found to have reprised against the employee contrary to s. 74.

Another example is where the employer (Employer A) of an employee who exercised their ESA 2000 rights knows the employer (Employer B) of the employee's spouse. Employer A, wishing to penalize the employee for exercising their rights but wanting to avoid being in violation of the ESA 2000, contacts Employer B and arranges to have the employee's spouse fired. In this case, Employer A could be found to have penalized the employee who exercised their rights.

Withholding a Reward or Positive Opportunity

A penalty can also include, depending on the circumstances, the withholding of a reward or the withholding of a positive opportunity. That is, there will be a penalty where opportunities or rewards are automatically denied to employees who have exercised a right by refusing to do something, or who have exercised a right by not volunteering to do something.

For example, opportunities to work overtime and, more importantly, to receive overtime pay are automatically denied to employees who sometimes exercise their right to refuse to work excess hours when requested, or to employees who have not volunteered to work excess hours.

Another example is where the employer puts employees who have exercised a right to not work excess hours at the bottom of the list of people to whom the offer of overtime is made.

A third example is where retail employees who do not volunteer to work Sundays are automatically passed over for promotion.

In all of these cases, the employer has imposed a penalty on the employees. A reward or a positive opportunity - overtime pay or a promotion in these examples - has been denied an employee because they exercised an ESA 2000 right. An employee missing out on a positive opportunity is the flip side of the employee having something negative imposed on them - they are both penalties.

Some might argue that employers are not penalizing employees by, for example, not offering weekend overtime opportunities to employees who refused to work excess hours during the week, or by not offering promotion opportunities to retail employees who refuse to work Sundays; they are just providing incentives to encourage employees to work excess hours or on Sundays. It is Program policy that there is nothing wrong with the offer of incentives or rewards for working additional hours. However, the incentive or reward must be made available to all employees; it cannot be denied to employees because they have exercised an ESA 2000 right. If the opportunity to receive the incentive or reward is denied to those employees, it is Program policy that they are being penalized.

Threaten to Intimidate, Dismiss or Otherwise Penalize

The prohibition against reprisal extends to threats by employers to intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize an employee. There is no need for an employer to actually intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize an employee for the employer's conduct to be captured by s. 74. All that is required is that the employer threatens the employee with intimidation, dismissal or another penalty.

For example, a threat to transfer an employee, where the transfer would or might be considered to be a demotion, or where the new job is less appealing to the employee, if the employee does not sign an agreement to average overtime would likely be considered a threat to penalize an employee, contrary to s. 74(1).

Another example is where a manager tells employees: "The owner really hates it when you refuse to work extra hours; I sure would hate to get on his bad side." Even if the employees were not actually deterred from exercising their right to refuse to work excess hours, this would likely be considered a threat to penalize, or a threat to intimidate, an employee, contrary to s. 74(1).

Issue of Intention in Step 2

It is Program policy that before it can be said that the employer has committed one of the prohibited actions (i.e., dismiss, intimidate, otherwise penalize, or threaten to do any of those things), an element of intention must be established.

Where the employer takes an action with the aim of harming the employee, the element of intention is obviously met.

The necessary element of intention will also be met where an employer takes an action that is genuinely motivated by what it considers legitimate business reasons and not by any desire to cause harm or loss to the employee, but which the employer knows or ought to know will cause harm or loss to the employee.

For example, an employer transfers an employee who refuses to work excess hours from one position to another, because in the employee's original position a refusal to work excess hours hampers the achievement of production goals, but the new position is not nearly as sensitive in that respect. If the new job is one that the employer knew or ought to have known is one that the employee would find significantly less appealing, it does not matter that the employer's motive was not to harm the employee; it is sufficient that the employee did in fact suffer a loss.

The test is whether the employer knew or ought to have known. An employer is presumed to know the natural consequences of its actions; it is no defence for the employer to say that it never turned its mind to whether its action would have a negative impact on the employee. It is Program policy that if the employer had turned its mind to that question it would have realized that there would be a negative impact on the employee, the element of intention is met. Employers cannot avoid liability by not thinking about the consequences for the employee of actions taken in response to the employee's exercise of their right.

The "ought to have known" part of the "knew or ought to have known" tests means that an employer could be seen as having the requisite intent, even if it was not aware of the impact that its action would have on the employee. However, an employer cannot be expected to have perceived the possibility of a negative impact where such impact is based wholly on eccentric preferences or unusual reactions on the part of the employee.

For example, if a single employee with no childcare responsibilities is transferred from one job to another and the only difference between the two jobs is that the employee will start their eight-hour shift one hour earlier and the employee has an unusually intense dislike for rising early in the morning, generally that will not meet the element of intention. The employer could not reasonably have been expected to know the employee had an extreme aversion to getting up early. On the other hand, if the employer knew prior to transferring the employee that the employee had such an intense dislike, the requisite element of intent will be met, because the employer knew.

Step 3: Did the employee engage in any of the protected activities set out in ss. 74(1)(a) or was the employer required by a court order or garnishment to pay an amount owing to the employee over to a third party as described in clause 74(1)(b)?

For the third part of the test to be met, the employee must have engaged in one or more of the protected activities set out or the employer must have been required because of a court order or garnishment to pay money owing to the employee over to a third party:

74(1)(a) the employee:

- i. asks the employer to comply with the Act or regulations,
- ii. makes inquiries about his or her rights under this Act,
- iii. files a complaint with the Ministry under this Act,
- iv. exercises or attempts to exercise a right under this Act,
- v. gives information to an employment standards officer,
- v.1 makes inquiries about the rate paid to another employee for the purpose of determining or assisting another person in determining whether an employer is complying with Part XII (Equal Pay for Equal Work),
- v.2 discloses the employee's rate of pay to another employee for the purpose of determining or assisting another person in determining whether an employer is complying with Part XII (Equal Pay for Equal Work)
- vi. testifies or is required to testify or otherwise participates or is going to participate in a proceeding under this Act,
- vi. participates in proceedings respecting a by-law or proposed by-law under section 4 of the Retail Business Holidays Act,
- vii. is or will become eligible to take a leave, intends to take a leave or takes a leave under Part XIV; or 74(1)(b) because the employer is or may be required, because of a court order or garnishment, to pay to a third party an amount owing by the employer to employee.

If the employee did not engage in one of the protected activities or there was no such court order or garnishment, the employee is not protected by s. 74 against reprisal. Each protected activity is discussed in detail below.

An employee is protected from reprisal by their current employer with respect to the activities listed in subparagraphs (a)(ii) through (viii) even if the employee was not employed by the current employer when the employee engaged in the activity. For example, an employer is prohibited from taking reprisal action against an employee because the employee filed a complaint against their former employer.

Asks employer to comply with this Act and regulations

Section 74(1)(a)(i) prohibits an employer and a person acting on behalf of an employer from intimidating, dismissing or otherwise penalizing an employee or threatening to do so because the employee has asked the employer to comply with the ESA 2000 or the regulations.

It is Program policy that the protected activities under s. 74(1)(a)(i) must be broadly interpreted. Generally speaking, any activity in which the employee's objective is to get the employer to comply with the ESA 2000 or regulations should be seen as being protected activities. These include but are not limited to:

- Complaining to the employer or its agent about an alleged breach of the ESA 2000 or the regulations;
- Asking the employer or its agent to comply with the ESA 2000 or the regulations;
- Advising the employer or its agent of an intention to file a complaint under the ESA 2000;
- Asking the employer to comply with an Order issued by an employment standards officer; or
- Commencing a civil action alleging a breach of the ESA 2000 or the regulations.

Makes inquiries about rights under the Act

Section 74(1)(a)(ii) provides that it is a contravention of s. 74(1) for an employer or a person acting on behalf of an employer to intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize an employee, or threaten to do so, for making inquiries about their rights under the ESA 2000.

It is Program policy that the protected activity under s. 74(1)(a)(ii) must be broadly interpreted. Generally speaking, any inquiry made by the employee with the objective of finding out what their rights are under the ESA 2000, regardless of to whom the inquiry is directed, should be seen as a protected activity. This would include but is not limited to:

- Inquiries to the Ministry regarding the employee's rights or the employer's obligations under the ESA 2000;
- Inquiries to the employer or its agent regarding the employee's rights or the employer's obligations under the ESA 2000;
- Inquiries to a lawyer or to any other person regarding the employee's rights or the employer's obligations under the ESA 2000.

Files a complaint with the Ministry under this Act

Section 74(1)(a)(iii) provides that it is a contravention of s. 74(1) for an employer, or a person acting on behalf of an employer, to intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize an employee, or threaten to do so, for filing a complaint under this Act. See ESA Part XXII, s. 96(1) for a discussion of the provisions for filing a complaint under the ESA 2000.

It is Program policy that the protected activity under s. 74(1)(a)(iii) must be broadly interpreted. Accordingly, there will be protection for an employee under this clause even if the employee tries to file a complaint but uses the wrong form, or files a complaint more than two years after the violation, which, pursuant to s. 96(3), means that it is deemed not to have been filed.

Exercises or attempts to exercise a right under this Act

Section 74(1)(a)(iv) provides that it is a contravention of s. 74(1) for an employer or a person acting on behalf of an employer to intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize an employee, or threaten to do so, for exercising or attempting to exercise a right under this Act. This includes, for example, an employee refusing to agree to average hours of work for the purpose of calculating overtime, or attempting to revoke with two weeks' notice an agreement to work excess hours.

This provision will only apply where the employee is exercising or attempting to exercise a right under the ESA 2000. This provision would not apply if the employee is exercising a right under another statute or their contract of employment that is not otherwise a right nor an enforceable greater right or benefit under the ESA 2000.

For example, an employee regularly works 44 hours in a work week. The employee refuses their employer's request that they work an additional four hours in the work week. The employee receives a letter of discipline for their refusal and they allege that their employer has committed a reprisal against them. The employer's conduct cannot constitute a reprisal within the meaning of s. 74(1)(a)(iv) because the employee was not exercising or attempting to exercise a right under the ESA 2000. Employees have no right under the ESA 2000 to refuse to work hours in addition to their regular work week if the additional hours would not result in them working more than the applicable daily limit on the day in question or more than 48 hours in the work week in question.

Another example deals with direct deposit. Section 11(4) of the ESA 2000 permits employers to pay wages by direct deposit if certain conditions are met, such as there being an account in the employee's name. While the employee's agreement to be paid by direct deposit is not required by the ESA 2000, for practical reasons an employee's agreement is necessary as banks do not permit employers to open an account on behalf of an employee. Accordingly, employees who do not wish to be paid by direct deposit can prevent an employer from paying their wages in that manner by refusing to open an account. As it is often more expensive and administratively cumbersome to pay wages by cheque, employers may threaten or penalize employees who do not open an account. It is the Program's view that ESA Part V, s. 11(4) does not grant employees a right to not be paid by direct deposit; it merely sets out conditions that have to be met in order for direct deposit to be permitted under the ESA 2000. Accordingly, employees who refuse to open an account so as to prevent an employer from paying them by direct deposit are not exercising a right under this Act, and therefore are not protected from reprisal.

Another situation deals with sick leave. For example, an employee is absent from work and asserts a right to sick leave, but it is subsequently revealed that the employee was not telling the truth and did not in fact have a right to be absent. The employer is not prohibited by s. 74 from penalizing the employee because the employee was not exercising or attempting to exercise a right under this Act; they did not have a right to take a sick leave.

On the other hand, refusing to sign an authorization allowing a deduction from wages pursuant to s. 13(3) is a protected activity. For example, an employer wants an employee to authorize a deduction from wages that is not one that is prohibited by s. 13(5), the employee refuses, and the employer terminates the employee's employment in response. It is Program policy that the employee, in refusing to provide their authorization, engaged in a protected activity, and the employer would therefore be in violation of s. 74. The difference between this situation and the direct deposit example above is that in this case, the essential condition for making the deduction - the employee's authorization - is set out in the ESA 2000. In the direct deposit example, the employee's agreement is not a condition that is set out in the ESA 2000. Although the employee's agreement will, as a practical matter, have to be obtained in order for the employer to be able to pay by direct deposit. That is a function of the policies of banks and other financial institutions. It is not a requirement of the ESA 2000.

Another example is the issue of whether an employee is engaging in a protected activity if the employee fails to give advance notice that they are going to take a sick leave, family responsibility leave or a bereavement leave. For a detailed discussion of this issue, see ss. 50(3) and (4) [sick leave], ss. 50.0.1(4) and (5) [family responsibility leave] and ss. 50.0.2(4) and (5) [bereavement leave].

Rights under the ESA 2000 include withdrawing from agreements to give up the default employment standard and receive the entitlements under the alternate employment standard. For example, the default employment standard with respect to meal breaks is to receive an eating period of at least 30 minutes, but employees can agree to the "alternate" employment standard of two shorter eating periods that together total at least 30 minutes. In most cases, employees are entitled to revoke their agreement to the alternate standard and revert back to the default standard, and doing so is a protected activity under this clause. If an employer penalizes an employee because the employee withdrew their agreement, that will be a violation of s. 74.

There are some situations where an employee's ability to revoke an agreement is restricted. For example, an employee can revoke an excess hours agreement only if they give the employer two weeks' written notice. If, during the time when the employee is prevented from revoking the agreement, the employee purports to revoke the agreement and attempts to rely on the default employment standard, the employee cannot be said to be exercising a right under the ESA 2000 because the employee was purporting to exercise the right at a time when the ESA 2000 did not in fact give them the right; the employee therefore will not be protected from reprisal. Other examples where the employee's ability to revoke an agreement to the alternate standard is restricted include:

- ESA Part VIII, s. 22(6): employees cannot withdraw from an overtime averaging agreement before the expiry date in the agreement unless the employer also agrees;
- O Reg 285/01, s. 10: employees in retail business establishments who are hired on or after September 4, 2001, who agree in writing at the time of hire that they will work on Sundays cannot withdraw from that agreement - unless making the agreement a condition of hire was in violation of the Human Rights Code, RSO 1990, c H.19, or unless the employee needs the Sunday off for reasons of religious belief or religious observance;
- O Reg 285/01, s. 32(1): employees cannot unilaterally revoke an agreement made at the time of the employee's hiring to work excess daily hours that has been approved by the Director.

It is Program policy that the protection of this clause applies in cases where an employer dismisses, intimidates, penalizes or threatens to do so because it wants to prevent an employee from exercising or attempting to exercise a right under the ESA 2000, even if the employee has not actually exercised or attempted to exercise a right.

For example, one employee asserts their right to receive public holiday pay. The employer terminates that employee, then convenes a meeting of all the other employees and threatens them by telling them that if anyone else tries to get their public holiday pay they too will be fired. Even though none of the other employees has actually exercised or attempted to exercise their right to public holiday pay, this clause will apply to them, so if they file a reprisal claim they will pass step 3 of the test. To take the opposite view would defeat the intention of s. 74 which is to ensure employees can freely exercise their ESA 2000 rights. It would also permit an absurd result where an employer could avoid liability by pre-emptively threatening employees with dismissal on their first day of employment and every day thereafter. If the Program were to take the view that protection only applies once an employee actually exercises or attempts to exercise a right, then employers who are successful in intimidating employees out of ever exercising or attempting to exercise a right would not ever be found to have violated s. 74.

It is Program policy that the protected activity under s. 74(1)(a)(iv) must be broadly interpreted.

Gives information to an employment standards officer

Section 74(1)(a)(v) prohibits an employer from intimidating, dismissing or otherwise penalizing an employee, or threatening to do so, for giving information to an employment standards officer.

It is Program policy that this provision must be interpreted broadly. Protected activities under this provision include but are not limited to:

- Volunteering information to an employment standards officer;
- Responding to a request for information from an employment standards officer.

Makes inquiries about the rate paid to another employee

The Fair Workplaces, Better Jobs Act, 2017, SO 2017, amended the ESA to include s. 74(1)(a)(v.1), effective April 1, 2018. Section 74(1)(a)(v.1) prohibits an employer from reprising against an employee who makes inquiries about the rate paid to another employee for the purpose of determining, or assisting another person in determining, whether an employer is complying with the equal pay for equal work provisions in ESA Part XII.

For example, employee A may ask fellow employee B about their rate of pay in order to determine whether employee A is receiving the same rate of pay for equal work, pursuant to section 42, Part XII. An employer is prohibited from reprising against employee A for making this inquiry.

Effective January 1, 2019, the Making Ontario Open for Business Act repealed s. 42.1 which provided equal pay for equal work on the basis on employment status. The question might arise as to what reprisal protection exists in relation to this repealed provision. Section 74(1)(a)(v.1) provides protection against reprisal where an employee made inquiries about the rate that was paid to another employee both during the timeframe that s. 42.1 was in effect (from April 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018) and after its repeal where the purpose of the inquiries is to determine, or to assist another person in determining, whether an employer was in compliance with section 42.1. In other words, the specified inquiries are protected regardless of when they occurred, as long as they relate to a rate that was paid when s. 42.1 was in force (from April 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018).

Discloses his/her rate of pay to another employee

The Fair Workplaces, Better Jobs Act, 2017, SO 2017, amended the ESA to include s. 74(1)(a)(v.2), effective April 1, 2018. Section 74(1)(a)(v.2) prohibits an employer from reprising against an employee who discloses their rate of pay to another employee for the purpose of determining, or assisting another person in determining, whether an employer is complying with the equal pay for equal work provisions in section 42, Part XII.

For example, employee A may divulge their rate of pay to employee B to assist employee B in determining whether she is receiving the same rate of pay for equal work, pursuant to Part XII. An employer is prohibited from reprising against employee A for disclosing this information. Note that if employee B also divulged their wage rate to employee A as part of this discussion, the employer is equally prohibited from reprising against employee B.

Effective January 1, 2019, the Making Ontario Open for Business Act repealed s. 42.1 which provided equal pay for equal work on the basis on employment status. The question might arise as to what reprisal protection exists in relation to this repealed provision. Section 74(1)(a)(v.2) provides protection against reprisal where an employee discloses their rate of pay to another employee both during the timeframe that s. 42.1 was in effect (from April 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018) and after its repeal where the purpose of the disclosure is to determine, or to assist another person in determining, whether an employer was in compliance with section 42.1.

In other words, the specified disclosure is protected regardless of when it occurred, as long as it relates to a rate that was paid when s. 42.1 was in force (from April 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018).

Testifies, is required to testify or otherwise participates in a proceeding under this Act

Section 74(1)(a)(vi) prohibits an employer from intimidating, dismissing or otherwise penalizing an employee, or threatening to do so, for testifying, being required to testify or otherwise participating in a proceeding under the ESA 2000.

It is Program policy that this section must be interpreted broadly. Protected activities under this section include but are not limited to situations in which the employee is:

- A party to a proceeding;
- A party to a proceeding;
- Required to be a witness in a proceeding; or
- A representative, advocate, agent or an advisor in a proceeding.

It is irrelevant to the application of this section whether the employee's participation is voluntary.

Participates in proceedings under s. 4 of the Retail Business Holidays Act

The Retail Business Holidays Act (“RBHA”) prohibits most retail stores from opening on holidays as defined in that Act. However, s. 4 of the RBHA establishes a process for making representations at municipal councils regarding existing or proposed tourism exemption by-laws. Section 74(1)(a)(vii) provides protection against reprisal for those employees who participate in this process.

It is Program policy that this section must be interpreted broadly. Protected activities under this section include but are not limited to participation as a:

- Party;
- Witness; or
- Representative, advocate, agent or advisor.

Although participation in this type of a proceeding would almost always be voluntary, it is, as with the protection accorded to participation in proceedings under the ESA 2000 by s. 74(1)(a)(vi), irrelevant whether the employee's participation is voluntary.

Is or will become eligible to take a leave, intends to take a leave or takes a leave under the Act - s. 74(1)(a)(viii)

Section 74(1)(a)(viii) provides protection for employees who are intimidated, dismissed or otherwise penalized or threatened with intimidation, dismissal or other penalties because of the following situations.

An employee who qualifies for protection under this provision may also have rights under the Human Rights Code that have been violated, in that they may have been discriminated against because of sex (which includes pregnancy) or family status. Therefore, the claimant may wish to contact Ontario's Human Rights Legal Support Centre in addition to filing a claim with the Ministry of Labour.

Employee is eligible to take a Part XIV leave

This includes pregnancy, parental, family medical, organ donor, family caregiver, critically illness, child death, crime-related child disappearance, domestic or sexual violence, sick, family responsibility, bereavement, emergency, or reservist leave.

For example, an employee's spouse has just given birth. The employee is eligible for parental leave as a new parent but has not yet decided whether he will be taking the leave.

Employee will become eligible to take a Part XIV leave

For example, an employee who has just discovered that she is pregnant will be eligible for pregnancy leave when she is within 17 weeks of her due date and therefore has protection under this section.

For example, in 832746 Ontario Ltd. v Fuller, 2001 CanLII 11289 (ON LRB) the employer terminated the employment of the claimant when she was seven months' pregnant because the employer did not want a pregnant woman working in his bar. The Board found that this was a violation of s. 44 of the former Employment Standards Act, which prohibited an employer from penalizing an employee because she was eligible for leave; the employee was eligible for the leave because of her pregnancy, and terminating the employee's employment because she was pregnant was therefore a violation of the former Employment Standards Act. Further, although the Board recognized an overlap between the protections afforded under the Human Rights Code, RSO 1990, c H.19 and the ESA, it concluded there was no reason to defer the complaint under the ESA 2000 to the Human Rights Code. In this regard, see also Bazinet v Thain Industries Ltd., 2004 CanLII 24706 in which the Board noted that assuming the employer is in fact aware of the employee's pregnancy, it must demonstrate that the pregnancy was not a factor in its decision to terminate her employment.

Employee intends to take a Part XIV leave

For example, an employee who is terminated by her employer because she has told other employees that she is attempting to get pregnant and will be taking her full leave entitlement if she is successful would be protected under this section.

Another example is an employee who tells his employer that he will be taking three days of sick leave for surgery that is scheduled for a date four months hence.

A third example is an employee whose mother is terminally ill and who indicates that he will be taking family caregiver leave and family medical leave in the near future.

Employee takes a Part XIV leave

This will obviously also include an employee who "took" a Part XIV leave. That is, after the leave is over, an employer is prohibited from penalizing the employee because the employee took a leave.

Court order or garnishment

Section 74(1)(b) prohibits any employer or a person acting on behalf of an employer from intimidating, dismissing or otherwise penalizing an employee, or threatening to do so, because the employee's wages are the subject of a garnishment or a court-ordered payment to a third party.

Section 7 of the Wages Act, RSO 1990, c W.1, deals with garnishment of wages, as defined therein, and stipulates that 80 per cent of a person's net wages are exempt from garnishment. For purposes of the Wages Act, net wages equal gross wages less statutory deductions such as income tax, employment insurance and Canada Pension Plan; only deductions authorized by a statute reduce "gross wages" to "net wages". Other deductions, even if properly authorized in writing by the employee, cannot be used to reduce the amount of gross wages for purposes of the Wages Act restrictions. If the garnishment is for the enforcement of a support order, the Wages Act exempts only 50 per cent of the person's net wages. Nevertheless, the judge issuing the order may use their discretion to decrease the exemption, if the creditor so requests, or increase them, if the debtor so requests. The 50 per cent restriction (with possibility of variation) is also found in the Family Responsibility and Support Arrears Enforcement Act, 1996, SO 1996, c 31.

No specific advice concerning the Wages Act or the Family Responsibility and Support Arrears Enforcement Act, 1996 should be given by an employment standards officer. The Wages Act is administered by the Ministry of the Attorney General, and enquiries concerning it may be directed to Crown Law Office - Civil of that ministry. The Family Responsibility and Support Arrears Enforcement Act, 1996 is administered by the Ministry of Community and Social Services, and enquiries concerning it may be directed to the Family Responsibility Office of that ministry.

Step 4: Did the employer or person acting on behalf of the employer intimidate, dismiss, otherwise penalize or threaten to intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize the employee because they engaged in the protected activities listed in paragraph 3?

Sections 74(1)(a) and 74(1)(b) prohibit employers and persons acting on behalf of employers from intimidating, dismissing, or otherwise penalizing employees because the employee engaged in the activities listed in 74(1)(a) or because the employee's wages were subject to garnishment or court order as per s. 74(1)(b). Further, a contravention of s. 74 is established if the employer (or person acting on behalf of the employer) was motivated, even partly, to intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize an employee because the employee engaged in one or more of the protected activities listed in s. 74(1)(a) or (b). For example, an employer that terminated the employment of an employee both because of serious absenteeism and because the employee routinely refused to work in excess of 48 hours in a work week could be found to have contravened s. 74.

The use of the word because necessitates a consideration of the employer's motivation in taking the action it has taken against the employee. In the context of the exercise of rights to leave in s. 74(1)(a)(viii) for example, the employee is only protected from intimidation, dismissal or other penalties or threats thereof that are motivated by the rights to a Part XIV leave.

In 384093 Ontario Limited operating as Goodyear Tire Centre v Dietzal (December 18, 1981), ESC 1142 (Hunter), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, an employee had been dismissed when the president of the employer, after having met with an employee whose wages were the subject of a garnishment order issued against it to discuss his displeasure with the employee's "financial irresponsibility", discovered that the employee had not disclosed to him the existence of two earlier garnishment orders. The employer argued that the employee had been dismissed not because of the garnishment orders per se, but rather, because of the employee's lack of candour in not apprising the president of the previous orders. The referee found that the issuance of the orders was the motivation for dismissal and that the dismissal was accordingly unlawful, as being a breach of the predecessor to the current s 74(1)(b). Commenting on the employer's argument that the employee had a duty to disclose the existence of the earlier orders, the referee suggested that even if there was such a duty on the employee, dismissal because of the issuance of a garnishment order was still unlawful.

Civil Action as Reprisal

The question arises as to whether a reprisal is committed where an employer commences a civil action against an employee who has filed an employment standards claim with the Ministry of Labour, in response to that claim and in an attempt to recoup any monies the employee has been or may be awarded through the Ministry.

For example, an employer made a deduction from the wages of an employee because the employee damaged the employer's equipment. The employee filed an employment standards claim, and the officer, finding that the deduction was unlawful, ordered the employer to pay the money back to the employee. In response, the employer sues the employee, claiming that the employee was negligent in the handling of the employer's equipment.

When determining whether a reprisal has been committed, consideration must be given to the motivation behind the civil action. For example, an employer may sue an employee because of a desire to punish the employee for having filed a claim - this is likely to constitute a reprisal. Or, an employer may simply be attempting to recover what is rightfully the employer's by law – this is unlikely to constitute a reprisal. The commencement of a civil action will not generally constitute a reprisal, however, circumstances may arise that lead to the opposite conclusion. Officers who are considering finding a reprisal arising from the commencement of a civil action should consult with the Employment Practices Branch prior to making a determination on the issue of a potential reprisal.

Determining Motivation

It may be necessary for employment standards officers to rely on circumstantial evidence to establish an employer's motivation under s. 74. Accordingly, employment standards officers may have to draw inferences about employer motivation. Whether the requisite intent is established is a factual determination and it will necessarily turn on the circumstances of each case. Note that s. 74(2), subject to s. 122(4), places the burden of proof on the employer in the context of an allegation of reprisal.

Factors that may be relevant to the employment standards officer's determination regarding employer motivation include the following:

- Whether the employer was aware that the employee had engaged in a protected activity under s. 74(1)(a) or the employee's wages were subject to garnishment or court order under s. 74(1)(b).

If the employer was not aware, this step of the test cannot be met. An employer cannot be said to have done something "because" an employee engaged in a protected activity if the employer is not even aware that the employee engaged in it. Note, however, that the mere fact that the employer was aware that the employee had engaged in a protected activity, without more, is not enough to establish a violation.

- The timing of the employer's conduct in relation to when the employer became aware of those activities.

For example, an employee is fired shortly after testifying against an employer at a hearing convened under the ESA 2000. However, just because the employer's conduct followed closely on the heels of the employee's protected activity does not necessarily mean that the employer did what it did because the employee engaged in the protected activity. A short interval of time in between the two events may obviously raise suspicions, but that is only one factor.

Conversely, just because a long period of time has elapsed between the employee's protected activity and the employer's action does not necessarily mean that the employer did not take its action because of the employee's activity, as an employer may try to disguise a reprisal by waiting some time before taking any action against the employee.

- Whether the employer has treated the employee differently from other similarly situated employees.

For example, if the employer has been inconsistent, unreasonable or unduly harsh with the employee.

- Compelling business reasons for the employer's conduct.

This includes seasonal business patterns, the finances of the employer, changes in the organizational structure of the employer that do not appear directed at the employee in particular, technological changes, etc. However, just because there may be compelling business reasons does not necessarily mean that a reprisal has not been committed, as there could also be unlawful reasons for the employer's conduct.

Further, if the employer took certain action because the employee exercised their rights, the fact that the action was taken because the employee's exercise of those rights created business problems does not mean that a reprisal did not take place. That is, even if the employer's motivation was not to affect the employee detrimentally, so long as the employer knew or ought to have known that its actions would affect the employee detrimentally, and those actions were taken because the employee exercised their rights, the employer has engaged in a reprisal.

- The credibility of witnesses.

Orders for Compensation, Reinstatement or Hire

Where a contravention of Part XVIII (Reprisal) has occurred, s. 104 empowers an employment standards officer to issue an order requiring that the employee be compensated and/or reinstated. In addition, if an applicant for employment has been reprised against (i.e., not hired) because they refused to take a lie detector test, an order to hire the applicant may be issued.

Reinstatement

When is an Order for Reinstatement Appropriate?

An order for reinstatement may be appropriate where the employer has terminated the employee's employment in contravention of s. 74. Reinstatement is considered as a possible remedy in every case where there has been a termination. Where an officer decides that reinstatement is not an appropriate remedy, the narrative should set out the reasons for that decision. When considering whether an order for reinstatement is appropriate in the circumstances, an employment standards officer should consider the following factors:

- Whether the employee wants to be reinstated; and
- Whether there is a reasonable chance that the employee can be successfully re-integrated into the workplace. In this regard, see the Board's considerations when ordering reinstatement in James v Craiglee Nursing Home.

If the employer is opposed to reinstatement, careful consideration of the circumstances should be had before reinstatement is ordered, since the purpose of a reinstatement order is likely to be defeated over the long-term if it is made in spite of the employer's adamant opposition. Nevertheless, there may be cases in which an order for reinstatement is still appropriate, notwithstanding the employer's position.

Similarly, an employee's desire to not be reinstated does not dictate the officer's decision. In some circumstances, it may be appropriate for an officer to issue a reinstatement order even though the employee does not wish to be reinstated. In situations where an officer decides that a reinstatement order is appropriate, but the employee refuses to accept reinstatement, it may be that no compensation is awarded under the head of damages for loss of reasonable expectation of continued employment.

What Position Should the Employee be Reinstated to?

It is Program policy that an order for reinstatement under s. 104(1) should require the employer to reinstate the employee to the position that they most recently held, or, if and only if the employee's former position no longer exists, to a comparable position. This policy position is based, by analogy, on the principles behind the reinstatement obligations set out in ESA Part XIV, s. 53(1) following a Part XIV leave.

If an order for reinstatement is made, an employee will be reinstated to the position that they most recently held - if that position still exists. If the job is still there and if the same work is being done, the employee should be reinstated to perform the same work. This is so irrespective of whether another person is now and has been performing the job.

If the position most recently held by the employee no longer exists, the employee may be reinstated to a comparable position. The question of what constitutes a comparable position is a factual matter that will vary with the circumstances of each case. A position with the same wages and benefits is not necessarily comparable - see C.L.C. (Can Workers' Union, Local 354) v American Can Canada Inc., 1983 CanLII 935 (ON LRB). Rather, one must look at a number of factors, including all the aspects of the new, allegedly comparable job that might make it more or less appealing, objectively speaking, in the eyes of an employee in a similar position to that of the claimant, than the claimant's original job.

In making a determination as to what is a comparable position, it is helpful to refer to the factors set out in C.L.C. (Can Workers' Union, Local 354) v American Can Canada Inc., a case dealing with the question of what is comparable work under Part XI Pregnancy and Parental Leave of the former Employment Standards Act. The factors have been adopted by the Program as policy in dealing the question of what is a "comparable position" under the current Act, and are as follows:

Location of Job

If the position offered by the employer exists in another city or town, the position may or may not be comparable. For example, if commuting would be impossible or would involve a substantial increase in travel time, the position is unlikely to be comparable. In determining whether the position is comparable, the officer should consider the circumstances of the employee in question. The test to be applied is how a reasonable person in the employee's circumstances would view the change. For example, commuting may be possible for an employee with a driver's license, but impossible for an employee without one.

It should also be noted that even if the employment contract permitted the employer to transfer the employee to another city and that therefore (assuming no negative changes in the terms and conditions of employment) the transfer would constitute reasonable alternative employment for the purposes of O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) para 5, it does not necessarily mean that the obligation to reinstate the employee to a comparable position under this section has been satisfied.

Hours of Work

Including time of the day and the length of the working day; any shift or weekend work.

Quality of Working Environment

Office vs. warehouse vs. store vs. factory; degree of luxury; overall atmosphere; privacy vs. group surroundings; comfortable vs. spartan conditions.

Degree of Responsibility

Including the degree of independence and supervision; degree of initiative required; decision-making authority; ability to input own taste or influence; job satisfaction, etc.

Job Security and Possibility of Advancement

What was/is the likelihood of the job continuing to exist and the opportunity to progress from that job to a higher position; relationship between the employee's background, training and education and the requirements of the job; what are the skills required for advancement in each position?

Prestige and Perquisites

Atmosphere and trappings of an executive, including own office, name and title on an organization chart; personal or position profile, such as opportunities for broader contact with other management personnel; own business card, expense account, administrative assistant; signing authority; social privileges; immediate supervision or instruction of others.

The importance and weight to be given to each of the foregoing factors will vary from case to case, depending on the particular facts in each situation. The new position may not be quite as attractive as the old job in all respects, but so long as, all things considered, it is at least as good if not better than the job the employee had before they had their employment terminated, it will be considered comparable. A test of what is comparable is an objective test, based on what a reasonable employee in the same circumstances as those of the employee would think.

In C.L.C. (Can Workers' Union, Local 354) v American Can Canada Inc. the employee claimed that she had not been reinstated to a position involving comparable work following her return from leave. Prior to her leave, the employee had held an executive position as communication co-ordinator. Upon her return from leave she was given alternative work. The alternative work involved mainly clerical tasks. Although she incurred no loss in wages, benefits or seniority, her new position involved a marked decrease in the degree of responsibility, prestige and perquisites as well as a loss in job security. In addition, her working environment, originally in a private office with access to a personal secretary, deteriorated to a secretarial corner. In light of the foregoing, it was found that the new position did not involve work of a comparable nature and compensation/reinstatement was ordered.

A pre-existing job evaluation system purporting to show equality as between two positions may be relevant but is not determinative of the comparability of the two positions. As the referee in Reed Inc. v Nidd (December 23, 1986), ESC 2002 (Mitchnick) stated, the evaluation system may be relevant as an objective factor. However, subjective factors such as humiliation, embarrassment and loss of prestige must be taken into account as well, but from an objective viewpoint. In other words, for example, would a reasonable employee have felt humiliated in the circumstances?

Furthermore, it may not be sufficient merely to offer the same wage where the wage range of the new position is inferior. For example, a new position at $25,000 per year at a $20,000 to $25,000 range may not be considered comparable to the wage of $25,000 at the former position at a range of $24,000 to $29,000.

To illustrate further, in Bronson Bakery Ltd v Melo and Scott neither the somewhat lesser degree of responsibility nor the minor variance of hours of work were sufficient of themselves to render the two jobs incomparable. The significant reductions in prestige and quality of working environment were the determining factors in finding the employer in breach of the reinstatement requirements.

Although there may appear to be a great deal of emphasis on the employee's feelings towards these factors, the test is objective; that is, how would a reasonable employee in the same circumstances have felt?

For example, in C.L.C. (Can Workers' Union, Local 354) v American Can Canada Inc. Referee Picher indicated that the employee found the change of geographical location (from Etobicoke to Brampton) significant, but he felt that there was no substantial difference on that issue alone and particularly so in light of the fact that the new position may have been even closer to her residence. However, he saw that her concerns on the issue of location were in fact more related to quality of working environment and the positions were clearly not comparable in that respect. The matter is more directly dealt with in Bronson Bakery Ltd v Melo and Scott where the employee was reinstated to a retail position as opposed to her previous office position. The employer argued that most people would prefer the open environment of the store and dealing with the public, and thus submitted that most people would have a different subjective preference from the claimant. However, Referee Fraser found that her viewpoint had a reasonable objective basis, i.e., most people would prefer office work to retail. Accordingly, there should be a reasonable objective basis for a subjective viewpoint on the factors considered.

Duty to Mitigate

The duty to mitigate losses requires the claimant to take necessary steps to reduce their losses arising from the loss of their job. If an employee neglects to mitigate their loss, the amount of compensation should be reduced. See the sections below for discussion of how the duty to mitigate applies to the different heads of damages.

Direct Earnings Loss

Direct earnings loss, or direct wages loss, measures the loss of wages from the date of the reprisal. This head of damages may be appropriate in the context of an order for compensation or compensation and reinstatement where the employee has been terminated or subject to some form or reprisal resulting in actual earnings loss (e.g., a temporary lay-off or a reduction in hours of work). Damages in respect of a direct earnings loss may also be appropriate in circumstances where an employee suffered a reduction in hours or pay or has been denied the opportunity to earn tips, premium pay or overtime. These damages are subject to a duty to mitigate.

Vacation pay is payable on damages awarded under this head where the damages are for lost "wages" as defined in the ESA 2000. Therefore, vacation pay would be payable on the lost overtime pay in the example given in the preceding paragraph, but not on amounts included in the calculation of vacation pay, e.g., tips. For example, where an employee's employment is terminated prior to the commencement of a Part XIV leave, the direct earnings loss would be the wages (plus vacation pay) and any non-wage earnings the employee would have earned between the date of dismissal and the date that the leave should have begun. Employees in such circumstances will also be entitled to any supplementary or top up benefits that the employer would have provided during the leave had the employee's employment not been terminated in contravention of s. 74. Compensation for earnings that would have been earned after the date the employee should have been reinstated is dealt with under heading (2).

For example, if an employer ceased to schedule any hours between 44 and 48 in a week for an employee because they refused to sign an agreement to work more than 48 hours a week, the compensation order could include the overtime pay the employee would have earned between the date the reprisal action commenced and the date such action ceased.

(a) Pre-Reinstatement Compensation

An award is made under this heading only where the employer's reprisal takes the form of a refusal to reinstate an employee after a Part XIV leave and a reinstatement order has been issued. It is intended to compensate the employee for earnings that would have been earned between the date the employee should have been reinstated and the actual date of reinstatement. See for example James v Craiglee Nursing Home, 2004 CanLII 30948 (ON LRB).

Where a reinstatement order is issued in addition to a compensation order, a practical question arises: should the amount of compensation reflect the losses only to the date the reinstatement order is issued, or should it also reflect the reality that some time will elapse after the reinstatement order is issued and before the employee is actually reinstated? Employment standards officers usually inform employers of their intention to issue a reinstatement order, and allow the employer an opportunity to set a realistic date for the reinstatement. If the employer is agreeable to reinstatement and sets a realistic date, the compensation order would reflect the proposed reinstatement date.

If, on the other hand, the employer was not prepared to discuss a date for reinstatement, officers may issue a reinstatement order that is to be effective the date the order is issued, and award compensation calculated as if the reinstatement would take place on that date. If the employer applies to the Ontario Labour Relations Board to review the order, the Board has the authority to adjust the amount of compensation.

The amount of compensation would take into account the employee's duty to mitigate their losses. For instance, where an employee was only able to find a position prior to being properly reinstated, with fewer hours or a lower rate of pay, they should be compensated for the difference between actual earnings and what would have been earned had they been properly reinstated. See James v Craiglee Nursing Home, 2004 CanLII 30948 (ON LRB).

The amount of the award under this head could also be reduced where the employee failed to make efforts to mitigate their damages. In Rainbow Concrete Industries Limited v. Lentir, 2012 CanLII 58233 (ON LRB) the Board found that the claimant did not make reasonable efforts to mitigate his damages because his job search was inadequate. As a result, the Board reduced the amount of pre-reinstatement damages awarded to the claimant.

(b) Time Required to Find a New Job and Termination Notice or Pay

An award is made under this heading only where the reprisal has resulted in the employee's termination and no reinstatement order is issued. It is Program policy that an employee is entitled to either:

- Compensation for damages being an amount equal to the employee's weekly earnings (including earnings that are not "wages" within the meaning of ESA Part I, s. 1, such as tips, and including vacation pay on those earnings that are "wages") multiplied by the number of weeks it took or should have taken (whichever is less) the employee to find a new job;

  or

- The employee's termination pay entitlement under the ESA 2000 with vacation pay (excludes earning that are not wages, e.g., tips and other gratuities), whichever is greater.

If the award is for damages in respect of time required to find a new job, this amount will be reflected in the compensation order issued under s. 104.

If however, the officer is issuing an order for termination pay, that amount (plus vacation pay on the termination pay) will be reflected in an order to pay wages made under s. 103. Such an order is subject to the limitations on recovery under s. 111.

The calculation of the time it would take to find a job begins with the week in which the employee was either given notice of termination or was terminated without notice. Note that if the employment was terminated during a leave under Part XIV of the ESA 2000, the calculation begins with the week in which the leave would have ended.

For example, an employee had three years of employment and, in contravention of s. 74, was fired without notice for refusing to work excess hours. The employment standards officer determined that it should have taken the employee four weeks to find a new job.

Under this heading, the employee would be entitled to an amount equivalent to four weeks of their earnings, including earnings that are not defined as wages under the ESA 2000, and including vacation pay on those earnings that are wages as defined in the ESA 2000 rather than the three weeks of termination pay in lieu of notice to which they would be entitled under ESA Part XV. This amount would be awarded as damages in a compensation order issued under s. 104.

However, if the employment standards officer had determined that it should have taken the employee only two weeks to find a new job, the officer would instead award the three weeks' termination pay in lieu of notice to which the employee would be entitled under ESA Part XV. This amount would be ordered under s. 103 as unpaid wages.

While the amount assessed under this heading is not limited to an amount that would be awarded in respect of "reasonable notice" by the courts under the common law, any amount received by the employee with respect to their common law notice rights would be deducted from the amount calculated under this head. However, if the amount received under the common law notice rights exceeded the amount calculated under this heading, the excess will not reduce the amounts assessed under other headings. This raises an issue about the general prohibition against employees engaging in duplicative proceedings. An employee is not prohibited from both suing for wrongful dismissal in the courts and filing a reprisal claim with the Employment Standards Program. This is because the s. 97(2) prohibition on duplicative proceedings does not apply to, among other types of claims, reprisal claims. See ESA Part XXII s. 97(2) for a full explanation of this principle.

Expenses Incurred in Seeking New Employment

This head of damages is only considered if the employee's employment is terminated and no reinstatement order is issued. Expenses incurred in seeking new employment include transportation costs in travelling to interviews and any other reasonable expenses; claimants should be advised to keep receipts. Any expenses that would have been incurred even if the employee had not been terminated are not included. For example, if the employee had childcare expenses during the period they were looking for another job, but would have incurred the same day care costs if they had remained at work, these costs will not be included in the order.

Loss of Employee's Reasonable Expectation of Continued Employment with the Former Employer

This head of damages is commonly referred to as compensation for loss of the job itself. Where reinstatement is not ordered because it is not possible, realistic or appropriate, damages may be awarded for the loss of reasonable expectation of employment. They compensate for the loss of the opportunity to continue to be employed, an opportunity that the employer’s wrongful act denied. These damages are prospective in nature, meaning it is necessary to assign a value to future unknown events. They are not subject to a duty to mitigate.

The concept behind this head of damages was set out in Wyeth-Ayerst Canada Inc. v Dowd (January 7, 1998), 2466-96-ES (ON LRB):

Adjudicators and referees have long recognized that there is, to the individual who suffers as a result of an employer's breach of the Act, some inherent value in having had the job. This seems obvious: if an employee has a job, has a regular source of income and benefits, and is suddenly and wrongly deprived of that job, the individual has to begin the process of seeking new employment, suffers loss of income, incurs expenses to look for a new job, and must begin over at a new place of employment if s/he is able to find new employment. The individual may have lost opportunities which would have accrued to him/her at the original place of employment, and may also lose future income. There are additional less tangible benefits to having a job, like accruing seniority or length of tenure, building relationships, and strengthening self-esteem through familiarity with the job requirements. All of these are lost when an employee is terminated.

Adjudicators have generally awarded one month per year of service under this head of damages. See Rainbow Concrete Industries Limited v. Lentir, 2012 CanLII 58233 (ON LRB). However, it is Program policy that the following factors are considered when determining damages for loss of job:

- Economic health of the employer in particular, and the economic health of the industry in general;
- Whether the employee's position was secure or insecure to begin with;
- Whether the employee intended to stay with the company for a long time; and
- If the employee found a new job, and if that job pays more or less or is more or less secure than the previous job.

Other specific factors to look at include the economic health of the industry or the particular employer. If it seemed likely that the claimant's job was not secure to begin with (either because the employer was in financial difficulties or because the claimant did not plan to stay with the employer for long), then the loss of expectation of continued employment would not be significant.

Where an officer feels that a reinstatement order is appropriate but the employee nevertheless refuses to accept reinstatement, then it may be that no compensation should be awarded under this head of damages.

One issue that has arisen is whether a reinstatement order is appropriate where an employee was unlawfully terminated, then found a better job and, primarily because of the better job, does not want to be reinstated to the former job. Is a reinstatement order appropriate in these circumstances such that if the employee refuses reinstatement they should be disentitled to damages under this heading? It is Program policy that where the employee's reason for not wanting to be reinstated is because they found a better job, the employee is acting reasonably, a reinstatement order may not be appropriate, and the employee therefore should be entitled to damages under this heading in these circumstances. To entirely disentitle an employee to damages under this head in these circumstances would reward an employer who has unlawfully dismissed an employee because the employee was effectively forced to find a new job as a result of the employer's unlawful act.

Further, if employees in these circumstances were to lose out on damages under this heading, the point of having this head of damages - the desirability of compensating employees for having been wrongfully deprived of a job to which, by law, they were entitled - would be defeated. However, if the claimant has found another job, the nature of this job should be considered. If it is a better one, pays more and is more secure, then this fact should be considered in assessing the amount. In other words, while the fact that the employee ended up in some ways better off does not mean that nothing should be assessed under this head, it may result in a smaller amount being assessed than would have been the case had they ended up worse off or neither better nor worse off.

In Kingston Independent Nylon Workers Union v Page, a decision under the current Act, the Board noted that in mitigating her damages, the employee had actually found a better job than the one she had with her former employer. As a result, the Board held that the employee needed no compensation for "loss of the job". It assessed $0 under that heading, although the Board did increase the award under the heading "time required to find a new job" to take into account the actual amount of time it took her to find the job.

Also see the following cases decided under the former Act with respect to compensation for loss of reasonable expectation of continued employment or "loss of the job":

Emotional Pain and Suffering

This head of damages is intended to compensate for such things as the humiliation and real hurt suffered by a person terminated in violation of the ESA 2000. This head may be considered in all circumstances in which a breach of s. 74 is alleged. Together with compensation for the loss of the reasonable expectation of continued employment, this head of damages is one of the most difficult to quantify. This head of damages is not subject to the duty to mitigate.

Some type of evidence is necessary to support an award of compensation for emotional or mental pain and suffering. In many cases, oral evidence from the employee attesting to their emotional pain and suffering will be adequate to support an award under this heading. In cases where a higher amount of damages is awarded under this heading, evidence in addition to the oral evidence, such as a medical report, may be necessary to support the higher award.

In Rainbow Concrete v Lentir, the claimant provided evidence that he experienced a great deal of emotional pain and suffering as a result of the reprisal, but did not provide any medical evidence. The Board noted that the loss of long-term employment by a functionally illiterate individual with few marketable skills as a result of a baseless allegation of theft presumably gave rise to pain and suffering. The claimant gave evidence that he was extremely depressed, seeking treatment for mental health difficulties and experienced financial difficulties after being terminated, including losing his house and declaring bankruptcy. The Board stated that ordinarily this evidence would give rise to damages in excess of $3000 but this case was complicated because as the claimant was experiencing other problems that may have been factors in his pain and suffering. The Board found that in the absence of medical evidence to distinguish between the causes of the claimant's distress, it was appropriate to simply affirm the ESO's award of $3000 for pain and suffering.

Any consequential physical suffering caused by the emotional pain and suffering should also be considered when making an assessment under this heading. A claimant asserting that they experienced consequential physical suffering should provide some substantiation, such as a medical report.

In Melanie Lamoureaux v. JYSK Linen N Furniture Inc., 2015 CanLII 78257 (ON LRB), the Board awarded $5000 in damages for emotional distress. The Board found that the employer enhanced the employee's distress when it did not inform her that her job had been eliminated when she sought to return to work. The employer's attempt to give the employee the "run around" while it attempted to find her another job exacerbated the harm caused to the employee.

In 169809 Canada Limited o/a Portrait Impressions of Canada (April 16, 1993), ES 93-65 (Alter) the referee awarded 20 per cent of the total compensation awarded for lost wages, car allowance, vacation pay and loss of continued employment, which netted out at $4,942, for emotional pain and suffering. The referee did not refer to any specific facts in support of this amount. In the Program's view, using a percentage formula is not appropriate. On judicial review, the Divisional Court in 169809 Canada Limited o/a Portrait Impressions of Canada, Re, 1995 CanLII 10685 (ON SC) quashed that part of the referee's decision, indicating that an arbitrary percentage formula was not appropriate, and that there should be some evidence before the referee to support an award for mental pain and suffering.

Severance Pay

An award under this heading is considered only if the employee's employment has been severed and the employee will not be ordered reinstated. Severance pay will only be awarded if the employee would qualify for severance pay pursuant to ESA Part XV, s. 64. See for example Rainbow Concrete Industries Limited v Lentir, 2012 CanLII 58233 (ON LRB).This entitlement will be reflected in a s. 103 order for unpaid wages rather than an order for compensation under s. 104. The order made in respect of severance pay is subject to the limitations on recovery under s. 111.

Benefit Plan Entitlements

If an employer has reprised against an employee by discontinuing their participation in a benefit plan, a compensation order could be issued to compensate the employee for any expenses incurred due to the wrongful discontinuance of the plan. Note that in such a case, a compliance order could also be issued, requiring the employer to reinstate the employee's coverage - assuming that reinstatement of coverage is possible in the circumstances. Note as well that if an applicant for employment was reprised against because of their refusal to take a lie detector test (i.e., the employer refused to hire the applicant because they refused a lie detector test), the employment standards officer could issue an order for compensation for any expenses the applicant incurred that would otherwise have been covered by a benefit plan had the employee been hired in addition to an order to hire the employee - see ESA Part XVI, Lie Detectors.

If an employee was terminated contrary to s. 74 and subsequently reinstated, the employee would be entitled to compensation for the benefit plan coverage they would have had between the date of the termination and the date of reinstatement.

An employee whose employment was terminated contrary to s. 74 and in respect of whom a compensation order was made (but no order for reinstatement) would be entitled to compensation for the benefit plan coverage from the date of termination to the earlier of the date the employee found alternative employment or ought to have found alternative employment.

Reasonable Foreseeable Damages

The heads of damages described under headings (1) to (7) above do not constitute an exhaustive list of damages that can be awarded in a compensation order. While they are the usual or most likely categories of award that are assessed, there may be other types of damages that flow directly from a contravention of s. 74 that are reasonable and foreseeable for which it would be appropriate to make an award for damages.

For example, consider the case of a pregnant employee whose employment was unlawfully terminated, in that the termination occurred because she was planning on taking a pregnancy and parental leave. At the time of the termination, the employee had not worked long enough to qualify for maternity and parental benefits under the Employment Insurance Act, although she would have qualified by the date she had planned on beginning her leave. The officer could order an amount under this head of damages that represents the Employment Insurance benefits the employee would have received had she worked long enough to qualify for them.

Method of Calculating an Order

1. Add up all of the employee's losses under items 1 through 8 above. Note that any amounts under items 1, 2(a), 3 - 5, 7 and 8 are assessed as compensation under s. 104 and any amounts under item 2(b) and item 6 are assessed separately as unpaid wages under s. 103.
2. Subtract any sums already received by the employee on account of any of items 1 through 8 above.
    - Note that money received in respect of common law rights to reasonable notice that exceed the amount that would be awarded pursuant to program policy under item 2(b) are subtracted only from that item 2(b) (whether as compensation for time required to find a new job or termination pay in lieu of notice) and not from any other items.
    - Note also that the quantum of an order issued to compensate an employee for an unlawful termination is not reduced by any employment insurance benefits paid to the employee (see Bronson Bakery Ltd v Melo and Scott) recovery of any overpayment with respect to these benefits is the concern of the Canada Employment Insurance Commission, not the Ministry of Labour.
3. Add the greater of $100 or 10 per cent of the amount of the s. 104 order to that order and the greater of $100 or 10 percent to the amount assessed under the s. 103 order (if any) as administration costs.

Limitation Periods

There are two limitation periods that apply with respect to an employee's ability to obtain a remedy under the ESA 2000:

Section 111

This provision limits an employee's ability to recover wages to those that became due within specified periods preceding the date the complaint was filed. Any wages (including vacation pay) that come due on or after that date are recoverable if an employee files a claim for such wages within two years of the date the wages came due.

On February 20, 2015, the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act introduced a number of transitional provisions that imposed a six-month limitation period on unpaid wages that became due before February 20, 2015, and a 12-month limitation period for repeated contraventions and vacation pay that became due before February 20, 2015. Sections 111(3.1) to (8) were repealed on February 20, 2017 in accordance with s. 8(6) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014.

Although these sections are now repealed, it is Program policy that the limitation periods imposed by the transitional provisions continue to apply to wages, repeated contraventions and vacation pay that became due before February 20, 2015, even if any associated orders are issued after February 20, 2017. This is to preserve the vested legal rights of the parties at the time the contravention occurred. This is relevant in situations where a period of time lapses between the time a claim is filed and the time a claim is investigated. For more information, see ESA Part XXII, s. 111.

This provision imposes a two-year limitation period on filing a complaint by stating that a complaint filed more than two years after a contravention has occurred is deemed not to have been filed. Note that there will often be a period of time in between the date an employee engaged in a protected activity and the date the employer imposed a penalty. It is this latter date on which the contravention occurs. The two-year time limit starts to run only once a reprisal has actually been committed, i.e., from the date the employer imposed the penalty.

For example, an employee working for Employer A asserted her right to meal breaks in early 2014. In mid-2014, she resigned to work for Employer B and then in September 2017 applied for a job with Employer C. Employer A was contacted for a reference on September 6, 2017 and gave a negative reference because the employee had asserted her rights to meal breaks while she worked for Employer A. The reprisal occurred on September 6, 2017 and the two-year time limit in s. 96(3) begins to run from that date. The employee will therefore have until September 5, 2019 to file a reprisal claim. For practical purposes, the impact of this provision is limited to complaints in which reinstatement and/or compensation is sought as a remedy. See ESA Part XXII, s. 96(3) for more information.

Application of Limitation Periods

As a result of these two provisions:

- Compensation for damages flowing from a violation of s. 74 will be recoverable so long as the employee files a claim within two years of the contravention. Compensation includes the heads of damages itemized above, i.e., direct earnings loss, time required to find a new job, expenses incurred in seeking new employment, loss of job, emotional pain and suffering, and other reasonable foreseeable expenses.
- Reinstatement of an employee whose employment was terminated in violation of s. 74 is possible so long as the employee files a claim within two years of the contravention.
- Any unpaid wages (including vacation pay) that came due on or after February 20, 2015 are recoverable, so long as the employee files a claim within two years of the date the wages came due.

Example

An employee who commenced pregnancy leave August 1, 2016 was scheduled to return to work on August 1, 2017. The employee was due for a length-of-service-driven pay increase on July 1, 2017, but was on her unpaid leave at that time. The employer unlawfully reprises against the employee by refusing to give the increase upon the employee's return because she was on leave for a year, and advises her that she will not get a pay increase until July 1, 2018. The employee files a claim on March 1, 2018.

The officer determines that the employee was entitled to the pay increase effective July 1, 2017, and that regular pay days on or after August 1, 2017, when she returned to work, should have reflected the increase. Because the employee had worked from August 1, 2017, to the date the claim was filed, the employer should have been paying the employee the higher wage rate and so far as the ESA 2000 is concerned her pay between August 1, 2017, and March 1, 2018, should have reflected that. The employee thus had unpaid wages between those dates equal to the difference between what she should have been paid and what she was paid.

In this case, all of the unpaid wages came due within the two-year period prior to the date the claim was filed and so all are recoverable under the ESA 2000.

Onus of Proof - s. 74(2)

74(2) Subject to subsection 122(4), in any proceeding under this Act, the burden of proof that an employer did not contravene a provision set out in this section lies upon the employer.

Subject to s. 122(4), this provision places the legal burden of proof on the employer in any complaint alleging that the employer or a person acting on behalf of the employer has committed a reprisal contrary to s. 74. The effect of this provision is to require the employer to rebut an employee's claim that they have been reprised against. The employer must establish, on a balance of probabilities, that the employer did not contravene s. 74.

In the Board's decision in Daitch v Respironics Georgia, Inc., 2004 CanLII 12176 (ON LRB) the claimant sought damages on the basis that his employment was terminated as a reprisal for exercising his right under the ESA 2000 to refuse to work on a public holiday. The only evidence before the Ontario Labour Relations Board was that of the claimant and this evidence disclosed that he had been employed by the company, had exercised his right to take the a public holiday as a day off (directly challenging his employer's direction to work that day) and was terminated three months later for reasons the Board described as "vague". The Board concluded that the employer had thereby failed to discharge the statutory burden of proof to show the termination was not a reprisal under s. 74.

In Bari v. 973864 Ontario Inc. o/a the Hosiery Shop, 2004 CanLII 5733 (ON LRB), the Board found that the employer had not discharged the onus to justify a significant reduction in the pregnant employee's hours and ultimate dismissal, despite its claim that declining revenues were the motivating factor for its actions.

But see also D-Zign Interior Planning & Project Management Inc. v. Madariaga, 2006 CanLII 6003 (ON LRB) where the Board found that the employer had discharged the onus in s. 74(2) of establishing that that the decision to terminate the claimant was in no way connected to her pregnancy or eligibility or intention to take a leave under Part XIV of the ESA 2000.

Section 74(2) is subject to s. 122(4), which provides:

122(4) On a review under this section, the onus is on the Director to establish, on a balance of probabilities, that the person against whom the notice of contravention was issued contravened the provision of this Act indicated in the notice.

Section 122(4) states that in a hearing before the Board arising from a review of a notice of contravention, the Director has the burden of proof. Therefore, if a notice of contravention has been issued with respect to a contravention of s. 74 and the person against whom the notice was issued files an application for review of the notice, the onus shifts to the Director of Employment Standards to show, on a balance of probabilities, that the employer contravened s. 74. For a more detailed discussion of s. 122(4), see ESA Part XXIII, s. 122.

ESA Part XVIII.1 - Temporary Help Agencies

The intent of the provisions found in Part XVIII.1 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 is to set out specific obligations and prohibitions relating to temporary help agencies and clients of such agencies and specific rights of assignment employees (and in some cases prospective assignment employees) of temporary help agencies.

These provisions clarify the application of the ESA 2000 public holiday and termination and severance provisions within the context of the temporary help agency/assignment employee employment relationship. Those provisions, particularly those aspects dealing with the concept of lay-off and regular work weeks are difficult to apply where the employment relationship is based upon an agreement to find assignments to perform work and where such work is not performed for the employer directly but for a third party, i.e., the client of a temporary help agency. The modifications ensure that certain rights afforded to other employees are similarly afforded to assignment employees.

These provisions were also intended to extend the anti-reprisal protections for assignment employees by imposing prohibitions against reprisal on agency clients for whom the assignment employee was performing work. Previously, agency clients could, for example, terminate the assignment of any assignment employee for attempting to exercise rights to refuse excess hours of work while on assignment, without any repercussions under the reprisal provisions found in s. 74 of the Act, because the client was not the employee's employer. In such cases, an assignment employee was effectively unable to exercise his or her rights under the Act without protection from reprisal because the reprisal was effected by someone other than the assignment employee's employer.

Additionally, the provisions imposing a proportional liability for certain unpaid wages of the agency's assignment employees on clients of agencies (agencies as the employer remain liable for the full amount) are intended to reflect the fact that in general, a client benefits from the work of the assignment employee in proportion to the number of hours that the employee worked for the client.

The provisions related to prohibitions against fees and restrictions on entering into employment relationships were intended to reduce barriers to assignment employees and prospective assignment employees finding employment with clients of the agencies.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.1 – Interpretation – REPEALED

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.2 - Application

74.2 This Part does not apply in relation to an individual who is an assignment employee assigned to provide professional services, personal support services or homemaking services as defined in the Home Care and Community Services Act, 1994 if the assignment is made under a contract between,

(a) the individual and a community care access corporation within the meaning of the Community Care Access Corporations Act, 2001; or

(b) an employer of the individual and a community care access corporation within the meaning of the Community Care Access Corporations Act, 2001. 2009, c. 9, s. 3; 2016, c. 30, s. 36 (1).

These sections provides that Part XVIII.1 does not apply to assignment employees who are assigned to provide homemaking, personal support and/ or professional services as defined in the Home Care and Community Services Act, 1994 (“HCCSA”) if the assignment is made under a contract between a) the assignment employee or b) his or her employer and a community care access corporation within the meaning of the Community Care Access Corporations Act, 2001, SO 2001, c 33. Clause (a) is meant to cover the situation in which the relationship between an individual providing services referred to in s. 74.2 and a community care access corporation is that of assignment employee and temporary help agency; in other words, the community care access corporation functions as a temporary help agency vis-á-vis the individual. Clause (b) is meant to cover the situation in which a temporary help agency has a contract with a community care access corporation to provide the services of employees and the agency assigns an assignment employee to perform work for the community care access corporation.

The definitions of homemaking services, personal support services and professional services contained in ss. 2(5) - (7) of the HCCSA are set out below:

2(5) For the purpose of this Act, the following are homemaking services:

1. Housecleaning.

2. Doing laundry.

3. Ironing.

4. Mending.

5. Shopping.

6. Banking.

7. Paying bills.

8. Planning menus.

9. Preparing meals.

10. Caring for children.

11. Assisting a person with any of the activities referred to in paragraphs 1 to 10.

12. Training a person to carry out or assist with any of the activities referred to in paragraphs 1 to 10.

13. Providing prescribed equipment, supplies or other goods.

14. Services prescribed as homemaking services.

2(6) For the purpose of this Act, the following are personal support services:

1. Personal hygiene activities.

2. Routine personal activities of living.

3. Assisting a person with any of the activities referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2.

4. Training a person to carry out or assist with any of the activities referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2.

5. Providing prescribed equipment, supplies or other goods.

6. Services prescribed as personal support services.

2(7) For the purpose of this Act, the following are professional services:

1. Nursing services.

2. Occupational therapy services.

3. Physiotherapy services.

4. Social work services.

5. Speech-language pathology services.

6. Dietetics services.

7. Training a person to provide any of the services referred to in paragraphs 1 to 6.

8. Providing prescribed equipment, supplies or other goods.

9. Services prescribed as professional services.

In addition to providing services as described above, the assignment employee or their employer must have a contract for the assignment with a "community care access corporation" continued under the Community Care Access Corporations Act, 2001 or incorporated by regulation made under s. 2(4) of the Community Care Access Corporations Act, 2001.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.2.1 – Assignment Employees

74.2.1 This Part does not apply in relation to an individual who is an assignment employee assigned to provide professional services, personal support services or homemaking services as defined in the Home Care and Community Services Act, 1994 if the assignment is made under a contract between,

(a) the individual and a local health integration network within the meaning of the Local Health System Integration Act, 2006; or

(b) an employer of the individual and a local health integration network within the meaning of the Local Health System Integration Act, 2006. 2016, c. 30, s. 36 (3).

This sections provides that Part XVIII.1 does not apply to assignment employees who are assigned to provide homemaking, personal support and professional services as defined in the HCCSA if the assignment is made under a contract between a local health integration network (“LHIN”) and either the assignment employee or their employer.

Clause (a) is meant to cover the situation in which the relationship between an individual providing services referred to in s. 74.2.1 and a LHIN is that of assignment employee and temporary help agency; in other words, the LHIN functions as a temporary help agency vis-á-vis the individual. Clause (b) is meant to cover the situation in which a temporary help agency has a contract with a LHIN to provide the services of employees and the agency assigns an assignment employee to perform work for the LHIN.

The definitions of homemaking services, personal support services and professional services contained in ss. 2(5) - (7) of the HCCSA are set out below:

2(5) For the purpose of this Act, the following are homemaking services:

1. Housecleaning.

2. Doing laundry.

3. Ironing.

4. Mending.

5. Shopping.

6. Banking.

7. Paying bills.

8. Planning menus.

9. Preparing meals.

10. Caring for children.

11. Assisting a person with any of the activities referred to in paragraphs 1 to 10.

12. Training a person to carry out or assist with any of the activities referred to in paragraphs 1 to 10.

13. Providing prescribed equipment, supplies or other goods.

14. Services prescribed as homemaking services.

2(6) For the purpose of this Act, the following are personal support services:

1. Personal hygiene activities.

2. Routine personal activities of living.

3. Assisting a person with any of the activities referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2.

4. Training a person to carry out or assist with any of the activities referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2.

5. Providing prescribed equipment, supplies or other goods.

6. Services prescribed as personal support services.

2(7) For the purpose of this Act, the following are professional services:

1. Nursing services.

2. Occupational therapy services.

3. Physiotherapy services.

4. Social work services.

5. Speech-language pathology services.

6. Dietetics services.

7. Training a person to provide any of the services referred to in paragraphs 1 to 6.

8. Providing prescribed equipment, supplies or other goods.

9. Services prescribed as professional services.

In addition to providing services as described above, the assignment employee or their employer must have a contract for the assignment with a LHIN as defined in the Local Health System Integration Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 4 ("LHSIA"). Section 2(1) of the LHSIA defines a local health integration network as follows:

"local health integration network" means a corporation that is continued under subsection 3 (1) or incorporated by regulation under subsection 3 (3);

Section 3(1) of the LHSIA provides a list of corporations continued as LHINS:

- Central Local Health Integration Network;
- Central East Local Health Integration Network;
- Central West Local Health Integration Network;
- Champlain Local Health Integration Network;
- Erie St. Clair Local Health Integration Network;
- Hamilton Niagara Haldimand Brant Local Health Integration Network;
- Mississauga Halton Local Health Integration Network;
- North East Local Health Integration Network;
- North Simcoe Muskoka Local Health Integration Network;
- North West Local Health Integration Network;
- South East Local Health Integration Network;
- South West Local Health Integration Network;
- Toronto Central Local Health Integration Network; and
- Waterloo Wellington Local Health Integration Network.

Note that this list is not exhaustive and that other LHINs may be incorporated pursuant to regulation as per s. 3(3) of the LHSIA.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.3 - Employment Relationship

74.3 Where a temporary help agency and a person agree, whether or not in writing, that the agency will assign or attempt to assign the person to perform work on a temporary basis for clients or potential clients of the agency,

(a) the temporary help agency is the person's employer;

(b) the person is an employee of the temporary help agency.

This section provides that an employment relationship exists between a temporary help agency and a person at the point that they agree (whether or not in writing) that the agency will assign or attempt to assign the person to perform work on a temporary basis for clients or potential clients. It is the existence of such an agreement that establishes the employment relationship.

Whether there is or is not such an agreement is a question of fact. Arguably, if a temporary help agency is simply receiving unsolicited resumes that have been forwarded to the agency, this is not, on its own, evidence that the agency has agreed to assign or attempt to assign the individual to perform work on a temporary basis for clients.

An agreement in writing to that effect would clearly demonstrate that an employment relationship existed between the parties but the agency's agreement may also be expressed by the actions of the agency rather than in writing. For example, agreement would be demonstrated by an attempt by the agency to match the individual who had submitted a resume with a client.

A person does not have to be assigned to perform work for a client of the agency in order for there to be an employment relationship with the agency. The employment relationship is established by the agreement between the parties and not whether the employee is assigned to perform work for a client of the agency. As a result, it is not necessary for an employee's first assignment (if any) to begin on the date of hire. On this point see the discussion of ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.4(3).

Work Assignment - s. 74.4(1)

74.4(1) An assignment employee of a temporary help agency is assigned to perform work for a client if the agency arranges for the employee to perform work for a client on a temporary basis and the employee performs such work for the client.

This section provides that an assignment employee of a temporary help agency is assigned to perform work for a client (i.e., is on a work assignment) if the agency arranged for the employee to perform work for the client on a temporary basis and the employee is performing the work. As noted in the definition of assignment employee in ESA Part I, s. 1, the Program's position is that "work on a temporary basis" would obviously include a short term assignment but would also include long term or open ended placements with a client. The work is considered to be temporary because there is no permanent placement with the client; the assignment employee continues to be the employee of the agency and not the client throughout the period of the assignment.

In addition, pursuant to ESA Part I, s. 1(2), an assignment employee is assigned to perform work for a client if the employee is assigned to receive training from the client for the purposes of performing work for that client.

Same - s. 74.4(2)

74.4(2) Where an assignment employee is assigned by a temporary help agency to perform work for a client of the agency, the assignment begins on the first day on which the assignment employee performs work under the assignment and ends at the end of the term of the assignment or when the assignment is ended by the agency, the employee or the client.

This provision clarifies that a work assignment begins on the first day the employee performs work pursuant to the assignment and ends when the term of the assignment ends (where a term of the assignment has been established) or alternatively, when the assignment is ended by the agency, the assignment employee or the client.

For example, an assignment employee accepts an offer of a work assignment from the agency on June 15 and commences performing work for the client under that assignment on June 18. If the terms of the assignment stipulated that the assignment ended on September 15, the assignment would begin June 18 and end on September 15, assuming the employee actually ceased performing work for the client of the agency on that day. If however, the client terminated the assignment on August 21, the assignment would end on that earlier date. Alternatively, if the employee continued to perform work for the client after September 15, e.g., to November 1, the assignment would end on November 1.

Same - s. 74.4(3)

74.4(3) An assignment employee of a temporary help agency does not cease to be the agency's assignment employee because,

(a) he or she is assigned by the agency to perform work for a client on a temporary basis; or

(b) he or she is not assigned by the agency to perform work for a client on a temporary basis.

This provision clarifies that an assignment employee's employment relationship with a temporary help agency is not ended because the employee is, or is not, on an assignment to perform temporary work for a client of the agency.

The employment relationship is established pursuant to ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.3 by a temporary help agency and a person having agreed that the agency will assign or will attempt to assign the person to perform work for a client or potential clients on a temporary basis.

Section 74.4(3) clarifies that being, or not being, on assignment is not the determining factor in ending the employment relationship. Once the employment relationship is established, it will continue whether or not the employee is on assignment and despite gaps between assignments unless the employment relationship is terminated and/or severed.

It should be noted however that a termination or severance of the employment relationship may be triggered by a lay-off lasting a certain number of weeks within a specified period of consecutive weeks. See the discussion at ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.11.

Same - s. 74.4(4)

74.4(4) An assignment employee of a temporary help agency is not assigned to perform work for a client because the agency has,

(a) provided the client with the employee's resume;

(b) arranged for the client to interview the employee; or

(c) otherwise introduced the employee to the client.

This subsection clarifies that an assignment employee is not on a work assignment simply because the agency has provided the client with the assignment employee's resume, arranged for the client to interview the employee or otherwise introduced the client to the assignment employee.

Although the agency may do any or all of these things, unless the agency has arranged for the employee to perform work for a client on a temporary basis and the employee is performing such work, the assignment employee is not on assignment per s. 74.4(1).

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.4.1 - Agency to Keep Records re: Work for Client

Agency to Keep Records Re Work for Client - s. 74.4.1(1)

74.4.1(1) In addition to the information that an employer is required to record under Part VI, a temporary help agency shall,

(a) record the number of hours worked by each assignment employee for each client of the agency in each day and each week; and

(b) retain a copy of any written notice provided to an assignment employee under subsection 74.10.1 (1).

This provision requires temporary help agencies to maintain records of the hours worked by their assignment employees in each day and week for each client of the agency and retain a copy of any written notice provided to an assignment employee under ESA s. 74.10.1(1). Corresponding client record keeping obligations with respect to maintaining records of hours worked in each day and each week are set out in s. 74.4.2.

The record keeping obligations in clause (a) were added because of the client joint and several liability for certain unpaid wages of the agency's assignment employees, which is based upon the proportional number of hours worked for each client in any particular pay period, introduced by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014, SO 2014, c 10. The record keeping obligations in clause (b) were added because of the new provision requiring notice of termination of assignment introduced by the Fair Workplaces Better Jobs Act, 2017. See the discussion at ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.18 and ESA Part XVIII.1, s.74.10.1.

For a discussion of an employer's general obligations to make and retain records with respect to hours of work see ESA Part VI. Note that there is no provision in s. 74.4.1 that corresponds to the exception regarding records of hours for salaried employees as set out in ESA Part VI, s. 15(3).

Retention of Records - s. 74.4.1(2)

74.4.1(2) The temporary help agency shall retain or arrange for some other person to retain the records required under subsection (1) for three years after the day or week to which the information relates.

Under this section, a temporary help agency must retain the records required under s. 74.4.1(1) or arrange for another person to retain them for three years. The retention period is the same as the three year period for retaining records regarding hours of work under ESA Part VI, s. 15(5) paragraph 3.

Availability - s. 74.4.1(3)

74.4.1(3) The temporary help agency shall ensure that the records required to be retained under this section are readily available for inspection as required by an employment standards officer, even if the agency has arranged for another person to retain them.

If the agency makes arrangements for another person, such as a bookkeeper or accountant, to retain the records made under s. 74.4.1(1), it is the agency's responsibility to ensure that the records are readily available for inspection by an employment standards officer. This provision is similar to ESA Part VI, s. 16, which requires that records that must be retained under ESA Part VI, ss. 15 and 15.1.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.4.2 - Client to Keep Records re: Work for Client

Client to Keep Records Re Work for Client – s. 74.4.2(1)

74.4.2(1) A client of a temporary help agency shall record the number of hours worked by each assignment employee assigned to perform work for the client in each day and each week.

The Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014 added this provision to the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

This provision requires clients of temporary help agencies to maintain records of the hours of work performed for the client, by each assignment employee of the agency, in each day and each week. Corresponding temporary help agency record keeping obligations are set out in ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.4.1.

These new record keeping obligations were added because of the joint and several liability imposed on clients for certain unpaid wages owing to assignment employees that came into force on November 20, 2015 pursuant to ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.18.

74.4.2(2) The client shall retain or arrange for some other person to retain the records required under subsection (1) for three years after the day or week to which the information relates.

Under this section, a client of a temporary help agency must retain the records required under s. 74.4.2(1) or arrange for another person to retain them for three years. The retention period is the same as the three year period for retaining records regarding hours of work under paragraph 3 of ESA Part VI, s. 15(5).

74.4.2(3) The client shall ensure that the records required to be retained under this section are readily available for inspection as required by an employment standards officer, even if the client has arranged for another person to retain them.

If the client makes arrangements for another person, such as a bookkeeper or accountant, to retain the records made under s. 74.4.2(1), it is the client's responsibility to ensure that the records are readily available for inspection by an employment standards officer. This provision is similar to ESA Part VI, s. 16, which requires that records that must be retained under ESA Part VI, s. 15 and s. 15.1 and must be readily available for inspection.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.5 - Information re Agency

Information Re Agency - s. 74.5(1)

74.5(1) As soon as possible after a person becomes an assignment employee of a temporary help agency, the agency shall provide the following information, in writing, to the employee:

1. The legal name of the agency, as well as any operating or business name of the agency if different from the legal name.

2. Contact information for the agency, including address, telephone number and one or more contact names.

This section imposes an obligation on a temporary help agency to provide information about the agency to its assignment employee as soon as possible after entering into an employment relationship with him or her as an assignment employee. The agency must provide, in writing, the legal name and any operating name or business name if different than the legal name. The agency is also required to provide an address, telephone number and at least one contact name for the agency.

What is "as soon as possible" will depend upon the circumstances.

This section requires that the information be provided to the assignment employee "in writing". Program policy is that an electronic agreement may constitute an agreement "in writing" under the Employment Standards Act, 2000. For further discussion of "agreements in writing" see ESA Part I, s. 1. As a consequence, the Program's position is that an agency would be in compliance with this section if the information in s. 74.5(1) was provided in an electronic document. It may therefore be provided by electronic mail, if the employer ensures the employee has convenient access to e-mail and can easily print the document. In addition, even though it is not sent personally in any format to the employee, the Program takes the position that the agency will be complying with this requirement if the employer ensures the employee has convenient access to an electronic version of the document (and knows how to access it) and a printer (and knows how to use it). In the latter case, simply providing an employee with a website address would be insufficient to meet the requirement to provide the information in writing.

Transition - s. 74.5(2)

74.5(2) Where a person is an assignment employee of a temporary help agency on the day this section comes into force, the agency shall, as soon as possible after that day, provide the information required by subsection (1), in writing, to the employee.

Section 74.5(2) requires an agency to provide the information in s. 74.5(1) to those of its assignment employees already in the agency's employ on the day the amendments made under the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9 came into force (November 6, 2009). Such employees must be provided with the information (in writing), as soon as possible after November 6, 2009.

What is "as soon as possible" will depend upon the circumstances.

Because the intent of this provision is to ensure that assignment employees who were hired before s. 74.5(1) came into force, receive the information about the agency specified in that provision, the Program's position is that an agency that provided this information prior to November 6, 2009 would be in compliance with s. 74.5(2) so long as the information is still accurate on November 6, 2009 and the employee still has a copy of it.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.6 - Information Re Assignment

Information Re Assignment - s. 74.6(1)

74.6(1) A temporary help agency shall provide the following information when offering a work assignment with a client to an assignment employee:

1. The legal name of the client, as well as any operating or business name of the client if different from the legal name.

2. Contact information for the client, including address, telephone number and one or more contact names.

3. The hourly or other wage rate or commission, as applicable, and benefits associated with the assignment.

4. The hours of work associated with the assignment.

5. A general description of the work to be performed on the assignment.

6. The pay period and pay day established by the agency in accordance with subsection 11 (1).

7. The estimated term of the assignment, if the information is available at the time of the offer.

This section imposes an obligation on a temporary help agency when offering a work assignment with a client to an assignment employee, to provide certain information about the client and the assignment to the assignment employee. In accordance with s. 74.6(2) the information may initially be provided orally, but must subsequently be provided in writing as soon as possible after offering the assignment.

In accordance with s. 74.6(1), the agency must provide the client's legal name and any operating name or business name if different than the legal name. The agency is also required to provide an address, telephone number and at least one contact name for the client.

In addition, the agency must provide information about the assignment itself as follows:

- Hourly wage rate or other wage rate or commission as applicable and benefits associated with the assignment;
- Hours of work associated with the assignment;
    - Program policy is that this would include both daily and weekly hours of work.
- General description of the work to be performed on the assignment;
- Pay period and pay day as established by the agency in accordance with s. 11(1) of the ESA – see ESA Part V s. 11 for more information regarding the establishment of a pay day and pay period; and
- The estimated term of the assignment if that information is available when the offer is made.

Same - s. 74.6(2)

74.6(2) If information required by subsection (1) is provided orally to the assignment employee, the temporary help agency shall also provide the information to the assignment employee in writing, as soon as possible after offering the work assignment.

This subsection must be read in conjunction with s. 74.6(1), which lists information regarding the client and work assignment that must be provided to an assignment employee at the time the work assignment is offered. Section 74.6(2) provides that if the information is provided orally, it must subsequently be provided, in writing, as soon as possible after the offer was made. Note that the requirement to provide this information in writing is not relieved even if the assignment employee refused the offer after being provided with the information orally.

What is "as soon as possible" will depend upon the circumstances.

This section requires that the information be provided to the assignment employee "in writing". Program policy is that an electronic agreement may constitute an agreement "in writing" under the Employment Standards Act, 2000. For further discussion of "agreements in writing" see ESA Part I, s. 1. As a consequence, the Program's position is that an agency would be in compliance with this section if the information in s. 74.6(1) was provided in an electronic document. It may therefore be provided by electronic mail, if the employer ensures the employee has convenient access to e-mail and can easily print the document. In addition, even though it is not sent personally in any format to the employee, the Program takes the position that the agency will be complying with this requirement if the employer ensures the employee has convenient access to an electronic version of the document (and knows how to access it) and a printer (and knows how to use it). In the latter case, simply providing an employee with a website address would be insufficient to meet the requirement to provide the information in writing.

74.6(3) Where an assignment employee is on a work assignment with a client of a temporary help agency or has been offered such an assignment on the day this section comes into force, the agency shall, as soon as possible after that day, provide the information required by subsection (1), in writing, to the employee.

Section 74.6(3) requires that an agency provide the information required by s. 74.6(1) to those of its assignment employees who were offered or who were on a work assignment on November 6, 2009, the day the amendments made under the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9 came into force. Such employees must be provided with the information (in writing), as soon as possible after November 6, 2009.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.7 - Information, Rights Under This Act

Information, Rights Under This Act - s. 74.7(1)

74.7(1) The Director shall prepare and publish a document providing such information about the rights and obligations of assignment employees, temporary help agencies and clients under this Part as the Director considers appropriate.

Section 74.7(1) provides that the Director of Employment Standards shall prepare and publish a document that provides information about the rights and obligations of assignment employees, temporary help agencies and clients as the Director considers appropriate.

At the time of writing, the document prepared pursuant to this section is entitled "Your Employment Standards Rights: Temporary Help Agency Assignment Employees." The document is available from Publications Ontario or can be downloaded from the Ministry of Labour's website.

Same - s. 74.7(2)

74.7(2) If the Director believes that a document prepared under subsection (1) has become out of date, the Director shall prepare and publish a new document.

This subsection provides that if the Director believes that the document published under s. 74.7(1) regarding rights and obligations under Part XVIII.1 of the Act is out of date, he or she will prepare and publish a new document.

Same - s. 74.7(3)

74.7(3) As soon as possible after a person becomes an assignment employee of a temporary help agency, the agency shall provide a copy of the most recent document published by the Director under this section to the employee.

This section imposes an obligation on a temporary help agency to provide a copy of the most recent version of the document published by the Director under s. 74.7(1) to its assignment employee as soon as possible after the person becomes an assignment employee of the temporary help agency.

The employer may provide the document as a paper copy or electronically. If the document is made available by access to an internet database, the employer must ensure the employee has reasonable access to the database and a printer and knows how to use the computer and the printer. The document may also be sent to the employee by electronic mail although the employer will again be responsible for ensuring the employee has access to the means of making a paper copy.

What is "as soon as possible" will depend upon the circumstances.

74.7(4) If the language of an assignment employee is a language other than English, the temporary help agency shall make enquiries as to whether the Director has prepared a translation of the document into that language and, if the Director has done so, the agency shall also provide a copy of the translation to the employee.

This section states that where the language of an assignment employee is a language other than English, the employer is required to inquire as to whether the Director has prepared a translation of the document published under s. 74.7(1) into that language. If a translation of the document into that language has been prepared, the agency is required to provide a copy of that translation together with the English version to the assignment employee.

74.7(5) Where a person is an assignment employee of a temporary help agency on the day this section comes into force, the agency shall, as soon as possible after that day, provide the document required by subsection (3) and, where applicable, by subsection (4), to the employee.

Section 74.7(5) requires an agency to provide the document as required under s. 74.7(3) to those of its assignment employees already in the agency's employ on November 6, 2009, the day the amendments made under the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9 came into force. Such employees must be provided with the most recent copy of the document published under s. 74.7(3) and if applicable, and if it is available at that time, a translation in accordance with s. 74.7(4), as soon as possible after November 6, 2009.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.8 – Prohibitions

Prohibitions – s. 74.8(1)

74.8(1) A temporary help agency is prohibited from doing any of the following:

1. Charging a fee to an assignment employee in connection with him or her becoming an assignment employee of the agency.
2. Charging a fee to an assignment employee in connection with the agency assigning or attempting to assign him or her to perform work on a temporary basis for clients or potential clients of the agency.
3. Charging a fee to an assignment employee of the agency in connection with assisting or instructing him or her on preparing resumes or preparing for job interviews.
4. Restricting an assignment employee of the agency from entering into an employment relationship with a client.
5. Charging a fee to an assignment employee of the agency in connection with a client of the agency entering into an employment relationship with him or her.
6. Restricting a client from providing references in respect of an assignment employee of the agency.
7. Restricting a client from entering into an employment relationship with an assignment employee.
8. Charging a fee to a client in connection with the client entering into an employment relationship with an assignment employee, except as permitted by subsection (2).
9. Charging a fee that is prescribed as prohibited.
10. Imposing a restriction that is prescribed as prohibited

This section prohibits temporary help agencies ("THAs") from:

- Charging certain fees to assignment employees - paras. 1, 2, 3 and 5;
- Charging certain fees to clients subject to the exception set out in s. 74.8(2) - para. 8;
- Imposing restrictions on assignment employees with respect to entering into employment relationships with clients and vice versa - paras. 4 and 7;
- Imposing restrictions on clients with respect to providing references for assignment employees - para. 6;
- Charging any other fees or imposing any other restrictions that are prescribed by regulation as prohibited (none at time of writing) - paras. 9 and 10.

This section must also be read in conjunction with s. 74.8(4) which provides that references to assignment employee within this section include a prospective assignment employee. These prohibitions will therefore apply to prospective assignment employees where the circumstances or context would allow.

In addition, because the definition of employee in ESA Part I, s. 1 includes a person who was an employee, the prohibitions and restrictions in s. 74.8 would apply with respect to an individual who was previously an assignment employee of an agency. For example, an agency could not impose a restriction that would restrict a client of the agency from entering into an employment relationship with former employees of the agency or vice versa.

Note that where an agency contravenes certain provisions of s. 74.8, new order making powers within Part XVIII.1 are available in addition to the enforcement tools in ESA Part XXII and prosecution under ESA Part XXV. See ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.14 to s. 74.17.

Prohibited Fees to Assignment Employees

Under paragraphs 1, 2, 3 and 5, agencies cannot charge fees to assignment employees in connection with becoming an assignment employee, obtaining work assignments, entering into an employment relationship with a client of the agency, or for assistance in preparing resumes or preparing for job interviews.

Fees in connection with becoming an assignment employee

Any fee associated with a person and an agency agreeing to enter into an employment relationship is prohibited under para. 1 of s. 74.8(1). An employment relationship is defined in the context of assignment employees and temporary help agencies under ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.3 as an agreement (whether or not in writing) that the agency will assign or attempt to assign the person to perform work on a temporary basis for clients or potential clients of the agency.

Because the prohibitions in s. 74.8 apply with respect to prospective assignment employees as well as assignment employees, the prohibition in para. 1 applies whether or not there is actually an employment relationship between the person and the agency when the fee is charged.

An agency would therefore be prohibited from charging a fee to a person when that person inquires about signing on with the agency for the purposes of the agency attempting to place them with clients for temporary work. An agency would be likewise prohibited from charging a fee for taking applications, interviewing, or otherwise considering a person for employment as an assignment employee.

Fees in connection with the agency assigning or attempting to assign work

Pursuant to paragraph 2, any fee charged to an assignment employee with respect to assigning or attempting to assign the employee to perform work on a temporary basis for clients is prohibited. For example, an agency would be prohibited from charging a fee to an assignment employee for sending them to interviews with clients for possible work assignments or when a work assignment was offered or accepted.

Fees in connection with assistance or instruction preparing resumes or for job interviews

Pursuant to paragraph 3, agencies are prohibited from charging assignment employees for any assistance or instruction with respect to preparing resumes or preparing for job interviews. Where such services are provided to assignment employees (whether optional or mandatory) they must therefore be provided free of charge.

Generally, an agency would not be prohibited from charging fees for services related to resume preparation and job interview preparation in relation to persons other than assignment employees. However, because s. 74.8(4) provides that references to assignment employees within s. 74.8 include prospective assignment employees, the fact no employment relationship exists between the person and the agency at the time the service is provided or the fee charged, is not the determining factor when considering whether the fee is prohibited. In such situations it would be necessary to determine whether the person was a prospective assignment employee - see the discussion regarding prospective assignment employees in s. 74.8(4).

Fees in connection with a client entering into employment relationship

Pursuant to paragraph 5, agencies are prohibited from charging any fees in connection with an assignment employee entering into an employment relationship with a client of the agency. As a result, where an assignment employee is offered a position as an employee of the client, they cannot be required to pay the agency any fee in connection with the offer or acceptance of that offer.

Prohibited Fees to Agency Clients

Under paragraph 8, agencies cannot charge fees to a client of the agency in connection with the client entering into an employment relationship with an assignment employee, except as permitted under s. 74.8(2). The prohibition in para. 8 is similar to that in paragraph 5 except that the agency is prohibited in the latter case from charging the fees to an assignment employee in connection with entering into an employment relationship with a client of an agency.

Because s. 74.8(4) provides that references to assignment employees within s. 74.8 include prospective assignment employees, the prohibition against charging a fee also applies even though no employment relationship exists between the person and the agency at the time the client of the agency and the person (prospective assignment employee) enter into an employment relationship. See the discussion regarding prospective assignment employees in s. 74.8(4).

Prohibited Restrictions with Respect to Assignment Employees

Under paragraph 4, agencies are prohibited from restricting an assignment employee of the agency from entering into an employment relationship with a client of the agency. This provision prevents agencies from incorporating terms into an agreement with an assignment employee that would in any way prevent or restrict their ability to enter into an employment relationship with a client of the agency.

Prohibited Restrictions with Respect to Agency Clients

No restrictions on clients providing references

Pursuant to paragraph 6, agencies are prohibited from imposing any restrictions on a client that would restrict the client’s ability to provide an assignment employee of the agency with a reference. Whether the assignment employee was seeking employment with another client of the agency, another agency or an employer with no connection to the agency, the agency is prohibited from restricting the client’s ability to provide the assignment employee with a reference.

No restrictions on clients entering into employment relationships

Paragraph 7 prevents agencies from incorporating terms into an agreement with a client that would in any way prevent or restrict their ability to enter into an employment relationship with an assignment employee of the agency. It is the converse of the prohibition on restrictions on an assignment employee entering into an employment relationship with a client of an agency as set out in paragraph 4. This prohibition prevents an agency from restricting a client from hiring the agency’s assignment employees, whether or not such employees had ever been assigned to perform work for that client.

In addition, because s. 74.8(4) provides that references to assignment employees within s. 74.8 include prospective assignment employees, the prohibition in paragraph 7 applies to prohibit an agency from attempting to restrict a client from entering into an employment relationship with a prospective assignment employee; that is, where no employment relationship exists as yet between the person and the agency.

Prohibited fees and restrictions as prescribed by regulation

Paragraphs 9 and 10 prohibit fees and restrictions as prescribed by regulation. At the time of writing, no fees or restrictions were prescribed.

Exception, par. 8 of subs. (1) – s. 74.8(2)

74.8(2) Where an assignment employee has been assigned by a temporary help agency to perform work on a temporary basis for a client and the employee has begun to perform the work, the agency may charge a fee to the client in the event that the client enters into an employment relationship with the employee, but only during the six-month period beginning on the day on which the employee first began to perform work for the client of the agency.

Under para. 8 of s. 74.8(1), THAs are prohibited from charging fees to a client in connection with the client entering into an employment relationship with an assignment employee except as permitted under this subsection.

Subsection 74.8(2) states the agency may charge a fee to the client in the event the client enters into an employment relationship with the assignment employee, but only where an assignment employee has been assigned to perform work on a temporary basis for that client by the agency (and the employee has begun to perform the work) and the fee is charged within the six-month period beginning on the first day on which the employee began to perform work for the client.

The Program's position is that under some circumstances, the fact that the fee is paid or collected outside the six-month period does not necessarily mean it is not permitted under s. 74.8(2). The question is, when was the fee charged?

For example, assume a contract clearly states that the client will be charged a particular fee, forthwith, if it hires an assignment employee within the six-month period beginning on the first day on which its assignment employee was assigned and began to perform work for the client. If the client does enter into an employment relationship with an assignment employee within that six-month period the fee may, depending on all the circumstances, be considered to have been charged at that time and may be permitted under s. 74.8(2), whether or not it was actually paid or collected within the six-month period.

If an assignment employee was assigned to perform work for a client and began performing the work on May 1, the agency could subsequently charge the client a fee for hiring that assignment employee directly, but only if the client hired the assignment employee before November 1 and the agency charged its fee within that same six-month period. The length of the original assignment and/or whether there was more than one assignment during that period is not relevant to the agency's ability to charge the fee.

If an assignment employee had never been assigned to perform work for a particular client by the agency and was hired directly by that client, the exception in s. 74.8(2) would have no application and the agency would be prohibited pursuant to para. 8 of s. 74.8(1) from charging a fee to the client.

Note that ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.15 provides that if a temporary help agency charges a fee to a client in contravention of paragraph 8 or 9 of s. 74.8(1), the client may recover the amount of the fee in a court of competent jurisdiction.

Same – s. 74.8(3)

74.8(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), the six-month period runs regardless of the duration of the assignment or assignments by the agency of the assignment employee to work for the client and regardless of the amount or timing of work performed by the assignment employee.

The six-month period during which the agency may charge a fee to a client runs from the first day that an assignment employee who is assigned by the agency to perform temporary work for the client begins to perform work for that client. The six-month period runs from that date regardless of the length of the first assignment or any subsequent assignments as well as the amount or timing of any work performed by the assignment employee.

For example, employee B was given an assignment by agency A to perform work on a temporary basis for client C commencing February 1, 2010 and ending December 1, 2010. This was the very first time employee B was ever assigned by agency A to perform work for client C. If B was reassigned to perform work for C in January 2011 and C chose to enter into an employment relationship directly with B in March 2011, A would be prohibited from charging C a fee for doing so. The six-month period during which the agency A was permitted to charge a fee ended six months after B first began to perform work for client C (i.e., the six-month period ended on July 31, 2010).

As another example, agency A assigns employee B to perform temporary work for the very first time with client C on February 1, 2010. The assignment was "part-time" (only 24 hours per week) and ended on February 26. Agency A did not assign B to perform work for client C again. On September 1, 2010, the client entered into an employment relationship directly with B. The agency could not charge C a fee for doing so because the six-month period during which the agency A was permitted to charge a fee ended six months after B first began to perform work for client C (i.e., it ended on July 31, 2010).

Again, the six-month period within which the agency could charge a fee begins on the date the employee is assigned and first begins to perform work for the client of the agency regardless of the duration of the first assignment and whether or not there were any subsequent assignments prior to the client and assignment employee entering into the employment relationship. The hours of work or amount of work associated with the first and any subsequent assignments are not a consideration in the timing of the six-month period.

74.8(4) In this section, "assignment employee" includes a prospective assignment employee.

Under this subsection, references to assignment employee within s. 74.8 include a prospective assignment employee. As a result, the prohibitions against charging certain fees and prohibitions against imposing restrictions on clients and assignment employees from entering into employment relationships with one another, as well as restrictions that would prevent clients from providing references for assignment employees are also applicable as context or circumstances require, to prospective assignment employees.

Although ESA Part I, s. 1 defines assignment employee as an employee employed by a temporary help agency for the purpose of being assigned to perform work on temporary basis for clients of the agency, the ESA 2000 does not define prospective assignment employee.

It is the Program's position that where an agency may consider, is considering or has considered entering into an employment relationship as defined in ESA Part XVIII.I, s. 74.3 with an individual, that individual will be considered a prospective assignment employee for the purposes of the prohibitions in s. 74.8.

Evidence that would support a determination that an agency may consider, is considering or has considered entering into an employment relationship with an individual could include:

- Inviting an individual to fill out a job application or to leave a resume with the agency
- Reviewing a resume or job application (whether solicited or not) in order to assess the individual's suitability for employment with the agency
- Inviting an individual to attend a job interview
- Making an offer (whether in writing or orally) to enter into an employment relationship with the agency (i.e., for the purposes of assigning or attempting to assign the individual to perform work on a temporary basis for client(s) of the agency.)

As the effect of s. 74.8(4) is to extend the prohibitions in s. 74.8 in relation to prospective assignment employees, fees or restrictions could be charged to or imposed with respect to persons who were neither assignment employees nor prospective assignment employees. As a result, an agency could offer resume writing services or job interview services to persons other than assignment employees or prospective assignment employees and not be in violation of s. 74.8. However, whether an individual is a prospective assignment employee will depend upon whether the evidence shows that the agency intended to enter or considered entering into an employment relationship with the individual at the time the otherwise prohibited fee was charged or restriction imposed.

For example, an individual might seek assistance in preparing a resume from an agency that provides such services both independently and as part of its operation as a temporary help agency. If the individual paid a fee for the assistance received, the fee would not be prohibited if the individual was neither an assignment employee nor a prospective assignment employee. If the parties had not entered into an employment relationship as defined in ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.3 at that time, the individual would clearly not be an assignment employee. But, if the evidence showed that the agency's intention was to hold the individual's resume for the purposes of reviewing it and possibly offering an assignment to that individual at a later date, it would be open, depending upon all the other facts before the officer, for that officer to conclude that the individual was a prospective assignment employee at the time the fees had been charged and to issue an order under ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.14 to recover the prohibited fees.

Finally, as noted above, s. 74.8(4) will apply to prohibit charging certain fees and imposing certain restrictions with respect to prospective assignment employees in addition to assignment employees, as context or circumstances require. For example, the prohibition in para. 1 of s. 74.8(1) readily applies to prospective assignment employees as it prohibits fees being charged to an individual in connection with becoming an assignment employee. As a result, an agency would be prohibited from charging a fee for submitting an application for employment or a resume, or attending a job interview, regardless of whether or not the individual was ultimately offered or accepted an offer of employment.

On the other hand, the prohibition in paragraph 6 of s. 74.8(1) against restricting a client from providing a reference for an assignment employee of the agency would not under ordinary circumstances apply to prospective assignment employees. Presumably, in order for the client to be in a position to provide a reference, the individual would have to have been assigned by the agency to perform work for the client. Thus, the individual would have to be an assignment employee of the agency.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.9 - Void Provisions

Void Provisions - s. 74.9(1)

74.9(1) A provision in an agreement between a temporary help agency and an assignment employee of the agency that is inconsistent with section 74.8 is void.

This section provides that any provision in an agreement between a temporary help agency and an assignment employee that are inconsistent with s. 74.8 (e.g., charges a prohibited fee as per paras. 1,2,3 or 5 of s. 74.8(1) or imposes a prohibited restriction as per para. 4 of s. 74.8(1) is void. Under s. 74.9(4), this provision also applies with respect to agreements between a temporary help agency and a "prospective assignment employee." See the discussion in ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.8(4).

Same - s. 74.9(2)

74.9(2) A provision in an agreement between a temporary help agency and a client that is inconsistent with section 74.8 is void.

This section provides that any provision in an agreement between a temporary help agency and client that is inconsistent with s. 74.8 (e.g. charges a prohibited fee as per s. 74.8(1) para. 8 or imposes a prohibited restriction as per s. 74.8(1) paras. 6 or 7) is void.

Transition - s. 74.9(3)

74.9(3) Subsections (1) and (2) apply to provisions regardless of whether the agreement was entered into before or after the date on which section 74.8 comes into force.

Under this provision, terms of agreements between agencies and assignment employees or between agencies and their clients that are inconsistent with s. 74.8 are void, whether the agreement was entered into before the date these amendments to the Employment Standards Act, 2000 came into force (November 6, 2009) or after that date.

However, where such terms existed in an agreement prior to November 6, 2009 and fees were actually charged and/or restrictions imposed prior to that date; no order could issue under s. 74.14 with respect to those fees and no order could issue under s. 74.16 for losses suffered with respect to those restrictions as neither the fees nor the restrictions were prohibited until November 6, 2009.

Interpretation - s. 74.9(4)

74.9(4) In this section, "assignment employee" includes a prospective assignment employee.

Under this provision, the reference to "assignment employee" in subsection 74.9 includes a prospective assignment employee. As a result, a term in an agreement between an agency and a prospective assignment employee that, for example, required the prospective assignment employee to pay a fee to become an assignment employee of the agency, (e.g. entering into an agreement for the purposes of the agency assigning or attempting to assign the person to perform work for clients or potential clients of the agency), would be void. Such a term would be void regardless of whether the agreement was entered into before or after November 6, 2009, the date on which s. 74.9 came into force.

See the discussion of the term "prospective assignment employee" in ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.8(4).

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.10 - Public Holiday Pay

Public Holiday Pay - s. 74.10(1)

74.10(1) For the purposes of determining entitlement to public holiday pay under subsection 29(2.1), an assignment employee of a temporary help agency is on a layoff on a public holiday if the public holiday falls on a day on which the employee is not assigned by the agency to perform work for a client of the agency.

Subsection 74.10(1) clarifies the application of s. 29(2.1) of the Act as it applies to most assignment employees of temporary help agencies, by providing that a lay-off for the purposes of that section means a day on which the assignment employee is not on an assignment to perform temporary work for a client of the agency. The provisions that clarify what constitutes a layoff for the purposes of determining entitlements to notice of termination/termination pay in lieu of notice and/or severance pay for assignment employees in s. 74.11 are not relevant when determining public holiday entitlements for assignment employees pursuant to s. 29(2.1).

Note that pursuant to s. 74.2, Part XVIII.1 of the Act (which includes s. 74.10(1)) does not apply to those assignment employees who provide professional services, personal support services or homemaking services as defined in the Long-Term Care Act, 1994, SO 1994, c 26 (renamed the Home Care and Community Services Act, 1994 as of July 1, 2010) if the assignment is made under a contract between the employee or his or her employer and a community care access corporation within the meaning of the Community Care Access Corporations Act, 2001, SO 2001, c 33. As a result, the application of s. 29(2.1) is not modified in respect of such employees by s. 74.10(1).

The Program's position is that a public holiday will be considered to fall on a day that is ordinarily a working day for an assignment employee only if the employee is on assignment and the holiday falls on a day that he or she would be working pursuant to the assignment (assuming there had been no holiday). In that case only, s. 26, 27 or 28 apply to determine the employee's public holiday entitlements. In all other cases, the employee's public holiday entitlements will be determined under s. 29 and 30.

Because public holiday entitlements can be affected by the timing of a termination of employment, it is important to note that subsection 74.4(3) provides that an assignment employee does not cease to be employed by the temporary help agency when he or she is assigned to perform work for an agency client (i.e., he or she is on assignment with a client) nor is his or her employment considered terminated by the agency merely because the assignment with a client has ended and the agency has not yet given a new assignment. A period of non-assignment will not in itself trigger a termination of the employment relationship, unless the weeks of non-assignment constitute weeks of lay-off under s. 74.11 and those weeks of lay-off go on longer than the period of "temporary lay-off".

This could be relevant to the application of s. 29(2.1) of the Act insofar as assignment employees are concerned. Subsection 29(2.1) provides that where a public holiday falls on a day that would not be a working day for an employee and the employee is on lay-off on that day, the employee is entitled to public holiday pay for that day but has no other entitlement under Part X. For purposes of s. 29(2.1), s. 74.10(1) of the Act provides that where an assignment employee is not on assignment on a day on which a public holiday falls, the assignment employee is considered to be on lay-off on that day. Note, however, that s. 29(2.2) provides that if an employee's employment has been terminated because of a lay-off lasting longer than a temporary lay-off, s. 29(2.1) does not apply in respect of a public holiday falling on or after the day on which the temporary lay-off period was exceeded. Note also that under s. 74.10(2), the period of a temporary lay-off for an assignment employee must be determined in accordance with s. 56 of the Act as modified by the special rules in s. 74.11.

The fact that an assignment employee's employment is not considered terminated merely because his or her assignment with a client of the temporary help agency employer has ended and the agency has not yet given him or her a new assignment could also be relevant to the application of section 32 of the Act. Section 32 provides that where an employee was entitled to a substitute day off work for a public holiday but his or her employment was terminated before the substitute day was taken, the employee will be entitled to public holiday pay for that day. However, the mere ending of an assignment employee's assignment does not in itself mean that his or her employment has been terminated, even if no new assignment has yet been given. Generally speaking, in that situation the assignment employee will be considered to be on lay-off, and s. 32 will not apply unless the lay-off ends up exceeding the period of a temporary lay-off before the substitute day is taken.

Note that s. 29(2.1) must be read in conjunction with s. 29(2.2). Under s. 29(2.2) if an employee is terminated pursuant to clause 56(1)(c) (by a layoff that exceeds a period of temporary lay-off) and the employee continues to be on a lay-off after that day (e.g. where employment has been terminated but has not yet been severed), s. 29(2.1) does not apply. See ESA Part X, s. 29 for a discussion of s. 29(2.2). Note as well that s. 74.10(2) provides that for the purposes of applying s. 29(2.2) to an assignment employee, the period of temporary lay-off is determined in accordance with s. 56 as modified by s. 74.11. See the discussion of s. 74.11 in ESA Part XVIII.1.

Section 74.10(1) came into force on November 6, 2009. Prior to that date, the Program took the view that an assignment employee who qualified for public holiday entitlements was on a lay-off for the purposes of s. 29(2.1) if the employee was not on assignment and the agency had not made an offer of an assignment that would, if accepted, have resulted in the employee being on assignment when the public holiday fell. If the employee had refused all offers of assignments that would have resulted in the employee being on assignment when the holiday fell or had advised the agency that he or she was not available for assignment in a week in which a holiday fell, he or she was not considered to be on a lay-off for the purposes of s. 29(2.1). This Program policy no longer applies with the coming into force of s. 74.10(1), although it would continue to apply with respect to public holidays that fell prior to November 6, 2009.

74.10(2) For the purposes of subsection 29 (2.2), the period of a temporary lay-off of an assignment employee by a temporary help agency shall be determined in accordance with section 56 as modified by section 74.11 for the purposes of Part XV.

This provision came into force on November 6, 2009. Under s. 74.10(2), the reference to a period of temporary lay-off within s. 29(2.2) with respect to an assignment employee, is determined in accordance with the modifications made to s. 56 of the Act by s. 74.11. See the discussion of s. 29(2.2) ESA Part X, s. 29. Note however that pursuant to s. 74.2, Part XVIII.1 of the Act, which includes s. 74.10(2), does not apply to those assignment employees who provide professional services, personal support services or homemaking services as defined in the Long-Term Care Act, 1994 (renamed the Home Care and Community Services Act, 1994 as of July 1, 2010) if the assignment is made under a contract between the employee or his or her employer and a community care access corporation within the meaning of the Community Care Access Corporations Act, 2001. As a result, the application of s. 29(2.2) is not modified in respect of such employees by s. 74.10(2).

Pursuant to s. 74.11, a period of temporary lay-off for the purposes of s. 56 of the Act is a period of 13 weeks within 20 consecutive weeks or under certain circumstances, 35 weeks within 52 consecutive weeks in which the assignment employee is not assigned to perform work on a temporary basis for a client of the agency. Section 74.11 also modifies "excluded week" (weeks that are not counted as weeks of lay-off but are counted in the 20 and 52 consecutive week periods) to mean a week in which for one or more days, an assignment employee is not able to work, is not available for work, refuses an offer by an agency that would not constitute constructive dismissal of the employee by the agency, is subject to a disciplinary suspension or is not assigned to perform work for a client of the agency because of a strike or lock-out occurring at the agency. See the discussion of s. 74.11 in ESA Part XVIII.1.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.10.1 – Termination of Assignment (Temporary Help Agency)

Termination of Assignment - s. 74.10.1(1)

74.10.1(1) A temporary help agency shall provide an assignment employee with one week's written notice or pay in lieu of notice if,

(a) the assignment employee is assigned to perform work for a client;

(b) the assignment had an estimated term of three months or more at the time it was offered to the employee; and

(c) the assignment is terminated before the end of its estimated term.

Section 74.10.1(1) requires that a temporary help agency provide one week's written notice of the termination of an assignment to an assignment employee, provided that the assignment employee was assigned to perform work for a client for an estimated duration of three months or more at the time it was offered to the employee, and if the assignment is terminated before the end of the estimated term date. If the temporary help agency elects to pay one week's wages as termination of assignment pay in lieu of the written notice, it must be done in accordance with s. 74.10.1(2). Termination of assignment and termination of employment are distinctly different.

If an assignment employee was provided with notice of termination of assignment and subsequently (i.e., after the notice of termination of assignment has expired or pay in lieu of notice is paid) the employee's employment is terminated, the employee will be entitled to their full notice of termination of employment pursuant to ESA Part XV, s. 57 or s. 58, as modified by ESA Part XVIII.1, s.74.11. Any notice or pay in lieu paid in respect of a notice of termination of assignment cannot be used to offset the obligation to provide notice of termination of employment under s. 57 or s. 58, as modified by s.74.11.

However, when the employment of an assignment employee is terminated at the same time as the assignment with a client is terminated, the notice of termination of assignment can be given concurrently with notice of termination provided under s. 57 or s. 58, as modified by s. 74.11. For example, an employee has been employed for eight months and is on an assignment that is expected to last 5 months. The THA terminates the assignment employee's employment and the assignment will also end. The THA sends a letter to the employee stating both the employee's employment and assignment will end in one week, i.e. one weeks written notice is provided. It is program policy that this satisfies the minimum notice requirement for both termination of assignment and termination of employment. The THA is not required to add one week of notice for termination of the assignment to the one week notice of termination of employment to provide the employee with two weeks of notice.

An assignment employee that has been employed for eight months, and regularly works Monday to Friday and is on an assignment that is expected to last five months is provided with one weeks written notice of termination of assignment on Monday. Subsequently on Thursday of the same week, the employee is provided with written notice that their employment is terminated with the THA as of Friday. The THA has met the requirement of providing one week written notice of termination of assignment and nothing further is required. The employee was worked two days after being provided with written notice of termination and would be entitled to the remainder of the week's notice as pay in lieu of notice of termination.

Three Conditions for Entitlement

In order for an employee to be entitled to the one week written notice or pay in lieu of notice, all three conditions set out in 74.10.1(1) must be met.

Assigned to Perform Work

(a) the assignment employee is assigned to perform work for a client;

The assignment employee must actually be assigned to perform work for a client. See ESA Part I, s. 1 for a discussion of what is considered to be assigned to perform work.

Term of Three Months or More

(b) the assignment had an estimated term of three months or more at the time it was offered to the employee;

In order to qualify for notice under s. 74.10.1, the estimated term of the assignment at the time the assignment was offered to the employee must be three months or more. There is no requirement that the employee has worked for the client business for three months. The question is simply whether or not the assignment had an estimated term of three months or more at the time it was offered to the employee. Note that there is no obligation to provide an assignment employee with this information if it is not available at the time the offer is made in accordance with ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.6(1) para 7. It should be noted that the intent is for the notice to be provided if at the time of the offer of assignment, it was estimated to last a term of three months or more. If a THA offers concurrent 11 week assignments, whether with the same client business or not, the assignment employee is not entitled to notice of termination of assignment. This is because at the time of the offer the assignment was not for longer than three months and therefore no notice is required. If at the time the assignment was offered it was only to last one month, and is extended beyond three months, the employee is not entitled to one weeks written notice. An officer will have to investigate to determine if there is evidence that the offer of assignment was to last longer than three months.

Assignment Terminated Before End of Term

(c) the assignment is terminated before the end of its estimated term.

Lastly, if the employee's assignment with the client is terminated before the estimated end of the term which at the time of the offer of assignment was made was three months or more, the employee will be entitled to one weeks' written notice or pay in lieu of notice as per s. 74.10.1(2).

Pay During Notice Period

There is no equivalent in s. 74.10.1 to ESA Part XV, ss. 60(1) or (2), which set out an employee's entitlements to wages during a week of the notice of termination of employment under ESA Part XV, ss. 57 or 58. In the absence of such provisions, Program policy is that an officer will determine the employee's entitlement to pay during the one week's notice of termination of an assignment provided under s. 74.10.1 based on what the employee would have earned had the assignment not been ended.

If the employee worked through the notice period then the employee is generally entitled to the wages actually earned. However, if an employee alleged that proper notice had not been provided because for example, no work was provided during the week of notice or the hours of work had been unilaterally reduced during the week of notice, the officer would have to determine whether the work arrangements during the week of notice were nonetheless reflective of the actual terms of the assignment. If they were not, the officer could conclude that the employee was not provided with the entitlement to the one week notice required under this section. For example, if the officer found the assignment employee's hours were significantly reduced during the week of notice as compared to the weekly hours regularly worked by the employee, the officer may conclude that the employer failed to provide the notice required under this section and so assess for the difference between what was paid during the notice period and what the employee would otherwise have earned.

A determination as to what the employee would have earned during the notice period will depend on what the work arrangements actually were during the assignment. For example, if the employee had a regular work week and was paid on the basis of time, it would be reasonable to find that the employee's entitlement during the one week notice period was equivalent to a regular week's wages. Evidence as to what the employee's regular wages were or what hours the employee worked in a regular work week might be found within the terms of the assignment or by reviewing the employee's pay statements to see what the employee earned in the weeks preceding the week of notice, if that is different from the terms of assignment.

If the employee did not have a regular work week or was paid on a basis other than time, it would be reasonable in the absence of other evidence (e.g., a schedule showing the specific hours that the employee would have been required to work in the week of notice) to assess the entitlement on the basis of an average of weekly earnings. Factors an officer might consider in determining how to average earnings could include such things as whether there is any kind of repeating cycle with respect to hours of work, whether there has been a recent trend showing a reduction or an increase in hours worked and whether the employee has been absent from work because of illness or vacation. The officer may determine after reviewing all relevant factors that the most reasonable way to determine what the employee would have worked in the notice period is an average of the weeks worked at this assignment, or the last 12 weeks if greater than three months. If the officer has evidence from the employee or client business that the assignment for the week in question was to five days per week, even though the employee normally was assigned work for three days, the employee is entitled to five days pay in lieu of notice. For example, the client business was planning on attending a conference that week and required the assignment employee to answer the phones for five days that week, then the entitlement is five days even though the assignment was only for three days per week.

Amount of Pay in Lieu - s. 74.10.1(2)

74.10.1(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), the amount of the pay in lieu of notice shall be equal to the wages the assignment employee would have been entitled to receive had one week's notice been given in accordance with that subsection.

Subsection 74.10.1(1) permits a temporary help agency to pay termination of assignment pay in lieu of the notice. Subsection 74.10.1(2) provides that the pay in lieu of such notice must be equal to the amount the assignment employee would have received had the one week's notice been given in accordance with s. 74.10.1(1).

Therefore, the Program's policy regarding the calculation of the entitlement to pay during the working notice period where there is an allegation that proper notice has not been provided is also applicable when making the determination regarding the entitlement to pay in lieu when no notice is provided under s. 74.101.1(1). In situations where the assignment employee is working two or more assignments at the same time, and only has one assignment terminated, the termination of assignment pay in lieu of notice will be calculated to reflect only the wages the assignment employee would have earned had they continued with the terminated assignment. The wages the assignment employee earns for the separate assignments which are not terminated are not included in the calculations of termination of assignment pay.

Vacation pay accrues not only on an assignment employee's wages during the one week notice of termination of assignment set out in s. 74.10.1(1) but also on any pay in lieu of notice paid under s. 74.10.1(2). For example, if the assignment employee is entitled to $500 in respect of pay in lieu, the employee would also be entitled to a further amount of $20 or $30 for vacation pay based on the statutory minimum of four per cent or six percent in accordance with ESA Part XI, s. 35.2.

If the assignment employee's contract of employment provides for vacation pay to be calculated at a greater rate, then the vacation pay should be calculated accordingly. Such vacation pay would be due and payable in accordance with ESA Part XI, s. 36 unless the employment relationship with the temporary help agency is terminated at the same time the assignment with the client of the agency is terminated, in which case all outstanding vacation pay would be due in accordance with ESA Part V, s. 11(5).

74.10.1(3) Subsection (1) does not apply if the temporary help agency offers the assignment employee a work assignment with a client during the notice period that is reasonable in the circumstances and that has an estimated term of one week or more.

Under this subsection, the temporary help agency is not required to provide written notice of termination of assignment or pay in lieu to the assignment employee under s. 74.10.1(1), provided that the temporary help agency offers the assignment employee a work assignment with a client, which is reasonable under the circumstances with an estimated term of 1 week or more during the notice period. At least one week of the work assignment must coincide with the notice period to qualify under this section.

What is reasonable in the circumstances with respect to the offered work assignment will depend on the terms and conditions of the offer versus the assignment that is being terminated. For example, the officer might consider the hours of work, the work schedule, the nature of the work and the rate of pay for the work in deciding whether or not the assignment offered is reasonable.

In the event that the temporary help agency offers the assignment employee another assignment, which is reasonable under the circumstances and is of an estimated term of one week or more during the notice period, and the assignment employee refuses this offer, s. 74.10.1(1) will not apply, and the assignment employee will have no entitlement to notice of termination of assignment, nor to pay in lieu of notice of termination of assignment.

Same - s. 74.10.1(4)

74.10.1(4) Subsection (1) does not apply if,

(a) the assignment employee has been guilty of wilful misconduct, disobedience or wilful neglect of duty that is not trivial and has not been condoned by the temporary help agency or the client;

(b) the assignment has become impossible to perform or has been frustrated by a fortuitous or unforeseeable event or circumstance; or

(c) the assignment is terminated during or as a result of a strike or lock-out at the location of the assignment.

This subsection set outs three situations in which a temporary help agency is relieved of the obligation to provide an assignment employee with notice of termination of assignment in accordance with s. 74.10.1(1).

Wilful Misconduct, Disobediuence or Wilful Neglect of Duty

(a) the assignment employee has been guilty of wilful misconduct, disobedience or wilful neglect of duty that is not trivial and has not been condoned by the temporary help agency or the client

An assignment employee who has been guilty of wilful misconduct, disobedience or wilful neglect of duty that is not trivial and that has not been condoned by the temporary help agency or the client is not entitled to notice of termination of assignment or pay in lieu.

The rationale for this exemption is the view that a temporary help agency should not be obliged to provide an assignment employee with either notice of termination of assignment or pay in lieu of notice where that assignment employee was guilty of wilful misconduct, disobedience or neglect of duty.

This exemption will apply only if all of the following criteria are met:

1. The assignment employee's conduct is wilful
2. The assignment employee is guilty of:
    - misconduct, or
    - disobedience, or
    - neglect of duty
3. The assignment employee's conduct is not trivial
4. The assignment employee's conduct has not been condoned by the temporary help agency or the client

As the following discussion demonstrates, this exemption is narrower than the concept of just cause applied in the common law and in collective agreement disputes. In other words, an arbitrator or a judge may find that there was just cause to dismiss an employee, but this does not necessarily mean that the exemption in s. 74.10.1(4)(a) applies.

This exemption is substantially the same as the exemption in O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) para. 3, which applies with respect to the notice of termination of employment obligations in the Act.

Impossible to Perform or Frustrated

(b) the assignment has become impossible to perform or has been frustrated by a fortuitous or unforeseeable event or circumstance;

An employee whose assignment has become impossible to perform or is frustrated by a fortuitous or unforeseeable event or circumstance is not entitled to notice of termination of assignment.

The effect of the exemption is to relieve the employer from the obligation to give notice of termination of assignment or pay in lieu of notice where there is a supervening unforeseeable event that strikes at the very root of the assignment that is not the fault of the employer and that is not provided for in the assignment itself.

The rationale for this exemption is the recognition that employers cannot give advance notice of termination of an assignment where the termination is caused by events that the employer cannot reasonably be expected to anticipate or foresee. It is also consistent with the common law view that frustration of a contract brings the contract to an end automatically by operation of law. For example, where frustration of an employment contract occurs, the common law does not regard the employer as having terminated the contract. In determining the applicability of the frustration and impossibility exemption it is important to bear in mind three general principles.

1. The event that allegedly caused the assignment to be frustrated must be something that strikes at the very basis of the assignment; it is not enough that the event has made the assignment a more difficult or expensive proposition for the temporary help agency or the client.
2. The event must not have been caused through fault of the temporary help agency or the client.
3. The assignment must not have addressed the possibility that the event might occur and have provided for its consequences.

The question may arise as to whether an assignment would be frustrated or rendered impossible to perform because the assignment employee has been on a leave under Part XIV. Given that the assignment employee is exercising a statutory right, it is Program policy that the assignment would not be frustrated or rendered impossible to perform in these circumstances.

This exemption is similar the exemption in O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) para. 4, which applies with respect to the notice of termination of employment obligations in the Act.

Strike or Lock-out

(c) the assignment is terminated during or as a result of a strike or lock-out at the location of the assignment.

An assignment employee whose assignment is terminated as a result of a strike or lock-out at the location of the assignment is not entitled to notice of termination of assignment or pay in lieu.

The rationale for this exemption is that while the possibility that a strike or lock-out at the client business might occur therefore disrupting the client business, this is not a foreseeable event for the temporary help agency.

With respect to lock-outs, the exemption will apply only if the lock-out is a legal one under the Labour Relations Act, 1995, SO 1995, c 1, Sch A.

The exemption applies only if the strike or lock-out was at the location of the assignment. The term "location of the assignment" is not defined in the ESA 2000, and it is not necessarily the same as establishment as defined in ESA Part I, s. 1. When a client of a temporary help agency has plants across the province, does a strike at a plant in Thunder Bay, for example, constitute a strike at "location of the assignment" of an assignment employee who works at the client's Mississauga plant? The answer is no. "The location of the assignment" means the actual plant or office of the client where the assignment employee works.

The exemption applies when the employee's assignment is terminated during a strike or lock-out, or as a result of a strike or lock-out. The meaning of "during" a strike or lock-out is self-evident. An assignment employee whose assignment is terminated during a strike or lock-out, for whatever reason, would not be entitled to notice of termination of assignment or pay in lieu. Further, if an assignment employee was given notice of termination of assignment prior to a strike or lock-out but whose assignment was terminated (for example) during a subsequent strike and before the notice period had ended, this exemption would relieve the temporary help agency of any obligation with respect to the balance of the notice period or pay in lieu of notice. There is no requirement that the assignment employee be a member of the striking or lock-out bargaining unit.

More difficult is the concept of "as a result of" a strike or lock-out. It is Program policy that in order to take advantage of the exemption, the temporary help agency must show that the strike had adverse consequences to the client business and therefore necessitated the termination of the assignment. In this regard, see Hayes Danc Inc. operating as Spicer Reman Centre v 15 Employees (December 29, 1989), ESC 2609 (Solomatenko), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act with respect to notice of termination obligations under the former Act.

Furthermore, if the strike was little more than a catalyst, precipitating a closure that would have likely happened anyway, even without the strike, then a termination of an assignment will not be "as a result of" the strike within the meaning of the exemption. The strike must be the major cause of the termination of assignment in order for the exemption to apply. If the major cause is instead, for example, lower demand, increased competition, or aging equipment and processes, and the strike is merely "the straw that broke the camel's back", then the exemption will not apply. See Robson Lang Leathers Limited v Legacy et al (January 19, 1979), ESC 574 (Picher), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act with respect to notice of termination of employment obligations under the former Act.

This exemption is substantially the same as the exemption in O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) para. 8, which applies with respect to the notice of termination of employment obligations in the Act.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.11 – Termination and Severance

Termination and Severance - s. 74.11

Application of s. 74.11

Section 74.11 modifies the application of certain notice of termination and severance pay provisions in Part XV of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 insofar as assignment employees of temporary help agencies are concerned. Section 74.11 is in Part XVIII.1 (Temporary Help Agencies), which was added to the ESA 2000 by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 and came into force on November 6, 2009.

The modifications set out in paragraphs 1 through 14 of s. 74.11 primarily clarify how and when a termination or severance is triggered by a layoff and how termination and severance pay are calculated for assignment employees. As amended by the Good Government Act, 2009, s. 74.11 also modifies the circumstances under which mass notice entitlements are triggered for assignment employees. Sections of Part XV not modified by s. 74.11 apply as written to assignment employees and their temporary help agency employers.

It should be noted that transitional provisions regarding the application of s. 74.11 are contained in O Reg 398/09 which is a defined industry regulation for the temporary help agency industry. While most of the regulation is now of historical interest only, it is important to note that the regulation clarifies that nothing in the regulation shall be interpreted to exclude time spent by an assignment employee in the employ of a temporary help agency before November 6, 2009 for the purposes of determining an entitlement under Part XV. This rule applies for purposes of references in the Act or regulations to "period of employment", "continuous employment", "employment whether or not continuous and whether or not active" and "number of years or months of employment".

For a detailed discussion, see O Reg 398/09.

Section 74.11 was amended by the Good Government Act, 2009 to provide that on or after November 6, 2009, the trigger for mass notice entitlements set out in s. 58(1) of the ESA 2000 no longer applies with respect to assignment employees. Instead, assignment employees are entitled to an equivalent number of weeks of "mass" notice as are provided to non-assignment employees (in accordance with s. 3(1) of O Reg 288/01) if the assignments of 50 or more assignment employees at a single client's establishment ended or were ended and, as a result, the agency terminated the employment of 50 or more such employees within a four-week period.

Note that pursuant to s. 74.2, Part XVIII.1 of the Act does not apply to those assignment employees who provide professional services, personal support services or homemaking services as defined in the Long - Term Care Act, 1994, SO 1994, c 26 (renamed the Home Care and Community Services Act, 1994 as of July 1, 2010) if the assignment is made under a contract between the employee or his or her employer and a community care access corporation within the meaning of the Community Care Access Corporations Act, 2001, SO 2001, c 33. As a result, Parts X and XV of the ESA 2000 apply without modification to these employees.

Application of O Reg 288/01 Termination and Severance of Employment

The provisions of O Reg 288/01 (as amended) generally apply to temporary help agencies and assignment employees to whom Part XVIII.1 applies.

One issue with respect to the application of O Reg 288/01 concerns the "term or task" exemption from notice in para. 1 of s. 2(1). That exemption applies to relieve employers from the requirement to provide notice of termination or termination pay to an employee who is "hired on the basis that his or her employment is to terminate on the expiry of a definite term or completion of a specific task".

Generally speaking, the term or task exemption would rarely, if ever, apply to assignment employees because of the nature of the employment relationship between assignment employees and temporary help agencies. That employment relationship is described in s. 74.3 as arising when the parties agree that the employee is hired for the purposes of being assigned to perform work on a temporary basis for clients or prospective clients of the agency. In addition, s. 74.4 clarifies that the end of a work assignment does not in and of itself terminate the employment relationship between the agency and an assignment employee.

In other words, the employment relationship is premised on an agreement that the agency will place or seek to place the assignment employee in assignments and the employment relationship continues between such assignments unless it is otherwise terminated. As a result, even though an assignment (to a client) might be for a specific term or task, generally the employment (with the agency) is not; the ending of the assignment will not in and of itself end the employment relationship or in and of itself attract the application of the term or task exemption in s. 2(1) para. 1 of O Reg 288/01.

That is not to say however, that an agency could not employ an assignment employee on a term or task basis. If, for example, an agency hires an employee for the purposes of placing them in an assignment with a defined term or task and the understanding of the parties is that the employment relationship will terminate at the end of that assignment, and it does, the term or task exemption might be applicable, depending on all the facts, subject to s. 2(2) of the regulation. Again, whether or not an assignment employee is employed on a term or task basis must be determined on the particular facts of each case.

A second issue regarding the application of O Reg 288/01 concerns the exemptions from notice and severance entitlements in para. 5 of s. 2(1) and para. 4 of s. 9(1) of the regulation where the employee is terminated after refusing an offer of reasonable alternative employment with the employer. The question posed is whether in refusing an assignment (e.g. of a type contemplated by the contract of employment between the agency and the assignment employee) would be considered a refusal of an offer of reasonable alternative employment. The Program's position is that an offer of a work assignment to perform work for a client on a temporary basis cannot constitute an offer of "reasonable alternative employment". The Act defines the employment relationship between an assignment employee and temporary help agency by the fact that the agency will assign or attempt to assign the employee to perform work on a temporary basis. As a result, an offer of an assignment is not an offer of alternative employment.

The situation would be different if a temporary help agency were offering an assignment employee employment (for example) as the agency's own permanent full-time front desk receptionist. In that case, the agency would be offering alternative employment (as opposed to an offer of an assignment to perform work for a client of the agency). If the offer of such alternative employment were refused and the agency terminated the employment of the employee, the question would be whether the offer was reasonable for the purposes of applying the exemptions in para. 5 of s. 2(1) and para. 4 of s. 9(1).

A third issue regarding the application of O Reg 288/01 concerns s. 6 of the regulation. That section provides that where an employee has been given notice of termination in accordance with the Act and regulations, the employer may provide temporary employment within the 13-week period following the termination date without affecting the date of termination or the employee's period of employment.

As noted in the preceding discussion, the employment relationship with an assignment employee is defined by the agency hiring an assignment employee for the purpose of assigning or attempting to assign the employee to perform work for clients of the agency. Further, the ending of an assignment does not in and of itself end the employment relationship - see ESA Part 18.1, s. 74.3 and s. 74.4.

Unless the employer had given notice of termination to take effect on a specific date, an offer of a new assignment to perform work within 13 weeks after the preceding assignment ended would simply be an offer of a work assignment within the ongoing employment relationship, as opposed to an offer of "temporary work" that delays actual termination (but not the legal termination date) under s. 6 of O Reg 288/01.

Similarly, it is important to distinguish between the end of an assignment and the termination of the employment relationship in applying s. 8(2) of O Reg 288/01. Section 8 operates to tie together periods of employment separated by 13 weeks or less for the purposes of determining entitlements to notice of termination or pay in lieu of notice. Unless the employment relationship is terminated, s. 8(2) has no application. For example, even though an assignment has ended, unless the employment relationship is also terminated when the assignment ends, the employment relationship is ongoing. All time employed (including periods of time between assignments) is included for determining both eligibility and the amount of the notice entitlement. For a more detailed discussion, see O Reg 288/01, s. 8(2).

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

1. A temporary help agency lays off an assignment employee for a week if the employee is not assigned by the agency to perform work for a client of the agency during the week.

For most employees, s. 56(3.1) defines a week of lay-off as a week, other than an "excluded week", in which the employee earns less than one-half of his regular wages. However, for assignment employees, this definition is displaced by paragraph 1 of s. 74.11. Under paragraph 1, a week of lay-off is a week in which an assignment employee "is not assigned by the agency to perform work for a client of the agency, during the week".

"Assigned by the agency to perform work" refers to being on an assignment to perform work for a client of the agency. Once an employee has commenced an assignment with a client of the agency he or she is considered to be assigned by the agency to perform work (or on assignment) for that client until the assignment ends - see ESA Part 18.1, s. 74.4(2). As a result, despite the fact that an employee may not actually have performed any work for the client in a given week during the course of the assignment, that week would not be considered a "week of lay-off". For example, assume an agency assigned an employee to a 6 month term assignment with one of its clients. Pursuant to the terms of the assignment, the employee regularly worked Monday through Friday each week. However, the client unexpectedly shut down for a few weeks during the course of the six-month assignment. Despite not performing any work for the client in those weeks, the assignment employee is not considered to have been on lay-off during those weeks, as the employee continued to be on assignment during those weeks. This underscores the fact that, in contrast to the situation under subsection 56(3.1), a week of lay-off for an assignment employee is not defined on the basis of the extent to which earnings have been reduced.

This paragraph must be read subject to the definition of "excluded week" in paragraph 2 as well as paragraph 3 which provides that an excluded week is not counted as a week of lay-off but is included in the 20 or 52 week period within which weeks of lay-off are counted for the purposes of determining whether a termination is triggered.

Note that with respect to assignment employees of temporary help agencies, O Reg 398/09 specifies that "weeks of lay-off as well as the periods of 20 or 52 consecutive weeks (within which weeks of lay-off are counted) are to be counted only from November 6, 2009 forward for the purposes of triggering termination (and severance)."

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

2. For the purposes of paragraphs 3 and 10, "excluded week" means a week during which, for one or more days, the assignment employee is not able to work, is not available for work, refuses an offer by the agency that would not constitute constructive dismissal of the employee by the agency, is subject to a disciplinary suspension or is not assigned to perform work for a client of the agency because of a strike or lock-out occurring at the agency.

This provision displaces, in the case of assignment employees, the definition of "excluded week" found in s. 56(3) and s. 63(2) of the Act. It defines an excluded week as a week during which for one or more days the employee is not able to work, is not available for work, refuses an offer by the agency that would not constitute constructive dismissal of the employee by the agency, or is subject to disciplinary suspension. It also specifies that an excluded week is a week in which the employee is not assigned to perform work because of a strike or lock-out at the agency as compared to "a strike or lock-out occurring at [the employee's] place of employment or elsewhere". Note: the underlined text highlights differences between the definitions in s. 56(3), s. 63(2) and s. 74.11 para. 2.

The definition of excluded week is relevant for the purposes of paragraph 3 of s. 74.11, which provides that an excluded week is not counted as a week of lay-off but is counted as part of the period of consecutive weeks within which the specified weeks of lay-off must fall in order to trigger a termination under s. 56(1)(c).

These situations are discussed in more detail below:

1. The employee is not able to work.

A week in which an assignment employee is unable to work because of illness or injury for one or more days is an excluded week and is not considered to be a week of lay-off even if the employee has not been assigned to perform work during that week.

2. The employee is not available for work.

A week in which for one or more days an assignment employee is "not available to work" (say because he or she was taking time off for personal reasons) is an excluded week and is not considered to be a week of lay-off, even if the employee had not been assigned to perform work during that week. "Personal reasons" would include (for example) being on a personal emergency, pregnancy or parental leave.

Availability is a question of fact. In practice, the question of whether an employee is available for work or not would often be answered directly by the employee at the time the agency offers an assignment. In other cases, such as where the employee has not been offered an assignment by the agency in a given week, the question of availability must be answered on the basis of whether the employee could and would have been available for work had the agency offered him or her an assignment. The fact that an employee was working elsewhere during the week does not necessarily mean that he or she is not available to work.

For example, if an assignment employee of temporary help agency A is assigned to perform work for a client of agency B or has taken direct employment with employer C (assuming that the employee has not frustrated his or her contract of employment with agency A by taking such work) those weeks may, depending on the circumstances, still be weeks in which the employee was available for work vis á vis agency A and in that case would be considered weeks of lay-off as far as agency A's notice (and severance pay) obligations are concerned.

3. The employee refuses an offer that would not otherwise constitute a constructive dismissal.

Paragraph 2 of s. 74.11 includes within the definition of "excluded week" a week in which for one or more days, an assignment employee refuses an offer by an agency that would not constitute a constructive dismissal. For example, if the employment contract specified that the agency would offer the assignment employee positions of particular kind or with specific hours or pay, an offer that was substantially different to what was contemplated in the contract and was adverse to the employee could constitute a constructive dismissal. A discussion of general principles that may have application to the determination of whether an offer of an assignment would constitute a constructive dismissal can be found in ESA Part XV, s. 56(1).

In cases where there is a dispute as to the terms of the employment contract, it is necessary to consider both implicit and explicit terms. Implicit terms are often not in writing and may be established by past practice or custom or judicial ruling. Explicit terms and conditions of employment might be the subject of an oral or written employment contract or may be contained in oral or written workplace policies.

For example, an assignment employee has worked for an agency for several years and has been offered and accepted temporary work assignments paying anything between the minimum wage rate and three or four times that rate; in the absence of any evidence to suggest the terms or conditions of employment have changed, an officer could find there is an implicit term that offers of such assignments are acceptable under the contract of employment. As a result, a week in which the employee refused an offer of an assignment paying the minimum wage would be an excluded week and not a week of lay-off.

It should be remembered that the purpose of this paragraph is not to find a constructive dismissal under s. 56(1)(b) (or s. 63(1)(b)), which results in termination (or severance) only if the employee actually resigns, but rather to identify a job offer as one which would constitute a constructive dismissal. The purpose of the section is to identify weeks that are excluded within the meaning of s. 74.11 para. 2, and so determine if and when a termination is or will be triggered by a lay-off under s. 56(1)(c).

4. The employee is subject to disciplinary suspension.

An employee who is on disciplinary suspension is not on a week of lay-off. It is important to ensure, though, that the disciplinary suspension is bona fide and is pursuant to established company rules and procedures or a contract of employment.

5. Because of a strike or lock-out occurring at the agency.

Where an assignment employee is not provided with work during a week by the agency due to a strike or lock-out at the agency, the employee is not on a week of lay-off. Note that in contrast, under s. 56(3) and s. 63(2), the strike or lock-out may occur at the employee's place of employment or elsewhere.

It is the Program's position that in order to characterize a week of lock-out as an excluded week, the lock-out by the employer must be a legal one under the Labour Relations Act, 1995, SO 1995, c 1, Sch A. In those circumstances, the employer's failure to provide work flows from the right to lock out the employees under the Labour Relations Act, 1995 and the employer should not suffer any adverse consequences for exercising that right.

On the other hand, if the lock-out is illegal, the failure to provide work is not permissible under Labour Relations Act, 1995. As a consequence, the Program's position is that a week in which employees are illegally locked out is a week of lay-off. However, a week of strike, whether illegal or legal, will be considered by the Program to be an excluded week (i.e. not a week of lay-off) because the employer does not in those circumstances have any control over whether work is provided.

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

3. An excluded week shall not be counted as part of the 13 or 35 weeks referred to in subsection 56(2) but shall be counted as part of the 20 or 52 consecutive week periods referred to in subsection 56(2).

Paragraph 3 describes the effect of excluded weeks in counting weeks of lay-off and establishing the period within which those weeks are counted to trigger a termination of employment by lay-off. It effectively displaces ss. 56(3.2), (3.4) and (3.6). An excluded week is not counted as a week of layoff but is included in the period of 20 or 52 consecutive weeks for the purposes of determining whether a period of temporary lay-off as defined in s. 56(2) has been exceeded, thereby triggering a termination under s. 56(1)(c).

As was noted above, because the temporary lay-off rules for assignment employees of temporary help agencies introduce a new regime for such employees effective November 6, 2009, it is program policy that the new regime applies only in respect of lay-offs that occur on or after that date (or, where a lay-off began before that date, only in respect of that portion of the lay-off that began on that date). Similarly, for purposes of the 20-consecutive week period or 52-consecutive week period that one looks to in order to determine whether there have been a sufficient number of weeks of lay-off within that period to trigger a termination, only weeks that begin on or after November 6th, 2009 are taken into account.

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

4. Subsections 56(3) to (3.6) do not apply to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees.

Paragraph 4 states that s. 56(3) to s. 56(3.6) of Part XV do not apply with respect to assignment employees of temporary help agencies. Those subsections a) define a "week of lay-off" with respect to both employees who have a regular work week and employees who do not have a regular work week, b) define an "excluded week" and c) provide that excluded weeks are not included when counting weeks of lay-off but are included when counting 20 or 52 consecutive weeks for the purposes of determining whether a lay-off exceeds a period of temporary lay-off so as to trigger a termination under s. 56(1)(c). For the purposes of determining entitlements to notice and termination for assignment employees, ss. 56(3) to (3.6) are effectively displaced by paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of s. 74.11.

4.2 On and after November 6, 2009, subsection 58(1) does not apply to a temporary help agency in respect of its assignment employees.

With the exception of the changes made by paragraphs 4.1, 4.2, 4.3, and 5 of s. 74.11, the balance of the mass notice provisions in s. 58 of the Act and in s. 3 of O Reg 288/01 otherwise apply as written to temporary help agencies with respect to their assignment employees.

Paragraph 4.1 of s. 74.11 provides that on or after November 6, 2009, s. 58(1) of the ESA 2000 does not apply to a temporary help agency in respect of its assignment employees.

As of that date, an assignment employee's right to mass notice of termination is triggered under the circumstances as set out in paragraph 4.2, which provides that notice entitlements as per paragraph 4.3 must be provided to assignment employees if the assignments of 50 or more assignment employees at a single client's establishment ended or were ended and as a result, the temporary help agency terminated the employment of 50 or more such employee within a four-week period.

Section 74.11 para. 4.2

4.2 On and after November 6, 2009, a temporary help agency shall give notice of termination to its assignment employees in accordance with paragraph 4.3 rather than in accordance with section 57 if,

- i. 50 or more assignment employees of the agency who were assigned to perform work for the same client of the agency at the same establishment of that client were terminated in the same four-week period, and
- ii. the terminations resulted from the term of the assignments ending or from the assignments being ended by the agency or by the client.

Paragraph 4.2 provides that as of November 6, 2009, an assignment employee would only be entitled to mass notice where he or she was one of 50 or more assignment employees who had been on assignment at a client's establishment and who were terminated within a four-week period by the agency because the assignments of those 50 or more assignment employees ended or were ended by the client or the agency.

Section 74.11 para. 4.3

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

4.3 In the circumstances described in paragraph 4.2, notice of termination shall be given for the prescribed period, or if no applicable periods are prescribed,

i. at least eight weeks before termination, if the number of assignment employees whose employment is terminated is 50 or more but fewer than 200,

ii. at least 12 weeks before termination, if the number of assignment employees whose employment is terminated is 200 or more but fewer than 500, iii. at least 16 weeks before termination, if the number of assignment employees whose employment is terminated is 500 or more.

Paragraph 4.3 sets out the mass notice of termination entitlements when 50 or more assignment employees are terminated as per paragraph 4.2 as follows:

- At least 8 weeks' notice if 50 or more but less than 200 are terminated;
- At least 12 weeks' notice if 200 or more but less than 500 are terminated;
- At last 16 weeks if 500 or more are terminated.

Note that the number of weeks of mass notice that assignment employees are entitled to under paragraph 4.3 of s. 74.11 are the same as those to which non-assignment employees are entitled to pursuant to s. 58(1) of the Act and s. 3(1) of O Reg 288/01.

As noted above, O Reg 398/09 provides that as of November 6, 2009, the four-week periods within which terminations are to be counted for the purposes of triggering a mass notice entitlement for assignment employees must either end before November 6, 2009 or begin on or after November 6, 2009. As a result, s. 58(1) of the Act and s. 3(1) of O Reg 288/01 would apply to determine the mass notice entitlements of assignment employees if they were one of at least 50 employees terminated in a four-week period ending before November 6, 2009 (assuming they were not exempt from notice because they were "elect to work" employees). Paragraphs 4.2 and 4.3 of s. 74.11 would apply to determine the mass notice entitlements of assignment employees if they were terminated in a four-week period beginning on or after November 6, 2009.

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

5. A temporary help agency shall, in addition to meeting the posting requirements set out in clause 58(2)(b) and subsection 58(5), provide the information required to be provided to the Director under clause 58(2)(a) to each employee to whom it is required to give notice in accordance with paragraph 4.3 on the first day of the notice period or as soon after that as is reasonably possible.

Paragraph 5 modifies the requirements to provide certain information to assignment employees when giving notice of a mass termination in accordance with paragraph 4.3.

In addition to the requirements in s. 58(2)(b) and s. 58(5) to post certain information in the workplace, paragraph 5 of s. 74.11 states that the information provided to the Director of Employment Standards under clause 58(2)(a), must also be provided individually to each assignment employee who is entitled to mass notice in accordance with para. 4.3, by the temporary help agency on the first day of the notice period or as soon after that as is reasonably possible.

The information that must be provided to each assignment employee is the prescribed information provided to the Director in a Form 1 (the form approved by the Director).

Note that paragraph 5 does not specify how the information is to be provided; there is no requirement that it be provided in writing.

If the information is not provided on the first day of notice it must be provided as soon after that date as is reasonably possible. A determination of what is reasonable will depend upon all of the facts.

As noted above, all other provisions in Part XV of the Act and O Reg 288/01 related to mass notice will apply to assignment employees without modification. See the discussions regarding mass notice entitlements in the manual at ESA Part XV, s. 58 and O Reg 288/01, s .3.

Section 74.11 para. 6

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

6. Clauses 60 (1) (a) and (b) and subsection 60 (2) do not apply to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees.

Paragraph 6 states that s. 60(1)(a) and (b) and s. 60(2) of Part XV do not apply to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees. Those provisions prohibit the employer from altering the wage rate during a notice period under s. 57 or s. 58. They also require the employer to pay during each week of notice the wages the employee is entitled to receive (i.e., what is earned during that week) and in no case to pay less than his or her regular wages for a regular work week, and if the employee does not have a regular work week, no less than the average amount of regular wages earned per week in each week of work in the 12 weeks preceding the date notice was given.

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

7. A temporary help agency that gives notice of termination to an assignment employee in accordance with section 57 or paragraph 4.3 of this section shall, during each week of the notice period, pay the assignment employee the wages he or she is entitled to receive, which in no case shall be less than,

- i. in the case of any termination other than under clause 56 (1) (c), the total amount of the wages earned by the assignment employee for work performed for clients of the agency during the 12-week period ending on the last day on which the employee performed work for a client of the agency, divided by 12, or
- ii. in the case of a termination under clause 56 (1) (c), the total amount of wages earned by the assignment employee for work performed for clients of the agency during the 12-week period immediately preceding the deemed termination date, divided by 12.

Paragraph 7 sets out the method for calculating entitlements to pay during each week of a notice period with respect to assignment employees of temporary help agencies. It effectively replaces the provisions for calculating pay during the notice period as they are set out in s. 60(1)(a), (b) and s. 60(2). It should be noted that where notice is not given, the entitlement to pay in lieu of notice (see paragraph 8 below) is based on the amounts to which the employee would be entitled, had notice been given, under paragraph 7.

Calculating Wage Entitlements During Notice Periods

1. If the termination is triggered under s. 56(1)(a) or (b) (i.e., is not triggered by a lay-off that exceeded a period of temporary lay-off) the agency is required to pay during each week of notice, the greater of:
    a) the wages the employee is entitled to receive (i.e., what he or she earned in each week); and
    b) the total amount of wages earned in the 12 weeks preceding the last day work was performed for a client of the agency, divided by 12.

Note that b) refers to all wages earned in the 12 week period including overtime pay, public holiday pay, premium pay and vacation pay. It refers to the wages earned for work performed for all clients of the agency within the 12 week period if there is more than one - not just the last client in that period for whom work was performed.

2. If the termination is triggered under s. 56(1)(c) (i.e., by a lay-off that exceeded a period of temporary lay-off), the agency is required to pay during each week of notice, the greater of:
    a) the wages the employee is entitled to receive (i.e. what he or she earned in each week) and
    b) the total amount of wages earned in the 12 weeks preceding the deemed termination date divided by 12.

Note that b) refers to all wages earned in the 12 week period preceding the deemed termination date, including overtime pay, public holiday pay, premium pay and vacation pay. It refers to the wages earned for work performed for all clients of the agency within the 12 week period if there is more than one - not just the last client in that period for whom work was performed. When a termination is triggered by a layoff that exceeds a period of temporary lay-off pursuant to s. 56(1)(c) the deemed termination date is the first day of the lay-off as per s. 56(5). For the purposes of triggering a termination under s. 56(1)(c), weeks of lay-off are counted in accordance with s. 74.11 paras. 1 through 4.

With respect to the calculation of termination pay during the period of working notice described in ii) above, it should be noted that generally, the ability to provide working notice under the ESA when a termination is triggered by a lay-off that exceeds a period of temporary lay-off, is limited to situations in which an employer who is bound by a collective agreement gives working notice of an indefinite lay-off and the lay-off does in fact exceed a period of temporary lay-off. Such a notice is treated as a notice of termination pursuant to s. 4(2) of O Reg 288/01 - see O Reg 288/01, s. 4(2) for a discussion of this provision. A non-union employer could give notice of termination in anticipation of a future lay-off that it expects will last longer than a period of temporary lay-off, but technically, in that case, the termination is effected by the notice itself, resulting in a termination under clause 56(1)(a) rather than by a lay-off exceeding a period of temporary lay-off.

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

8. The lump sum that an assignment employee is entitled to be paid under clause 61 (1) (a) is a lump sum equal to the amount the employee would have been entitled to receive under paragraph 7 had notice been given in accordance with section 57 or paragraph 4.3 of this section.

Paragraph 8 sets out how to calculate pay in lieu of notice for an assignment employee. Under paragraph 8, the pay in lieu of notice entitlement for an assignment employee is the lump sum equal to the total amount the employee would have been entitled to receive during a period of working notice as calculated under paragraph 7 above.

Section 74.11 para. 9

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

9. Subsection 61 (1.1) does not apply to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees.

Paragraph 9 states that s. 61(1.1) which provides a method of calculating pay in lieu of notice for employees who do not have a regular work week does not apply to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees.

Section 74.11 para. 9.1

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

9.1 For the purposes of the application of clause 63(1)(e) to an assignment employee, the reference to section 58 in that clause shall be read as a reference to paragraph 4.3 of this section.

Paragraph 9.1 provides that reference to s. 58 in s. 63(1)(e) is read as a reference to paragraph 4.3 of s. 74.11 with respect to assignment employees.

Section 63(1)(e) provides that a severance occurs if an employer has provided notice of termination in accordance with s. 57 or s. 58 of the Act and the employee resigns during the statutory notice period by giving the employer two weeks' written notice of the resignation.

As a result of paragraph 9.1, s. 63(1)(e) is read with respect to assignment employees as referring to a notice of termination under s. 57 and mass notice of termination under paragraph 4.3 of s. 74.11 instead of s. 58.

Section 74.11 para. 10

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

10. An excluded week shall not be counted as part of the 35 weeks referred to in clause 63 (1) (c) but shall be counted as part of the 52 consecutive week period referred to in clause 63 (1) (c).

Paragraph 10 of s. 74.11 describes the effect of excluded weeks for the purposes of determining whether a severance is triggered by a lay-off. Specifically, an excluded week is not counted as a week of lay-off but is included in the period of 52 consecutive weeks for the purposes of determining whether a severance has been triggered by a lay-off of 35 weeks or more in a period of 52 consecutive weeks as set out in s. 63(1)(c).

Section 74.11 para. 11

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

11. Subsections 63 (2) to (2.4) do not apply to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees.

Paragraph 11 provides that the provisions in Part XV which define a "week of lay-off", define an "excluded week" and describe the effect of such excluded weeks (ss. 63(2) to 63(2.4)) do not apply in respect of assignment employees. Those provisions of s. 63 are effectively displaced by paragraphs 1, 2 and 10 of s. 74.11.

Note that with respect to assignment employees of temporary help agencies, O. Reg. 398/09 specifies that weeks of lay-off as well as the period of 52 consecutive weeks (within which weeks of lay-off are counted) are to be counted only from November 6, 2009 forward for the purposes of triggering severance.

Section 74.11 para. 1 reads as follows:

A temporary help agency lays off an assignment employee for a week if the employee is not assigned by the agency to perform work for a client of the agency during the week.

Under paragraph 1, a "week of lay-off" for the purposes of the application of Part XV and specifically the application of s. 63(1)(c), is a week in which an assignment employee "is not assigned by the agency to perform work for a client of the agency, during the week". This provision effectively replaces ss. 63(2.1) and (2.3) of Part XV, which specify what a week of lay-off means with respect to an employee who has a regular work week and an employee who does not have a regular work week for severance purposes.

Unlike the Part XV provisions (ss. 63(2.1) and (2.3)) displaced by this paragraph, a week of lay-off is not defined on the basis of a reduction in earnings.

This paragraph must be read subject to the definition of excluded week in paragraph 2 as well as paragraph 10 which provides that an excluded week is not counted as a week of lay-off but is included in the 52 week period within which weeks of lay-off are counted for the purposes of determining whether a severance is triggered. As noted above, it is the Program's position that weeks prior to November 6, 2009 will not be counted for the purposes of triggering a severance by lay-off.

Section 74.11 para. 2 reads as follows:

For the purposes of paragraphs 3 and 10, "excluded week" means a week during which, for one or more days, the assignment employee is not able to work, is not available for work, refuses an offer by the agency that would not constitute constructive dismissal of the employee by the agency, is subject to a disciplinary suspension or is not assigned to perform work for a client of the agency because of a strike or lock-out occurring at the agency.

This provision displaces the definition of "excluded week" found in s. 63(2) of the Act by defining "excluded week" for the purposes of applying the severance provisions in Part XV to assignment employees as a week during which for one or more days the employee is not able to work, is not available for work, refuses an offer by the agency that would not constitute constructive dismissal of the employee by the agency, or is subject to disciplinary suspension. It also specifies that an excluded week is a week in which the employee is not assigned to perform work because of a strike or lock-out at the agency as compared to "a strike or lock-out occurring at [the employee's] place of employment or elsewhere".

Note: the underlined text highlights differences between the definitions in s. 63(2) and s. 74.11 para. 2.

Section 74.11 para 12

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

12. Subsections 65(1), (5) and (6) do not apply to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees.

Paragraphs 12, 12.1, 13 and 14 of section 74.11 modify the application of certain provisions in section 65 related to the calculation of severance pay with respect to assignment employees.

Paragraph 12 provides that ss. 65(1), (5) and (6), which set out the method for calculating the severance pay entitlements for employees who have a regular work week and employees who do not have a regular work week as well as establishing the maximum severance pay (26 weeks), do not apply to assignment employees. These provisions are effectively displaced insofar as assignment employees are concerned by paragraphs 13 and 14 of s. 74.11.

Section 74.11 para 12.1

12.1 For the purposes of the application of subsection 65(4) to an assignment employee, the reference to section 58 in that subsection shall be read as a reference to paragraph 4.3 of this section.

Paragraph 12.1 provides that s. 65(4), which specifies severance pay is to be calculated as including the period of time for which notice should have been given under s. 57 or s. 58 but was not, is to be read as referring to the notice that should have been given under s. 57 or paragraph 4.3 of s. 74.11.

Section 74.11 para 13

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

13. If a temporary help agency severs the employment of an assignment employee under clause 63(1)(a), (b), (d) or (e), severance pay shall be calculated by,

- i. dividing the total amount of wages earned by the assignment employee for work performed for clients of the agency during the 12-week period ending on the last day on which the employee performed work for a client of the agency by 12, and
- ii. multiplying the result obtained under subparagraph i by the lesser of 26 and the sum of,

A. the number of years of employment the employee has completed, and

B. the number of months of employment not included in sub-sub-paragraph A that the employee has completed, divided by 12.

In accordance with paragraph 13, a qualified assignment employee whose employment is severed other than through a lay-off that exceeds 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks is entitled to an amount as calculated under paragraph 13.

Note that clause i refers to all wages earned in the 12-week period ending on the last day that the employee performed work for a client of the agency, including overtime pay, public holiday pay, premium pay and vacation pay. It refers to the wages earned for work performed for all clients of the agency within the 12-week period if there is more than one - not just the last client in that period for whom work was performed.

The total amount of wages earned in the 12-week period is divided by 12 to represent a week's severance pay. That amount is multiplied by the number of weeks of severance pay that the employee is entitled to (to a maximum of 26 weeks). The number of weeks of severance to which the employee is entitled is the number of completed years of employment plus completed months of employment (the latter divided by 12).

Section 74.11 para. 14

74.11 For the purposes of the application of Part XV to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees, the following modifications apply:

14. If a temporary help agency severs the employment of an assignment employee under clause 63(1)(c), severance pay shall be calculated by,

i. dividing the total amount of wages earned by the assignment employee for work performed for clients of the agency during the 12-week period immediately preceding the first day of the lay-off by 12, and

ii. multiplying the result obtained under subparagraph i by the lesser of 26 and the sum of,

A. the number of years of employment the employee has completed, and

B. the number of months of employment not included in sub-sub-paragraph A that the employee has completed, divided by 12.

Paragraph 14 applies to determine severance entitlements when the employment of an assignment employee is severed because of a lay-off that equals or exceeds 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks pursuant to s. 63(1)(c).

Note that clause i refers to all wages earned in the 12-week period immediately preceding the first day of the lay-off, including overtime pay, public holiday pay, premium pay and vacation pay. It refers to the wages earned for work performed for all clients of the agency within the 12-week period if there is more than one - not just the last client in that period for whom work was performed.

The total amount of wages earned in the 12-week period is divided by 12 to represent a week's severance pay. That amount is multiplied by the number of weeks of severance pay that the employee is entitled to (to a maximum of 26 weeks). The number of weeks of severance to which the employee is entitled is the number of completed years of employment plus completed months of employment (the latter divided by 12).

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.11.1 - Transition

74.11.1 A temporary help agency that fails to meet the notice requirements of paragraph 4.3 of section 74.11 during the period beginning on November 6, 2009 and ending on the day before the Good Government Act, 2009 receives Royal Assent has the obligations that the agency would have had if the failure had occurred on or after the day the Good Government Act, 2009 receives Royal Assent.

This provision was added by the Good Government Act, 2009, SO 2009, c 33. It is a transition provision that allows the new "mass" notice rules in section 74.11 para. 4.3 to apply as if they had been in force on November 6, 2009 (when Part XVIII.1 came into force.)

Section 74.11 para. 4.3 provides that (in the circumstances described in para. 4.2 of s. 74.11) assignment employees are entitled to notice of termination of at least:

- 8 weeks' notice if the employment of 50 or more but less than 200 assignment employees is terminated
- 12 weeks' notice if the employment of 200 or more but less than 500 assignment
- 16 weeks' notice if the employment of 500 or more assignment employees is terminated

Paragraph 4.2 of s. 74.11 provides that the notice requirements in paragraph 4.3 apply if 50 or more assignment employees who were assigned to perform work for the same client of the agency at a single establishment of that client were terminated in the same four-week period and the terminations resulted because the term of the assignments ended or the assignments were ended by the agency or client. Note that paragraph 4.1 of s. 74.11 also provides that s. 58(1) does not apply to assignment employees of temporary help agencies as of November 6, 2009.

See the discussion in ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.11 regarding paragraphs 4.2 and 4.3.

Reprisal by Client Prohibited – s. 74.12(1)

74.12(1) No client of a temporary help agency or person acting on behalf of a client of a temporary help agency shall intimidate an assignment employee, refuse to have an assignment employee perform work for the client, terminate the assignment of an assignment employee, or otherwise penalize an assignment employee or threaten to do so,

(a) because the assignment employee,

i. asks the client or the temporary help agency to comply with their respective obligations under this Act and the regulations,

ii. makes inquiries about his or her rights under this Act,

iii. files a complaint with the Ministry under this Act,

iv. exercises or attempts to exercise a right under this Act,

v. gives information to an employment standards officer,

v.1 makes inquiries about the rate paid to an employee of the client for the purpose of determining or assisting another person in determining whether a temporary help agency complied with section 42.2, as it read immediately before the day section 10 of Schedule 1 to the Making Ontario Open for Business Act, 2018 came into force,

v.2 discloses the assignment employee's rate of pay to an employee of the client for the purpose of determining or assisting another person in determining whether a temporary help agency complied with section 42.2, as it read immediately before the day section 10 of Schedule 1 to the Making Ontario Open for Business Act, 2018 came into force,

v.3 discloses the rate paid to an employee of the client to the assignment employee's temporary help agency for the purposes of determining or assisting another person in determining whether a temporary help agency complied with section 42.2, as it read immediately before the day section 10 of Schedule 1 to the Making Ontario Open for Business Act, 2018 came into force,

vi. testifies or is required to testify or otherwise participates or is going to participate in a proceeding under this Act,

vii. participates in proceedings respecting a by-law or proposed by-law under section 4 of the Retail Business Holidays Act,

viii. is or will become eligible to take a leave, intends to take a leave or takes a leave under Part XIV; or

(b) because the client or temporary help agency is or may be required, because of a court order or garnishment, to pay to a third party an amount owing to the assignment employee.

Application

This anti-reprisal provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, and came into force on November 6, 2009. Clauses (v. 1), (v.2) and (v.3) were later added to s. 74.12(1)(a) pursuant to the Fair Workplaces Better Jobs Act, 2017 effective April 1, 2018 to provide additional protections in the context of section 42.2, which establishes equal pay for equal work on the basis of assignment employee status. Clauses (v.1), (v.2) and (v.3) were subsequently amended pursuant to the Making Ontario Open for Business Act, 2018 effective January 1, 2019 to reflect the repeal of section 42.2.

Section 74.12 prohibits a client of a temporary help agency from reprising against an assignment employee of the agency on the same grounds as are set out in ESA Part XVIII, s. 74 and also:

1) because the assignment employee asks the client to comply with its obligations under the Employment Standards Act, 2000 or regulations,

2) because the assignment employee inquires about the rate paid to an employee of the client for the purpose of determining or assisting another person in determining whether a temporary help agency was complying with section 42.2 when it was in force,

3) because the assignment employee discloses their rate of pay to an employee of the client for the purpose of determining or assisting another person in determining whether a temporary help agency was complying with section 42.2 when it was in force,

4) because the assignment employee discloses the rate paid to a client employee to their temporary help agency for the purpose of determining or assisting another person in determining whether a temporary help agency was complying with section 42.2 when it was in force, and

5) because the client is or may be required, because of a court order or garnishment, to pay a third party an amount owing to the assignment employee.

This provision is otherwise virtually identical to ESA Part XVIII, s. 74, which prohibits reprisals by an employee's employer. Note that reprisals by a temporary help agency as an employer of an assignment employee continue to be prohibited under s. 74.

The intention of s. 74.12 is to ensure that assignment employees can pursue their rights under the ESA 2000 and participate in proceedings under the ESA 2000 or s. 4 of the Retail Business Holidays Act, RSO 1990, c R.30 free from any reprisal by a client of their temporary help agency employer.

There are no eligibility requirements. Section 74.12 applies to clients of temporary help agencies and any person who falls within the definition of assignment employee in ESA Part I, s. 1(1) and who is not otherwise excluded from the application of Part XVIII.1 by ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.2.

Enforcement

A contravention of s. 74.12 may result in an order for compensation and/ or reinstatement into an assignment that is issued under ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.17 rather than a compensation and/or reinstatement order issued under ESA Part XXII, s. 104. Note that s. 104 orders can be issued for contraventions of Part XIV, Part XVI, Part XVII and Part XVIII only. In addition to an order under s. 74.17, an employment standards officer may also issue a compliance order to a client under ESA Part XXII, s. 108 and/or a notice of contravention under ESA Part XVII, s. 113.

See the discussion of the enforcement mechanisms of reinstatement and compensation in ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.17.

Determining Whether a Reprisal has Occurred - The Four-Step Test

The Program has developed a four-step test in determining whether a reprisal occurs under ESA Part XVIII, s. 74 and this same approach (modified as necessary) is used when applying s. 74.12.

The four-step test in the context of client reprisals is set out below:

1. Is the person alleged to have committed a reprisal against an assignment employee a client of the temporary help agency that employs that assignment employee, or a person acting on behalf of such a client?
2. Did the client or person acting on behalf of the client intimidate an assignment employee, refuse to have an assignment employee perform work for the client, terminate the assignment of an assignment employee, or otherwise penalize an assignment employee or threaten to do so?
3. Did the assignment employee engage in any of the protected activities set out in s. 74.12(1)(a) or s. 74.12(1)(b)?
4. Did the client or person acting on behalf of the client intimidate an assignment employee, refuse to have an assignment employee perform work for the client, terminate the assignment of an assignment employee, or otherwise penalize an assignment employee or threaten to do so because they engaged in the protected activities referenced in step 3?

If all four questions are answered in the affirmative, a breach of s. 74.12(1) is established. Note that s. 74.12(2) places the burden of proof on the client in the context of an allegation of reprisal subject to ESA Part XXIII, s. 122(4), which provides that where there is a review of a notice of contravention, the onus is on the Director of Employment Standards to establish on a balance of probabilities that the person against whom the notice was issued contravened the provisions of the ESA 2000 as indicated in the notice of contravention.

Each aspect of the test is discussed in more detail below:

Step 1: Is the person a client business or a person acting on their behalf?

Is the person alleged to have committed a reprisal against an assignment employee a client of the temporary help agency that employs that assignment employee, or a person acting on behalf of such a client?

In determining whether a reprisal has occurred, it is necessary to first determine whether the person allegedly reprised against is an assignment employee of a temporary help agency and secondly, whether the person alleged to have committed the reprisal is the client of the temporary help agency or a person acting on behalf of a client of the temporary help agency that employs the assignment employee.

Temporary help agency

A temporary help agency is defined in ESA Part I, s. 1(1). An agency employs "assignment employees" for the purpose of assigning or attempting to assign the employee to perform work for clients of the agency on a temporary basis. Pursuant to ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.3, the employment relationship between the agency and the assignment employee is established where the parties agree (whether or not such agreement is in writing) that the agency will assign or attempt to assign the employee to perform work on a temporary basis for clients.

Assignment employee

The definition of assignment employee in ESA Part I, s. 1(1) refers to an employee which is defined in ESA Part I, s. 1 to include a person who was an employee. Accordingly, an individual continues to be protected from a reprisal by a client of the agency for having engaged in a protected activity while they were employed by the agency, even after the individual's employment has terminated.

For a detailed discussion of these protected activities under ESA Part XVIII, s. 74, see the discussion of step three of the four-part reprisal test, which is relevant, with necessary modifications, in applying s. 74.12(1)(a)(i)-(viii) and s. 74.12(1)(b).

Because s. 74.12 applies only to assignment employees (which as per the above discussion includes a person who was an assignment employee), prospective assignment employees are not accorded the anti-reprisal protection of s. 74.12. However, it is important to note that once an individual becomes an assignment employee, a client of the agency may be subject to the prohibitions in s. 74.12 with respect to that assignment employee, even though the assignment employee had not yet commenced an assignment with the client. (For an example of when this might occur, see the discussion under Step 2 below.)

Client

Client is defined in ESA Part I, s. 1(1) as a person or entity having an arrangement with a temporary help agency under which the agency agrees to assign or attempt to assign its assignment employee(s) to perform work for the person or entity on a temporary basis. As a result, a client is prohibited from reprising against an assignment employee in s. 74.12 whether or not the assignment employee had been placed with the client. For an example of when this might occur, see the discussion under Step 2 below.

A client is also bound by the actions of those persons who act on its behalf. The phrase "acting on behalf of such a client" is not a defined term. It is Program policy that the phrase be interpreted broadly, in the same way the phrase "on behalf of the employer" is interpreted broadly for the purposes of ESA Part XVIII, s. 74. As person acting on behalf of a client may therefore include:

- An officer or manager of the client;
- A person who is part of the directing mind of the client: for example, a controlling shareholder;
- An employee of the client, if the employee's conduct was authorized, adopted or condoned by the client;
- A person, who although not an officer, manager, director or employee of the client, is someone whom the client has allowed to speak for the client or carry out actions on the client's behalf. Without restricting the generality of the foregoing, this could, depending upon the particular circumstances, include the spouse of the client or the spouse of an officer, manager or director of the client, an independent contractor with whom the client is in business relationship, and a consultant retained by the client.

See the discussion in ESA Part I, s. 1 regarding the terms "temporary help agency", "assignment employee" and "client" referenced above and ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.3 regarding the employment relationship between an assignment employee and a temporary help agency.

Step 2: Did the client or person acting on their behalf reprise against the assignment employee?

Did the client or person acting on behalf of the client intimidate an assignment employee, refuse to have an assignment employee perform work for the client, terminate the assignment of an assignment employee, or otherwise penalize an assignment employee or threaten to do so?

The second step of the test requires a determination that there has been a reprisal. Section 74.12(1) is similar to the prohibition against reprisals in ESA Part XVIII, s. 74(1). However, what may constitute a reprisal under s. 74.12(1) includes terminating the assignment of an assignment employee and /or refusing to have an assignment employee perform work for the client rather than dismissing an employee. This change reflects the fact that assignment employees are employed by the agency rather than the client, and as a result, the client is not in a position to reprise against an assignment employee through a dismissal.

There are potentially a number of ways in which a client could reprise against an assignment employee by terminating the assignment of an assignment employee or refusing to have an assignment employee perform work for the client. They would include:

- Prematurely ending an assignment;

- Refusing to allow the assignment employee to commence an assignment (despite a contract with the agency for the placement); or
- Refusing to consider the assignment employee for a placement.

Examples of Reprisals:

An assignment employee was on a four-month assignment with a client and two weeks into the assignment, asked the client whether they have a right to meal breaks. Annoyed by the inquiry, the client decided to end the assignment and asked the temporary help agency to find them a replacement for the balance of the four-month assignment.

An agency and client entered into an arrangement for a six-month assignment. The assignment employee who was the subject of the arrangement happened to be seven months' pregnant at the time. When the assignment employee arrived at the client's office, the client advised her she would not be suitable for the job because it appeared she would have to stop working to take a leave when the baby was born. She was told to go back to the agency and the client cancelled the contract with the agency.

A client of a temporary help agency was seeking an assignment employee for a one-year assignment. The client interviewed several assignment employees for the placement and ultimately advised the agency that they had identified one individual as a tentative candidate for the position. However, the client asked the agency to first obtain an agreement from the assignment employee to work on all public holidays falling in the one-year assignment, before offering the assignment to the employee. The agency informed the client that the assignment employee in question refused to sign such an agreement. The client responded by telling the agency they were no longer interested in that particular assignment employee and asked the agency to ensure that any other employees sent for an interview had already signed such an agreement.

For a discussion of what actions may constitute a reprisal under ESA Part XVIII, s. 74(1), see the discussion of step two of the four-step test. That discussion is relevant, with necessary modifications, in applying s. 74.12.

Step 3: Did the assignment employee engaged in any of the protected activities?

Did the assignment employee engage in any of the protected activities set out in s. 74.12(1)(a) or s. 74.12(1)(b)?

Under s. 74.12(1)(a), a client of a temporary help agency is prohibited from reprising against an assignment employee because the assignment employee engages in any of the activities listed in clauses (i) to (viii) and s. 74.1(1)(b).

These listed activities are identical to those in s. 74(1)(a) with the exception of five clauses.

s. 74(1)(a)(i) versus s. 74.12(1)(a)(i)

Per s. 74(1)(a)(i) the employer is prohibited from reprising against an employee because the employee asks the employer to comply with the ESA 2000 and the regulations. Pursuant to s. 74.12(1)(a)(i), a client is prohibited from reprising against an assignment employee because the assignment employee asks the client or the temporary help agency to comply with their respective obligations under the ESA 2000 and the regulations.

In other words, a client will contravene this section not only if it reprises against the assignment employee for asking the client itself to comply with the ESA 2000 and regulations, but also for reprising against the assignment employee for asking the temporary help agency to comply with its obligations under the ESA 2000 and regulations.

s. 74(1)(a)(v.1) versus s. 74.12(a)(v.1)

Per s. 74(1)(a)(v.1), the employer is prohibited from reprising against an employee because the employee makes inquires about the rate paid to another employee for the purpose of determining or assisting another person in determining whether an employer is complying with Part XII (Equal Pay for Equal Work).

Pursuant to s. 74.12(1)(a)(v.1), a client is prohibited from reprising against an assignment employee because the assignment employee makes inquires about the rate paid to an employee of the client for the purpose of determining or assisting another person in determining whether a temporary help agency complied with section 42.2 when it was in force. This protection applies to inquiries made to the client, the client's employees, or to anyone else.

Section 42.2, which provided equal pay for equal work on the basis of assignment employment status, was repealed effective January 1, 2019. Accordingly, the question might arise as to what reprisal protection exists in relation to this repealed provision.

Section 74.12(1)(a)(v.1) provides protection against reprisal where an employee made inquiries about the rate that was paid to an employee of the client both during the timeframe that s. 42.2 was in effect (from April 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018) and after its repeal where the purpose of the inquiries is to determine, or to assist another person in determining, whether an employer was in compliance with section 42.2.

In other words, the specified inquiries are protected regardless of when they occurred, as long as they relate to a rate that was paid when s. 42.2 was in force (from April 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018).

s. 74(1)(a)(v.2) versus 74.12(1)(a)(v.2)

Per s. 74(1)(a)(v.2) the employer is prohibited from reprising against an employee because the employee discloses their rate of pay to another employee for the purpose of determining or assisting another person in determining whether an employer is complying with Part XII (Equal Pay for Equal Work).

Pursuant to s. 74.12(1)(a)(v.2), a client is prohibited from reprising against an assignment employee because the assignment employee discloses their rate of pay to an employee of the client for the purpose of determining or assisting another person in determining whether a temporary help agency complied with section 42.2 when it was in force.

Section 42.2, which provided equal pay for equal work on the basis of assignment employment status, was repealed effective January 1, 2019. Accordingly, the question might arise as to what reprisal protection exists in relation to this repealed provision.

Section 74.12(1)(a)(v.2) provides protection against reprisal where an assignment employee discloses their rate of pay to an employee of the client both during the timeframe that s. 42.2 was in effect (from April 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018) and after its repeal where the purpose of the disclosure is to determine, or to assist another person in determining, whether an employer was in compliance with section 42.2.

In other words, the specified disclosure is protected regardless of when it occurred, as long as it relates to a rate that was paid when s. 42.2 was in force (from April 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018).

s. 74.12(1)(a)(v.3)

This clause applies only to assignment employees. There is therefore no equivalent provision in s. 74(1). This provision prohibits a client from reprising against an assignment employee where the assignment employee discloses the rate paid to a client employee to their temporary help agency employer for the purposes of determining, or assisting another person in determining, whether a temporary help agency complied with section 42.2 when it was in force.

Section 42.2, which provided equal pay for equal work on the basis of assignment employment status, was repealed effective January 1, 2019. Accordingly, the question might arise as to what reprisal protection exists in relation to this repealed provision.

Section 74.12(1)(a)(v.3) provides protection against reprisal where an assignment employee discloses to their temporary help agency employer the rate paid to a client employee both during the timeframe that s. 42.2 was in effect (from April 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018) and after its repeal where the purpose of the disclosure is to determine, or to assist another person in determining, whether an employer was in compliance with section 42.2.

In other words, the specified disclosure is protected regardless of when it occurred, as long as it relates to a rate that was paid when s. 42.2 was in force (from April 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018).

s. 74(1)(b) versus 74.12(1)(b)

Under s. 74.12(1)(b), a client of a temporary help agency is prohibited from reprising against an assignment employee not because of any activity engaged in by the employee but because the client or temporary help agency is or may be subject to a court order or garnishment that would require the client or agency to pay monies owed to the assignment employee by either the client or agency, to a third party. This prohibited ground is virtually identical to s. 74(1)(b) except that ESA Part XVIII, s. 74 refers to an employer who is required to pay a third party an amount owing by the employer to the employee.

Specifically, the prohibition in s. 74.12(1)(b) is distinguished from the prohibition in s. 74(1)(b) by the fact that the prohibition is against the client (rather than the employer) reprising against an assignment employee because either the employer (i.e. the temporary help agency) OR the client is required by a court order or garnishment to pay an amount that either the temporary help agency or the client owes to the assignment employee.

For a detailed discussion of the prohibited grounds under ESA Part XVIII, s. 74, see the discussion of step three of the four-step test. That discussion is relevant, with necessary modifications, in applying s. 74.12(1)(a) and (b).

Step 4: Did the reprisal occur because the employee engaged in a protected activity?

Did the client or person acting on behalf of the client intimidate an assignment employee, refuse to have an assignment employee perform work for the client, terminate the assignment of an assignment employee, or otherwise penalize an assignment employee or threaten to do so because they engaged in the protected activities reference in step 3?

Sections 74.12(1)(a) and 74.12(1)(b) prohibit clients of temporary help agencies and persons acting on behalf of them from intimidating an assignment employee, refusing to have an assignment employee perform work for the client, terminating the assignment of an assignment employee, or otherwise penalizing an assignment employee or threatening to do so because the assignment employee engaged in the activities listed in s. 74.12(1)(a) or because monies owing to the assignment employee by the client or the temporary help agency were subject to garnishment or court order as per s. 74.12(1)(b). A contravention is established even if the client was motivated only in part to intimidate an assignment employee, refuse to have the assignment employee perform work for the client etc. because the assignment employee engaged in or more of the protected activities listed in s. 74.12(1)(a) or s. 74.12(1)(b).

The use of the word "because" necessitates a consideration of the client's motivation in taking the action it has taken. For a detailed discussion regarding motivation in establishing a contravention of ESA Part XVIII, s. 74, see the discussion of step four of the four-step test. That discussion is relevant, with necessary modifications, in applying s. 74.12(1)(a) and (b).

74.12(2) Subject to subsection 122 (4), in any proceeding under this Act, the burden of proof that a client did not contravene a provision set out in this section lies upon the client.

Section 74.12(2) places the burden of proof upon a client to show that the client did not contravene the anti-reprisal provisions in s. 74.12(1).

This provision is virtually identical to s. 74(2), which places the burden of proof upon an employer to show that the employer did not contravene the anti-reprisal provisions in s. 74(1).

Note however that ESA Part XXIII, s. 122(4) provides that where there is a review of a notice of contravention, the onus is on the Director of Employment Standards to prove, on a balance of probabilities, that the person against whom the notice of contravention was issued contravened the provisions of the ESA 2000 indicated in the notice. For a detailed discussion of this onus, see ESA Part XVIII, s. 74(2).

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.12.1 - Steps Required Before Complaint Assigned – REPEALED

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.13 - Meeting under s. 102

Meeting Under s. 102 - s. 74.13(1)

74.13(1) For the purposes of the application of section 102 in respect of this Part, the following modifications apply:

1. In addition to the circumstances set out in subsection 102(1), the following are circumstances in which an employment standards officer may require persons to attend a meeting under that subsection:

i. The officer is investigating a complaint against a client.

ii. The officer, while inspecting a place under section 91 or 92, comes to have reasonable grounds to believe that a client has contravened this Act or the regulations with respect to an assignment employee.

iii. The officer acquires information that suggests to him or her the possibility that a client may have contravened this Act or the regulations with respect to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.

iv. The officer wishes to determine whether a client, in whose residence an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee resides, is complying with the Act.

2. In addition to the persons referred to in subsection 102(2), the following persons may be required to attend the meeting:

i. The client.

ii. If the client is a corporation, a director or employee of the corporation.

iii. An assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.

3. If a person who was served with a notice under section 102 and who failed to comply with the notice is a client, a reference to an employer in paragraphs 1 and 2 of subsection 102 (10) is a reference to the client.

4. If a person who was served with a notice under section 102 and who failed to comply with the notice is an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee, a reference to an employee in paragraphs 1 and 2 of subsection 102 (10) is a reference to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee, as the case requires.

Section 74.13 provides that where section 102 is applied with respect to Part XVIII.1 of the Act, certain modifications to that section apply. Please see ESA Part XXII, s. 102 for a detailed discussion of s. 102.

Section 74.13(1) was amended by the Open for Business Act, 2010, SO 2010, c 16, effective November 29, 2010 to set out additional circumstances in which employment standards officers are permitted to require s. 102 meetings in the context of Part XVIII.1 and to reflect the addition of a new subsection (10) to s. 102. Under that section, if one party fails to attend a s. 102 meeting, an officer may make a decision on the basis of:

- Any evidence or submissions provided by that party before the meeting;
- Any evidence or submissions provided by the other party before or during the meeting; and
- Any other factors the officer considers relevant.

Paragraph 1 of s. 74.13(1) gives an employment standards officer the authority to require certain persons to attend a s. 102 meeting where:

1. The officer is investigating a complaint against a client of a temporary help agency;
2. The officer conducts an inspection under s. 91 or 92 and comes to have reasonable grounds to believe that a client has contravened the legislation with respect to an assignment employee;
3. The officer acquires information that suggests the possibility of a contravention of the Act or regulations in relation to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee; or
4. An officer wishes to confirm that a client is complying with the Act with respect to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee who lives in the client's home.

Pursuant to paragraph 2 of s. 74.13(1), an officer may require any of the following persons to attend a s. 102 meeting:

- The client;
- A director or employee of a client where the client is a corporation; and
- An assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.

Paragraph 3 of s. 74.13(1) provides that the references to an employer in paragraph 1 of s. 102(10) will be read as references to a client of a temporary help agency. As a result, if a client who was served with a notice to attend a s. 102 meeting or to bring records or other documents to the meeting fails to comply with that notice, the officer may make a determination without entertaining any further evidence or submissions from the client.

Similarly, paragraph 4 of s. 74.13(1) provides that references to an employee in paragraph 2 of s. 102(10) will be read as references to a temporary help agency assignment employee or prospective assignment employee. As a result, if an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee who was served with a notice to attend as. 102 meeting or to bring records or other documents to the meeting fails to comply with that notice, the officer may make a determination without entertaining any further evidence or submissions from the assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.

Note that an employment standards officer is not required to hold meetings under section 102; other methods of investigation or inspection may be used.

Interpretation, Corporation - s. 74.13(2)

s. 74.13(2) For the purposes of paragraph 3 of subsection (1), if a client is a corporation, a reference to the client includes a director or employee who was served with a notice requiring him or her to attend the meeting or to bring or make available any records or other documents.

Subsection 74.13 (2) provides that if a client of a temporary help agency is a corporation, the reference in paragraph 3 of s. 74.13(1) will include a director or employee of the corporation who was served with a notice to attend a s. 102 meeting or bring or make available records or other documents to such a meeting.

As a result, if an employee or director of a corporate client was served with a notice to attend a s. 102 meeting or to bring records or other documents to such a meeting and fails to comply with that notice, the officer may make a determination without entertaining any further evidence or submissions from the client.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.13.1 - Time for Response

Time for Response - s. 74.13.1(1)

74.13.1(1) For the purposes of the application of section 102.1 in respect of this Part, the following modifications apply:

1. In addition to the circumstances set out in subsection 102.1 (1), the following are circumstances in which an employment standards officer may, after giving written notice, require persons to provide evidence or submissions to the officer within the period of time that he or she specifies in the notice:

- i. The officer is investigating a complaint against a client.
- ii. The officer, while inspecting a place under section 91 or 92, comes to have reasonable grounds to believe that a client has contravened this Act or the regulations with respect to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.
- iii. The officer acquires information that suggests to him or her the possibility that a client may have contravened this Act or the regulations with respect to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.
- iv. The officer wishes to determine whether a client in whose residence an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee resides is complying with this Act.

2. If a person who was served with a notice under section 102.1 and who failed to comply with the notice is a client, a reference to an employer in paragraphs 1 and 2 of subsection 102.1 (1) is a reference to a client.

3. If a person who was served with a notice under section 102.1 and who failed to comply with the notice is an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee, a reference to an employee in paragraphs 1 and 2 of subsection 102.1 (3) is a reference to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee as the case requires.

This section was added to specify modifications required for the application of s. 102.1 (added by the Open for Business Act, 2010 effective November 29, 2010) to temporary help agencies, their assignment employees and agency clients. Section 102.1 allows an employment standards officer to give notice that a party must provide evidence or submissions within a specified time period. Under that section, if one party fails to comply with the notice to provide evidence or submissions, an officer may make a decision on the basis of:

- Any evidence or submissions provided by that party before the notice was served;
- Any evidence or submissions provided by the other party before or in response to and within the time specified in the notice; and
- Any other factors the officers considers relevant.

Paragraph 1 of s. 74.13.1(1) sets out circumstances (in addition to those listed in s. 102.1) in which an employment standards officer may give notice to certain persons to provide evidence or submissions, as follows:

1. The officer is investigating a complaint against a client of a temporary help agency;

2. The officer is conducting an inspection under section 91 or 92 and comes to have reasonable grounds to believe that a client has contravened the legislation with respect to an assignment employee;
3. The officer acquires information that suggests the possibility of a contravention of the Act or regulations by a client in relation to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee; or
4. The officer wishes to confirm that a client is complying with the Act with respect to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee who lives in the client's home.

Paragraphs 2 and 3 of s. 74.13.1(1) provide that where a temporary help agency client or assignment employee fails to comply with a s. 102.1 notice, the references to an employer or an employee in s. 102.1 are to be read as references to, respectively, a client and an assignment employee.

As a result, if a client who was served with a notice to provide evidence or submissions within a specified time period fails to comply with that notice, the officer may make a determination without entertaining any further evidence or submissions from the client.

Similarly, if an assignment employee who was served with a notice to provide evidence or submissions within a specified time period fails to comply with that notice, the officer may make a determination without entertaining any further evidence or submissions from the assignment employee.

Interpretation, Corporation - s. 74.13.1(2)

s. 74.13.1(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), if a client is a corporation, a reference to the client or person includes a director or employee who was served with a notice requiring him or her to attend the meeting or to bring or make available any records or other documents.

Section 74.13.1(2) is a new subsection added by the Open for Business Act, 2010, effective November 29, 2010.

This subsection provides that if a temporary help agency's client, as referred to in paragraph 2 of s. 74.13.1(1) is a corporation, the term "client" includes a director or employee of the corporation who was served with a notice under subsection (1).

As a result, if an employee or director of a corporate client was served with a notice to provide evidence or submissions pursuant to s. 102.1 and fails to comply with that notice, the officer may make a determination without entertaining any further evidence or submissions from the client.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.14 - Order to Recover Fees

Order to Recover Fees - s. 74.14(1)

74.14(1) If an employment standards officer finds that a temporary help agency charged a fee to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee in contravention of paragraph 1, 2, 3, 5 or 9 of subsection 74.8 (1), the officer may,

(a) arrange with the agency that it repay the amount of the fee directly to the assignment employee or prospective assignment employee;

(a.1) order the agency to repay the amount of the fee to the assignment employee or prospective assignment employee; or

(b) order the agency to pay the amount of the fee to the Director in trust.

Section 74.14 applies where it is found that temporary help agency has charged a fee to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee in contravention of ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.8, paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 5 or 9.

Section 74.14(1)(a) states that where the officer finds a prohibited fee has been charged, the officer may arrange with the temporary help agency that it repay the amount of the fee to the assignment employee or prospective assignment employee directly, without an order being issued.

Section 74.14(1)(a.1) states that where an officer finds a prohibited fee has been charged, the officer may issue an order requiring the temporary help agency to repay the amount of the fee directly to the assignment employee or prospective assignment employee. Note that an order to repay fees issued under clause (a.1) does not include administrative costs. See s. 74.14(2) below.

Section 74.14(1)(b) states that where the officer finds that a prohibited fee has been charged, the officer may issue an order to the agency requiring the amount of the fee be paid to the Director of Employment Standards in trust. Note that an order to pay fees issued under clause (b) will include administrative costs. See subsection 74.14(2) below.

Assignment employees and prospective assignment employees seeking to recover fees are subject to the two-year limitation period for filing a complaint established under ESA Part XXII, s. 96(3). Subsection 96(3) provides that a complaint filed more than two years after the contravention has occurred will be deemed not to have been filed - see ESA Part XXII, s. 96. Note that an order issued under s. 74.14(1)(a.1) or s. 74.14(1)(b) is not subject to the limitation on recovery of wages imposed by s. 111 since an order to recover fees does not relate to wages. Finally, it should be noted that in addition to issuing an order to recover fees under either paragraphs (a.1) or (b) of s. 74.14(1), an officer could also issue a compliance order under ESA Part XXII, s. 108 and a notice of contravention under ESA Part XXII, s. 113 where there was a violation of s. 74.8(1) paragraphs 1, 2, 3, 5 or 9 as they may be issued in respect of any violation of the Act. See ESA Part XXII for a discussion of compliance orders and notices of contravention.

Administrative Costs - s. 74.14(2)

74.14(2) An order issued under clause (1) (b) shall also require the temporary help agency to pay to the Director in trust an amount for administrative costs equal to the greater of $100 and 10 per cent of the amount owing.

Section 74.14(2) provides that the order issued under s. 74.14(1)(b) shall, in addition to the amount of the fees owing, also contain an amount for administrative costs equal to 10 per cent of the amount owing or $100, whichever is greater. Note that there is no provision for the payment of administrative costs on an order issued under s. 74.14(a.1).

Both the fees and the administrative costs must be paid to the Director in trust. For example, if the amount of the fees to be repaid is $600, the administrative costs added to the order would be $100. If the amount of the fees owing is $2,000, the administrative costs added to the order would be $200.

There is no cap on the amount of administrative cost that may be imposed.

Administrative costs are not intended to be a penalty and the Program does not use them as such.

Contents of Order - s. 74.14(3)

74.14(3) The order shall state the paragraph of subsection 74.8 (1) that was contravened and the amount to be paid.

Subsection 74.14(3) provides that an order whether issued under s. 74.14(1)(a.1) or s. 74.14(1)(b) must state the paragraph of ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.8(1) that led to the order and the amount to be paid by the agency. Only a contravention of, s. 74.8(1) paras 1, 2, 3, 5 or 9 may lead to an order under this section.

The fact that a temporary help agency against whom an order has been issued had previous knowledge of the paragraph of s. 74.8(1) that was contravened and/or the amount owing does not relieve the officer of the requirement to set out this information in the order to recover fees.

Application of s. 103 (3) and (6) to (9) - s. 74.14(4)

74.14(4) Subsections 103 (3) and (6) to (9) apply with respect to an order issued under this section with necessary modifications and for the purpose, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, a reference to an employee is a reference to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.

Subsection 74.14(4) establishes that ESA Part XXII, ss. 103(3) and (6) to (9) apply, with necessary modifications, to orders to recover fees. In the context of an order to recover fees, any reference to an employee within those subsections of s. 103 is also a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee as follows:

1. Section 103(3): A single order may be issued with respect to fee repayment for more than one assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.
2. Section 103(6): The order must be served on the temporary help agency in accordance with s. 95.
3. Section 103(7): A letter advising of the issuance of an order must be served in accordance with s. 95 on any assignment employee or prospective assignment employee named in the order.
4. Section 103(8): The temporary help agency against whom an order is issued must comply with its terms.
5. Section 103(9): Where the temporary help agency fails to apply for a review of the order within the time period for applying for such a review, the order becomes final and binding.

Application of s. 105 - s. 74.14(5)

74.14(5) Section 105 applies with respect to repayment of fees by a temporary help agency to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee with necessary modifications, including but not limited to the following:

1. The reference to clause 103 (1) (a) in subsection 105 (1) is a reference to clause (1) (a) of this section.

2. A reference to an employee is a reference to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee to whom a fee is to be paid.

Section 74.14(5) indicates that ESA Part XXII, s. 105 applies, with necessary modifications, to the repayment of fees to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee. Two of the modifications that apply are set out in paragraphs 1 and 2 above.

Section 105 states:

105(1) If an employment standards officer has arranged with an employer or ordered an employer to pay wages under clause 103(1)(a) or (a.1) to the employee and the employer is unable to locate the employee despite having made reasonable efforts to do so, the employer shall pay the wages to the Director in trust.

105(2) If an employment standards officer has received money for an employee under a settlement but the employee cannot be located, the money shall be paid to the Director in trust.

105(3) Money paid to or held by the Director in trust under this section vests in the Crown but may, without interest, be paid out to the employee, the employee's estate or such other person as the Director considers is entitled to it.

Therefore, where an employment standards officer has arranged with a temporary help agency or ordered a temporary help agency to repay monies (fees) owing directly to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee under s. 74.14(1)(a) (when no order has been issued) or 74.14(1)(a.1) (when an order is issued) but the agency is unable to find the assignment employee or prospective assignment employee after having made a reasonable effort to do so, the agency must pay the amount of the fees owing to the Director of Employment Standards in trust. A trust is imposed upon the Director in the name of the Ministry to preserve the assignment employee or prospective assignment employee's right to the funds collected.

Where there has been a payment into trust with respect to money owed to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee and the individual cannot be located, the funds vest in the crown. These funds effectively become part of the government's general revenues.

The language of the s. 105(3) is permissive; that is the Director is given the discretion to pay out the funds collected, without interest, to another person the Director thinks is entitled to it instead of the assignment employee or prospective assignment employee, or to the assignment employee or prospective assignment employee themselves if they are subsequently located. The Director may do this; there is no requirement in the section that the Director do so.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.15 - Recovery of Prohibited Fees by Client

74.15 If a temporary help agency charges a fee to a client in contravention of paragraph 8 or 9 of subsection 74.8 (1), the client may recover the amount of the fee in a court of competent jurisdiction.

Section 74.15 provides that where a temporary help agency charges a fee to a client in contravention of paragraph 8 or 9 of s. 74.8(1), the client may commence a civil action in a court of competent jurisdiction to recover the amount of the fee paid.

A client is not precluded from filing a claim under the Employment Standards Act, 2000 for an alleged violation of this section since s. 96 establishes that any "person" may file a claim. However, an employment standards officer cannot order that the prohibited fees be repaid; the only remedy available when an officer finds a client was charged a fee in contravention of paragraph 8 or 9 of s. 74.8(1) is the issuance of a notice of contravention or a compliance order against the agency. While a notice of contravention carries a fine, neither a notice of contravention nor a compliance order can require the repayment of fees charged in contravention of paragraph 8 or 9.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.16 - Order for Compensation, Temporary Help Agency

Order for Compensation, Temporary Help Agency - s. 74.16(1)

74.16(1) If an employment standards officer finds that a temporary help agency has contravened paragraph 4, 6, 7 or 10 of subsection 74.8 (1), the officer may order that the assignment employee or prospective assignment employee be compensated for any loss he or she incurred as a result of the contravention.

Section 74.16 enables an employment standards officer to issue an order to compensate an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee for damages that result when a temporary help agency contravenes ESA Part XVIII.1, paragraphs 4, 6, 7, or 10. Those paragraphs state that a temporary help agency is prohibited from doing any of the following:

4. Restricting an assignment employee of the agency from entering into an employment relationship with a client.

6. Restricting a client from providing references in respect of an assignment employee of the agency.

7. Restricting a client from entering into an employment relationship with an assignment employee.

10. Imposing a restriction that is prescribed as prohibited. [Note that none were prescribed at the time of writing.]

Assignment employees or prospective assignment employees seeking a s. 74.16 order for compensation are subject to the two-year limitation period for filing a complaint established under ESA Part XXII, s. 96(3), which provides that a complaint filed more than two years after the contravention has occurred will be deemed not to have been filed.

As is the case with compensation orders issued under s. 74.17 and ESA Part XXII, s. 104, damages awards made under s. 74.16 are not subject to the limitation on the recovery of wages imposed by ESA Part XXII, s. 111, which limits the recovery of wages to those wages that come due within two years preceding date the claim is filed. Because the compensation awarded in s. 74.16 orders does not come due until the officer issues the order, ESA Part XXII, s. 111 does not restrict recovery of such compensation.

A compensation order may include a number of types of damages. The order is not simply expressed as a lump-sum amount, but rather reflects a precise and detailed breakdown of the monetary amounts assessed under each head of damages. For a discussion of the heads of damages associated with a compensation order issued under s. 104, see ESA Part XVIII, s. 74(1).

Heads of Damages

While that discussion relates primarily to reprisals under ESA Part XVIII, s. 74, some modified version of the damages awarded under that section may also apply to a compensation order issued under s. 74.16. For example, when there is a violation of paragraph 4 or 7 that resulted in an assignment employee not obtaining employment with a client of the agency, the following heads of damage may apply:

1. Loss of any earnings over the time that is required to find other direct employment;
2. Compensation for the lost opportunity for direct employment with the client;
3. Loss of any benefits (in the form of benefit plans) associated with direct employment with the client;
4. Actual expenses incurred in seeking other employment;
5. Emotional pain and suffering; and;
6. Any other reasonable foreseeable damages.

Although similar heads of damages are considered in the context of reprisals, the damages suffered by an assignment employee as a result of a contravention of paragraphs 4, 6, 7 or 10 of s. 74.8 reflect the unique nature of the relationship between the assignment employee and their temporary help agency employer and clients of the agency. For example, under the first heading, the intention is to quantify any wage losses suffered over the time it may take or should reasonably have taken the assignment employee to obtain direct employment with another employer – that is, employment other than as a temporary help agency assignment employee. Although there may be a lengthy period in which the employee is unable to find other direct employment, they may in large measure be able to mitigate their losses because they continue to work for the agency as an assignment employee. It is in fact possible that the employee would suffer no actual damages in the time it takes to find direct employment with another employer if at all.

That said, even if alternate direct employment was subsequently found, the new position may be inferior to the one the employee would have had with the client and in that case, some compensation may be appropriate for the lost opportunity for direct employment with the client, as indicated in the second head of damages noted above. For example, compensation may be awarded under this heading if the alternate position does not have the same opportunities for advancement, does not have the same perks as the position with the agency's client and/or did not give the employee the same advantages that might result because of past work experience with that client through previous assignments.

An award might also be made under this second heading if no alternate direct employment was obtained at all. In that case, the award would attempt to compensate the employee for such things as lost promotional opportunities, regular hours, etc., associated with the lost opportunity for direct employment with the client.

Awards made under headings (3) to (6) above are subject to the same considerations as discussed in awards made under ESA Part XXII, s. 104 for contraventions of s. 74(1). See the discussion in ESA Part XVIII, s. 74(1).

Again, it should be noted that it is also possible that a contravention of paragraphs 4, 6 and 7 would not necessarily result in damages to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee. For example, an agency may have a term in a contract with an assignment employee that is contrary to paragraph 4 of s. 74.8(1). The assignment employee may file a claim but if there is no evidence before the officer that the restriction in the contract actually prevented the assignment employee from obtaining employment with a client there may be no actual damages flowing from the contravention.

Where an agency has contravened paragraph 6 of s. 74.8(1) by imposing a restriction on a client's ability to provide a job reference, it is possible that the damages flowing from that contravention could be minimal because the lack of such a reference may not have prevented the assignment employee from (for example) obtaining other employment.

As another example, an agency may have included a provision in a contract between a client and a temporary help agency that was contrary to paragraph 7 of s. 74.8(1) but the client may not have intended to directly employ the assignment employee who filed the complaint under s. 74.8. Again, in those circumstances, no damages would flow from the breach of paragraph 7 as far as the assignment employee was personally concerned.

However, in the situations described above, the agency would be subject to other enforcement action for the breach of paragraphs 4, 6 or 7 of s. 74.8, such as a notice of contravention, a compliance order and the term itself would be deemed to be void pursuant to paragraph 9.

Finally, also note that as in any case where a compensation order may be made, an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee has a duty to mitigate their damages - see ESA Part XVIII, s. 74(1) for a discussion.

Terms of Orders - s. 74.16(2)

74.16(2) If an order issued under this section requires a temporary help agency to compensate an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee, it shall also require the agency to,

(a) pay to the Director in trust,

(i) the amount of the compensation, and

(ii) an amount for administration costs equal to the greater of $100 and 10 per cent of the amount of compensation; or

(b) pay the amount of the compensation to the assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.

Where an order is issued for compensation under s. 74.16(1), s. 74.16(2) provides that the order must also require the agency to pay the amount of compensation to either the Director in trust pursuant to s. 76.16(2)(a) or to the assignment employee or prospective assignment employee pursuant to s. 76.16(2)(b). If the terms of the order require the temporary help agency to pay the amount of the compensation to the Director in trust, the agency will also be required to pay an amount for administration costs equal to the greater of 10 percent of the compensation or $100. Note that the required terms in s. 74.16(2)(b) do not include administrative costs.

74.16(3) The order shall state the paragraph of subsection 74.8 (1) that was contravened and the amount to be paid.

Subsection 74.16(3) provides that an order must set out the paragraph of ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.8(1) that led to the order and the order must also state the amount to be paid by the agency. Only a contravention of s. 74.8(1) paragraphs 4, 6, 7 or 10 may lead to an order under that section.

The fact that the temporary help agency against whom an order is issued had previous knowledge of the paragraph of s. 74.8(1) that was contravened, and/or of the amount owing, does not relieve the officer of the requirement to set out this information as part of the order.

Application of s. 103 (3) and (6) to (9) - s. 74.16(4)

74.16(4) Subsections 103 (3) and (6) to (9) apply with respect to orders issued under this section with necessary modifications and for the purpose, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, a reference to an employee is a reference to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.

Subsection 74.16(4) provides that ESA Part XXII, ss. 103(3), (6) to (9) apply, with necessary modifications, to orders for compensation issued against temporary help agencies under s. 74.16. When read in the context of a compensation order issued under s. 74.16, any reference to an employee within those subsections of ESA Part XXII, s. 103 is deemed to be a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee as follows:

- Section 103(3): A single order may be issued with respect to compensation owing to more than one employee
- Section 103(6): The order must be served on the temporary help agency in accordance with s. 95
- Section 103(7): A letter must be served, in accordance with s. 95, on an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee affected by the order
- Section 103(8): The temporary help agency against whom an order is issued must comply with its terms
- Section 103(9): Where the temporary help agency fails to apply for a review of the order within the time period for applying for such a review, the order becomes final and binding.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.17 - Order re Client Reprisal

Order re Client Reprisal - s. 74.17(1)

74.17(1) If an employment standards officer finds that section 74.12 has been contravened with respect to an assignment employee, the officer may order that the employee be compensated for any loss he or she incurred as a result of the contravention or that he or she be reinstated in the assignment or that he or she be both compensated and reinstated.

Section 74.17 applies where an employment standards officer finds that a client of a temporary help agency has contravened ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.12 with respect to an assignment employee. In that situation, the officer may order that the assignment employee be compensated for any loss incurred due to the contravention, be reinstated in the assignment, or be both compensated and reinstated.

Assignment employees seeking compensation/reinstatement under this section are subject to the two-year limitation period for filing a complaint established under ESA Part XXII, s. 96(3), which provides that a complaint filed more than two years after the contravention has occurred will be deemed not to have been filed. Damages awards made under s. 74.17 are not subject to the limitation on recovery of wages imposed by ESA Part XXII, s. 111, which limits the recovery of wages to those wages that come due within two years preceding the date the claim is filed. Because the compensation awarded in s. 74.17 orders does not come due until the officer issues the order, s. 111 does not restrict recovery of that compensation.

An order issued under this section may include a number of types of damages. The order is not expressed simply as a lump-sum amount, but rather reflects a precise and detailed breakdown of the monetary amounts assessed under each head of damages. For a discussion of compensation in the context of reprisal by an employer, see ESA Part XVIII, s. 74(1).

In cases where there is a reprisal by a client, the damages awards as discussed in ESA Part XVIII, s. 74(1) may not be relevant in all aspects. Primarily, the differences will be related to the fact that a client has no direct employment relationship with an assignment employee. Reprisals may therefore take the form of a client prematurely ending the assignment. For example, assume an assignment employee had a two-month term assignment with client A. Within just a few days of the commencement of that assignment and in response to inquiries from the assignment employee about their rights to a meal break under the ESA 2000, client A ended the assignment. An employment standards officer may, in that case, conclude that client A contravened s. 74.12. However, in assessing the damages (assuming that reinstatement into the assignment was not an option), the officer may consider the following:

1. Loss of direct earnings incurred as a result of the loss of the assignment (in the example above might be up to two months' worth of earnings lost);
2. Loss of any benefits (in the form of benefit plans) associated with the assignment;
3. Emotional pain and suffering; and
4. Actual expenses (if any) that might have been incurred in trying to find a reasonable alternate assignment or other work.

Any damages assessment is subject to consideration of the assignment employee's duty to mitigate their losses. For example, if the assignment employee refused the agency's offers of reasonable alternate assignments after the assignment with client A was ended, the damages award and particularly any amounts under 1) above would be significantly reduced.

The question may arise as to when an order for reinstatement in the assignment is appropriate – see the discussion at ESA Part XVIII, s. 74(1). In the context of orders issued under s. 74.17, it is important to note that any reinstatement order is limited to the terms of the original assignment with the client, assuming those terms are in compliance with the ESA 2000.

Because such a reinstatement order necessarily involves the agency as the employer of the assignment employee and a party to the contract with the client, the Act stipulates that the agency has an obligation under s. 74.17(4) to do whatever it can do to enable compliance by the client. For more information on this point see the discussion below at s. 74.17(4).

One question that arises concerns the ability of an officer to order a client to place as opposed to reinstate an assignment employee into an assignment. For example, assume a client is looking for an assignment employee to fill a 12-month assignment. The agency sends a resume to the client who then asks to schedule an interview with the assignment employee. At the interview, the client notes the assignment employee is pregnant and suggests that she would have been perfect for the position but because of a conflict between the timing of the assignment and her impending pregnancy/parental leave she will not be given the assignment. The client's actions in this case would clearly constitute a reprisal under s. 74.12; however, the remedy under s. 74.17(1) would be limited to a compensation order as that section does not provide for an order requiring a client to place an assignment employee into an assignment.

Terms of Orders - s. 74.17(2)

74.17(2) If an order issued under this section requires the client to compensate an assignment employee, it shall also require the client to,

(a) pay to the Director in trust,

(i) the amount of the compensation; and

(ii) an amount for administration costs equal to the greater of $100 and 10 per cent of the amount of compensation; or

(b) pay the amount of the compensation to the assignment employee.

Where an order is issued for compensation under s. 74.17(1), s. 74.17(2) provides that the order must also require the client to pay the amount of the compensation to either the Director in trust pursuant to s. 74.17(2)(a) or to the assignment employee pursuant to s. 74.17(2)(b). If the terms of the order require the client to pay the amount of the compensation to the Director in trust, the client will also be required to pay an amount for administration costs equal to the greater of 10 percent of the compensation or $100. Note that the required terms in s. 74.17(2)(b) do not include administrative costs.

Application of s. 103 (3) and (5) to (9) - s. 74.17(3)

74.17(3) Subsections 103 (3) and (5) to (9) apply with respect to orders issued under this section with necessary modifications, including but not limited to the following:

1. A reference to an employer is a reference to a client.

2. A reference to an employee is a reference to an assignment employee.

Subsection 74.17(3) provides that ESA Part XXII, ss. 103(3), (5) to (9) apply, with necessary modifications, to orders issued under s. 74.17 for client reprisal. In the context of an order for client reprisal, any reference to an employer within those subsections in s. 103 is deemed to be a reference to a client and any reference to an employee is deemed to be a reference to an assignment employee as follows:

1. Section 103(3): a single order may be issued with respect to more than one assignment employee affected by a client reprisal.
2. Section 103(5): the order must contain, or be accompanied by, information setting out the nature of the amount found to be owing to the assignment employee.
3. Section 103(6): the order must be served on the client in accordance with section 95.
4. Section 103(7): a letter must be served on an assignment employee affected by the order in accordance with s. 95.
5. Section 103(8): the client against whom the order is issued must comply with it according to its terms.

6. Section 103(9): where the client fails to apply for a review of the order within the time period for applying for such a review, the order becomes final and binding.

Agency Obligation - s. 74.17(4)

74.17(4) If an order is issued under this section requiring a client to reinstate an assignment employee in the assignment, the temporary help agency shall do whatever it can reasonably do in order to enable compliance by the client with the order.

This provision applies where an employment standards officer has issued an order under s. 74.17 requiring a client of a temporary help agency to reinstate an assignment employee into a particular assignment. Section 74.17(4) places an obligation on the temporary help agency to do whatever it can reasonably do to enable the client's compliance with the order.

For example, a temporary help agency has an ongoing contract with a client for the provision of clerical services. The temporary help agency places an assignment employee with the client to provide filing services. The assignment employee will soon be taking a pregnancy leave. If the client subsequently reprises against the assignment employee by refusing to have her continue to perform the work assignment because she plans to take a pregnancy leave, an employment standards officer could order that the client reinstate that assignment employee into the filing assignment. The temporary help agency must then do whatever it can reasonably do in order to enable the client to comply with the order. Depending on the circumstances this may include, for instance, liaising with the client to ensure the assignment employee is reinstated into the assignment, re-opening the contract with the client for the assignment, or taking other reasonable steps to ensure the assignment employee can return to performing work for the client.

ESA Part XVIII.1 Section 74.18 – Agency and Client Jointly and Severally Liable

Agency and Client Jointly and Severally Liable – s. 74.18(1)

74.18(1) Subject to subsection (2), if an assignment employee was assigned to perform work for a client of a temporary help agency during a pay period, and the agency fails to pay the employee some or all of the wages described in subsection (3) that are owing to the employee for that pay period, the agency and the client are jointly and severally liable for the wages.

The Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014, SO 2014, c 10 added this provision to the ESA 2000. This section imposes joint and several liability on temporary help agencies and the clients of temporary help agencies for certain unpaid wages of the agency's assignment employees, as described in s. 74.18(3), owed in respect of any pay period. This provision came into force on November 20, 2015 together with the provisions in ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.4.1 and s. 74.4.2 that impose new record keeping obligations on both agencies and their clients to record the hours worked by each assignment employee of the agency in each day and week for the client.

Transitional

As this joint and several liability for certain wages applies as of November 20, 2015, Program policy is that clients may be liable only for such wages as are earned on or after that date. Therefore, a client would not be liable for any wages that were earned in a pay period that ended prior to November 20, 2015 nor for any of the wages earned prior to November 20, 2015 in a pay period that began prior to that date but that ended on or after November 20, 2015.

Practically then, if a pay period begins prior to November 20, 2015 but ends on or after November 20, 2015, s. 74.18 would be applied as if the pay period began November 20, 2015.

Note that this joint and several liability imposed on the client is proportional if an assignment employee has performed work for more than one client in the pay period in respect of which the wages are unpaid. See the discussion of ss. 74.18(2) and (3) further below in this section.

Same, More than One Client – s. 74.18(2)

74.18(2) If an assignment employee was assigned to perform work for more than one client of a temporary help agency during a pay period, and the agency fails to pay the employee some or all of the wages described in subsection (3) that are owing to the employee for that pay period, each client is jointly and severally liable with the agency for a share of the total wages owed to the employee that is in proportion to the number of hours the employee worked for that client during the pay period relative to the total number of hours the employee worked for all clients during the pay period.

This provision states that the joint and several liability imposed on clients of agencies for certain unpaid wages of the agency's assignment employees as described in s. 74.18(3) is a proportional liability if the assignment employee has performed work for more than one client of the agency in the specific pay period for which the wages are owed.

Therefore, while the agency is liable for the full amount of any unpaid wages, each client is liable only for the unpaid wages as described in s. 74.18(3) earned in any given pay period in an amount that is proportional to the hours worked for the client in the pay period, relative to the total hours worked.

For example, assume an assignment employee was owed $2000 in unpaid wages as described in s. 74.18(3) for a single pay period. The employee had worked the following hours in the pay period:

- Total hours worked: 80
- For client A - 20 hours
- For client B - 40 hours
- For client C - 15 hours
- For client D - 5 hours

The proportionate liability of each client is based on the number of hours worked for each client relative to the total hours worked in the pay period:

- For client A: 20 hours/80 hours = 25% X $2000 or $500
- For client B: 40 hours/80 hours = 50% X $2000 or $1000
- For client C: 15 hours/80 hours = 18.75% X $2000 or $375
- For client D: 5 hours/80 hours = 6.25% X $2000 or $125

The agency is liable for the full $2000.

Also see the discussion of s.74.18(3) below, which sets out the types of wages that clients are liable for and provides examples in which different types of wages are unpaid in respect of the same pay period.

Transitional

As noted in the discussion of s. 74.18(1) above, Program policy is that a client of a temporary help agency will not be liable for any wages earned in a pay period that ends before November 20, 2015 or in any portion of a pay period preceding November 20, 2015.

For example, assume an assignment employee was owed $2000 in unpaid wages as described in s. 74.18(3) for a single pay period, but the pay period in question began on November 16, 2015 and ended November 29, 2015. Only those wages earned and only those hours worked for clients on or after November 20, 2015 would be included in the calculation of each client's proportional liability.

In this case, assume the employee worked a total of 80 hours and 40 of those hours were worked between November 20, 2015 and November 29, 2015 (inclusive).

The first step in determining the liability of the clients would be to determine what portion of the wages as described under s. 74.18(3) were earned in respect of the 40 hours worked between November 20, 2015 and November 29, 2015 (inclusive). Assume that of the $2000 owed in respect of the pay period beginning November 16, 2015 and ending November 29, 2015 that $1000 was earned on or after November 20, 2015.

Secondly, the proportionate liability would be determined with respect to only those clients for whom the employee performed work between November 20, 2015 and November 29, 2015 (inclusive) based on the proportion of hours worked for each such client between November 20, 2015 and November 29, 2015.

Total hours worked: 80

Hours worked November 20 to 29, 2015 inclusive: 40

Hours worked prior to November 20, 2015:

- For client A: 20 hours
- For client B: 40 hours
- For client C: 15 hours
- For client D: 5 hours

Hours worked November 20 – 29, 2015:

- For client A: 8 hours
- For client B: 32 hours
- For client C: No hours
- For client D: No hours

The proportionate liability of each client is based on the number of hours worked for each client relative to the total hours worked in that portion of the pay period beginning November 20, 2015 and ending November 29, 2015:

- For client A: 8 hours/40hours = 20% x $1000 or $200
- For client B: 32 hours/40 hours = 80% x $1000 or $800
- For client C: 0 hours/40 hours = 0% x $1000 or $0.00
- For client D: 0 hours/40 hours = 0% x $1000 or $0.00

The agency is liable for the full $2000. However, in assessing the clients' joint and several liability, the employment standards officer would look only at those hours worked and wages earned between November 20, 2015 and November 29, 2015 (inclusive) as set out in the example above.

Wages for which Client may be Liable – s. 74.18(3)

74.18(3) A client of a temporary help agency may be jointly and severally liable under this section for the following wages:

1. Regular wages that were earned during the relevant pay period.

2. Overtime pay that was earned during the relevant pay period.

3. Public holiday pay that was earned during the relevant pay period.

4. Premium pay that was earned during the relevant pay period.

Subsection 74.18(3) describes those wages of a temporary help agency's assignment employees for which the clients of the agency may be jointly and severally liable. The wages are limited to regular wages, overtime pay, public holiday pay and premium pay.

Regular wages are defined in ESA Part I, s. 1. The definition specifically excludes overtime pay, public holiday pay, premium pay for work performed on a public holiday, vacation pay, domestic or sexual violence leave pay, termination pay, severance pay and termination of assignment pay, and any greater right or benefit to which the employee is entitled pursuant to ESA Part III, s. 5(2) in respect of such wages. Regular wages would, however, include wages for work performed such as the employee's hourly rate or salary, piece rate, shift premiums and commissions.

In addition to regular wages, clients are jointly and severally liable under this subsection for overtime pay, public holiday pay and premium pay. The liability for these specific wages, i.e., overtime pay, public holiday pay and premium pay (for work performed on a public holiday), will therefore extend to any greater right or benefit to which the employee is entitled pursuant to ESA Part III, s. 5(2) in respect of overtime pay, public holiday pay and premium pay.

In accordance with this subsection, clients have no liability for vacation pay, termination pay or severance pay.

Calculating each client's liability for the unpaid wages is determined in accordance with the method described in s. 74.18(2). Effectively, a client is proportionately liable for a share of the total wages as described in s. 74.18(3) that are unpaid in respect of any particular pay period, if the assignment employee has performed work for more than one client of the agency in the specific pay period for which such wages are owed.

Specifically, amounts owing in respect of any or all the wages described in s. 74.18(3) are added together. Each client's proportionate liability is then calculated by multiplying that amount by the ratio of the number of hours worked for the client in the pay period divided by the total hours worked for all clients in that pay period.

Example 1

An employee has a two-week pay period and total wages owed for that pay period as follows:

- $100 in respect of overtime pay for week 1 of the pay period
- $200 for premium pay for work performed on Christmas Day and Boxing Day in week 2 of the pay period
- Employee worked 20 hours for client B in week 2
- Employee worked a total of 60 hours in the pay period

The employee is owed a total of $300 and the agency is liable for that full amount.

Client A is liable for a proportionate amount of the total wages described in subsection 3 that are owing for the pay period = $300 (that is, both the overtime pay and premium pay owing in respect of the pay period). The proportionate liability is based on the relative number hours the assignment employee worked for Client A as compared to the total hours worked in the pay period as follows:

- $300 X 40 hours/60 hours = $200

Client B is liable for a proportionate amount for the pay period as follows:

- $300 X 20 hours/60 hours = $100

Example 2

An employee is terminated at the end of a two-week pay period and is owed wages in respect of that last pay period as follows:

- $200 in respect of overtime pay for week 1 of the pay period
- $300 for premium pay for work performed on Christmas Day and Boxing Day in week 2 of the pay period
- $1000 in respect of regular wages for weeks 1 and 2 of the pay period
- $500 termination pay in lieu of working notice
- $200 in respect of unpaid vacation pay
- Employee worked 20 hours for client A in each of weeks 1 and 2
- Employee worked 20 hours for client B in week 2
- Employee worked a total of 60 hours in the pay period

The employee is owed a total of $2200 and the agency is liable for that full amount. However, in accordance with s. 74.18(3), the clients of the agency have no liability with respect to the $200 in outstanding vacation pay or the $500 termination pay in lieu of notice owing to this employee.

Client A is liable for a proportionate amount of the total wages described in s. 74.18(3) that are owing for the pay period = $1500 (that is, the overtime pay, premium public holiday pay and regular wages only owing in respect of the pay period). The proportionate liability is based on the relative number hours the assignment employee worked for Client A as compared to the total hours worked in the pay period as follows:

- $1500 X 40 hours/60 hours = $1000

Client B is liable for a proportionate amount for the pay period as follows:

- $1500 X 20 hours/60 hours = $500

Agency Primarily Responsible – s. 74.18(4)

74.18(4) Despite subsections (1) and (2), the temporary help agency is primarily responsible for an assignment employee's wages, but proceedings against the agency under this Act do not have to be exhausted before proceedings may be commenced to collect wages from the client of the agency.

Section 74.18(4) provides that a temporary help agency, as the employer of an assignment employee, is primarily responsible for the employee's wages, but the proceedings against the employer do not have to run their full course before proceedings may be commenced against a client of the agency.

See also the discussion in ESA Part XX, s. 81(2), a similar provision that applies in the context of a corporate director's liabilities for the wages of an employee of a corporate employer.

Enforcement – Client Deemed to be Employer – s. 74.18(5)

74.18(5) For the purposes of enforcing the liability of a client of a temporary help agency under this section, the client is deemed to be an employer of the assignment employee.

This provision allows certain enforcement provisions of the ESA 2000 that apply with respect to employers to be used in relation to clients of temporary help agencies for the purposes of enforcing client liability for the wages of the agency's assignment employees, just as if the client was the employer of the assignment employee, including provisions in:

- Part XX: Liability of Directors
- Part XXI: Who Enforces this Act and What They Can Do
- Part XXII: Complaints and Enforcement
- Part XXIII: Reviews of the Board
- Part XXV: Offences and Prosecutions

In other words, any provision that would apply with respect to the employer (in relation to the enforcement of entitlements to unpaid wages) may be read to refer to a client of a temporary help agency if a liability for unpaid wages has been found in accordance with s. 74.18. For example, an employment standards officer may require the client to attend a meeting under ESA Part XXII, s. 102 or issue an order under ESA Part XXII, s. 103 or s. 106.

Same – Orders – s. 74.18(6)

74.18(6) Without restricting the generality of subsection (5), an order issued by an employment standards officer against a client of a temporary help agency to enforce a liability under this section shall be treated as if it were an order against an employer for the purposes of this Act.

This provision specifies that whereas the client of a temporary help agency is deemed to be the employer of an assignment employee for the purposes of enforcing the joint and several liability of a client under s. 74.18, specifically, the order issued by an employment standards officer under ESA Part XXII, s. 103 against the client is treated as if it were an order against the employer.

This means for example that a client could appeal such an order to the Ontario Labour Relations Board. It also means that the directors of a client that was a corporation are subject to the director liability provisions in ESA Part XX as if they were directors of an employer.

ESA Part XIX - Building Services Providers

The intent of the building services provisions contained in Part XIX (Building Services Providers) is two-fold. First, the provisions impose obligations for the payment of termination pay, severance pay and vacation pay (in respect of employees of the replaced provider) when there is a change in the provider of building services. Second, the provisions aim to ensure that the persons bidding on a contract in the building services sector have all the necessary information about the employees' wage rates, etc., in order to estimate their potential termination and severance obligations when preparing their bids and to make offers to employees of the replaced provider if they should win the contract.

ESA Part XIX Section 75 - New Provider

New Provider - s. 75(1)

75(1) This Part applies if a building services provider for a building is replaced by a new provider.

Section 75(1) is similar to s. 13.1(2) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 75(1) states that this Part applies if a building services provider provides building services at a building, stops providing those services and is replaced by a new provider. A building services provider may be replaced in the following situations:

1. Contracting out - where the building owner or manager is using its own "in-house" staff to perform the building services, but then decides to have an outside contractor perform those services;
2. Change of contractors - where the building owner or manager is using contractor A to provide the building services, but then decides to award the contract instead to contractor B; or
3. Contracting in - where the building owner or manager is using a contractor to provide the building services, but decides instead to use its own "in-house" staff to perform those services.

In addition, the two providers (e.g., the replaced provider and the new provider) must be providing the same general category of building services at the premises. If, for example, a building owner discontinued its food service contract with A and contemporaneously entered into a security services contract with B, B could not be said to be "replacing" A at the premises.

75(2) The new provider shall comply with Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) with respect to every employee of the replaced provider who is engaged in providing services at the premises and whom the new provider does not employ as if the new provider had terminated and severed the employee's employment.

This provision is substantially the same as s. 13.1(4) under the former Employment Standards Act. Section 75(2) provides that if the new provider does not employ an employee of the previous provider who was engaged in providing services at the premises, the new provider shall comply with Part XV of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 (Termination and Severance of Employment) with regards to the employee as if the new provider had terminated and severed the employee's employment. An employee of the replaced provider who was not engaged in providing services at the premises would not be entitled to notice and or severance pay from the new provider if the new provider did not employ him or her. Those obligations would continue to lie with the replaced provider.

Note that the requirement that the employee be engaged in providing services at the premises is not mirrored in s. 10 of the Act. Consequently, continuity of employment will be afforded to employees of the replaced provider who are employed by a new provider, whether they were engaged in providing services at the premises or not.

The obligations imposed under this section are subject to s. 75(4) which states that the new provider is not required to comply with subsection (2) with respect to an employee retained by the replaced provider or any prescribed employees.

There is often a gap between the time a contract is awarded to a new provider and the date the new provider actually begins providing the services. The obligations to comply with Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) are imposed on the new provider and cannot be discharged until the changeover date. For a discussion of the definition "Changeover date" see O Reg 287, s. 2(5). It is the Program's position that it is inherent in the notion of compliance with Part XV that the employees cannot be provided with notice by a new provider if they are still in the employ of the replace provider. Therefore, if a successful bidder purported to give notice to the current provider's employees prior to the changeover date, such notice would be invalid.

One question that arises is when can it be said that the new provider has not employed the employees of the replaced provider, thereby triggering the obligations to comply with Part XV? Section 75(2) provides that a new provider will be required to comply with Part XV of the Act if he or she does not hire the employees of the replaced provider. It is Program policy that although there may be continuity of employment for employees of the replaced provider terminated before the changeover date in accordance with s. 10 of the Act (which provides for continuity of employment if the employees are hired by the new provider within the earlier of 13 weeks after the last day of employment with the replaced provider or the changeover date), the new provider's obligations with respect to notice of termination and severance pay under s. 75(2) apply only to persons who were employees of the replaced provider as of the changeover date and who were not hired within 13 weeks of the changeover date. The new provider would have no liability for Part XV obligations under this section with respect to employees of the replaced provider terminated by the replaced provider either before the changeover date or more than 13 weeks after the changeover date.

However, the obligations to comply with Part XV are also subject to s. 75(4), which provides that no termination and severance obligations will be imposed on the new provider with respect to any "prescribed" employees (i.e., prescribed under s. 2(1) of O Reg 287/01) or if the employee continues to be employed by the replaced provider. See ESA Part IV for a more detailed discussion of s. 10 of the Act and further below in this section for a more detailed discussion of s. 75(4) of the Act.

Example:

- An employee worked 90 per cent of his time for the replaced provider at building A and 10 per cent of his time for the replaced provider at building B.
- Employee continued to work for the replaced provider at building B after a new provider took over the contract for building services at building A.
- The new provider would have no Part XV obligations with respect to the employee, even though it did not hire that employee within 13 weeks of the changeover date, because the employee continued to be employed by the replaced provider.

The commencement of a lay-off does not trigger the end of an employment relationship. If an employee is on temporary lay-off for the purposes of notice of termination or a lay-off for the purposes of severance pay or both, he or she is considered to be employed. Note that even though an employee may have ceased to be on temporary lay-off after 13 weeks for the purposes of the notice of termination provisions in the Act, if he or she remains on lay-off for severance purposes for a further 22 weeks, the employee will continue to be employed for that additional 22 weeks.

Example 1:

- If an employee were laid off one week before the changeover date and the lay-off ceased to be temporary 13 weeks later (and assuming the replaced provider had no severance obligations with respect to the employee), the employee's last day of employment would be 12 weeks after the changeover date.
- Because the employee continued to be employed by the replaced provider as of the changeover date, the new provider would have Part XV obligations imposed under s. 75(2) if it did not hire the employee within 13-week period after the changeover date - unless the employee fell within one of the categories of exempt employees set out in s. 2(1) of O Reg 287/01.

Example 2:

- Employee A is placed on temporary lay-off 20 weeks before the changeover date and ceased to be on temporary lay-off for notice of termination purposes seven weeks before the changeover date but continued to be on lay-off for severance purposes until 15 weeks after the changeover date.
- In this case, employee continued to be employed by the replaced provider as of the changeover date. However, the employee also continued to be employed by the replaced provider for the full 13 weeks after the changeover date and under s. 75(4), the new provider would be exempt from the obligation to comply with Part XV even though it did not hire the employee in the 13-week period following the changeover.

It should also be noted that the deemed termination date as set out in s. 56(5), which provides that where an employee is temporarily laid off and the lay-off subsequently ceases to be temporary that his or her employment is deemed to be terminated on the first day of the lay-off, has no application with respect to assigning the liability for termination pay (which is determined under this Part), although it will be relevant in determining the quantum (which is determined under Part XV).

Example:

- Employer A loses contract for building services to employer B.
- Changeover date is June 14.
- A's employee is laid off one week before the changeover date (June 7). Temporary lay-off for notice of termination purposes ends September 6 (13 weeks after the lay-off began and 12 weeks after the changeover date). A's employee has no severance entitlement.
- Employer B did not hire employee on or before September 13 (i.e., 13 weeks after the changeover date).
- Employer B is liable for Part XV termination pay. However, the employee's entitlement to notice of termination (or pay in lieu) will be determined on the basis of his or her employment ending on the deemed termination date under s. 56(5), i.e., June 7.

Same - s. 75(3)

75(3) The new provider shall be deemed to have been the employee's employer for the purpose of subsection (2).

Section 75(3) states that the new provider is deemed to be the employer of all employees of the previous provider whom it chooses not to employ, for purposes of Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment). As a result, the entitlements to notice or termination pay and/or severance pay for those employees are based on the employees' service with the replaced provider. Even though the new provider did not enter into an employment relationship with the employee, the employee's period of service with the previous provider will be used to calculate his or her entitlement to termination and severance pay. Note, however, that as the building service provisions under the former Act (continued in Part XIX of the ESA 2000) were retrospective to June 4, 1992, only, this section can only be used to credit an employee for his or her employment with a replaced provides prior to June 4, 1992, if the replaced provider was providing service at the premises on that date.

Exception - s. 75(4)

75(4) The new provider is not required to comply with subsection (2) with respect to,

(a) an employee who is retained by the replaced provider; or

(b) any prescribed employees.

This provision is similar in effect to s. 13.1(4) and s. 1 of O Reg 138/96 of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 75(4) confirms that the new provider is exempted from the obligations in s. 75(2) (i.e., termination and severance obligations) with respect to employees retained by the previous provider or those employees prescribed by regulation. Section 75(4) must therefore be read in conjunction with the list of "prescribed employees" in s. 2(1) of O Reg 287/01. Employees retained by the replaced provider - s. 75(4)(a)

1. Employees retained by the replaced provider – s. 75(4)(a)

Section 75(4)(a) relieves a new provider of the obligation to comply with Part XV with respect to employees of the replaced provider that it does not employ, if they continue to be employed by the replaced provider. As noted in the discussion of s. 75(2) of the Act, s. 75(4) refers, in effect, only to employees who continue to be employed by the replaced provider more than 13 weeks after the changeover date.

An employee will continue to be employed by a replaced provider if he or she is retained by the replaced provider (e.g., to work at another building site). The employee will also be considered to be employed by the replaced provider if he or she is on a lay-off for the purposes of notice of termination (see s. 56(3) and/or severance pay (s. 63(2)).

Example:

- If an employee worked at two sites for the replaced provider prior to a changeover at one of the sites, or was moved to a new site by the replaced provider, and his or her regular non-overtime pay after the changeover date was:
    - Not less than 50 per cent of what it was prior to the changeover (for purposes of termination of employment, s. 56(3)); and
    - Not less than 25 per cent of what it was at the original site (for purposes of severance of employment, s. 63(2)),
- Then the employee will be considered to have been retained by the replaced provider and the new provider will not have any obligations under Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) with respect to that employee.

If an employee's regular non-overtime pay with the replaced provider falls below the thresholds set out in s. 56(3) or s. 63(2), then the employee will be deemed to be on a lay-off and there will be a deemed termination or severance by the replaced provider after the lay-off has reached a certain point (i.e., 13 or 35 weeks in the case of termination pay, depending, for example, on whether benefits are continued [ss. 56(2) and 56(3)] and 35 weeks in the case of severance pay [s. 63(1)]). If the employee continues to be on lay-off for either both notice of termination or severance purposes 13 weeks after the changeover date, the employee will consider to have been retained by the replaced provider under s. 75(4) and the new provider will have no obligations under Part XV. In that case, liabilities for termination and/or severance will remain with the replaced provider.

2. Any prescribed employees - s. 74(4)(b)

Section 2(1) of O Reg 287/01 lists four additional classes of employees in respect of which the new provider is relieved of the obligation to comply with s. 75(2). For a detailed discussion of these employees, see O Reg 287/01, s. 2(1).

3. Other Issues

Some other questions that arise concerning the Part XIX (Building Services Providers) obligations of the new provider, under s. 75(2) are as follows:

1. For purposes of severance pay, is the $2.5 million payroll threshold determined with reference to the new provider's payroll, or with reference to the replaced provider's payroll?
    - Answer: It is determined with reference to the new provider's payroll.

2. If the new provider is under federal labour jurisdiction, e.g., a bank, and contracts in services that were previously contracted out, does s. 75(2) apply?
    - Answer: No, s. 75(2) does not apply. The Act only applies to employees and their employers who are provincially regulated, s. 3(2). Therefore, the employee would be considered terminated by the previous provider, which would be responsible for the Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) entitlements of the employees.
3. Does the answer in "2" still apply if the replaced provider is under federal labour jurisdiction and contracts the work out to a new provider under provincial labour jurisdiction?
    - Answer: Yes, it does, except that the replaced provider's obligations would be under the Canada Labour Code, RSC 1985, c L-2.
4. What if the owner or manager of the premises falls under federal jurisdiction (e.g., a Canadian Airport Authority) but both the replaced provider and new provider fall under provincial jurisdiction (e.g., they provide food services which are not integral to the operation of the airport)?
    - Answer: Section 75 will apply to both the replaced and the new provider. In addition, the information requirements in s. 77 of the Act may be enforced against the building owner/manager, even though it operates as a federal undertaking. See UFCW, Local 1000A v Cara Operations Ltd., 2001 CanLII 18382 (ON LRB).
5. What if the previous provider gave the employee notice of termination, or pay in lieu, and severance pay and the new provider does not hire the employee? Can the new provider receive "credit" for the termination notice/pay and severance pay given by the previous provider?
    - Answer: Severance pay given by the replaced provider can be offset by the new provider under paragraph 3 of s. 65(8), which provides as follows:
        - 65(8) Only the following set-offs and deductions may be made in calculating severance pay under this section:
            - ... 3. Severance pay that was previously paid to the employee under this Act, a predecessor of this Act or a contractual provision described in paragraph 2.
        - There is no corresponding "offsetting" provision in respect of termination pay. The new provider therefore cannot rely on the notice, or pay in lieu thereof, that was given by the replaced provider to settle the successor's s. 75(2) obligations.
6. What if the employees of the replaced provider were unionized and there was a collective agreement in place? The new provider does not employ the employees of the replaced provider (and is not exempted from its Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) obligations by Reg. 287/01). Are the employees prevented from filing a claim against the new provider because of s. 99 of the Act (which prohibits employees to whom a collective agreement applies from filing a complaint under the Act)?
    - Answer: No. The collective agreement that applies to the employees is with the replaced provider, while the complaint is against the new provider. Generally speaking, under the Labour Relations Act, 1995, SO 1995, c 1, Sch 1, the collective agreement does not follow through to bind the purchaser in the building services sector, so it cannot be used by employees to enforce their ESA 2000 rights against the new provider. Accordingly, they are entitled to file a claim. See UFCW, Local 1000A v Cara Operations Ltd.

ESA Part XIX Section 76 - Vacation Pay

Vacation Pay - s. 76(1)

76(1) A provider who ceases to provide services at a premises and who ceases to employ an employee shall pay to the employee the amount of any accrued vacation pay.

This provision is substantially the same as s. 13.1(6) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 76(1) states that when a provider of building services is replaced by a new provider and ceases to employ an employee, the replaced provider shall pay the employee the amount of any vacation pay accrued (even though it may not yet be due).

The obligation to pay any accrued vacation pay (whether due or not) at the time the replaced provider ceases to employ the employee would ordinarily be imposed under s. 11(5) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. Therefore, section 76(1) is assumed to have relevance only where such employees are hired by the new provider, triggering the continuity of employment obligations under s. 10 of the Act. In that case (i.e., where the new provider hires employees of the replaced provider), s. 76(1) eliminates the possibility of any argument that the new provider might have liability for the accrued vacation pay entitlements of the replaced provider's employees.

Normally, a replaced provider would have built the cost of its employees' vacation pay into the amount of its original bid, and that cost, along with other costs, would be reflected in the contract price; it would therefore be a windfall for the replaced provider if the new provider were required to pick up the liability for any of the vacation pay that accrued during the term of the replaced provider's contract with the building owner or manager.

See additional discussion on the Program's policy regarding continuity of employment and vacation pay liability in the building services context in ESA Part IV, s. 10(2).

Vacation Pay - s. 76(2)

76(2) A payment under subsection (1) shall be made within the later of,

(a) seven days after the day the employee's employment with the employer ceases; or

(b) the day that would have been the employee's next regular pay day.

This provision requires that the replaced provider pay accrued vacation pay to employees pursuant to s. 76(1) on or before the later of two dates:

1. Seven days after the day the employee ceased to be employed by the previous provider; or
2. The day that would have been the employee's next regular pay day.

This provision is different from the corresponding provision (s. 13.1(7)) of the former Employment Standards Act which required the previous provider to pay accrued vacation pay within seven days after the earlier of: (1) the day the employee ceased to be employed by the previous employer or (2) the day on which the previous employer ceased to provide services at the premises.

Section 76(2) is consistent with the provisions in the ESA 2000 regarding the payment of wages when employment ends (s. 11(5)). Section 11(5) states that the employee's wages must be paid no later than the later of seven days after employment ends or the day that would have been the employee's next pay day.

ESA Part XIX Section 77 - Information Request, Possible New Provider

Information Request, Possible New Provider - s. 77(1)

77(1) Where a person is seeking to become the new provider at a premises, the owner or manager of the premises shall upon request give to that person the prescribed information about the employees who on the date of the request are engaged in providing services at the premises.

This section is substantially the same as s. 13.1(10) under the former Employment Standards Act.

This provision is designed to ensure that bidders on a building services contract have the information they require to determine the amount of their bid. In particular, this subsection enables the bidders to estimate the extent of their potential liability under Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. The reference to "prescribed" information means prescribed by regulation. Sections 3(1), (3), (4) and (5) of O Reg 287/01 set out the information that must be provided by the owner or manager of the premises under s. 77(1). If an owner or manager of the premises fails to provide the required information, an employment standards officer could issue a compliance order under s. 108 and/or a notice of contravention under s. 113. There is no authority however for issuing a compensation order under s. 104 in favour of a person seeking to become a new building services provider where that person suffers damages as a result of a failure on the part of the owner or manager to provide information under s. 77(1).

The definition of "request date" as it is used in these provisions, is set out in s. 3(6) of the same regulation as follows:

3(6) In this section,

"request date" means the date on which information is requested under subsection 77 (1) or (2) of the Act, as the case may be.

For information regarding sections 3(1), (3), (4) and (5) of O Reg 287/01, see O Reg 287/01.

77(2) Where a person becomes the new provider at a premises, the owner or manager of the premises shall upon request give to that person the prescribed information about the employees who on the date of the request are engaged in providing services for the premises.

This section is substantially the same as s. 13.1(9) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 77(2) provides that a new provider is entitled to additional information as prescribed. The prescribed information is set out in s. 3(2) of O Reg 287/01 as follows:

3(2) The following is the information about each employee that the owner or manager of the premises shall give for the purposes of subsection 77 (2) of the Act:

1. The information listed in paragraphs 1 to 8 of subsection (1).

2. The employee's name, residential address and telephone number.

The new provider of services is consequently entitled to request additional and updated information regarding employees of the previous provider who are performing work at the premises. All information, including the information listed in paragraphs 1 to 8 of s. 3(1) (see O Reg 287/01, s.3(1) of the Manual for further discussion) which may have been provided at the time the new provider was bidding on the contract, must be accurate as of the date of the subsequent request under s. 77(2).

Paragraph 2 of s. 3(2) of O Reg 287/01 also allows the new provider to request the names, addresses and telephone numbers of the employees engaged in providing services at the premises on the date the request for information is made.

During the period from the time the new provider is awarded the contract to the "changeover date" of the contract, when the new provider begins to provide services at the building premises, the employees' names, residential addresses and telephone numbers can be used to:

- Contact employees to make job offers, or
- Arrange payment of termination pay and/or severance pay if applicable directly to the employees in question if they are terminated at the time of the "changeover date".

This subsection ensures that the new provider has access to the necessary information to determine the actual Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) entitlements for employees of the replaced provider. If an owner or manager of the premises fails to provide the required information, an employment standards officer could issue a compliance order under s. 108 and/or a notice of contravention under s. 113. There is no authority however for issuing a compensation order under s. 104 in favour of a new building services provider where the new provider suffers damages as a result of a failure on the part of the owner or manager to provide information under s. 77(2).

Request by Owner or Manager - s. 77(3)

77(3) If an owner or manager requests a provider or former provider to provide information to the owner or manager so that the owner or manager can fulfil a request made under subsection (1) or (2), the provider or former provider shall provide the information.

This provision is substantially similar to s. 13.1(8) of the former Employment Standards Act.

The effect of this subsection is to require the incumbent or replaced provider to share certain information with the owner or manager of a building in respect of employees providing services at the premises.

This section is aimed at facilitating the flow of information from the incumbent or replaced provider to those who are bidding on the contract or who have won the contract. This is necessary so that bidders know the extent of their potential liability under Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) when they make bids. In addition, it is also necessary so that new providers can determine the precise amount of their liability under Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) upon assuming a new building services contract.

The information that is required to be provided under s. 77(1) or (2) is prescribed in s. 3 of O Reg 287/01 and is described in detail in O Reg 287/01, s. 3. If a provider or former provider fails to provide the required information, an employment standards officer could issue a compliance order under s. 108 and/or a notice of contravention under s. 113. There is no authority however for issuing a compensation order under s. 104 in favour of a new building services provider where the new provider suffers damages as a result of a failure on the part of the incumbent provider to provide information under s. 77(3).

ESA Part XIX Section 78 - Use of Information

Use of Information - s. 78(1)

78(1) A person who receives information under this Part shall use that information only for the purpose of complying with this Part or determining the person's obligations or potential obligations under this Part.

This provision is substantially the same as s. 13.1(11) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 78(1) states that a person who receives information under s. 77 shall use the information only for the purposes of complying with Part XIX (Building Services Providers). This means that a building services company cannot, for example, use the information received under s. 77 to assess the profitability of a business for purposes of buying it.

Confidentiality - s. 78(2)

78(2) A person who receives information under section 77 shall not disclose it, except as authorized under this Part.

This provision is substantially the same as s. 13.1(12) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 78(2) states that a person receiving information under s. 77 shall not disclose it to anyone except as authorized this Part (i.e., by s. 77). This means that if, for example, a building owner or manager receives information from the incumbent provider about the wage rates paid to the employees, the building owner cannot disclose that information to any persons except as set out in s. 77. However, where the building owner or manager is a provincial or municipal government "institution" as defined under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, RSO 1990, c F.31 or the Municipal Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, RSO 1990, c M.56, the disclosure provisions of those Acts will prevail over the confidentiality provision in s. 78(2) in the event of a conflict.

ESA Part XX - Liability of Directors

The directors' liability provisions of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 essentially mirror those in the Ontario Business Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c B.16 ("OBCA"), but, unlike the OBCA's directors' liability provisions, may be enforced through administrative action under the Employment Standards Act, 2000, rather than protracted and expensive civil proceedings. The intention of Part XX (Liability of Directors) is to allow for more efficient enforcement of existing directors' liability, rather than to expand the scope of that liability.

ESA Part XX Section 79 - Definition

79 In this Part, "director" means a director of a corporation and includes a shareholder who is a party to a unanimous shareholder agreement.

This section defines "director" for purposes of Part XX (Liability of Directors).

Director of a Corporation

A director of a corporation is elected by the corporation's shareholders and sits on its board of directors to oversee its business. (Note that when a business is initially incorporated, the directors - referred to as "first directors" - are not elected. Rather, they are named as directors and hold director positions until elections are held.)

Information returns that are required to be filed by the corporation with the Ontario Ministry of Government and Consumer Services (or, if it is federally incorporated, Corporations Canada) are publicly available and should contain the names and addresses of the current directors. If these are not up to date, then the Minute Book from the meetings of the Board of Directors should indicate who the current directors are.

With respect to companies incorporated under the Ontario Business Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c B.16 ("OBCA") or the Canada Business Corporations Act, RSC 1985, c C-44 ("CBCA"), if there is no registered director because all of the directors have resigned or have been removed by the shareholders without replacement, a person who manages or supervises the management of the business and affairs of the corporation is, subject to certain exceptions, deemed to be a director. See s. 115 of the OBCA and s. 109 of the CBCA.

The OBCA and CBCA provisions mentioned in the preceding paragraph would not apply in the case where a corporation's sole director dies. If subsequent to the director's death, the business of the corporation is managed or supervised by someone who does not become a director, it will be a question of fact as to whether that individual is acting as an agent of the corporation (in which case, subject to s. 137 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, he or she would have no personal liability) or is instead acting as a sole proprietor to whom the corporation's business has been transferred (in which case there would be personal liability). If the individual is acting as an agent of the corporation, wages earned by employees, including wages earned after the individual began acting, would be owed by the corporation (though the estate of the deceased director would also be liable for those wages earned up until the director's death, subject to the limits in Part XX). If the individual is acting as a sole proprietor to whom the corporation's business was transferred, wages earned by employees up to the time of transfer would be owed by the corporation (again, with the estate of the deceased director also liable for those wages earned up until the director's death, subject to the limits in Part XX), while wages earned from the time of transfer onwards would be owed by the sole proprietor.

Shareholders

Section 79 also includes in the definition of "director," for purposes of Part XX, a shareholder who is a party to a unanimous shareholders agreement ("USA").

A USA is an agreement whereby the shareholders may validly restrict, in whole or in part, the powers of the directors to manage the business and affairs of the corporation.

Under the USA, the shareholders have the rights, powers and duties of directors to manage the business and affairs of the corporation to the extent set out in the agreement, and the directors are relieved of their duties and liabilities to the same extent. Thus the shareholders acting under a USA generally stand in the place of the directors. USAs are recognized by both the OBCA and the CBCA.

Typically, unanimous shareholder agreements are used in closely-held, private corporations where there are only a few shareholders. The shareholders that are parties to the USA could be either individuals or corporations. Where the shares are held in trust for an individual, that individual may be found to be a director if he or she controls how the trustee votes his or her shares. See Vaszi v Ontario (Ministry of Labour), 2000 CanLII 12592 (ON LRB).

Section 79 must be read in conjunction with s. 80(1), which indicates that parties to a USA will only be considered as directors for purposes of Part XX to the extent that the actual directors are relieved of liability for wages under the applicable corporations legislation. See s. 80(1) in this Part for more information.

ESA Part XX Section 80 - Application of Part

Application of Part - s. 80(1)

80(1) This Part applies with respect to shareholders described in section 79 only to the extent that the directors are relieved, under subsection 108(5) of the Business Corporations Act or subsection 146(5) of the Canada Business Corporations Act, of their liability to pay wages to the employees of the corporation.

This and the other subsections in s. 80 deal with Step 1 (determining whether directors are excluded from the application of Part XX) in the four step process for applying Part XX.

Section 80(1) indicates that shareholders who are parties to a unanimous shareholders agreement are subject to Part XX only to the extent that the actual directors are relieved under the applicable corporations legislation of liability to pay wages to the corporation's employees.

Section 108(5) of the Ontario Business Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c B.16 ("OBCA") states:

A shareholder who is a party to a unanimous shareholder agreement has all the rights, powers, duties and liabilities of a director of the corporation, whether arising under this Act or otherwise, to which the agreement relates to the extent that the agreement restricts the discretion or powers of the directors to manage or supervise the management of the business and affairs of the corporation and the directors are thereby relieved of their duties and liabilities, including any liabilities under section 131, to the same extent.

Section 146(5) of the Canada Business Corporations Act, RSC 1985, c C-44 ("CBCA") states:

A shareholder who is a party to a unanimous shareholder agreement has all the rights, powers and duties of a director of the corporation to which the agreement relates to the extent that the agreement restricts the powers of the directors to manage the business and affairs of the corporation, and the directors who are thereby relieved of their duties and liabilities, including any liabilities under section 119, to the same extent.

Accordingly, a unanimous shareholders agreement may have the effect of imposing liability on shareholders under Part XX of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 (and relieving the actual directors of their Part XX liabilities), but only to the extent that the actual directors of the corporation are relieved of their obligations for wages under the OBCA or CBCA.

Generally speaking, unanimous shareholders agreements come to the attention of an employment standards officer when he or she notifies a director of potential liability under the Act; a director who alleges that his or her liabilities for wages are relieved by such an agreement will be asked to provide a copy of that agreement.

Non-Application - s. 80(2)

80(2) This Part does not apply with respect to directors of corporations to which Part III of the Corporations Act applies or to which the Co-operative Corporations Act applies.

This section is identical to s. 58.19(3) of the former Employment Standards Act.

This section indicates that Part XX does not apply to directors of corporations to which:

- Part III of the Ontario Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c C.38 applies, or
- The Ontario Co-operative Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c C.35 applies.

As such, those types of directors do not have any liabilities as directors under the ESA, 2000.

Part III of the Ontario Corporations Act applies to not-for-profit corporations.

The Co-operative Corporations Act is provincial legislation that governs such entities as housing co-ops. It applies to corporations incorporated as cooperatives and carrying on business on a co-operative basis. The phrase "cooperative basis" is defined in s. 1(1) of the Co-operative Corporations Act as follows:

(a) each member or delegate has only one vote,

(b) no member or delegate may vote by proxy,

(c) interest on loan capital and dividends on share capital are limited to a percentage fixed by this Act or the articles of incorporation, and

(d) the enterprise of the corporation is operated as nearly as possible at cost after providing for reasonable reserves and the payment or crediting of interest on loan capital or dividends on share capital; and

(e) any surplus funds arising from the business of the organization, after providing for such reasonable reserves and interest or dividends, unless used to maintain or improve services of the organization for its members or donated for community welfare or the propagation of co-operative principles, are distributed in whole or in part among the members in proportion to the volume of business they have done with or through the organization.

Same - s. 80(3)

80(3) This Part does not apply with respect to directors, or persons who perform functions similar to those of a director, of a college of a health profession or a group of health professions that is established or continued under an Act of the Legislature.

Section 80(3) states that Part XX does not apply to directors (or persons performing similar functions as a director) of a college of a health profession or of a college of a group of health professions that is established or continued under an Ontario statute. As such, those types of directors do not have any liabilities as directors under the ESA 2000.

For example, the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario is established under the Regulated Health Professions Act, 1991, SO 1991, c 18. Accordingly, Part XX does not apply to the directors of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario.

Same - s. 80(4)

80(4) This Part does not apply with respect to directors of corporations,

(a) that have been incorporated in another jurisdiction;

(b) that have objects that are similar to the objects of corporations to which Part III of the Corporations Act applies or to which the Co-operative Corporations Act applies; and

(c) that are carried on without the purpose of gain.

Section 80(4) provides that Part XX of the Act does not apply to directors of corporations that are incorporated in another jurisdiction (usually federally-incorporated companies that are subject to provincial labour jurisdiction and are doing business in Ontario) if they:

- Have purposes similar to those corporations mentioned in s. 80(2) (i.e. not-for-profit corporations, and corporations such as housing co-ops); and
- Are carried on without the purpose of gain.

Directors are exempt from the application of Part XX only if all three conditions set out in paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) are met. See, for example, Pensler v Adams, 2012 ONSC 2369 (CanLII) where the Divisional Court dismissed an application for review of Pensler v Adams, 2011 CanLII 32018 (ON LRB), a decision by the Ontario Labour Relations Board in which the Board rejected the director's argument that s. 80(4) should be interpreted as exempting directors from Part XX if any of paragraphs (a), (b) or (c) apply.

ESA Part XX Section 81 - Director's Liability for Wages

Directors' Liability for Wages - s. 81(1)

81(1) The directors of an employer are jointly and severally liable for wages as provided in this Part if,

(a) the employer is insolvent, the employee has caused a claim for unpaid wages to be filed with the receiver appointed by a court with respect to the employer or with the employer's trustee in bankruptcy and the claim has not been paid;

(b) an employment standards officer has made an order that the employer is liable for wages, unless the amount set out in the order has been paid or the employer has applied to have it reviewed;

(c) an employment standards officer has made an order that a director is liable for wages, unless the amount set out in the order has been paid or the employer or the director has applied to have it reviewed; or

(d) the Board has issued, amended or affirmed an order under section 119, the order, as issued, amended or affirmed, requires the employer or the directors to pay wages and the amount set out in the order has not been paid.

This section deals with step two in the four step process for applying ESA Part XX, which is determining whether one of the circumstances in which directors will be liable exists

Subsection 81(1) sets out the four circumstances in which directors' liability for certain unpaid wages is established.

Joint and Several Liability

Subject to s. 81(7) the liability is joint and several. Joint and several liability does not mean that every director is necessarily liable for all of the monies that a single director is liable for under the Employment Standards Act, 2000. Rather, it means that each individual director can be ordered to pay the full amount of liability as opposed to apportioning the total liability amongst the directors. Each individual director's liability is ascertained by applying ss. 81(3)-(7), which entails having regard to the dates the director was a director.

When more than one director’s order to pay ("DOTP") is issued because there are multiple directors, all of whom have liability, the joint and several liability principle will often result in the sum total of those DOTPs exceeding the amount owed to the employee or employees. If the application of the joint and several liability principle results in more money being recovered from the directors than was owed to the employee(s), the excess is refunded to the directors on a pro rata basis.

Example – individual directors have same liabilities:

- Corporate employer failed to pay or appeal an order for $1200 in unpaid vacation pay
- Unpaid vacation pay accrued at the rate of $100 per month during each month in 2011
- Director A was a director throughout 2011
- Director B was a director throughout 2011
- Officer applied s. 81(3)-(7) and determined liability of each individual director:
    - Director A: $1200 in vacation pay
    - Director B: $1200 in vacation pay
- Total amount ordered: $2400 in vacation pay

The joint and several liability principle means that the officer can issue orders to the directors for the full amount of their individual liability (i.e., a DOTP to Director A for $1200 and a DOTP to Director B for $1200) even though the total amount ordered ($2400) exceeds the amount owed to the employee ($1200).

Example – individual directors have different liabilities:

1. Corporate employer failed to pay or appeal an order for $1200 in unpaid vacation pay
2. Unpaid vacation pay accrued at the rate of $100 per month during each month in 2011
3. Director A was a director from January 1 - June 30, 2011
4. Director B was a director throughout 2011
5. Officer applied ss. 81(3)-(7) and determined liability of each individual director:
    - Director A: liable for $600 in vacation pay
    - Director B: liable for $1200 in vacation pay
6. Total amount ordered: $1800

The joint and several liability principle means that the officer can issue orders to the directors for the full amount of their individual liability (i.e., a DOTP to Director A for $600 and a DOTP to Director B for $1200) even though the total amount ordered ($1800) exceeds the amount owed to the employee ($1200).

When Directors' Liability is Established

The four circumstances in which director's liability for certain unpaid wages is established are as follows:

Court-appointed Receivership or Bankruptcy

A director becomes liable for certain unpaid wages where the employee has filed a proof of claim directly with the court-appointed receiver or the trustee, and the claim remains unpaid. Note that the amount that can be ordered to be paid under a DOTP may be affected by payments made under the federal Wage Earner Protection Program ("WEPPA") - see the discussion of WEPPA Payments in s. 81(7) below.

Unpaid Order to Pay Against Employer

A director becomes liable for certain unpaid wages if an employer to whom an order to pay wages was issued neither pays the order in full nor files an application for review under ESA Part XXIII, s. 116.

Unpaid Order Against Directors

This provision works in concert with ESA Part XXII, s. 107. It means that where an employment standards officer issued an order to pay to some but not all of the directors of a corporation, and the order(s) to pay remain(s) unpaid, and neither the employer nor the director has applied to have it reviewed, the other director(s) who were not yet issued an order become liable for the unpaid wages.

Board Decision

A director becomes liable for certain unpaid wages if a decision of the Ontario Labour Relations Board orders the employer or director(s) to pay wages to the employees, and the amount ordered has not been fully paid.

Employer Primarily Responsible - s. 81(2)

81(2) Despite subsection (1), the employer is primarily responsible for an employee's wages but proceedings against the employer under this Act do not have to be exhausted before proceedings may be commenced to collect wages from directors under this Part.

Subsection 81(2) provides that the employer is primarily responsible for the employee's wages, but the proceedings against the employer do not have to run their full course before an order to pay can be issued against a director.

See also Re v Sagar Aggarwal, a director of 1189508 Ontario Ltd. This decision, made under the former Employment Standards Act, also ruled that the Ministry need not first execute against the assets of a more active director before turning to a director who took no active part in the business.

Wages - s. 81(3); Vacation Pay - s. 81(4); Holiday Pay - s. 81(5); Overtime Wages - s. 81(6)

81(3) The wages that directors are liable for under this Part are wages, not including termination pay and severance pay as they are provided for under this Act or an employment contract and not including amounts that are deemed to be wages under this Act.

81(4) The vacation pay that directors are liable for is the greater of the minimum vacation pay provided in Part XI (Vacation with Pay) and the amount contractually agreed to by the employer and the employee.

81(5) The amount of holiday pay that directors are liable for is the greater of the amount payable for holidays at the rate as determined under this Act and the regulations and the amount for the holidays at the rate as contractually agreed to by the employer and the employee.

81(6) The overtime wages that directors are liable for are the greater of the amount of overtime pay provided in Part VIII (Overtime Pay) and the amount contractually agreed to by the employer and the employee.

These subsections deal with step three in the four-step process for applying ESA Part XX: establishing which types of unpaid wages directors are liable for.

Directors are liable for:

- Vacation pay pursuant to s. 81(4);
- Public holiday pay pursuant to s. 81(5);
- Overtime pay pursuant to s. 81(6); and
- Regular earnings pursuant to s. 81(3).

Note that “regular earnings” is a non-statutory term used to refer to all wages other than vacation pay, public holiday pay, overtime pay, termination pay (or vacation pay on termination pay) and severance pay, and amounts that are deemed to be wages under the ESA 2000. Regular earnings would be, for example, earnings derived from hourly wages, salary, commission earnings, piecework earnings, shift premiums, and non-discretionary bonuses. It also includes any top-up required to be paid under ESA Part XV, s. 60(1)(b).

Directors are not liable for:

- Termination pay or severance pay, whether the termination and severance pay is owing under the ESA 2000 or under a contract of employment.
- Vacation pay that is payable on termination pay in lieu of notice. This is because this sort of vacation pay is derivative of termination pay, and directors are not liable for termination pay. In contrast, because directors are liable for the wages to which an employee is entitled during a working period of notice, including any top-up required to be paid under ESA Part XV, s. 60(1)(b), they will be liable for the vacation pay earned on such wages.
- Amounts that are deemed to be wages under the ESA 2000. For example, unpaid benefit plan contributions during the notice period pursuant to ESA Part XV, ss. 60(3) and 62(2), and amounts owing under the equal pay for equal work provisions pursuant to ESA Part XII, s. 42(5).
- Amounts that are not wages as defined in ESA Part I, s. 1, for example, tips or other gratuities, discretionary bonuses, expenses, travelling allowances.
- Administrative costs that are ordered to be paid in a corporate employer order to pay wages.
- Non-wage compensation that is ordered to be paid in a corporate employer order to compensate.

Directors' Maximum Liability - s. 81(7)

81(7) The directors of an employer corporation are jointly and severally liable to the employees of the corporation for all debts not exceeding six months' wages, as described in subsection (3), that become payable while they are directors for services performed for the corporation and for the vacation pay accrued while they are directors for not more than 12 months under this Act and the regulations made under it or under any collective agreement made by the corporation.

This section deals with step four in the four-step process for applying Part XX: determining the quantum of unpaid wages a director is liable for.

The wording of s. 81(7) is consistent with the directors' liability provision in s. 131(1) of the Ontario Business Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c B.16 ("OBCA"). The OBCA provision must be enforced through civil proceedings, whereas s. 81 liability can be enforced with the relatively expeditious and inexpensive administrative proceedings provided for in the ESA 2000.

The recoverability of unpaid wages through a DOTP is limited by ESA Part XXII, s. 111, which states that an employee cannot recover wages (including vacation pay) that came due more than two years preceding the date the complaint was filed or an inspection commenced. Because s. 111 also applies to corporate employer orders to pay wages, for practical purposes, the determination of an individual director's liability starts by referencing the monies that were assessed to have been owing by the corporate employer within the confines of s. 111. Accordingly, to determine each individual director's maximum liability:

1. Ascertain what the corporate employer's liabilities are within the confines of s. 111 - both in terms of amounts and the dates;
2. With respect to those monies that the corporate employer is liable for under s. 111, as ascertained above, apply s. 81(7), which provides that:
    - With respect to any unpaid regular earnings, public holiday pay and overtime pay:
        - Each individual director is liable for those amounts that became payable while they were director, up to a maximum amount.

- The maximum amount is a theoretical number that is determined by calculating what the employee's regular earnings (i.e., not including vacation pay, public holiday pay, overtime pay, termination pay or severance pay) would be over a period of six months. For example, if an employee has an annual salary of $50,000, the maximum the director could be liable for with respect to unpaid regular earnings, public holiday pay and overtime pay is $25,000.

3. With respect to any unpaid vacation pay:
    - Each individual director is liable for the unpaid vacation pay that accrued while they were a director, up to a limit.
    - The limit is: a director is only liable for up to 12 months of the unpaid vacation pay that the corporate employer was liable for under s. 111 that accrued while the director was a director. Note that the 12 months do not have to be consecutive.

Limitations on Recovery

Directors' liability under s. 81 for wages other than vacation pay is limited to debts not exceeding six months' wages, as described in s. 81(3), that became payable while they were directors. The word “debts” is a substantially broader term than wages, but the reference to s. 81(3) makes it clear that liability is imposed only for debts that fall within the definition of wages - in fact, only a sub-group of them, since there is no directors' liability for termination pay, severance pay or amounts that are deemed to be wages. The real significance of the use of the word debts is that it repeats wording that is used in s. 131 of the OBCA and in other business corporations legislation that imposes liability on directors for amounts owed to employees; it thereby effectively incorporates the case law under that legislation. That case law is clear that the limitation of all debts not exceeding six months' wages was intended to create merely a quantitative limit and not a limitation based on the nature of the debt; in other words, all debts owed to employees were covered, whether or not they were wages, though subject to certain other limitations, but the liability could not exceed an amount equivalent to six months' wages. See, for example, Proulx v Sahelian Goldfields Inc., 2001 CanLII 6255 (ON CA).

As noted above, liability imposed under s. 81 is very definitely limited to wages, but the fact that the language in which liability is imposed echoes that used in business corporations legislation shows that the phrase “six months' wages” was intended merely to set a limit on quantum and was not meant to require that the wages in question have been payable in any particular six months or any particular six-month period, although insofar as any individual director's liability is concerned, the wages must have become payable while that director was in office. However, note that the ESA Part XX, s. 111 limitations imposed on an officer's authority to issue an order to pay may have an impact on recoverability through such an order.

Unlike the reference to six months' wages in s. 81(7), the reference to two years in ESA Part XX, s. 111 do not establish limitations based on an amount; rather they establish limitations relating to when the wages in question became due.

The limitation on the recovery of vacation pay in ESA Part XX, s. 111 is related to when the vacation pay came due. Subsection 81(7) limits directors’ liability for vacation pay to what was accrued while they are directors, for up to 12 months. That means the officer must first determine what vacation pay came due in the two years preceding the date the claim was filed, as only that vacation pay is recoverable under ESA Part XX, s. 111. The officer would then apply s. 81(7) with the result that the director's liability for the vacation pay recoverable under ESA Part XX, s. 111 would be limited to that portion that accrued while the director was a director, to a maximum of 12 months of accrued vacation pay.

For example, assume an employee had commenced employment on February 1, 2016 and resigned on March 1, 2017. They have not taken any paid vacation or received any vacation pay during their entire period of employment. When they did not receive any of the outstanding vacation pay on March 15, 2017, the payday following their resignation, they filed a claim for it under the ESA 2000 on April 15, 2017. As all of the vacation pay that accrued during the course of their 13 month employment was due on March 15, 2017, it was all recoverable under s. 111(1). However, in issuing an order against a corporate director of the employer, the director's liability is limited to the vacation pay that accrued while they were a director, to maximum of 12 months of accrued vacation pay. In this case, assuming the director was a director for the full period of the claimant's employment, the director would be liable for any 12 of the 13 months of accrued vacation pay, as per s. 81(7).

Determining Quantum – Examples

Example 1

Facts

A corporate employer order to pay was issued with respect to a claimant who had an annual salary of $40,000 for:

- $1500 in regular earnings, $2000 in overtime pay and $300 in public holiday pay, all of which became payable in 2017
- $400 in vacation pay all of which accrued in 2017
- The corporate employer did not pay or appeal the order.
- The director was a director throughout the 2017 calendar year.

Determining quantum of director liability*:*

Start with the corporate employer assessment - this will be the maximum potential liability for an individual director. In this example, this is:

- $1500 regular earnings
- $2000 overtime pay
- $300 public holiday pay
- $400 in vacation pay

Regular earnings, overtime pay and public holiday pay:

- Was the director a director when any or all of the regular earnings, overtime pay and public holiday pay became payable? Yes. The director was a director when all of those monies became payable.
- Therefore, the director is liable for all of those wages (other than vacation pay) that were part of the corporate employer assessment up to the limit of the amount that is equal to six months' worth of regular earnings.

- With an annual salary of $40,000, six months' regular earnings is $20,000.

Accordingly, the director is liable for all of the unpaid regular earnings ($1500), overtime pay ($2000), and public holiday pay ($300).

Vacation pay:

- Was the director a director when any or all of the vacation pay that the corporate employer is liable for accrued? Yes. The director was a director when all of the vacation pay accrued.
- Therefore, the director is liable for the unpaid vacation pay that was part of the corporate employer assessment, subject to the limit of 12 months' vacation pay accrual.
- The vacation pay at issue accrued during 12 months of 2014.

Accordingly, the director is liable for all of the unpaid vacation pay ($400) and a DOTP can be issued for that amount.

Example 2 - Vacation pay due was accrued over more than 12 months

Facts

- The officer found that the corporate employer owed the claimant $2700 in vacation pay, all of which came due on January 1, 2017 and within the 2 years prior to the claim being filed.
- This unpaid vacation pay had accrued at a rate of $150 per month, over 18 months.
- The corporate employer did not pay or appeal the order.
- The director was a director in all 18 months in which the unpaid vacation pay accrued.

Determining quantum of director liability:

Start with the corporate employer assessment, as limited by s. 111(1). This is the maximum potential liability. In this example, this is $2700 in vacation pay.

- Was the director a director when the vacation pay accrued? Yes. The director was a director when all of the unpaid vacation pay for which the corporate employer was liable accrued.
- Accordingly, the director is liable for all of the unpaid vacation pay that was the subject of the corporate employer assessment, as limited by s. 111(1), subject to the director liability limit of 12 months' accrued vacation pay.
- The vacation pay at issue accrued during 18 months.
- Directors are liable only for unpaid vacation pay that accrued during 12 months.

Therefore, the director is liable only for $1800 in unpaid vacation pay (12 months x $150 per month), and a DOTP can be issued for that amount.

Note: if the amount of vacation pay that accrued monthly changed over the course of the 18 month period, the officer is able to select which 12 months to use when determining the limit on the director's liability.

Transitional Provisions

On February 20, 2015, the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act introduced a number of transitional provisions that imposed limitations on recovery. Subsections 111(3.1) to (8) imposed a six-month limitation period on unpaid wages that became due before February 20, 2015, and a 12-month limitation period for repeated contraventions and vacation pay that became due before February 20, 2015. Subsection 103(4) imposed a cap of $10,000 on the amount of wages an employment standards officer could order for a single employee with respect to wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015. Subsection 103(4.1), which was also added to s.103 by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014 effective February 20, 2015, eliminated the $10,000 cap with respect to orders for unpaid wages that come due on or after that date. Subsections 103(4) and 103(4.1) and ss. 111(3.1) to (8) were transitional provisions and were repealed on February 20, 2017.

Although these sections are now repealed, it is Program policy that the $10,000 cap and limitation periods imposed by the transitional provisions continue to apply to wages, repeated contraventions and vacation pay that became due before February 20, 2015, even if any associated orders are issued after February 20, 2017. This is to preserve the vested legal rights of the parties at the time the contravention occurred. This is relevant in situations where a period of time lapses between the time a claim is filed and the time a claim is investigated.

Note, however, that the $10,000 cap imposed on orders against employers by s. 103(4) with respect to wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015 is not applicable to orders issued against directors under s. 106 or s. 107. Accordingly, the $10,000 cap does not apply to orders against directors.

See ESA Part XXII, s. 103 and ESA Part XXII, s. 111 for further discussion on the transitional provisions.

Determining Quantum Under Transitional Provisions - Examples

Example 1 - All wages came due prior to February 20, 2015 AND entitlement is less than $10,000

Facts

A corporate employer order to pay was issued with respect to a claimant who had an annual salary of $40,000 for:

- $1500 in regular earnings, $2000 in overtime pay and $300 in public holiday pay, all of which became payable in 2014.
- $400 in vacation pay all of which accrued in 2014.
- The corporate employer did not pay or appeal the order.
- The director was a director throughout the 2014 calendar year.

Determining quantum of director liability:

Start with the corporate employer assessment as limited by the six month/12-month limitation periods set out in s. 111(3.1), (4) and (3.2), without regard to the $10,000 cap on orders to pay wages that became due prior to February 20, 2015. This will be the maximum potential liability for an individual director. In this example, this is:

- $1500 regular earnings
- $2000 overtime pay

- $300 public holiday pay
- $400 in vacation pay

Regular earnings, overtime pay and public holiday pay:

- Was the director a director when any or all of the regular earnings, overtime pay and public holiday pay became payable? Yes. The director was a director when all of those monies became payable.
- Therefore, the director is liable for all of those wages (other than vacation pay) that were part of the corporate employer assessment within the confines of the six month/12-month limitation periods without regard to the $10,000 cap on orders to pay wages that became due prior to February 20, 2015 up to the limit of the amount that is equal to six months' worth of regular earnings.
- With an annual salary of $40,000, six months' regular earnings is $20,000.

Accordingly, the director is liable for all of the unpaid regular earnings ($1500), overtime pay ($2000), and public holiday pay ($300).

Vacation pay:

- Was the director a director when any or all of the vacation pay that the corporate employer is liable for accrued? Yes. The director was a director when all of the vacation pay accrued.
- Therefore, the director is liable for the unpaid vacation pay that was part of the corporate employer assessment as limited by the 12-month limitation period in s. 111(3.2), subject to the limit of 12 months' vacation pay accrual.
- The vacation pay at issue accrued during 12 months of 2014.

Accordingly, the director is liable for all of the unpaid vacation pay ($400) and a DOTP can be issued for that amount.

Example 2 - All came wages due prior to February 20, 2015 AND corporate liability exceeds $10,000

Although the proof of claim is not subject to s. 111 limitations, the DOTP is, so before determining an individual director's liability, s. 111 must be applied. For example:

Facts

A proof of claim was filed with respect to an employee who had an annual salary of $40,000 for:

- $1500 in regular wages, $2000 in overtime pay and $300 in public holiday pay, all of which became payable in 2014.
- $400 in vacation pay all of which accrued in 2014.
- $8,000 in termination and severance pay that became payable on December 31, 2014.

The director was a director throughout the 2014 calendar year.

Determining quantum of director liability:

Start with the corporate employer assessment as limited by the six-month/12-month limitation periods regarding wages that became due prior to February 20, 2015, but without regard to the $10,000 cap that applies to wages. This is the maximum potential liability for an individual director. In this example, this is:

- $1500 regular earnings
- $2000 overtime pay
- $300 public holiday pay
- $400 in vacation pay
- $0 for termination and severance pay as directors are not liable for these amounts

With respect to regular earnings, overtime pay and public holiday pay:

- Was the director a director when any or all of the regular wages, overtime pay and public holiday pay became payable? Yes. The director was a director when all of those monies became payable.
- Therefore, the director is liable for all of those wages (other than vacation pay) that were part of the corporate employer assessment as limited by the six month/12-month limitations in s. 111 (3.1) and (4) on wages that became due prior to February 20, 2015 without regard to the $10,000 cap, up to the limit of the amount that is equal to six months' worth of regular earnings.
- With an annual salary of $40,000 six months' regular earnings is $20,000.

Accordingly, the director is liable for all of the unpaid regular earnings ($1500), overtime pay ($2000) and public holiday pay ($300).

With respect to vacation pay:

- Was the director a director when any or all of the vacation pay that the corporate employer is liable for accrued? Yes. The director was a director when all of the vacation pay accrued.
- Therefore, the director is liable for the unpaid vacation pay that was part of the corporate employer assessment as limited by the 12-month limitation period in s. 111(3.2), subject to the limit of 12 months' accrued vacation pay.
- The vacation pay at issue accrued during 12 months.

The director is liable for all of the unpaid vacation pay ($400) and a DOTP can be issued for that amount.

Example 3 - All wages due prior to February 20, 2015 AND director liability exceeds $10,000

Facts

- The officer found that the corporate employer owed the claimant $12,000 in overtime pay, $1,000 of which became payable each month of 2014. The officer issued an order to the employer for $10,000 in overtime pay, plus the administrative fee, in accordance with s. 103(4).
- The claimant has an annual salary of $40,000.
- The corporate employer did not pay or appeal the order.
- The director was a director throughout 2014.

Determining quantum of director liability:

Start with the corporate employer assessment, as limited by the six month/12 month limitation periods in s. 111(3.1) and (4) regarding wages that became due prior to February 20, 2015, without regard to the $10,000 cap on the corporate order. This is the maximum potential liability. In this example, this is $12,000 in overtime pay.

- Was the director a director when all or part of the overtime pay became payable? Yes. The director was a director when all of the overtime pay became payable.
- Therefore, the director is liable for all of the overtime pay that was part of the corporate assessment as limited by s. 111(3.1) and (4) without regard to the $10,000 cap, up to the limit of the amount that is equal to six months' worth of regular earnings.
- With an annual salary of $40,000, six months' regular earnings is $20,000.

Accordingly, the director is liable for $12,000 and a DOTP can be issued for that amount.

Resignation of Directors

Timing and Validity of Resignations

In determining a director's potential liability, the timing and validity of any resignation of directorship must be examined. The rules around resignations are:

- Resignation of a director must be in writing - see s. 121(2) of the OBCA
- Resignation can be valid even though the director did not sign the resignation document - see Navas v Blakemore, 2005 CanLII 1844 (ON LRB)
- Effective date of a resignation is:
    - Date that the written resignation is received by the corporation (or the date specified in the resignation, if that is later) - see s. 121(2) of the OBCA; or
    - In the case of first directors of a corporation, resignation is not effective unless and until a successor is elected or appointed

Whether (and when) a director has resigned is a question of fact.

In Navas v Blakemore, where the director communicated his resignation orally to the Vice President/Executive Director and asked for a letter acknowledging his resignation. The Vice President/Executive Director provided the director with a letter dated November 14 that was addressed to the director and signed by the Vice President/Executive Director, which read in part: "Re: Acceptance of Directorship Resignation: Luis, as requested, I have removed you as a Director of NGMA Products effective immediately." The corporate filings were not updated to reflect any resignation. The OLRB, relying on an Stewart v Canadian Broadcasting Corp., 1997 CanLII 12324 (ON SC), ruled that the November 14 letter that originated from the company satisfied the statutory requirement that there be a "written resignation . . . received by the corporation."

Also see Pollock v Somes, 2006 CanLII 18686 (ON LRB), where the OLRB accepted a fax return report together with oral evidence from the director as to the content of the fax transmission to conclude that written resignations were received by the corporation on the date indicated on the fax return report, despite what the corporate filings indicated.

Impact of Resignation on Liability for Unpaid Wages

Subsection 81(7) indicates that directors will only be liable for wages other than vacation pay that become payable while they are directors of the corporation. Wages become payable on the regular pay day of the employer, as established by the practice of the employer.

For example, if a director resigns in the middle of a pay period, that director would not be liable for the unpaid wages that became due on the payday following their resignation.

Impact of Resignation on Liability for Unpaid Vacation Pay

Subsection 81(7) states that directors are liable for vacation pay that accrued while they were a director.

For percentage-based vacation pay (e.g., the ESA 2000 minimum standard of either four or six per cent of earnings), a director would be liable for vacation pay calculated on wages the employees earned while they were a director. It is the date the vacation pay was accrued that is relevant to the director's liability, not the date it was to have been paid.

Example:

- Employee accrued vacation pay on all wages as they were earned during the calendar year 2014.
- Employer was required to pay the vacation pay that accrued during 2014 by October 31, 2015.
- Director resigned on January 1, 2015.
- Director would be liable for all the vacation pay that had accrued during 2014 even though they resigned before it came due.

For service-based vacation pay (e.g., 1 ½ days of paid vacation for every month of service), a director would be liable for vacation pay that accrued based on service that occurred while they were a director. Again, a corporate employer's liability for vacation pay is determined by when the vacation pay was due, but a director's individual liability for some or all of that vacation pay is determined by when that vacation pay was accrued.

Absolute Liability

The liability against directors is an absolute liability. This is also known as strict liability.

This means that once it is established that an individual was a director at the relevant time, there is no basis for relief against that person's liability, not even if the director shows that they exercised due diligence.

Directors may argue that they are not liable because they have not been active as a director for years, or that were only ever a director in name only and had no influence over the company. Unless that person can rebut the presumption that they were a director during the relevant period, that person is liable as a director under Part XX even if they did not play any active role in the corporation at the time the liability arose.

See for example Arcese Inc. v Alves, 2007 CanLII 35668 (ON LRB) where the OLRB ruled that two directors were liable even though they maintained that they were not the directing minds of the company. They argued that they were directors in name only and had no control or influence over the company, no signing authority, no voting power, and disagreed with many of the actions of the other two directors. The Board ruled that the ESA 2000 "makes no distinction between directors that control a company and those who are directors in name only", and upheld the orders that were made against them.

WEPPA Payments

When an officer is issuing a DOTP where the corporate employer is formally insolvent, the amount that can be ordered to be paid under the DOTP may be affected by payments made under the federal Wage Earner Protection Program Act, SC 2005, c 47, s 1 ("WEPPA").

Offset

Where a claimant has received a WEPPA payment and the officer is issuing a DOTP, it is the Program's position that the officer must offset the WEPPA amount from the amount of the DOTP. If the WEPPA payment only accounts for a portion of the wages owed, the DOTP is issued for the outstanding balance to the extent that a director is liable for the outstanding amount.

Allocation of Payment

A regulation under the WEPPA establishes that WEPPA payments are allocated first to wages, second to disbursements of a traveling salesperson under certain conditions, third to vacation pay, fourth to termination pay, and lastly to severance pay.

It is the Program's position that officers must abide by the characterization of the WEPPA payment as supplied by the trustee, who is bound to follow the federal regulation regarding the allocation of the payment.

Wage Definitions

The question has arisen as to how to account for the difference in the definition of wages in the WEPPA versus the ESA definition. In particular, wages under the WEPPA includes "gratuities accounted for by the employer" and the ESA definition excludes tips and gratuities. This raises the question of how the WEPPA payment should be characterized where a claimant is owed gratuities from the employer and is also owed wages as defined in the ESA.

It is the Program's position that, in a situation where gratuities are an issue, the WEPPA payment be allocated based on the same proportion as the claim accepted by the trustee.

For example, if an employee is owed $2500 in wages as defined in the ESA and $2500 in gratuities accounted for by the employer and is paid a $3000 WEPPA payment, then the WEPPA payment could reasonably be seen as allocated 50/50 between the ESA defined wages owed to the employee and the gratuities owed to the employee, barring evidence to the contrary in any given case.

6.82% Deduction

Pursuant to a regulation under the WEPPA, the WEPPA program automatically deducts 6.82% from any amount that is owed to employees. This means that an employee will never be made absolutely whole through a WEPPA payment. Accordingly, there will always be an outstanding amount that could be the subject of a DOTP.

For example, assume an employee has a legitimate claim for $1000 in unpaid wages that attracts director liability. If the WEPPA program makes only a $931.80 payment (due to the regulation requiring a 6.82% reduction), then a director could be ordered to pay $68.20 so that the claimant could be made whole.

Interest - s. 81(8) – REPEALED

Contribution from Other Directors - s. 81(9)

81(9) A director who has satisfied a claim for wages is entitled to contribution in relation to the wages from other directors who are liable for the claim.

Subsection 81(9) provides that if a director pays the wages and vacation pay owing to an employee, pursuant to Part XX, that director is entitled to reimbursement from the other directors liable under Part XX who did not pay their pro rata share, under the joint and several liability principle.

For example, if there are five directors, all of whom were on the Board at the relevant time, and one of the directors is issued an order to pay for the entire amount which they pay, that director is entitled to reimbursement from the other four directors, for 80 per cent of the amount paid (i.e., 20 per cent each). This applies even though the other four directors were not issued orders to pay. This right of reimbursement has to be enforced, however, through a civil action. It may not be enforced through the administrative proceedings under the ESA 2000.

Limitation Periods - s. 81(10)

81(10) A limitation period set out in section 114 prevails over a limitation period in any other Act, unless the other Act states that it is to prevail over this Act.

Subsection 81(10) indicates that if there is a conflict between a limitation period in another statute regarding directors' liability and the limitation periods in ESA Part XXII, s. 114, the limitation period in the ESA 2000 applies, unless the other statute states specifically that the limitation period in that other Act is to prevail over the ESA 2000.

Section 114 states that no order to pay wages, fees or compensation (or notice of contravention) will be issued:

- If the employee filed a complaint more than two years after the date the complaint was filed; or
- If the employee did not file a complaint but the contravention regarding that employee was discovered during the course of an investigation into a complaint filed by another employee more than two years after the date the complaint was filed by the other employee; or
- If no complaint was filed but the contravention was discovered during the course of an inspection by an employment standards officer more than two years after the inspection was commenced.

Subsection 131(2) of the OBCA states:

A director is liable under subsection (1) only if,

(a) the corporation is sued in the action against the director and execution against the corporation is returned unsatisfied in whole or in part; or

(b) before or after the action is commenced, the corporation goes into liquidation, is ordered to be wound up or makes an authorized assignment under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (Canada), or a receiving order under that Act is made against it, and, in any such case, the claim for the debt has been proved.

Similar provisions appear in s. 81(2) of the Ontario Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c C.38, which governs non-profit corporations.

It is clear that there is a conflict between the limitation period in the ESA 2000 and the limitation periods in s. 131(2) of the OBCA, and s. 81(2) of the Ontario Corporations Act. Since the OBCA and the Corporations Act do not expressly state that they are to prevail over the ESA 2000 in the event of a conflict, the limitation periods in the ESA 2000 will apply with respect to the Ministry's ability to issue an order against a director under the ESA 2000. If proceedings are taken under the OBCA or the Corporations Act, the limitation periods in those statutes would apply.

ESA Part XX Section 82 - No Relief by Contract, etc.

No Relief by Contract, etc. - s. 82(1)

82(1) No provision in a contract, in the articles of incorporation or the by-laws of a corporation or in a resolution of a corporation relieves a director from the duty to act according to this Act or relieves him or her from liability for breach of it.

This section is identical to s. 58.28(1) under the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 82(1) provides that a director cannot contract out of liability under the Employment Standards Act, 2000, whether such purported relief is contained in the articles of incorporation, the corporate by-laws, a resolution of the Board of Directors, or the shareholders, or by way of contract. This is in keeping with the general no waiver or no-contracting out provision in s. 5(1) of the ESA 2000.

See, for example, Otema Store Interiors Ltd. v Aitkaliyev, 2008 CanLII 20823 (ON LRB) where the director of Otema Store Interiors Ltd. argued that he had no liability under Part XX because a corporation had purchased the assets of Otema Store Interiors Ltd. and a memorandum of understanding that was part of the sale agreement stipulated that the purchaser would pay those employees who were hired by the purchaser any vacation pay that was owing to the employees at the time of the sale. The director of Otema Store Interiors Ltd. argued that he had divested himself of ESA liabilities by way of the memorandum of understanding and should not be held liable for vacation pay that he admitted was owing to the claimants at the time of the sale. The OLRB disagreed. It ruled that s. 82 precluded the Board from giving any weight to the Memorandum of Understanding and affirmed the Director Order to Pay.

What amounts to an exception to the "no contracting out" prohibition occurs where there is a unanimous shareholders' agreement ("USA") that relieves the directors of liability for wages and vacation pay. In such a case, the shareholders and not the actual directors are considered to be the "directors" for the purposes of liability under Part XX. See also the discussion of the definition of directors in s. 79 of the Act, which includes shareholders under a USA, in ESA Part XX.

82(2) An employer may indemnify a director, a former director and the heirs or legal representatives of a director or former director against all costs, charges and expenses, including an amount paid to satisfy an order under this Act, including an order which is the subject of a filing under section 126, reasonably incurred by the director with respect to any civil or administrative action or proceeding to which he or she is a party by reason of being or having been a director of the employer if,

a) he or she has acted honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the employer; and

b) in the case of a proceeding or action that is enforced by a monetary penalty, he or she had reasonable grounds for believing that his or her conduct was lawful.

This section is substantially the same as s. 58.28(2) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 82(2) mirrors corresponding provisions in corporations legislation, such as the Ontario Business Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c B.16, which state that a corporate employer may agree to reimburse a director or former director (or his or her heirs) for amounts incurred as a result of directors' liability provided that the director acted honestly and in good faith with regards to the best interests of the employer, and if the proceedings involve a fine or monetary penalty, where the director reasonably believed that he or she was not breaking the law.

ESA Part XX Section 83 - Civil Remedies Protected

83 No civil remedy that a person may have against a director or that a director may have against a person is suspended or affected by this Part.

This section is substantially the same as s. 58.29 in the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 83 states that Part XX does not affect any civil remedies that a director may have against any person or vice-versa. If, for example, an employee wishes to sue a director under the directors' liability provisions of the Ontario Business Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c B.16 ("OBCA"), the Ontario Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c C.38, or the Canada Business Corporations Act, RSC 1985, c C-44, the employee can do so. However, this provision should be read with reference to ss. 97 and 98 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 which state that an employee has to choose between filing a claim with the Ministry and commencing a civil action in court for the same matter. For example, if an employee filed a claim with the Ministry under the Act for vacation pay, that employee could not subsequently commence a civil action under the OBCA for that vacation pay. Please refer to ESA Part XXII for a more detailed discussion of ss. 97 and 98. Where a director is relieved of responsibility for wages and vacation pay because there is a unanimous shareholders' agreement, this is consistent with this section, because in such a case the shareholders and not the actual directors are considered to be "directors" for purposes of liability under Part XX.

ESA Part XXI - Who Enforces This Act and What They Can Do

Part XXI (ss. 84 to 95 inclusive) is the source for the powers of those persons responsible for administering the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

The intent of these provisions of the Act is to provide for the day-to-day administration of the legislation through the powers and duties of the Minister of Labour, the Director of Employment Standards and employment standards officers.

ESA Part XXI Section 84 - Minister Responsible

84 The Minister is responsible for the administration of this Act.

The Minister of Labour is responsible to the Legislature and to the public for the administration of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. The language of this section is identical to the language in s. 59(1) of the former Employment Standards Act. That section was used as authority for the proposition that in employee applications for review under the Act, the claimant does not control the process. The Minister is the person responsible for the Act. Therefore, such enforcement processes as investigation, issuing an order and defending an order at a hearing are under the administration of the Minister, and are not under the control of the employee who filed the claim. See Dominion Electric Protection Co. Ltd. d.b.a ADT Energy Systems v Hand (September 23, 1985), ESC 1950 (Baum).

ESA Part XXI Section 85 - Director

Director - s. 85(1)

85(1) The Minister shall appoint a person to be the Director of Employment Standards to administer this Act and the regulations.

The Minister of Labour appoints the Director of Employment Standards to administer the Employment Standards Act, 2000 and the regulations. This section is the source for the Director's powers and duties under the Act. The nature of the Director's powers and duties is spelled out in s. 88.

Acting Director - ss. 85(2) and (3)

85(2) The Director's powers may be exercised and the Director's duties may be performed by an employee of the Ministry appointed as Acting Director if,

- a) the Director is absent or unable to act; or
- b) an individual who was appointed Director has ceased to be the Director and no new Director has been appointed.

85(3) An Acting Director shall be appointed by the Director or, in the Director's absence, the Deputy Minister of Labour.

This provision is similar to the corresponding section (s. 59) of the former Employment Standards Act except that the former Employment Standards Act provided for the Minister to appoint an Acting Director. Sections 85 (2) and (3) allow the Director or the Deputy Minister, in the Director's absence, to name an employee of the Ministry to take over the duties of the Director in an "acting" capacity while the Director is unable to exercise the powers of the office, or while the office is vacant.

ESA Part XXI Section 86 - Employment Standards Officers

Employment Standards Officers - s. 86(1)

86(1) Persons to enforce this Act and the regulations may be appointed as employment standards officers under the Public Service Act.

Section 86(1) is the authority for the appointment of employment standards officers. Once appointed, the officers have the authority to exercise powers and duties in accordance with s. 89 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Certificate of Appointment - s. 86(2)

86(2) The Deputy Minister of Labour shall issue a certificate of appointment bearing his or her signature or a facsimile of it to every employment standards officer.

Section 86(2) requires that an appointment card be issued to all employment standards officers. The Deputy Minister must issue to each officer a card as evidence of his or her appointment. The card is evidence of the officer's appointment and authority to use the powers set out in ss. 89, 91 and 93.

The corresponding provision in the former Employment Standards Act (s. 62) also explicitly required an officer to present his or her card, as authority for the powers exercised or the duties carried out, if requested to do so by any person. This provision is now found in s. 91(5).

ESA Part XXI Section 87 - Delegation

Delegation - s. 87(1); Residual Powers - s. 87(2)

87(1) The Minister may, in writing, delegate any of the Minister's powers or duties under this Act subject to the limitations or conditions set out in the delegation.

87(2) The Minister may exercise a power or perform a duty under this Act even if he or she has delegated it to a person under this section.

Section 87(1) is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 59(5)) of the former Employment Standards Act. It allows the Minister of Labour to delegate powers and duties to anyone he or she chooses. The delegation must, however, be made in writing.

Section 87(2) was introduced by the Employment Standards Act, 2000. It preserves the Minister's ability to exercise powers and perform duties that have been delegated to persons under this section.

ESA Part XXI Section 88 - Powers and Duties of Director

Powers and Duties of Director - s. 88(1)

88(1) The Director may exercise the powers conferred upon the Director under this Act and shall perform the duties imposed upon the Director under this Act.

Subsection 88(1) makes plain the distinction between the powers of the Director (those instances where the Employment Standards Act, 2000 says that the Director may do something) and the duties of the Director (where it is stipulated that the Director shall do something). This distinction accords with principles of statutory interpretation concerning permissive and mandatory language.

For example, the powers of the Director would include:

- Subsection 88(5) - the power to determine the rate of interest and manner of calculating it under the ESA 2000;
- Subsection 99(6) - the power to permit an employee represented by a trade union that is a party to a collective agreement to file a complaint.

The duties of the Director would include:

- Subsection 88(7) - the duty to pay out monies that had been paid to the Director in trust, to the person entitled to receive it, with interest where no provision has been made elsewhere in the ESA 2000 for paying it out
- Subsection 112(5) - the duty to pay to the employee monies that were paid to the Director in trust with respect to that employee under as. 112 settlement

Policies - s. 88(2)

88(2) The Director may establish policies respecting the interpretation, administration and enforcement of this Act.

This subsection allows the Director to establish policies regarding interpretation, administration and enforcement of the ESA 2000. The purpose of the provision is to promote province-wide, consistent interpretation and application of the ESA 2000.

This subsection should be read together with ESA Part XXI s. 89(2), which states that employment standards officers must follow any policies established by the Director under s. 88(2).

Authorization - s. 88(3)

88(3) The Director may authorize an employment standards officer to exercise a power or to perform a duty conferred upon the Director under this Act, either orally or in writing.

Subsection 88(3) sets out the authority of the Director to delegate various powers and duties to program staff. For information on such delegations see Delegation of Powers.

Note that in addition to the Director's general authority to delegate under s. 88(3), the Director has further, specific delegation authority in ESA Part VII, s. 17.3 and in ESA Part VIII, s. 22.2.

Same: Residual Powers - s. 88(4)

88(4) The Director may exercise a power conferred upon the Director under this Act even if he or she has delegated it to a person under subsection (3).

Section 88(4) preserves the Director's ability to exercise powers that have been delegated to persons under s. 88(3).

Interest - s. 88(5)

88(5) The Director may, with the approval of the Minister, determine the rates of interest and the manner of calculating interest for,

- amounts owing under different provisions of this Act or the regulations; and
- money held by the Director in trust.

Subsection 88(5) authorizes the Director, with the Minister's approval, to decide what rates of interest and the manner of its calculation for the purposes of the ESA 2000.

The Fair Workplaces, Better Jobs Act, 2017, SO 2017, c 22, amended s. 88(5), effective January 1, 2018 to allow the Director of Employment Standards to set multiple rates of interest for any amounts owing under different provisions of the ESA 2000 and its regulations, as well as money held in trust by the Director.

No specific rates of interest are currently in place under this section.

Determinations not Regulations - s. 88(6)

88(6) A determination under subsection (5) is not a regulation within the meaning of Part III (Regulations) of the Legislation Act, 2006.

Subsection 88(6) clarifies that the Director's determination of an interest rate under s. 88(5) is not a regulation.

Other Circumstances - s. 88(7)

88(7) Where money has been paid to the Director in trust and no provision is made for paying it out elsewhere in this Act, it shall be paid out to the persons entitled to receive it together with interest at the rate and calculated in the manner determined by the Director under subsection (5).

Subsection 88(7) is intended to provide consistency in the calculation of interest on and payment out of monies that had been paid into the Director in trust, where there are no provisions for paying it out elsewhere in the ESA 2000. For example, this section would apply where employees have elected to retain recall rights under a collective agreement and the termination and/or severance pay monies were paid to the Director in trust and are subsequently paid out to the employer or employees under ESA Part XV, ss. 67(8) and (9).

Surplus Interest - s. 88(8)

88(8) If the interest earned on money held by the Director in trust exceeds the interest paid to the person entitled to receive the money, the Director may use the difference to pay any service charges for the management of the money levied by the financial institution with which the money was deposited.

Subsection 88(8) allows for any excess interest earned on the monies held in trust to be used to pay service charges levied by the financial institution in which the money was deposited.

Hearing not Required - s. 88(9)

88(9) The Director is not required to hold a hearing in exercising any power under the Act.

Subsection 88(9) provides that the Director is not required to hold hearings when exercising powers under the ESA 2000. Because the Director's statutory powers are such that a person's rights can be affected, (e.g., approving severance payments by instalment and approving the extension of a temporary lay-off) there is a possibility that principles of natural justice may require the Director to hold a hearing if not for this provision.

This provision is consistent with s. 89(3), which states that employment standards officers are not required to hold hearings when exercising any power or making any decision under the ESA 2000.

ESA Part XXI Section 88.1 - Director May Reassign an Investigation

88.1 (1) The Director may terminate the assignment of an employment standards officer to the investigation of a complaint and may assign the investigation to another employment standards officer.

(2) If the Director terminates the assignment of an employment standards officer to the investigation of a complaint,

a) the officer whose assignment is terminated shall no longer have any powers or duties with respect to the investigation of the complaint or the discovery during the investigation of any similar potential entitlement of another employee of the

b) the new employment standards officer assigned to the investigation may rely on evidence collected by the first officer and any findings of fact made by that officer.

(3) This section applies with necessary modifications to inspections of employers by employment standards officers.

Section 88.1 was added to the Employment Standards Act, 2000 by the Good Government Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 19, effective June 22, 2006. The section permits the Director of Employment Standards to transfer the investigation of a complaint or inspection from an employment standards officer to another employment standards officer.

The Director's authority to reassign a file is discretionary. An example of when the Director might consider exercising his or her discretion is if the original investigating officer was indisposed and could not be expected to complete the investigation in a timely way.

If the Director did reassign a file under this section, the new officer would able to rely, but would not have to rely, on any findings of fact and the evidence collected by the first officer. The new officer would also be able to collect new evidence and make new findings.

ESA Part XXI Section 88.2 – Recognition of Employers

Recognition of Employers – s. 88.2(1)

88.2(1) The Director may give recognition to an employer, upon the employer's application, if the employer satisfies the Director that it meets the prescribed criteria.

This subsection enables the Director of Employment Standards to give recognition to an employer, for example, for a high rate of compliance with the Employment Standards Act, 2000, or exceptional performance measured in accordance with prescribed criteria. Currently, no criteria are prescribed.

Classes of Employers – s. 88.2(2)

88.2(2) For greater certainty, the criteria under subsection (1) may be prescribed for different classes of employers.

This subsection establishes that the criteria or system of recognition may be divided into different classes of employer with different criteria for each.

Information re Recognitions – s. 88.2(3)

88.2(3) The Director may require any employer who is seeking recognition under subsection (1), or who is the subject of a recognition, to provide the Director with whatever information, records or accounts he or she may require pertaining to the recognition and the Director may make such inquiries and examinations as he or she considers necessary.

This subsection empowers the Director to require any information related to the recognition, for the purposes of granting, reviewing or revoking a recognition from either an applicant for same or an employer who is has already received a recognition.

Publication – s. 88.2(4)

88.2(4) The Director may publish or otherwise make available to the public information relating to employers given recognition under subsection (1), including the names of employers.

This subsection permits the Director to publish general information, such as the number of recognitions granted within a particular time period and the names of employers that have received recognitions.

Validity of Recognition – s. 88.2(5)

88.2(5) A recognition given under subsection (1) is valid for the period that the Director specifies in the recognition.

A recognition granted by the Director may specify a time period within which it will remain valid. It will cease to be valid after that point.

Revocation, etc. of Recognitions – s. 88.2(6)

88.2(6) The Director may revoke or amend a recognition.

The Director has the power to revoke or amend a recognition. For example, if an employer no longer fulfills the criteria that support a recognition the Director would be able to revoke it.

ESA Part XXI Section 88.3 – Delegation of Powers Under s. 88.2

Delegation of Powers Under s. 88.2 – s. 88.3(1)

88.3(1) The Director may authorize an individual employed in the Ministry to exercise a power conferred on the Director under section 88.2, either orally or in writing.

This subsection empowers the Director to authorize or delegate all of the powers of granting, revoking or amending recognition to an employer as well as requiring an employer to provide information.

Residual Powers – s. 88.3(2)

88.3(2) The Director may exercise a power conferred on the Director under s. 88.2 even if he or she has delegated it to an individual under subsection (1).

Although the Director may delegate powers established by s. 88.2, the Director retains the ability to exercise any power under s. 88.2 simultaneously.

Duty re Policies – s. 88.3(3)

88.3(3) An individual authorized by the Director under subsection (1) shall follow any policies established by the Director under subsection 88(2).

Under s. 88.3(3), an individual who has been authorized by the Director of Employment Standards to grant, amend or revoke an employer recognition under s. 88.3(1), is required to follow any policies established by the Director under s. 88(2) related to the exercise of that authority. Subsection 88(2) empowers the Director to establish policies "respecting the interpretation, administration and enforcement of this Act". If the Director does so in relation to employer recognition per s. 88.2, any person authorized by the Director to exercise a power under s. 88.2 is required to follow those policies.

ESA Part XXI Section 89 - Powers and Duties of Officers

Powers and Duties of Officers - s. 89(1)

89(1) An employment standards officer may exercise the powers conferred upon employment standards officers under this Act and shall perform the duties imposed upon employment standards officers under this Act.

Section 89(1) parallels s. 88(1), concerning, in this case, the powers and duties of an employment standards officer. As in s. 88(1), this section emphasizes the distinction between what the officer may do and what the officer must do.

For example, "the powers of an employment standards officer" would include:

- Section 91(1) - the power to enter and inspect any place without a warrant
- Section 102 - the power to hold a "decision-making" meeting

The "duties of an employment standards officer" would include:

- Section 89(2) - the duty to follow any policies established by the director under s. 88
- Section 110 - the duty to advise a complainant of the decision to refuse to issue an order by letter served in accordance with s. 95

Officers to Follow Policies - s. 89(2)

89(2) An employment standards officer shall follow any policies established by the Director under subsection 88(2).

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Act, 2000. Section 89(2) imposes an obligation on employment standards officers to follow the policies established by the Director under s. 88(2) respecting the interpretation, administration and enforcement of the Act.

Hearing not Required - s. 89(3)

89(3) An employment standards officer is not required to hold a hearing in exercising any power or making any decision under this Act.

This provision was introduced by the ESA 2000. Section 89(3) clarifies that an employment standards officer may exercise any power under the Act, e.g., to conduct inspections, investigate complaints, require attendance at meetings under s. 102 or make any decision under the Act, without holding a hearing. Section 89(3) makes it clear that the officer is not required to hold a hearing when exercising those powers or making a decision under the Act. In the absence of this section, it might be argued that principles of natural justice may impose an obligation on the officer to hold a hearing. See also the discussion of the Director's power in s. 88(2) of the Act to establish policies at ESA Part XXI, s. 88(2).

ESA Part XXI Section 90 - Officers not Compellable

Officer not Compellable - s. 90(1)

90(1) An employment standards officer is not a competent or compellable witness in a civil proceeding respecting any information given or obtained, statements made or received, or records or other things produced or received under this Act except for the purpose of carrying out his or her duties under it.

Generally speaking, the effect of this provision is that an employment standards officer cannot testify in a civil proceeding. Not only is an officer not "compellable" (meaning that an officer cannot be required to give testimony); an officer is also not "competent" to give testimony (meaning that he or she cannot give testimony even on a voluntary basis).

The term "civil proceeding" obviously includes a court proceeding, but it also includes a proceeding before a tribunal, such as the Ontario Labour Relations Board, or an arbitrator. See Ontario Nurses' Assn. v. Extendicare (Canada) Inc., (Kirkland Lake) (Burke Grievance). However, it does not include a criminal proceeding.

Note that there is an exception to the "not competent, not compellable" rule-an officer is both a competent and compellable witness where his or her testimony would be given for the purpose of carrying out his or her duties under the Employment Standards Act, 2000. Program policy is that this includes the giving of testimony in hearings under ss. 116, 121 and 122 of the Act.

Records - s. 90(2)

90(2) An employment standards officer shall not be compelled in a civil proceeding to produce any record or other thing he or she has made or received under this Act except for the purpose of carrying out his or her duties under this Act.

Generally speaking the effect of this provision is that an employment standards officer cannot be required in a civil proceeding to produce anything (such as a record) that he or she acquired while performing an inspection or investigation under the Act.

The term "civil proceeding" obviously includes a court proceeding, but it also includes a proceeding before a tribunal, such as the Ontario Labour Relations Board, or an arbitrator. See Ontario Nurses' Assn. v. Extendicare (Canada) Inc., (Kirkland Lake) (Burke Grievance). However, it does not include a criminal proceeding.

Note that an officer could be required to produce something acquired while performing an inspection or investigation where it is for the purpose of carrying out his or her duties under the Act. Further, a record or part of a record acquired by an officer may be accessible under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, RSO 1990, c F.31.

ESA Part XXI Section 91 - Investigation and Inspection Powers

Investigation and Inspection Powers - s. 91(1)

91(1) An employment standards officer may, without a warrant, enter and inspect any place in order to investigate a possible contravention of this Act or to perform an inspection to ensure that this Act is being complied with.

Section 91(1) provides that the officer may enter and inspect any place for the purposes of investigating a possible contravention or to perform an inspection to ensure the Employment Standards Act, 2000 is being complied with. "Any place" indicates that the officer may enter not only the premises of the employer, but any premises belonging to any person who may have records or knowledge relevant to the investigation. Furthermore, there is nothing in the section that would limit the officer to a single visit to accomplish the investigative tasks. There are limitations on this right of entry in ss. 91(2), (3) and (4) discussed below.

Time of Entry - s. 91(2)

91(2) The power to enter and inspect a place without a warrant may be exercised only during the place's regular business hours or, if it does not have regular business hours, during daylight hours.

The corresponding section (63(1)(a)) in the former Employment Standards Act limited entry, in the absence of a warrant, to "any reasonable time or times." Section 91(2) allows the employment standards officer to enter and inspect a place only during its regular business hours and if it has no regular business hours, during daylight hours. This provision is intended to provide the officer with a right of entry. If the employer had no regular business hours but offered or agreed to allow the officer to enter and inspect the premises at night, this section would not prevent the officer from accepting the employer's offer or agreement to do so.

Dwellings - s. 91(3)

91(3) The power to enter and inspect a place without a warrant shall not be exercised to enter and inspect a part of the place that is used as a dwelling unless the occupier of the dwelling consents or a warrant has been issued under section 92.

This provision is substantially unchanged from the corresponding provision (s. 63(2)) in the former Employment Standards Act. Section 91(3) is a limitation on the power of the employment standards officer to enter into premises. If the premises are used as a dwelling or living quarters, then the officer must have the consent of the person occupying the premises or must obtain a search warrant under s. 92.

If the workplace is a nuclear facility, to which provincial employment standards legislation applies as of April 1, 1998, the search warrant is to be obtained under s. 487 of the Criminal Code. See the discussion at ESA Part XXI, s. 94 regarding provincial jurisdiction in nuclear operations as well as ESA Part III, s. 3(2) for general information regarding federal/provincial jurisdiction. Given that nuclear facilities are unlikely to be used as dwellings, this last point is likely of intellectual interest only.

For situations where a search warrant may be required, the officer should consult Legal Services Branch.

Use of Force - s. 91(4)

91(4) An employment standards officer is not entitled to use force to enter and inspect a place.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Act, 2000, although it merely codifies Program practice under the former Employment Standards Act. Section 91(4) makes it clear that an officer is not entitled to use force to enter and inspect a place.

Identification - s. 91(5)

91(5) An employment standards officer shall produce on request, evidence of his or her appointment.

This provision is essentially unchanged from s. 62(2) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 91(5) provides that the card issued by the Deputy Minister as evidence of an employment standards officer's appointment - see ESA Part XXI, s. 86(2) - must be produced on request. The card is evidence of the authority under the Act for the powers exercised or duties performed by the officer.

Powers of Officer - s. 91(6)

91(6) An employment standards officer conducting an investigation or inspection may,

- a) examine a record or other thing that the officer thinks may be relevant to the investigation or inspection;
- b) require the production of a record or other thing that the officer thinks may be relevant to the investigation or inspection;
- c) remove for review and copying a record or other thing that the officer thinks may be relevant to the investigation or inspection;
- d) in order to produce a record in readable form, use data storage, information processing or retrieval devices or systems that are normally used in carrying on business in the place; and
- e) question any person on matters the officer thinks may be relevant to the investigation or inspection.

Section 91(6) is similar to the corresponding provision (s. 63(1)) in the former Employment Standards Act. Section 91 (6) sets out the officer's powers to examine, require for production, remove for review and copy records and other things that are relevant or the officer considers relevant to an investigation or inspection. Section 91(6)(a) was amended by the Good Government Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 19, effective June 22, 2006. It previously stated that the officer could "examine a record other thing that is relevant to the investigation or inspection." The amendment clarified that records etc. could be examined so long as the officer thinks they may be relevant.

Section 91(6) also allows the officer to order records to be produced in a readable form and to question any person on any matter the officer thinks may be relevant to the investigation or inspection. The broad language of the section with respect to a "record or other thing" was intended to ensure that all things relevant to the investigation or inspection would be made available to the officer. However, in the performance of all his or her duties under the Act, the officer would be expected to act reasonably. Such a restriction would also apply to the officer's determination that a record, thing or matter was relevant to the investigation.

1. Examine a record or other thing that is relevant to the investigation or inspection - s. 91(6)(a)

Clause 6(a) allows the officer to examine records or things relevant to the investigation or inspection. The term "record or other thing" is very broad and could include books of account, ledgers, vouchers, letters patent, by-laws, minutes of directors' meetings as well as other documents or things.

2. Require the production of a record or other thing that the officer thinks may be relevant to the investigation or inspection - s. 91(6)(b)

Clause 6(b) allows the officer to require production of records or other things he or she thinks are relevant to the investigation. If the records or other things are not produced upon request the officer may require production through a demand in writing under s. 91(7). See discussion under ss. 91(7) and (8) below.

Note: Officers may also compel production of records or other things at a meeting scheduled under s. 102. Note also that the Director's separate power to require production of records in s. 74(1) of the former Employment Standards Act has been eliminated.

3. Remove for review and copying a record or other thing that the officer thinks may be relevant to the investigation or inspection - s. 91(6)(c)

Clause 6(c) allows an employment standards officer to remove records or other things for review and copying. This clause must be read in conjunction with s. 91(9), which requires the officer to provide a receipt and to return the records or other things within a reasonable time.

4. In order to produce a record in readable form, use data storage, information processing or retrieval devices or systems that are normally used in carrying on business in the place - s. 91(6)(d)

Clause 6(d) allows an employment standards officer, for the purpose of ensuring that the Act and regulations are complied with, to copy any records such as electronic records or documents into a readable form using devices or systems normally used in carrying on business in the place. For example, an officer could copy electronic payroll records onto a computer disk.

5. Question any person on matters the officer thinks may be relevant to the investigation or inspection - s. 91(6)(e)

Clause 6(e) allows an employment standards officer to question any person on any matter the officer thinks may be relevant to the investigation or inspection. The officer may interview such persons separately by virtue of s. 91(13) (see discussion of s. 91(13) below). See also the discussion under s. 91(12) regarding the positive duty to answer questions that the officer thinks may be relevant to the investigation or inspection.

Written Demand - s. 91(7)

91(7) A demand that a record or other thing be produced must be in writing and must include a statement of the nature of the record or thing required.

Employment standards officers have the power to require production of records or other things thought to be relevant to an inspection or investigation under s. 91 (6)(b). Where an officer's verbal request for production is not complied with, he or she may demand production. This demand must be in writing and must specify the nature of what is being requested. A demand for "all records relevant to this claim" is probably too vague to meet the requirements of this section, while a demand for "all paper and electronic timesheets or payroll records for the period . . . to . . ." would likely be sufficient. Under s. 91(8) the person who has custody of such records or other things must comply with the demand.

Obligation to Produce and Assist - s. 91(8)

91(8) If an employment standards officer demands that a record or other thing be produced, the person who has custody of the record or thing shall produce it and, in the case of a record, shall on request provide any assistance that is reasonably necessary to interpret the record or to produce it in a readable form.

This provision is similar to the corresponding provision in the former Employment Standards Act in ss. 64(2) and (3). It means that an employment standards officer may, for the purpose of ensuring that the Act and regulations are complied with, demand (in writing as per s. 91(7)) the person who has custody of a record or thing to produce it and to provide any assistance reasonably necessary to interpret it or to produce it in a readable form. This could include printing out and explaining the employer's payroll records as well as transferring electronic records onto a disk for the officer. The scope of the language is broad enough that anything less than full cooperation may be viewed as a violation. Note that the officer may require any "person" to provide assistance under this section given that there may be persons other than (for example) the employer who have custody of records or documents relevant to the investigation. See the discussion concerning the definition of "person" in ESA Part I, s. 1.

Records and Things Removed from Place - s. 91(9)

91(9) An employment standards officer who removes a record or other thing under clause 6(c) shall provide a receipt and return the record or thing to the person within a reasonable time.

This provision is similar to s. 63(1)(c) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 91(9) allows an officer to take records or other things in order to facilitate an inspection or investigation. The officer is required however to return such records or things within a reasonable time. The receipt for records ensures that the owner of the records has a simple way of reclaiming the records, and the officer's investigation file will indicate when and where these records were borrowed and subsequently returned.

Copy Admissible in Evidence - s. 91(10)

91(10) A copy of a record that purports to be certified by an employment standards officer as being a true copy of the original is admissible in evidence to the same extent as the original, and has the same evidentiary value.

Section 91(10) provides that a copy of any record certified by an employment standards officer as a true copy is evidence of the record in the same way the original would be.

Obstruction - ss. 91(11) and (12)

91(11) No person shall hinder, obstruct or interfere with or attempt to hinder, obstruct or interfere with an employment standards officer conducting an investigation or inspection.

91(12) No person shall,

- a) refuse to answer questions on matters that an employment standards officer thinks may be relevant to an investigation or inspection; or
- b) provide an employment standards officer with information on matters the officer thinks may be relevant to an investigation or inspection that the person knows to be false or misleading.

These provisions are similar to those in s. 64 of the former Employment Standards Act. Sections 91(11) and (12) set out the level of compliance expected from people involved in an investigation or inspection by an employment standards officer. Note that the prohibition in this section may apply to any "person" who may be in a position to hinder, obstruct or interfere with an investigation or inspection. See the discussion concerning the definition of "person" in ESA Part I, s. 1.

The terms "hinder, obstruct or interfere with" in subsection (11) are intended to ensure that any person required to cooperate with the officer in his or her investigation or inspection does so. Section 91(12)(a) imposes a positive duty to answer questions. Section 91(12)(b) prohibits a person required to produce records or other things under s. 91 (8) or to answer questions under s. 91(12)(a) from providing information that the person knows to be false or misleading.

Separate Inquiries - s. 91(13)

91(13) No person shall prevent or attempt to prevent an employment standards officer from making inquiries of any person separate and apart from another person under clause 6(e).

Section 91(13) ensures that an officer may interview separately any parties the officer thinks may have information relevant to the investigation or inspection; this helps to prevent "tailoring" of evidence.

ESA Part XXI Section 91.1 - Self-audit

Self-audit - s. 91.1(1)

91.1(1) An employment standards officer may, by giving written notice, require an employer to conduct an examination of the employer's records, practices or both to determine whether the employer is in compliance with one or more provisions of this Act or the regulations.

This provision was introduced by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014, SO 2014, c 10 ("SWSEA"), effective May 20, 2015. Under subsection (1), an employment standards officer may, by providing written notice to an employer, require the employer to conduct an examination of the employer's records, practices or both for the purpose of determining whether or not it is in compliance with the Act or regulations.

Examination and Report - s. 91.1(2)

91.1(2) If an employer is required to conduct an examination under subsection (1), the employer shall conduct the examination and report the results of the examination to the employment standards officer in accordance with the notice and the requirements of this section.

This provision was introduced by the SWSEA, effective May 20, 2015. Subsection (2) provides that if an employer is required to conduct an audit as per subsection (1) the employer is required to report the results of the audit to the officer. The employer's report must contain certain information, in accordance with the notice that they received from the officer instructing them to complete the self-audit.

Notice - s. 91.1(3)

91.1(3) A notice given under subsection (1) shall specify,

- a) the period to be covered by the examination;
- b) the provision or provisions of this Act or the regulations to be covered by the examination; and
- c) the date by which the employer must provide a report of the results of the examination to the employment standards officer.

This provision was introduced by the SWSEA, effective May 20, 2015. Subsection (3) sets out the details of what must be included in the written notice given to an employer under subsection (1), which requires the employer to conduct a self-audit.

Same - s. 91.1(4)

91.1(4) A notice given under subsection (1) shall specify,

- a) the method to be used in carrying out the examination;
- b) the format of the report; and
- c) such information to be included in the employer's report as the employment standards officer considers appropriate.

This provision was introduced by the SWSEA, effective May 20, 2015. Subsection (4) states that the officer's notice to the employer may specify the method the employer is to use in carrying out the audit, the format of the employer's report and may also require the employer to include any other information in the report that the officer considers appropriate.

Same - s. 91.1(5)

91.1(5) A notice given under subsection (1) may,

a) require the employer to include in the report to the employment standards officer an assessment of whether the employer has complied with this Act or the regulations;

b) require the employer to include in the report to the employment standards officer an assessment of whether one or more employees are owed wages if, pursuant to clause (a), the employer has included an assessment that the employer has not complied with this Act or the regulations; and

c) require the employer to pay wages owed if, pursuant to clause (b), the employer assesses that one or more employees are owed wages.

This provision was introduced by the SWSEA, effective May 20, 2015. Subsection (5) provides that the notice given by the employment standards officer requiring the employer to conduct the self-audit may also require that:

- The employer include within the report an assessment as to whether the employer has complied with the ESA or regulations and whether wages are owing;
- The employer pay outstanding wages if the assessment shows that wages are indeed owed.

Report - Unpaid Wages - s. 91.1(6)

91.1(6) If the employer's report includes an assessment that one or more employees are owed wages, the employer shall include the following in the report to the employment standards officer:

1. The name of every employee who is owed wages and the amount of wages owed to the employee.
2. An explanation of how the amount of wages owed to the employee was determined.
3. If the notice under subsection (1) requires payment, proof of payment of the amount owed to the employee.

This provision was introduced by the SWSEA effective May 20, 2015. Under subsection (6), if the employer's report included an assessment that an employee or employees are owed wages, the employer will be required to include the names of the employees owed wages and the amounts owed, an explanation of how the amounts owing were calculated and if the officer's notice to the employer had included direction to pay outstanding wages, proof of payment.

Same - Other Non-compliance - s. 91.1(7)

91.1(7) If the employer's report includes an assessment that the employer has not complied with this Act or the regulations but no employees are owed wages as a result of the failure to comply, the employer shall include in the report a description of the measures that the employer has taken or will take to ensure that this Act or the regulations will be complied with.

This provision was introduced by the SWSEA, effective May 20, 2015. Under subsection (7), if the employer's report includes an assessment that reveals non-monetary contraventions, the employer will be required to provide a description of measures taken or that will be taken to bring itself into compliance.

Orders - s. 91.1(8)

91.1(8) If an employer's report includes an assessment that the employer owes wages to one or more employees, or that the employer has otherwise not complied with this Act or the regulations, and the employment standards officer determines that the employer's assessment is correct, the officer may issue an order under section 103 or 108, as the officer determines is appropriate.

This provision was introduced by the SWSEA, effective May 20, 2015. Subsection (8) provides that if an employer's report under this section includes an assessment that it has contravened the Act or the regulations, an employment standards officer may issue an order to pay under s. 103 or a compliance order under s. 108, if the officer determines that the employer's assessment is correct.

Inspection, Investigation, Enforcement not Precluded - s. 91.1(9)

91.1(9) Nothing in this section precludes an employment standards officer from conducting an investigation or inspection, and from taking such enforcement action under this Act as the officer considers appropriate.

This provision was introduced by the SWSEA, effective May 20, 2015. Subsection (9) effectively provides that regardless of any direction given to an employer to complete a self-audit under s. 91.1 and regardless of any response to such direction, employment standards officers retain the ability to investigate or conduct an inspection and take whatever enforcement action the officer considers to be appropriate.

Same - s. 91.1(10)

91.1(10) Without restricting the generality of subsection (9), an employment standards officer may,

- a) conduct an investigation or inspection that covers a period or part of a period specified in the notice under subsection (1); and
- b) take such enforcement action under this Act as the officer considers appropriate, including issuing an order under section 103 or 108, if, despite the employer's report indicating that the employer did comply, the officer determines that the employer did not comply with this Act or the regulations during a period or part of a period specified in the notice under subsection (1).

This provision was introduced by the SWSEA, effective May 20, 2015. Subsection (10) specifically provides that without restricting the generality of the subsection (9) an employment standards officer is able to conduct an investigation or inspection that covers part or all of the period of the self-audit as specified in the notice given under subsection (1) and the officer is empowered to take any enforcement action he or she considers appropriate, including issuing an order to pay wages or a compliance order if the officer determines that the employer did not comply with the Act or the regulations during the period or part of a period of the self-audit as specified in the notice given under subsection (1).

False Information - s. 91.1(11)

91.1(11) No employer shall provide a report required under this section that contains information that the employer knows to be false or misleading.

This provision was introduced by the SWSEA, effective May 20, 2015. This provision makes it an offence for an employer to provide false or misleading information in a report required under s. 91.1.

ESA Part XXI Section 92 - Warrant

Warrant - s. 92(1)

92(1) A justice of the peace may issue a warrant authorizing an employment standards officer named in the warrant to enter premises specified in the warrant and to exercise any of the powers mentioned in subsection 91(6), if the justice of the peace is satisfied on information under oath that,

- a) the officer has been prevented from exercising a right of entry to the premises under subsection 91(1) or has been prevented from exercising a power under subsection 91(6);
- b) there are reasonable grounds to believe that the officer will be prevented from exercising a right of entry to the premises under subsection 91(1) or will be prevented from exercising a power under subsection 91(6); or
- c) there are reasonable grounds to believe that an offence under this Act or the regulations has been or is being committed and that information or other evidence will be obtained through the exercise of a power mentioned in subsection 91(6).

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Act, 2000. It allows an employment standards officer to obtain a warrant for entry into premises which may include a business or dwelling, because the officer was unable or has reasonable grounds to believe he or she will be unable to enter the premises during regular business hours (or in the absence of regular business hours, during daylight hours) or to enter a dwelling without the consent of the occupier.

It also allows the officer to obtain warrants to examine, require for production, remove and copy or use data storage, information processing or retrieval systems normally used in the workplace to produce in readable form, records or other things the officer thinks may be relevant to the inspection or investigation. Lastly, it allows the officer to obtain a warrant in order to question any person on matters the officer thinks may be relevant to the inspection or investigation. (The only reference to warrants in the former Employment Standards Act was in s. 63(2) which required an officer to obtain a search warrant under section 158 of the Provincial Offences Act, RSO 1990, c P.33, in order to enter a dwelling without the consent of the occupier.)

Clause (c) was added by the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act (Live-in Caregivers and Others), 2009, SO 2009, c 32 ("EPFNA") effective March 22, 2010 (EPFNA was amended and renamed the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009, effective November 20, 2015) to extend the circumstances under which a justice of the peace may issue a warrant for entry to include those situations where there are reasonable grounds to believe that an offence was committed or is being committed and that information or other evidence will be obtained by the officer through the production, examination or removal of records or other documents or by questioning a person.

Generally, this clause ensures that where an employment standards officer is investigating or inspecting at a site and comes to have reasonable grounds to believe that an offence has been committed, he or she will be able to obtain a warrant before continuing work at the site.

This subsection requires information under oath to satisfy a justice of the peace that the officer has been prevented or that there are reasonable grounds to believe that the officer will be prevented from exercising a right of entry under s. 91(1) or a power under s. 91(6) or that there are reasonable grounds to believe that an offence was or is being committed and information or other evidence will be obtained by the exercise of the officer's powers under s. 91(6).

Expiry of Warrant - s. 92(2)

92(2) A warrant issued under this section shall name a date on which it expires, which date shall not be later than 30 days after the warrant is issued.

This provision limits the effective period of a warrant issued under s. 92(1). Section 92(2) requires that a warrant issued under this section have an expiry date no later than 30 days after the warrant was issued. This 30-day period is subject to an extension under s. 92(3).

Extension of Time - s. 92(3)

92(3) Upon application without notice by the employment standards officer named in a warrant issued under this section, a justice of the peace may extend the date on which the warrant expires for an additional period of no more than 30 days.

This section allows the warrant issued under s. 92(1) which must have an expiry date no more than 30 days after the warrant was issued (pursuant to s. 92(2)), to be extended for up to 30 days, on application of the officer named in the warrant and without notice to the persons subject to the warrant.

Use of Force - s. 92(4)

92(4) An employment standards officer named in a warrant issued under this section may call upon a police officer for assistance in executing the warrant.

This provision will allow an officer to call the police for assistance to execute a warrant. For example, where an officer with a warrant issued under this section was denied entry to a workplace, he or she may call upon the police to assist the officer to enter the premises in order to conduct an investigation or inspection under the ESA 2000.

Time of Execution - s. 92(5)

92(5) A warrant issued under this section may be executed only between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m., unless the warrant specifies otherwise.

An officer who has obtained a warrant under this section may use it to gain entry under s. 91(1) or exercise any power under s. 91(6) only between the hours of 8 a.m. and 8 p.m. This restriction also applies to a police officer called to assist in the execution of the warrant. The only exception to this limitation is made where the warrant itself specifies otherwise. See, however, the discussion of s. 92(6) below that deals with the execution of a warrant obtained under this section.

Other Matters - s. 92(6)

92(6) Subsections 91(4) to (13) apply with necessary modifications to an officer executing a warrant issued under this section.

This subsection was amended by the Government Efficiency Act, 2002, SO 2001, c 9, effective November 26, 2002, by the deletion of a reference to s. 91(2). Because s. 92(6) deals with warrants issued under s. 92(5) and that subsection provides that a warrant may be executed between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m., there was a possible conflict in the reference to s. 91(2), which provides that an investigation and inspection can only be conducted during regular business hours, or where there are no regular business hours during daylight hours.

Subsection 92(6) provides that ss. 91(4) to (13) will apply to an officer executing a warrant issued under s. 92(1). See the discussion of these subsections above.

Same - s. 92(7)

92(7) Without restricting the generality of subsection (6), if a warrant is issued under this section, the matters on which an officer executing the warrant may question a person under clause 91(6)(e) are not limited to those that aid in the effective execution of the warrant but extend to any matters that the officer thinks may be relevant to the investigation or inspection.

This subsection was added by EPFNA to ensure that where a warrant has been issued by a justice of the peace under s. 92(1) authorizing an employment standards officer to enter premises so that he or she may exercise his or her powers under s. 91(6), the officer is not limited to asking questions of witnesses related to the execution of the warrant. Specifically, it provides that in exercising his or her powers under s. 91(6)(e), the officer may question any person on any matter the officer thinks may be relevant to an investigation or inspection.

ESA Part XXI Section 93 - Posting of Notices

93 An employment standards officer may require an employer to post and to keep posted in or upon the employer's premises in a conspicuous place or places where it is likely to come to the attention of the employer's employees,

- a) any notice relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act or the regulations that the officer considers appropriate; or
- b) a copy of a report or part of a report made by the officer concerning the results of an investigation or inspection

This provision is similar to s. 75 of the former Employment Standards Act but with an additional provision that allows officers to require the posting of reports or copies of a report. In addition, the authority to require posting under this section rests with the employment standards officer rather than the Director.

The notice referred to in clause (a) may consist of a general outline of all of the basic provisions of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 or, on the other hand, may focus on one or more standards or provisions of particular relevance to the workplace involved. The report or part of a report referred to in clause (b) may be a copy of the actual officer's report (or excerpts of it) prepared upon the conclusion of the investigation or inspection.

See also the discussion of the general posting requirement in s. 2 in ESA Part II, s. 2.

ESA Part XXI Section 94 - Powers under the Canada Labour Code

94 If a regulation is made under the Canada Labour Code incorporating by reference all or part of this Act or a regulation under it, the Board and any person having powers under this Act may exercise the powers conferred under the Canada Labour Code regulation.

This provision is substantially unchanged from its corresponding provision in the former Employment Standards Act (s. 75.2). Federal regulations made under the Canada Labour Code, RSC 1985, c L-2, make the federal Code provisions concerning employment standards (and labour relations and occupational health and safety) inapplicable to the nuclear operations of Ontario Power Generation and provide that Ontario law in these areas applies instead. The same regulations that "incorporate by reference" the Ontario statutes and regulations also provide that they may be enforced by the same bodies and persons who enforce the law provincially. Section 94 is intended to support this in the employment standards context by making it clear that the Ontario Labour Relations Board and other persons having powers under the Employment Standards Act, 2000 (such as employment standards officers and the Director of Employment Standards) have jurisdiction with respect to the federal regulation which incorporates the ESA 2000 and its regulations.

ESA Part XXI Section 95 – Service of Documents

Service of Documents – s. 95(1)

95(1) Except as otherwise provided in section 8, where service of a document on a person is required or permitted under this Act, it may be served,

(a) in the case of service on an individual, personally, by leaving a copy of the document with the individual;

(b) in the case of service on a corporation, personally, by leaving a copy of the document with an officer, director or agent of the corporation, or with an individual at any place of business of the corporation who appears to be in control or management of the place of business;

(c) by mail addressed to the person's last known business or residential address using any method of mail delivery that permits the delivery to be verified;

(d) by fax or email if the person is equipped to receive the fax or email;

(e) by a courier service;

(f) by leaving the document, in a sealed envelope addressed to the person, with an individual who appears to be at least 16 years of age at the person's last known business or residential address; or

(g) in a manner ordered by the Board under subsection (8).

Section 95 was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009. The new section expanded the methods by which most documents can be served under the ESA 2000.

Please note that the methods of service set out in this section do not apply to notices of civil proceeding served on the Director (s. 8). For more information on the service provisions specific to notices of civil proceedings, please see subsections 8(3)–8(5).

With the above exception, the methods of service set out in s. 95(1) apply to the service of any orders, notices or other documents that must be served in accordance with this provision under the ESA 2000.

Clause (a) applies when serving a document on an individual, clause (b) applies when a document is to be served on a corporation, and clauses (c) to (f) apply to the service of a document on any "person" including an individual or a corporation. For interpretation of the term "person", please see ESA Part I, s. 1. Service effected per clause (g) must follow the Board's specifications.

1. Service on an Individual – s. 95(1)(a)

In the case of service on an individual, service of a document can be effected by personally leaving a copy of the document with the individual.

2. Service on a Corporation – s. 95(1)(b)

In the case of service on a corporation, the service of a document can be effected by:

1. Personally leaving a copy of the document with an officer, director or agent of the corporation or
2. By leaving a copy of the document with an individual who appears to be in control or management of the place of business.

Whether a person is an officer or director of a corporation can generally be verified by consulting the most recent version of the relevant Corporation Profile Report.

This provision also allows a document to be served on, for example, a manager of one of the corporation's business outlets. Since service can be effected on a "person who appears to be in control or management", it follows that the person need not be manager so long as the person appears to be in control of the operation at the location. For example, service might be effected on the single employee who is in charge of a kiosk operated by the corporation (assuming there was no off-site supervisor and the employee was considered to be in control of the operations at the kiosk).

3. Service by Verifiable Mail – s. 95(1)(c)

Service can be effected on any person by verifiable mail where the document is sent to the person's "last known business or residential address". The specific reference to the residential address clarifies that the document can be sent to an employee's last known home address and where the employer is a sole proprietor who, for example, and has gone out of business, the order can be served at the individual's residence.

It is Program policy that three Canada Post services fall within the meaning of verifiable mail. These are Registered Mail, Xpresspost and Priority Courier. However, it is important to note that Xpresspost and Priority Courier will comply with the requirements of this provision only if the "signature upon delivery" option is selected.

4. Service by Fax or Electronic Mail – s. 95(1)(d)

A document may be served on any person by fax or electronic mail if the intended recipient has the necessary equipment to receive the fax transmission or electronic mail.

5. Service by Courier Service – s. 95(1)(e)

A document may be served on a person using a courier service.

6. Service at Person's Last Known Business or Residential Address – s. 95(1)(f)

Service may be effected by leaving the document, in a sealed envelope addressed to the person, with an individual who appears to be at least 16 years of age at the person's last known business or residential address.

As noted under "Service by Verifiable Mail – s. 95(1)(c)" above, the specific reference to the residential address clarifies that where the employer is a sole proprietor, for example, and has gone out of business, the order can be served at the individual's residence.

7. Service in a Manner Ordered by the Board – s. 95(1)(g)

Finally, a document may be served in a manner ordered by the Board under subsection (8). Subsection 95(8) allows the Ontario Labour Relations Board to order that service be effected in a manner that it considers to be appropriate in the circumstances.

The following types of documents must be served in accordance with this section:

- Section74.14 order to recover fees – s. 74.14(4)
- Letter advising of order under s. 74.14 – s. 74.14(4)
- Section74.16 order for compensation, temporary help agency – s. 74.16(4)
- Letter advising of order under s. 74.16 – s. 74.16(4)
- Section74.17 order re: client reprisal – s. 74.17(3)
- Letter advising of order under 74.17 – s. 74.17(3)
- Notice of s. 102 meeting – s. 102(3)
- Section 103 order for wages – s. 103(6)
- Letter advising of order under s. 103 – s. 103(7)
- Section 104 order for compensation – s. 104(4)
- Letter advising of order under s. 104 – s. 104(4)
- Section 106 order against a director – s. 106(1), (3)
- Section 107 further order against directors – s. 107(1)
- Section 108 compliance order – s. 108(4)

- Letter advising of order under s. 108 – s. 108(4)
- Letter advising of refusal to issue order under s. 110 – ss. 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104 and 108
- Section 113 notice of contravention – s. 113(3)
- Third party demand – s. 125(3)
- Letter advising order has been filed in court – s. 126(2)
- Written notice of termination – s. 4(1) of O Reg 288/01

Same – s. 95(2)

95(2) Service of a document by means described in clause (1) (a), (b) or (f) is effective when it is left with the individual.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 which came into force on November 6, 2009.

This subsection must be read in conjunction with s. 95(1) which establishes the different methods by which most documents may be served. This provision states that where a document is served either:

- On an individual by personally leaving a copy of the document with the individual;
- On a corporation by personally leaving a copy of the document with an officer, director or agent of the corporation, or with an individual at any place of business of the corporation who appears to be in control or management of the place of business; or
- By leaving the document, in a sealed envelope addressed to the person, with an individual who appears to be at least 16 years of age at the person's last known business or residential address;

The service is deemed to be effective at the time the document is left with the individual.

Same – s. 95(3)

95(3) Subject to subsection (6), service of a document by mail is effective five days after the document is mailed.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 which came into force on November 6, 2009.

Where a document is served in accordance with s. 95(1)(c) via mail addressed to the person's last known business or residential address using a method of mail delivery that permits the delivery to be verified, the service of the document is deemed to be effective on the fifth day after the document is mailed unless the person to whom the mail is sent establishes, per s. 95(6), that the service was not, in fact, effective at that time due to an absence, accident, illness or cause beyond the person's control.

Reference can be made to the Legislation Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 21, Sch F when interpreting the timing portion of this subsection. Section 89(3) of that Act states:

A reference to a number of days between two events excludes the day on which the first event happens and includes the day on which the second event happens, even if the reference is to "at least" or "not less than" a number of days.

This means that when determining the deemed service date, the day the document is mailed will not be counted, but the following calendar days are counted. For example, a letter mailed on a Wednesday is deemed to be served the next Monday. It is possible that the deemed service date could fall on a weekend or public holiday even if there is no mail service on that day. For example, if a document is mailed on a Tuesday, the service would be deemed to have taken place on the following Sunday.

Subject to s. 95(6), the deemed service date applies regardless of when the mail actually arrived at the recipient's address.

Same – s. 95(4)

95(4) Subject to subsection (6), service of a document by a fax or email sent on a Saturday, Sunday or a public holiday or on any other day after 5 p.m. is effective on the next day that is not a Saturday, Sunday or public holiday.

This provision was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, which came into force on November 6, 2009 and is similar to the previous subsection 95(2) of the ESA 2000.

Where a document is served by fax or email in accordance with s. 95(1)(d), the service occurs on the day the fax or email is sent unless the transmission occurs after 5:00 p.m. or on a Saturday, Sunday or a public holiday. If the document is faxed or sent via email after 5:00 p.m. or on a Saturday, Sunday or public holiday, the service is deemed to be effective on the next day that is not a Saturday, Sunday, or public holiday. Subsection 95(6) indicates that this deemed service date does not apply if the person to whom the documents were faxed or emailed establishes that the service was not effective at the time set out above due to an absence, accident, illness or cause beyond the person's control.

For example, assume a document is served via email attachment and the email is transmitted at 5:10 p.m. on a Wednesday evening. The document will be deemed to have been served the following day, Thursday, unless that day happens to be a public holiday or if the recipient establishes the service was not effective due to one of the reasons set out in s. 95(6).

Same – s. 95(5)

95(5) Subject to subsection (6), service of a document by courier is effective two days after the courier takes the document.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 which came into force on November 6, 2009.

Where a document is served in accordance with s. 95(1)(e) via courier, the service of the document is deemed effective two days after courier takes the document unless the person to whom the document is sent establishes that the service was not, in fact, effective at that time due to an absence, accident or illness or cause beyond the person's control.

Reference can be made to the Legislation Act, 2006 when interpreting the timing portion of this subsection. Section 89(3) of that Act states:

A reference to a number of days between two events excludes the day on which the first event happens and includes the day on which the second event happens, even if the reference is to "at least" or "not less than" a number of days.

This means that when determining the deemed service date, the day the document is provided to the courier will not be counted, but the following calendar days are counted. For example, assume a document is given to the courier on a Monday. The service would be effective on the following Wednesday. It is possible that a deemed service date could fall on a weekend or public holiday.

Subject to s. 95(6), the deemed service date applies regardless of when the document actually arrived by courier.

Same – s. 95(6)

95(6) Subsections (3), (4) and (5) do not apply if the person establishes that the service was not effective at the time specified in those subsections because of an absence, accident, illness or cause beyond the person's control.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009.

If service under s. 95(1) is attempted or effected by verifiable mail, fax, email, or courier, the deemed service provisions in subsections (3), (4) and (5) do not apply if the person on whom the document is being served establishes that she or he did not, in fact, receive the document in the time period specified in the subsection due to an absence, accident, illness or cause beyond the person's control. The onus of proving the absence, accident, illness or cause beyond the person's control lies with the person refuting the service.

Same – s. 95(7)

95(7) If the Director considers that a manner of service other than one described in clauses (1) (a) to (f) is appropriate in the circumstances, the Director may direct the Board to consider the manner of service.

This provision was introduced into s. 95 by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009.

If the Director considers another method of service that is not addressed in ss. 95(1) (a) to (f) to be appropriate in the circumstances, the Director may direct the Ontario Labour Relations Board to consider that alternate manner of service.

Same – s. 95(8)

95(8) If the Board is directed to consider the manner of service, it may order that service be effected in the manner that the Board considers appropriate in the circumstances.

This provision came into force on November 6, 2009. If the Ontario Labour Relations Board is directed by the Director of Employment Standards to consider a manner of service that is different from those outlined in s. 95(1) clauses (a) to (f), the Board must consider the manner of service put forward and may order that the service be effected in any manner it considers appropriate in the circumstances.

Same – s. 95(9)

95(9) In an order for service, the Board shall specify when service in accordance with the order is effective.

Where the Ontario Labour Relations Board makes an order under s. 95(8) that service be effected in the manner the Board considers appropriate, it must indicate when the service is deemed to be effective.

Same – s. 95(10)

95(10) A certificate of service made by the employment standards officer who issued an order or notice under this Act is evidence of the issuance of the order or notice, the service of the order or notice on the person and its receipt by the person if, in the certificate, the officer,

(a) certifies that the copy of the order or notice is a true copy of it;

(b) certifies that the order or notice was served on the person; and

(c) sets out in it the method of service used

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 and is substantively similar to what were previously ss. 103(7) and 113(4) of the ESA 2000.

Section 95(10) states that there is evidence of the proper issuance, service and receipt of an order or notice where the employment standards officer who issued the order or notice certifies, in a document, that the order or notice was served on the person and states the method of service used. The certificate must be accompanied by a copy of the order or notice that is certified by the officer to be a true copy. The officer is the only person who needs to certify the accuracy of the copy.

Such a certificate is not irrefutable proof of the proper issuance, service and receipt of the order or notice. However, the certificate is acceptable as evidence before a judge or other decision-maker of the proper issuance, service, and receipt of the notice or order, subject to being proven as any other issue of fact before that decision-maker.

Note that s. 95(11) addresses certificates of service relating to documents other than orders or notices.

Same – s. 95(11)

95(11) A certificate of service made by the person who served a document under this Act is evidence of the service of the document on the person served and its receipt by that person if, in the certificate, the person who served the document,

(a) certifies that the copy of the document is a true copy of it;

(b) certifies that the document was served on the person; and

(c) sets out in it the method of service used.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 which came into force on November 6, 2009.

Section 95(11) states that there is evidence of the proper service and receipt of document under this Act if a certificate is issued by the person who served the document certifying that the document was served and stating the method of service used. The certificate must be accompanied by a copy of the document that is certified by the person who served the document, to be a true copy.

This subsection applies to any "person" who serves a document under this Act. For interpretation of the term "person", please see ESA Part I, s. 1.

Any certificate created per this subsection is not irrefutable proof of service of the document, but is acceptable as evidence before a judge or other decision-maker of service and receipt, subject to a decision-maker making a different finding of fact.

ESA Part XXII - Complaints and Enforcement

The intent of the provisions in Part XXII of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 is to establish rules for enforcement. Part XXII sets out the rules regarding the filing of complaints, enforcement by employment standards officers through orders for wages and compensation, as well as the new orders for compliance and notices of contravention introduced in the ESA 2000 and enforcement by arbitrators where there is a collective agreement.

Part XXII also establishes restrictions on the recovery of wages under the Act, settlement procedures and limitation periods on issuing, rescinding and amending orders and notices of contravention.

ESA Part XXII Section 96 - Complaints

Complaints - s. 96(1)

96(1) A person alleging that this Act has been or is being contravened may file a complaint with the Ministry in a written or electronic form approved by the Director.

This provision means that a person filing a complaint with the Ministry of Labour, alleging a violation of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, must file the complaint in a written or electronic form approved by the Director of Employment Standards.

"Person" means not only an individual but also includes a trade union as per ESA Part I, s. 1. It also includes a corporation, by virtue of the definition of person in the Legislation Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 21, Sch F. As a result, a corporation (e.g., a company seeking information under ESA Part XIX, s. 77(1) as a possible, new building services provider) could file a complaint if the owner/manager of the building failed to provide the prescribed information.

The mandatory use of either of the approved forms is reinforced by s. 96(2), which states that complaints that are not in the approved form are deemed not to have been filed. One purpose behind requiring a complaint to be filed on an approved form is to avoid employees filing a complaint in letter form, and thereby unintentionally giving up their rights to sue the employer civilly, pursuant to the election under s. 97 - see ESA Part XXII, s. 97 for a further discussion. Requiring the complaint to be filed on the approved form assists in alerting the employee to the consequences of their election, and eliminates the unintentional loss of civil rights that could arise if the complaint was filed in letter form.

Another purpose of requiring a complaint to be filed on an approved form is to ensure that the limitation period in ss. 114 and 139 will not begin running where the employee visits or writes to the Ministry to inquire about their rights in a particular situation.

Effect of Failure to Use Form - s. 96(2)

96(2) A complaint that is not filed in a form approved by the Director shall be deemed not to have been filed.

Section 96(2) states that if the complaint is not filed in the approved form, then the complaint shall be deemed not to have been filed. There are two main reasons for this:

1. So that the election in s. 97 will not be triggered; and
2. The complaint will not be considered to have been filed and thereby start the two-year limitation period in ss. 114 and 139 running, except when the employee has filed a complaint on the approved form and has had an opportunity to be made aware of the consequences of filing a complaint with the Ministry.

Limitation - s. 96(3)

96(3) A complaint regarding a contravention that occurred more than two years before the day on which the complaint was filed shall be deemed not to have been filed.

Section 96(3) imposes a two-year limitation period on filing a complaint under the ESA 2000 by stating that a complaint filed more than two years after a contravention has occurred is deemed not to have been filed.

It should be noted that the Program's position is that the two-year limitation on recovery of monies in ESA Part XXII, s. 111 does not apply to an order for compensation or reinstatement. Program policy continues to be that as the monies owing under a compensation order come due on the date the officer issues the order, they were due after the complaint was filed and the s. 111 limitation would therefore never serve to restrict recovery. In addition, the limitation on recovery set out in s. 111 could have no application to an order for reinstatement because the subject of the order was not monies that came due under the Act. Note that despite the two-year limitation period set out in s. 96(3), it may be possible for the two-year time limit to be extended in exceptional cases. The Court of Appeal decision in Halloran v Sargeant, 2002 CanLII 45029 (ON CA) held that in the appropriate circumstances, the equitable doctrine of fraudulent concealment applies to relieve against statutory time limits on recovery. See ESA Part XXII, s. 111(8) for a discussion of the Halloran v Sargeant decision.

The question has arisen as to whether the Limitations Act, 2002, SO 2002, c 24 applies to the ESA 2000. The Limitations Act, 2002 limits the period of time during which a person may initiate court proceedings in Ontario in respect of a claim. In Rand v Kashruth Council of Canada/Le Conseil Cacherout du Canada, 2016 CanLII 17259 (ON LRB), the claimant sought to bring a claim for reprisal two and half years after the alleged reprisal took place. The claimant argued that ss. 5(1), 5(2) and 16(1) of the Limitations Act, 2002 effectively bi-passes s. 96(3) of the ESA 2000, therefore he was not bound by the two-year limitation period. Section 5(2) of the Limitations Act, 2002 establishes the principle that an individual is presumed to have known of the act(s) or omission(s), that caused damage, on the day they actually occurred, unless the contrary is proved. Section 5(1) sets up the rules applicable to the issue of discoverability. Section 16(1)(a) provides that there is no limitation period if the proceeding is for a declaration if no consequential relief is sought. Here, the claimant argued that the two-year time limit should commence on the date he learned about the alleged reprisal, which was 18 months after the reprisal incident occurred. Furthermore, the claimant argued that no limitation period applied to his claim because he wanted only a declaration that the employer breached the ESA by reprising against him and not any financial remedy (i.e., no consequential relief).

The Board disagreed with the claimant's arguments and held that the Limitations Act, 2002 is not applicable to the ESA 2000. The Board considered s. 2(1) of the Limitations Act, 2002, which states that the Act applies to claims pursued in court proceedings, and held that proceedings before the Board and an ESO cannot be characterized as a court proceeding. The Board also noted that it does not possess statutory authority to alleviate against the two-year time limit in s. 96(3) by reading in the principles the claimant extracted from the Limitations Act, 2002.

ESA Part XXII Section 96.1 - Steps Required Before Complaint Assigned – REPEALED

ESA Part XXII Section 97 - When Civil Proceeding Not Permitted

When Civil Proceeding Not Permitted - s. 97(1)

97(1) An employee who files a complaint under this Act with respect to an alleged failure to pay wages or comply with Part XIII (Benefit Plans) may not commence a civil proceeding with respect to the same matter.

Section 97(1) provides that an employee who files a complaint for unpaid wages or a failure to comply with Part XIII (Benefit Plans) may not launch a civil action in respect of the same matter. This is intended to prevent duplicative proceedings.

Note that it is s. 98 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 that addresses the situation where an employee who has commenced a civil proceeding subsequently files a complaint. Section 97 addresses the converse situation, i.e., where an employee who has filed a complaint subsequently commences a civil proceeding.

Accordingly, while s. 98(1) provides that an employee who commences a civil proceeding and then files a complaint "may not. . . have such a complaint investigated", s. 98 only applies where the civil proceeding is started before the complaint is filed. Where the complaint is filed first, it is s. 97 that applies, and there is nothing in s. 97 that says that the employee cannot have that complaint investigated. (It may be that in light of s. 97 a court would not allow the civil proceeding to continue, but that is a matter for the court, not the Program.)

1. Wages

Section 97(1) refers to complaints about unpaid "wages". Note that "wages" does not include "compensation" for losses stemming from a contravention of Parts XIV (Leaves of Absence), XVI (Lie Detectors), XVII (Retail Business Establishments) or XVIII (Reprisal) of the Act. (That "wages" and "compensation" are two different things is clear from ss. 103 and 104; an order for the payment of wages is made under s. 103, while an order for the payment of "compensation" is made under s. 104.) Consequently, an employee who files a complaint alleging a violation of Part XIV, XVI, XVII or XVIII is not precluded from pursuing a civil action with respect to the violation.

2. Same Matter

Subsection 97(1) precludes an employee who has filed an unpaid wages or Part XIII complaint from commencing a civil action for the "same matter". As a result, if an employee was owed both overtime and vacation pay, he or she could not file a complaint with the Ministry for overtime pay and also commence a civil action for vacation pay, as the civil proceedings would be for the "same matter", i.e., unpaid wages.

However, an employee may file a complaint about unpaid wages, e.g., overtime pay, and then commence a civil action for wrongful dismissal, since these proceedings do not involve "the same matter".

3. Cooling Off Period

Note that the prohibition in s. 97(1) is subject to s. 97(4), which provides for a two-week "cooling off" period in which the employee may withdraw the employment standards complaint and thus avoid losing the right to commence a civil action. See the discussion of s. 97(4) below.

Same, Wrongful Dismissal - s. 97(2)

97(2) An employee who files a complaint under this Act alleging an entitlement to termination pay or severance pay may not commence a civil proceeding for wrongful dismissal if the complaint and the proceeding would relate to the same termination or severance of employment.

Subsection 97(2) provides that an employee who files a complaint for termination pay or severance pay is not entitled to commence a civil action for wrongful dismissal relating to the same termination or severance of employment as that on which the claim for termination or severance pay was based.

As noted in the discussion of s. 97(1), if the complaint is filed before a civil proceeding is commenced, s. 98 has no application and so there will be no bar to the complaint being investigated by the Ministry.

Note that employees who have filed a claim alleging a violation of Part XIV (Leaves of Absence), XVI (Lie Detectors), XVII (Retail Business Establishments) or XVIII (Reprisal) for a termination or failure to reinstate are not precluded from commencing a civil action for wrongful dismissal, because a complaint respecting those Parts of the Act is not a complaint alleging an entitlement to termination or severance pay, but rather a complaint asking for reinstatement or compensation or both.

1. Wrongful Dismissal

In an action for wrongful dismissal, an employee is seeking damages for the employer's failure to give notice of termination in accordance with the employment contract. The contractual notice may be based on an express term in the employment contract that spells out how much notice the employee is to receive; however, in the absence of such an express term, the courts imply a term for "reasonable notice" into the contract. What is considered "reasonable notice" is generally much longer than the notice periods under the Act, and awards of damages for wrongful dismissal can be correspondingly greater, in some cases exceeding two years' salary. Note, however, that under the common law employees are said to have a "duty to mitigate", meaning that generally they must attempt to reduce their losses, say by finding or trying to find new employment or other sources of income during the period in which notice, had it been given, would have been running. This duty to mitigate does not apply to notice of termination, termination pay or severance pay under the Act (although in some cases a refusal of alternative employment with the employer will disentitle an employee to notice, termination pay or severance pay). Note also that employees covered by a collective agreement may not sue for wrongful dismissal, since they are generally limited to whatever remedies may be available under the collective agreement.

2. Termination Pay

The purpose of s. 97(2) is the same as the purpose of s. 97(1), that is, to avoid duplicative proceedings. Although termination pay under the Act and damages for wrongful dismissal are based on different wrongs (failure to give notice as required by the Act versus failure to give notice as required by the employment contract), they are overlapping in that they both stem from the employer's termination of the employment relationship and are based on the employer's failure to give notice of termination, they often involve similar issues and statutory notice or termination pay that was provided by the employer will reduce the damages that would otherwise be awarded for wrongful dismissal.

3. Severance Pay

Insofar as severance pay is concerned, the purpose of this provision is again the same as the purpose of s. 97(1), that is, to avoid duplicative proceedings. While severance pay under the Act and damages for wrongful dismissal are based on different wrongs (failure to pay severance pay as required by the Act versus failure to give notice as required by the employment contract), they are overlapping to some extent in that they both stem from the employer's ending of the employment relationship, they often involve similar issues and in at least some circumstances the courts will reduce the damages that would otherwise be awarded for wrongful dismissal by the amount of the employee's severance pay entitlement - see Stevens v The Globe and Mail, 1996 CanLII 10215 (ON CA).

4. The Same Termination or Severance of Employment

An example of a situation in which a civil action for wrongful dismissal may not be considered to relate to the same termination of employment as a termination pay complaint under the Act would be where the employee was dismissed after a year of employment, rehired one month after the dismissal and then laid off two weeks later for more than 13 weeks in circumstances where neither clause 56(2)(b) or (c) were applicable. In that situation, the employee should be able to claim termination pay under the Act in regards to the deemed termination due to a lay-off lasting longer than a temporary lay-off, and also sue the employer civilly for wrongful dismissal based on the earlier dismissal. The two terminations are clearly not the same termination. Note, however, that because the employee's last period of employment is separated by not more than 13 weeks from the preceding period, the employee's entitlement to termination pay would be calculated by adding together both the period of employment that ended in the dismissal and the period that ended as a result of the lay-off.

Amount in Excess of Order - s. 97(3) - Repealed

Withdrawal of Complaint - s. 97(4)

97(4) Despite subsections (1) and (2), an employee who has filed a complaint may commence a civil proceeding with respect to a matter described in those subsections if he or she withdraws the complaint within two weeks after it is filed.

This provision provides a two-week "cooling off" period in which the employee can withdraw a complaint and thereby restore the ability to commence a civil action. This two-week period could be used by a complainant employee to consult a lawyer for advice on whether a civil action might be his or her better option in the circumstances. Note that s. 97(4) does not require that the withdrawal be in writing; however, putting it in writing it may lessen the likelihood of dispute.

Although there is nothing in the ESA 2000 that provides for an extension of the two-week time limit, courts have inherent jurisdiction to extend limitation periods. For an example of a case where the two-week period in s. 97(4) was extended, see Scarlett v Wolfe Transmission Ltd., 2002 CanLII 53229 (ON SC).

ESA Part XXII Section 98 - When Complaint Not Permitted

When Complaint Not Permitted - s. 98(1)

98(1) An employee who commences a civil proceeding with respect to an alleged failure to pay wages or to comply with Part XIII (Benefit Plans) may not file a complaint with respect to the same matter or have such a complaint investigated.

This provision prohibits an employee from filing a complaint about unpaid wages or a failure to comply with Part XIII where the employee has commenced a civil proceeding seeking a remedy for the same matter. This section mirrors the wording of s. 97(1), which deals with the converse prohibition, i.e., the barring of an employee from commencing a civil action where the employee has filed a complaint with the Ministry under the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

At the Small Claims Court level, a proceeding is commenced by filing a claim (with two copies for each defendant) with the clerk of the Small Claims Court. After obtaining payment of the court fees, the clerk dates, signs and seals the claim and assigns it a court file number. It is only once this has happened that the action is considered to have been commenced.

At the Superior Court of Justice (formerly General Division) level, a proceeding is commenced by the court Registrar's act of dating, signing, sealing and assigning a court file number to an "originating process" prepared by the plaintiff. Examples of an originating process include a Statement of Claim and a Notice of Action.

At the Superior Court of Justice in Toronto, lawyers can also commence proceedings electronically where necessary arrangements have been made with court officials.

Under the Rules of Civil Procedure, RRO 1990, Reg 194, civil proceedings may also be commenced by a counterclaim, cross claim, third-party claim or judicial review application.

Note that s. 97 of the Act addresses the situation where an employee who has filed a complaint subsequently commences a civil proceeding, whereas s. 98 addresses the converse situation, i.e., where an employee who has commenced a civil proceeding subsequently files a complaint.

Accordingly, while s. 98(1) provides that an employee who commences a civil proceeding "may not. . .have such a complaint investigated", this does not prevent or terminate an investigation of a complaint where the employee commences a civil proceeding after filing a complaint; s. 98 applies only to prohibit a complaint from being filed or investigated if a civil proceeding was commenced before the complaint was filed.

Same, Wrongful Dismissal - s. 98(2)

98(2) An employee who commences a civil proceeding for wrongful dismissal may not file a complaint alleging an entitlement to termination pay or severance pay or have such a complaint investigated if the proceeding and the complaint relate to the same termination or severance of employment.

This provision prohibits an employee from filing a complaint for termination or severance pay where the employee has commenced a civil proceeding for wrongful dismissal relating to the same termination or severance of employment. This section mirrors the wording of s. 97(2), which deals with the converse proposition, i.e., the barring of an employee from commencing a civil proceeding for wrongful dismissal where the employee has filed a complaint under the Act with the Ministry.

Note that s. 97 of the Act addresses the situation where an employee who has filed a complaint subsequently commences a civil proceeding, whereas s. 98 addresses the converse situation, i.e., where an employee who has commenced a civil proceeding subsequently files a complaint. Thus it is s. 97, not s. 98, that applies where the complaint is filed first.

Accordingly, while s. 98(2) provides that an employee who commences a civil proceeding "may not. . .have such a complaint investigated", this does not prevent or terminate an investigation of a complaint where the employee commences a civil proceeding after filing a complaint.

Issue Estoppel

The election of remedies provisions in ss. 97 and 98 eliminate the possibility of issue estoppel arising as in Rasanen v Rosemount Instruments Ltd., 1994 CanLII 608 (ON CA), where the employee lost on an issue before a referee under the Act and was later estopped from relitigating that issue in court in a wrongful dismissal action involving much more money than the employment standards matter.

ESA Part XXII Section 99 - When Collective Agreement Applies

When Collective Agreement Applies - s. 99(1)

99(1) If an employer is or has been bound by a collective agreement, this Act is enforceable against the employer as if it were part of the collective agreement with respect to an alleged contravention of this Act that occurs,

(a) when the collective agreement is or was in force;

(b) when its operation is or was continued under subsection 58(2) of the Labour Relations Act, 1995; or

(c) during the period that the parties to the collective agreement are or were prohibited by subsection 86(1) of the Labour Relations Act, 1995 from unilaterally changing the terms and conditions of employment.

This provision effectively deems the Employment Standards Act, 2000 to be part of the collective agreement, and makes it enforceable against the employer, as if it were part of the collective agreement, if the contravention of or failure to comply with the Act occurs:

1. When the collective agreement is or was in force;
2. When its operation is or was continued as described under s. 58(2) of the Labour Relations Act, 1995, SO 1995, c 1, Sch A ("LRA 1995"), sometimes referred to as the "bridging period" between collective agreements; or
3. During the period that the parties to the collective agreement are or were prohibited by s. 86(1) of the LRA 1995 from unilaterally changing the terms and conditions of employment.

- This is the period after the collective agreement and any bridging periods have expired and before the employer and the union are in a legal strike/lock-out position, in which period the parties are prohibited from changing terms and conditions of employment without each other's consent, sometimes referred to as the "statutory freeze".

It is obligatory for the arbitrator or board of arbitration to apply the ESA 2000 as if it were actually part of the collective agreement, if the alleged contravention of the Act occurs during one of the following three periods:

When Collective Agreement Is or Was In Force

A collective agreement is normally in force during its term, which may be as long as several years, but which may not be shorter than one year in length. If the alleged contravention of or failure to comply with the Act occurs while the collective agreement was or is in force, the ESA 2000 is deemed to be part of the agreement and is enforceable against the employer as if it were part of the agreement, i.e., through the grievance procedure. Ultimately, if the grievance is not resolved, it would be heard by an arbitrator or a board of arbitration, which would then release a decision which is enforceable in the same manner as an order or judgment of the court.

The collective agreement may cease to be in force prior to the end of its term under some circumstances, such as where the employer and the union jointly agree to terminate it and the Ontario Labour Relations Board consents, or if the union is decertified (i.e., if the Board declares that the union no longer represents the employees in the bargaining unit). In that event, the employee may file an employment standards complaint with the Ministry for investigation and enforcement.

During the Bridging Period

Section 58(2) of the LRA 1995 provides that the collective agreement may be extended by the parties for a period of up to one year while the parties are bargaining. Section 58(2) of the LRA 1995 states:

58(2) Despite subsection (1), the parties may, in a collective agreement or otherwise and before or after the collective agreement has ceased to operate, agree to continue the operation of the collective agreement or any of its provisions for a period of less than one year while they are bargaining for its renewal with or without modifications or for a new agreement, but such continued operation does not bar an application for certification or for a declaration that the trade union no longer represents the employees in the bargaining unit and the continuation of the collective agreement may be terminated by either party upon 30 days' notice to the other party.

If the alleged contravention of the ESA 2000 occurs or occurred during this bridging period in which the operation of the collective agreement is extended for up to one year, the Act would effectively be deemed to form part of the collective agreement and would be enforceable against the employer as if it were actually part of the collective agreement, i.e., through the grievance procedure and subsequently through arbitration, if that becomes necessary.

During the Statutory Freeze

Section 86(1) of the LRA 1995 provides that where the employer or the union has given notice to the other party of its desire to bargain for a collective agreement, and no collective agreement is in operation, the employer and the union are prohibited from changing the terms and conditions of employment, except with the consent of both parties. The period of this prohibition, sometimes referred to as the statutory freeze, continues until the earlier of two dates:

- Seven days after the Minister releases to the parties the report of the conciliation board or mediator or 14 days after the Minister releases to the parties a notice that they do not consider it advisable to appoint a conciliation board, as the case may be; and
- When the right of the trade union to represent the employees is terminated.

If an employer is or has been bound by a collective agreement, the Act is enforceable against the employer as if it were part of the collective agreement in respect of an alleged contravention of the ESA 2000 that occurs or occurred during the statutory freeze period, using the grievance procedure. Note, however, that where the union representing an employee has not yet made a first collective agreement with the employer, the matter would not fall within s. 99(1), which only applies where "an employer is or has been bound by a collective agreement". Thus, even though the statutory freeze provided for in s. 86(1) of the LRA 1995 may be in effect, if there has never been a collective agreement between the union and the employer, an employee represented by the union could file a complaint with the Ministry as of right, i.e., the employee does not need to obtain the permission of the Director under s. 99(6).

Complaint Not Permitted - s. 99(2)

99(2) An employee who is represented by a trade union that is or was a party to a collective agreement may not file a complaint alleging a contravention of this Act that is enforceable under subsection (1) or have such a complaint investigated.

Section 99(2) means that an employee who is covered by a collective agreement will not be able to file a complaint with the Ministry under the Act. In this regard, see the Board's decision in Johnston v Brian Cullen Motors, 2004 CanLII 25855 (ON LRB) where the Board confirmed that it had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal of the claimant on the basis that he was prohibited by s. 99(2) from filing a complaint alleging a contravention of the Act because he was represented by a union, which was party to a collective agreement. See also Tender Choice Foods Inc. v Bolivong, 2004 CanLII 22611 (ON LRB) in which the Board held that the claimant was precluded from filing a complaint under the Act despite her understanding when she filed her claim that she was not in a bargaining unit position or represented by the union. The employer's evidence, which was not contradicted, was that the claimant had in fact been represented by a trade union bound to a collective agreement at the time of the alleged contravention. The Board noted that the employment standards officer was therefore also precluded from issuing a Notice of Contravention in connection with the complaint.

Section 99(2) should be read together with s. 99(4), which states that s. 99(2) applies even if the employee is not a member of the trade union. It will also apply to probationary employees as they are covered by collective agreements although admittedly they may have fewer protections under the agreement than permanent employees. Section 99(2) is also subject to s. 99(6), which says that the Director may, if they consider it appropriate in the circumstances, allow an employee to file a complaint with the Ministry even though the employee is represented by a trade union that was a party to a collective agreement.

A question that arises is whether the employee is permitted to file a claim for a violation that occurs in two situations: after the statutory freeze period in s. 86(1) of the LRA 1995 has expired but no legal strike or lock-out has begun; or during a legal strike or lock-out.

After the statutory freeze period has expired but the parties have not engaged in either a legal strike or lock-out, the collective agreement is not in force and its operation has not been continued under s. 58(2) of the LRA 1995.

During a legal strike or lock-out, the collective agreement is not in force, its operation has not been continued under s. 58(2) of the LRA 1995 and the statutory freeze period in s. 86(1) of the LRA 1995 has expired.

Consequently, in both situations the provisions of s. 99(1), which make the Act enforceable against the employer as if it were part of the collective agreement in certain situations, do not apply, i.e., employees who are on lawful strike or are being lawfully locked-out cannot have their ESA 2000 rights enforced through the grievance and arbitration procedure.

Therefore, it is Program policy that in these circumstances bargaining unit employees are entitled to file a claim under the ESA 2000 for contraventions or failures to comply with the ESA 2000 that occurred during the lawful strike or lock-out. This is also the case if a legal strike or lock-out ends and the workplace is shut down without the parties entering into a new collective agreement. Note, however, that employees' eligibility to termination and severance pay may be affected if the termination occurs during or as a result of a strike or lock-out. See O Reg 288/01 for further discussion of the impact of a strike or lock-out on rights to termination and severance pay.

A further issue involves the building services sector and situations where the employees of the previous employer were unionized and there was a collective agreement in place. If the successor does not employ the employees of the previous employer and is not exempted from its Part XIX (Building Services Providers) obligations by O Reg 287/01, the employees are entitled to file a complaint against the successor. This is because the collective agreement does not follow through to bind the successor employer under the LRA 1995 and so cannot be used by employees to enforce their ESA 2000 rights against the successor. Note, however, that the claim against the successor must be for something that the successor - not the previous employer - is liable for, for example, termination and severance pay. If the complaint relates to something owed by the previous employer, the claim can be enforced against the previous employer through the grievance procedure even though the employees are now employed by the successor.

Another question that has arisen is whether bargaining unit employees are entitled to file a complaint with the Ministry where the expiry date of the collective agreement has not passed, but the workplace has shut down and the union and company agreed prior to the closing to terminate the collective agreement upon the closing.

It is Program policy that the bargaining unit employees in this situation are prohibited under s. 99(2) from filing a complaint or having such a complaint investigated by the Ministry. This is because unions and employers cannot simply agree between themselves to terminate a collective agreement upon a plant closing. Section 58(3) of the LRA 1995 requires the union and employer to jointly apply for and receive the consent of the Ontario Labour Relations Board before a collective agreement can be terminated early. If an application for an early termination of the agreement has not been made and granted by the Board, the collective agreement remains in existence, and the union continues to have a duty to represent employees despite the plant closure. See s. 99(6) below for more on this issue.

Have Such a Complaint Investigated

Another point to note is that s. 99(2) indicates that the employee is prohibited from filing or having such a complaint investigated by the Ministry under the ESA 2000. It is clear what the prohibition against filing a claim under the Act involves. The reference to such a complaint is a reference to a complaint enforceable against the employer as if the Act were part of the collective agreement under s. 99(1). In order for a complaint to be enforceable under s. 99(1), the employer must be bound by the agreement and the alleged contravention must occur when the collective agreement was or is in force; when its operation is continued under s. 58(2) of the LRA 1995; or during a statutory freeze period under s. 86(1) of the LRA 1995. As a result, an employee who filed a complaint prior to a collective agreement coming into force would be able to have such a complaint investigated by an employment standards officer.

If an employee alleged that a contravention of the Act occurred prior to when the agreement came into effect, they would be allowed to file a complaint under the Act. However, if it subsequently came to light that the contravention occurred after the agreement came into effect, the Ministry would not investigate or would cease investigating the complaint.

Another example could occur where an employee's position was not subject to a collective agreement because their position was not considered to be in the bargaining unit at the time they filed the complaint. If the Ontario Labour Relations Board subsequently ruled that the employee's position actually was in the bargaining unit, the Ministry would not investigate or would cease investigating the complaint.

Employee Bound - s. 99(3)

99(3) An employee who is represented by a trade union that is or was a party to a collective agreement is bound by any decision of the trade union with respect to the enforcement of this Act under the collective agreement, including a decision not to seek that enforcement.

Section 99(3) provides that an employee to whom a collective agreement applies is bound by the decision of the union on the issue of whether or not to proceed with the employee's grievance, or any other decision of the union with regards to the issue of the enforcement of the Act under the collective agreement, such as what remedies to seek in the grievance, or what arguments to make or evidence to adduce during an arbitration if the grievance reaches that stage. It should be read together with s. 99(4), which states that s. 99(2) applies even if the employee is not a member of the trade union.

This section should also be read together with s. 99(5), which indicates that an employee retains the right to make an unfair representation complaint against the union under s. 74 of the LRA 1995.

Membership Status Irrelevant - s. 99(4)

99(4) Subsections (2) and (3) apply even if the employee is not a member of the trade union.

Section 99(4) provides that an employee cannot file a complaint with the Ministry or have such a complaint investigated as per s. 99(2) and is bound by the decision of the trade union as per s. 99(3) even if the employee is not a member of the trade union.

For example, employees in workplaces that have an agency shop arrangement between the union and employer do not have to be union members in order to work there (although they do pay union dues), but they will be represented by the union. Consequently they cannot file a complaint with the Ministry nor can they have the complaint investigated, and are bound by the union's decision with respect to the enforcement of the ESA 2000 under the collective agreement. Other examples of employees who are not members of the trade union may include a probationary employee who is not required to pay union dues and an employee who has exercised their right under the LRA 1995 to make a charitable donation instead of paying union dues or decline to be a member of the union for religious reasons. Although such employees are not paying dues to the union and may not be a member of the union, they are covered under the collective agreement and would be represented by the trade union with regard to a violation of the collective agreement, and likewise the ESA 2000.

Unfair Representation - s. 99(5)

99(5) Nothing in subsection (3) or (4) prevents an employee from filing a complaint with the Board alleging that a decision of the trade union with respect to the enforcement of this Act contravenes section 74 of the Labour Relations Act, 1995.

Section 99(5) means that, although an employee is bound under s. 99(3) by the decision of the union with regards to the employee's grievance (whether they are a member of the trade union as per s. 99(4)), including the decision not to proceed with it, the employee still has the right to file a complaint against the union for unfair representation under s. 74 of the LRA 1995. That section states:

74 A trade union or council of trade unions, so long as it continues to be entitled to represent employees in a bargaining unit, shall not act in a manner that is arbitrary, discriminatory or in bad faith in the representation of any of the employees in the unit, whether or not members of the trade union or of any constituent union of the council of trade unions, as the case may be.

Exception - s. 99(6)

99(6) Despite subsection (2), the Director may permit an employee to file a complaint and may direct an employment standards officer to investigate it if the Director considers it appropriate in the circumstances.

Section 99(6) provides the Director of Employment Standards with the discretion to allow an employee who is otherwise caught by the prohibition under s. 99(2) to file a complaint or have such a complaint investigated under the Act. Please see Delegation of Powers for information regarding the persons to whom this power has been delegated.

Although the discretion of the Director and delegates is absolute in this area, the following are some examples of situations in which it might be appropriate to exercise the discretion in s. 99(6) to allow an employee to file or have such a complaint investigated by the Ministry under the Act:

An employee's union refuses to proceed with the employee's grievance.

The employee makes an unfair representation complaint against the union under s. 74 of the LRA 1995. The employee wins the unfair representation case against the union, but in the meantime, the union has become defunct and is unable to proceed with the grievance.

There is a dispute between the employer and the union as to whether a certain employee is in the bargaining unit or not.

The union believes that the employee is in the bargaining unit, but the employer does not. The matter is referred to the Labour Relations Board, but it will not be able to render a decision before the two-year recovery period for wages owing under the ESA 2000 expires. In such a case, even if the Employment Standards Program is of the preliminary view (pending the Board's decision) that the employee is a member of the bargaining unit, it may be appropriate to exercise the discretion in s. 99(6) to allow the employee to file a claim under the Act. Otherwise, if it is later determined by the Board that the employee is not in the bargaining unit, the employee would be left without any remedy under either the Act or the collective agreement.

ESA Part XXII Section 100 - If Arbitrator Finds Contravention

If Arbitrator Finds Contravention - s. 100(1); Same, Part XIII - s. 100(2)

100(1) If an arbitrator finds that an employer has contravened this Act, the arbitrator may make any order against the employer that an employment standards officer could have made with respect to that contravention but the arbitrator may not issue a notice of contravention.

(2) If an arbitrator finds that an employer has contravened Part XIII (Benefit Plans), the arbitrator may make any order that the Board could make under section 121.

Section 100(1) indicates that if the employee's grievance reaches the arbitration stage, the arbitrator can make the same orders that an employment standards officer could make under the Employment Standards Act, 2000 with the exception of a notice of contravention. “Arbitrator” is defined in ESA Part I, s. 1 to include a board of arbitration, or the Ontario Labour Relations Board acting as an arbitrator of a construction industry grievance under s. 133 of the Labour Relations Act, 1995, SO 1995, c 1, Sch A.

Under s. 100(1) the orders an arbitrator can make are:

1. An order for wages under s. 103;
2. An order for compensation or reinstatement under s. 104;
3. An order against a director under ss. 106 and 107;
4. A compliance order under s. 108.

Subsection 100(2) states that where the arbitrator finds that the employer has contravened Part XIII Benefit Plans, the arbitrator may make an order that the Board can make under ESA Part XXIII, s. 121. In other words, where the arbitrator determines that the employer, organization or person acting directly on behalf of an employer or organization has contravened Part XIII (i.e., differentiated on the basis of age, sex, marital status or same-sex partnership status in an employee benefit plan) the arbitrator may:

- Order the employer, organization or person to cease contravening Part XIII; or
- Compensate any person(s) who may have suffered a loss or been disadvantaged as result of the contravention.

Please see ESA Part XXII, s. 113(3) for a discussion of the Board's order making powers where it finds a contravention of ESA Part XIII Benefit Plans.

Directors and Collective Agreement - s. 100(3)

100(3) An arbitrator shall not require a director to pay an amount, take an action or refrain from taking an action under a collective agreement that the director could not be ordered to pay, take or refrain from taking in the absence of the collective agreement.

Subsection 100(3) states that an order made by an arbitrator against a corporate director shall not require the director to pay any amount or to take or refrain from taking any action that the director could not be ordered to pay or to take or refrain from taking under the ESA 2000 without reference to the collective agreement.

The ability of an arbitrator to impose liability on a director was intended to enable the director's liability provisions of the ESA 2000 to be used to assist in the enforcement of rights under the Act, not rights under the collective agreement.

Conditions Respecting Orders under this Section - s. 100(4)

100(4) The following conditions apply with respect to an arbitrator's order under this section:

1. In an order requiring the payment of wages or compensation, the arbitrator may require that the amount of the wages or compensation be paid,

- i. to the trade union that represents the employee or employees concerned, or
- ii. directly to the employee or employees.

2. [REPEALED]

3. The order is not subject to review under section 116.

Paragraph 1 of s. 100(4) explicitly provides that the arbitrator's order for wages or compensation may require payment to be made directly to the trade union representing the employees or directly to the employees. Because the payment is not made to the Director, the arbitrator's order will not incorporate the 10% administrative costs surcharge, because the surcharge on orders to pay attaches only to payments made to the Director of Employment Standards in trust.

Paragraph 3 indicates that the arbitrator's decision under s. 100 is not subject to review by the Ontario Labour Relations Board under ESA Part XXIII, s. 116. The remedy of a party dissatisfied with the decision of the arbitrator would be to seek judicial review. Normally, a decision of an arbitrator that interprets the Act would be subject to the strict correctness test on judicial review, on the basis that the arbitrator was construing a statute outside of their area of special expertise; see McLeod v Egan, [1975] 1 SCR 517, 1974 CanLII 12 (SCC). However, because ESA Part XXII, s. 99(1) deems the ESA 2000 to form part of the collective agreement, it is at least arguable that the decision of an arbitrator interpreting the ESA 2000 is thus now in effect merely a construction of the collective agreement itself, rather than an interpretation of a statute outside the collective agreement, and therefore the more deferential reasonableness test should apply on judicial review. It remains, though, to be seen how the courts will rule on this issue.

Copy of Decision to Director - s. 100(5)

100(5) When an arbitrator makes a decision with respect to an alleged contravention of this Act, the arbitrator shall provide a copy of it to the Director.

Section 100(5) requires the arbitrator to give a copy of the arbitration decision to the Director of Employment Standards. One reason for this is so that the Employment Practices Branch can monitor the decisions for purposes of determining what impact, if any, they might have on Program policy.

ESA Part XXII Section 101 - Arbitration and s. 4

Arbitration and s. 4 – s. 101(1)

101(1) This section applies if, during a proceeding before an arbitrator, other than the Board, concerning an alleged contravention of this Act, an issue is raised concerning whether the employer to whom the collective agreement applies or applied and another person are to be treated as one employer under section 4.

Section 101(1) states that s. 101 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies if, during an arbitration concerning enforcement of the ESA 2000 under ESA Part XXII, s. 100 (other than an arbitration that is conducted by the Ontario Labour Relations Board), an issue arises as to whether the employer that is the subject of the grievance and another entity are one employer under ESA Part III, s. 4. Section 101 will apply if the related employer issue under s. 4 arises during the arbitration, regardless of whether it was raised in the initial grievance that led to the arbitration.

ESA Part III, s. 4 states:

4(1) Subsection (2) applies if associated or related activities or businesses are or were carried on by or through an employer and one or more other persons.

(2) The employer and the other person or persons described in subsection (1) shall all be treated as one employer for the purposes of this Act.

(3) Subsection (2) applies even if the activities or businesses are not carried on at the same time.

(4) Subsection (2) does not apply with respect to a corporation and an individual who is a shareholder of the corporation unless the individual is a member of a partnership and the shares are held for the purposes of the partnership.

(4.1) Subsection (2) does not apply to the Crown, a Crown agency or an authority, board, commission or corporation all of whose members are appointed by the Crown.

(5) Persons who are treated as one employer under this section are jointly and severally liable for any contravention of this Act and the regulations under it and for any wages owing to an employee of any of them.

Section 4 means that two entities shall be treated as one employer for purposes of the ESA Part III, s. 4 if they meet the requirements set out in that section.

Restriction - s. 101(2)

101(2) The arbitrator shall not decide the question of whether the employer and the other person are to be treated as one employer under section 4.

Section 101(2) states that the arbitrator shall not make any decision regarding the issue of whether the employer against whom the grievance was filed and the other entity are one employer under ESA Part III, s. 4. Instead, that decision is to be made by the Ontario Labour Relations Board.

Reference to Board - s. 101(3)

101(3) If the arbitrator finds it necessary to make a finding concerning the application of section 4, the arbitrator shall refer that question to the Board by giving written notice to the Board.

Section 101(3) requires the arbitrator to notify the Ontario Labour Relations Board that an issue under ESA Part III, s. 4 has arisen during the arbitration, unless the arbitrator determines that there was no violation of the ESA 20000 in any event. In other words, if, for example, the arbitrator determines that there is no money owing to the employees under the ESA 2000, the arbitrator would not notify the Board of the related employer issue under s. 4, since that issue would be an academic point.

One question that arises is whether this provision means that the arbitrator should first make a determination as to what amount, if any, is owing to the employees under the ESA 2000, before notifying the Board of the related employer issue. Since s. 101(3) does not specify that the arbitrator must notify the Board immediately, it would, if no determination as to amount had been made before the related employer issue under s. 4 first arose, seem to be within the discretion of the arbitrator either to notify the Board immediately of the related employer issue under s. 4, or to wait until it is clear that some monies are owing to the employees under the Act. In some instances it may be impossible to determine whether any monies are owing to the employee under the Act until the related employer issue under s. 4 has first been decided. For example, because ESA Part XV, s. 64(1)(b) states that severance pay is only payable in individual terminations where the employer has an annual payroll of $2.5 million or more, the issue of whether two employers, A and B, each with a payroll of $2 million, are one employer under s. 4 must be determined before a finding that severance pay is owing can be made. In this type of situation, one route the arbitrator could take would be to make a conditional finding of the amounts owing to the employees (i.e., conditional on s. 4 being applicable) and to notify the Board of the related employer issue under s. 4 either before or after such a conditional finding is made.

Content of Notice - s. 101(4)

101(4) The notice to the Board shall,

(a) state that an issue has arisen in an arbitration proceeding with respect to whether the employer and another person are to be treated as one employer under section 4; and

(b) set out the decisions made by the arbitrator on the other matters in dispute.

Section 101(4) states that the arbitrator's notice to the Board shall state that a related employer issue under ESA Part III, s. 4 has arisen and shall advise the Board of any decisions concerning the other matters in dispute, e.g., whether the employees are owed money under the ESA 2000. However, as stated in the discussion of s. 101(3), the arbitrator has the discretion to notify the Board of the s. 4 issue before it reaches a decision on the non-s. 4 issues.

Decision by Board - s. 101(5)

101(5) The Board shall decide whether the employer and the other person are one employer under section 4, but shall not vary any decision of the arbitrator concerning the other matters in dispute.

Section 101(5) states that the Board shall make a determination with respect to whether the employer and the other person are related under ESA Part III, s. 4, but may not vary any decision of the arbitrator concerning the other matters in dispute. This section must be read together with ss. 101(6), (7) and (8), which set out the rules regarding the Board's ability to issue an order against both the employer and any other person it has determined to be related to the employer.

Order - s. 101(6)

101(6) Subject to subsection (7), the Board may make an order against the employer and, if it finds that the employer and the other person are one employer under section 4, it may make an order against the other person.

Section 101(6) provides that the where there has been a ESA Part III, s. 4 reference to the Board, the Board can make an order against the employer as well as any person that is found to be a related employer under s. 4. This section should be read in conjunction with ss. 101(7) and (8), which qualify the Board's power to make the order.

Exception - s. 101(7)

101(7) The Board shall not require the other person to pay an amount or take or refrain from taking an action under a collective agreement that the other person could not be ordered to pay, take or refrain from taking in the absence of the collective agreement.

Section 101(7) means that where an arbitrator has referred a related employer issue under ESA Part III, s. 4 to the Board, the Board's order against any person found to be related pursuant to s. 4 to the unionized employer is limited to amounts or actions (including refraining from such actions) that could be ordered under the ESA 2000 in the absence of the collective agreement. The ability of an arbitrator to rely on the Act's related employer provision via a reference to the Board was intended to enable that provision to be used to assist in the enforcement of rights under the ESA 2000, not rights under the collective agreement.

Application - s. 101(8)

101(8) Section 100 applies, with necessary modifications, with respect to an order under this section.

Section 101(8) provides that ESA Part XXII, s. 100 applies with necessary modifications to an order made by the Board when an ESA Part III, s. 4 issue has been referred to the Board by an arbitrator under s. 101(3). Section 100 deals with the order making powers of arbitrators who are determining a grievance alleging a contravention of the ESA 2000.

ESA Part XXII Section 101.1 - Settlement by Employment Standards Officer

Settlement by Employment Standards Officer - s. 101.1(1)

101.1(1) An employment standards officer assigned to investigate a complaint may attempt to effect a settlement.

Subsection 101.1(1) allows an employment standards officer who has been assigned to investigate an employment standards complaint to attempt to effect a settlement between an employer and an employee as the parties to the complaint. While the officer may attempt to effect a settlement, this provision does not require the employee and employer to enter into settlement discussions; the settlement process is voluntary.

Note that s. 101.1 as well as s. 112 (and unlike ss. 120 and 129) apply only to settlements between an employer and an employee and so cannot be used to settle a complaint that relates to the liability of a corporate director or a director's order issued under s. 106 or s. 107.

However, it should be noted that for the purposes of both s. 101.1 and s. 112 settlements in respect of Part XVIII.1, that a reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and a reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee. (See s. 112(9) and s. 101.1(3) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 and of this Manual.)

Note as well that a settlement agreement may be made by an agent acting on behalf of the employer (e.g., a director of a corporate employer) or the employee. As a result, a director of the employer could, if acting as agent for the employer, enter into a settlement under s. 101.1 of a complaint against, or corporate order issued to, an employer. In that case, any proceedings against both the employer and the corporate director (other than a prosecution) would be terminated under s. 101.1(2)(d). (And see section 7.6.1 of this Manual for a discussion of the binding effect of an agreement or authorization made by an agent of the employee.)

The other provisions of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 that allow for settlement agreements between the parties to an employment standards complaint are as follows:

- Section 112 provides the authority for an employee and an employer to enter into a settlement respecting a contravention or alleged contravention of the Act.
- Section 120 provides that the Ontario Labour Relations Board may authorize a labour relations officer to attempt to effect a settlement of matters raised in an application for review under s. 116 of the Act.
- Section 129 provides that a collector appointed by the Director of Employment Standards may effect a settlement of the amount owing under the Act if the creditor (generally the employee) agrees in writing to the settlement.

However, s. 101.1 is distinguished from the above provisions in that it provides the employment standards officer who has been assigned to investigate a complaint with the authority to attempt to effect a settlement of that complaint.

Effect of Settlement - s. 101.1(2)

101.1(2) If the employer and employee agree to a settlement under this section and do what they agreed to do under it,

(a) the settlement is binding on them;

(b) the complaint is deemed to have been withdrawn;

(c) the investigation is terminated; and

(d) any proceeding respecting the contravention alleged in the complaint, other than a prosecution, is terminated.

If the employer and employee agree to enter into a settlement under s. 101.1, the agreement becomes binding on the parties, any complaint filed with the ministry is deemed to have been withdrawn, any investigation into the complaint that may have been underway is terminated, and any proceeding other than a prosecution is terminated. (Note that such an agreement must be in writing pursuant to s. 1(3) of the Act.)

Section 101.1(2) must be read subject to subsection (4), which provides that where an employee or employer enters into a settlement as a result of fraud or coercion, the settlement is void.

It should also be noted that the binding effect of the settlement and its impact on a complaint, an order, or a proceeding is dependent on the parties to the settlement doing what they have agreed to do under it. For example, if the employer and employee have settled the matter with the agreement that a specific sum of money will be paid to the employee and such monies are not paid, this section will not apply and the matter will proceed as if there had been no settlement.

While s. 101.1 does not impose any specific restrictions with respect to when an employment standards officer may facilitate an agreement, the fact that this section provides for termination of the officer's investigation, rather than the voiding of an officer's orders as in s. 112, implies that any settlement by an officer under s. 101.1 must occur before the officer makes a determination. A "post-order" settlement could be made without the officer's involvement under s. 112, and such a settlement would, in accordance with s. 112(c), void the officer's order.

Application of s. 112 (4), (5), (7) and (9), s. 101.1(3)

101.1(3) Subsections 112 (4), (5), (7) and (9) apply, with necessary modifications, in respect of a settlement under this section.

This provision provides that subsections (4), (5), (7), and (9) of section 112 apply, with necessary modifications, in respect of settlements effected by employment standards officers under s. 101.1.

In this context, the application of s. 112(4) means that monies received by an employment standards officer pursuant to a settlement under s. 101.1 must be paid either directly to the employee or to the Director of Employment Standards in trust for the employee.

The application of s. 112(5) means that where monies received by an employment standards officer pursuant to a s. 101.1 settlement are paid to the Director in trust for an employee, the Director is required in turn to pay the monies to the employee.

The application of s. 112(7) means that the parties are prohibited from entering into a settlement that would allow future contraventions of the Act. For example, although an employee could agree to accept a payment equivalent to straight pay for overtime hours worked in the past, the employee would be prohibited from agreeing to work overtime in the future at straight time.

The application of s. 112(9) means that for the purposes of applying s. 101.1 with respect to Part XVIII.1 of the Act (Temporary Help Agencies), any reference to an "employer" includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an "employee" includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Application to Void Settlement - s. 101.1(4)

101.1(4) If, upon application to the Board, the employee or employer demonstrates that he, she or it entered into a settlement under this section as a result of fraud or coercion,

(a) the settlement is void;

(b) the complaint is deemed never to have been withdrawn;

(c) the investigation of the complaint is resumed; and

(d) any proceeding respecting the contravention alleged in the complaint that was terminated is resumed.

Subsection 101.1(4) provides that a settlement may be set aside where the employee or employer can demonstrate to the Ontario Labour Relations Board that he or she or it entered into the settlement as a result of fraud or coercion. If the Board makes such a finding, the settlement is void, the employee's complaint is deemed never to have been withdrawn, the investigation of the complaint is resumed, and any proceeding relating to the alleged contravention that was terminated is resumed.

ESA Part XXII Section 102 - Meeting May Be Required

Meeting May Be Required - s. 102(1)

102(1) An employment standards officer may, after giving at least 15 days written notice, require any of the persons referred to in subsection (2) to attend a meeting with the officer in the following circumstances:

1. The officer is investigating a complaint against an employer.

2. The officer, while inspecting a place under section 91 or 92, comes to have reasonable grounds to believe that an employer has contravened this Act or the regulations with respect to an employee.

3. The officer acquires information that suggests to him or her the possibility that an employer may have contravened this Act or the regulations with respect to an employee.

4. The officer wishes to determine whether the employer of an employee who resides in the employer's residence is complying with this Act.

This provision gives an employment standards officer the authority to require listed persons to attend a meeting where the officer is investigating a complaint against an employer or where the officer, while conducting an inspection under s. 91 or 92, comes to have reasonable grounds to believe that an employer contravened the legislation with respect to an employee.

Section 102 was amended by the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act (Live-in Caregivers and Others), 2009, SO 2009, c 32 (amended and renamed the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 effective November 20, 2015) with the addition of paragraphs 3 and 4. Pursuant to paragraph 3, an employment standards officer may compel parties to attend a meeting in the event information is acquired that suggests the possibility of a violation of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. In other words, it is no longer necessary for the officer to be investigating a complaint or to have reasonable grounds to believe an employer has contravened the Act or regulations in order to schedule a meeting under s. 102; information acquired by the officer that merely suggests the possibility of a contravention will be sufficient.

Pursuant to paragraph 4, an employment standards officer may also compel parties to attend a meeting where the officer wishes to determine whether an employer of a live-in employee is complying with the ESA 2000. In effect, this enables an officer to do a "pro-active" inspection in the case of live-in employees by requiring the parties to attend a meeting so that the officer may determine whether the employer of a "live-in" employee is complying with the Act. The officer may schedule such a meeting even if no complaint is being investigated and even if there is no information to suggest or reasonable grounds to believe that the employer (of a live-in employee) is contravening the Act or regulations.

This subsection provides that the officer must give at least 15 days written notice of the meeting.

Please note that s. 74.13 of the Act modifies s. 102 when it is applied with respect to Part XVIII.1 (Temporary Help Agencies) of the Act. That section expands the circumstances under which attendance at a meeting may be required, to include: an officer is investigating a complaint against a client of a temporary help agency or, is conducting an inspection and has reasonable grounds to believe that a client has contravened the Act or regulations with respect to an assignment employee. See section ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.13 for more information.

The language of s. 102 is permissive as far as the employment standards officer is concerned. The officer may require that the following persons attend the meeting:

- The employer;
- A director or employee of a corporate employer;
- The employee;
- A client of a temporary help agency (where s. 74.13 applies);
- A director or employee of a client that is a corporation (where s. 74.13 applies); and/or
- An assignment employee or prospective assignment employee of a temporary help agency (where s. 74.13 applies).

This puts s. 102 on the same footing as the other powers of the officer to investigate under s. 91 and to issue orders and notices of contravention under ss. 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104, 106, 107, 108 and 113. The officer is not required by the legislation to hold s. 102 meetings in preference to other methods of resolving claims or conducting an inspection.

The Statutory Powers Procedure Act, RSO 1990, c S.22 does not apply to meetings convened under s. 102, although the rules of natural justice do apply (as they do to any other aspect of the investigation process).

Attendees - s. 102(2)

102(2) Any of the following persons may be required to attend the meeting:

1. The employee

2. The employer

3. If the employer is a corporation, a director or employee of the corporation.

This section describes those persons that may be required to attend a meeting held under s. 102. The attendees listed in s. 102(2) are the same as those described in s. 64.2(1) of the former Employment

Standards Act. Note that an officer of the corporation is no longer itemized, as the definition of employee in the ESA 2000 includes officers (who perform work for an employer for wages).

Please note that where s. 102 is applied in respect of Part XVIII.1 (Temporary Help Agencies), s. 71.13 expands the list of persons that may be required to attend a meeting. Please see ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.13 for more information.

Notice - s. 102(3)

102(3) The notice referred to in subsection (1) shall specify the time and place at which the person is to attend and shall be served on the person in accordance with section 95.

This provision was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 32, which came into force on November 6, 2009 and is similar to the previous s. 102(4) of the Act.

Section 102(3) establishes that the written notice provided by an employment standards officer requiring attendance at a decision-making meeting must set out the time and place of the meeting and must be served in accordance with s. 95 of the Act. Please see ESA Part XXI, s. 95 for a discussion of the service provisions under s. 95.

Documents - s. 102(4)

102(4) The employment standards officer may require the person to bring to the meeting or make available for the meeting any records or other documents specified in the notice.

This provision was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 which came into force on November 6, 2009 and is similar to the previous s. 102(3) of the Act.

Section 102(4) allows an employment standards officer to require that a meeting attendee bring to the meeting, or make available for the meeting, any records or other documents specified in the notice of the meeting. This provision must be read in conjunction with s. 102(5) that indicates an officer may give directions on how the documents are to be made available for the meeting.

Same - s. 102(5)

102(5) The employment standards officer may give directions on how to make records or other documents available for the meeting.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009. It indicates that an employment standards officer may give direction to meeting attendees on specific ways in which documents or records are to be made available for the meeting. The officer may require that documents be sent by fax, email, courier, etc. to all parties and to the officer in advance of the meeting.

For example, if an employment standards officer directs that a decision-making meeting is to take place via teleconference, he or she could require that relevant documents be sent via email to the parties in advance of the meeting for their reference during the meeting.

Compliance - s. 102(6)

102(6) A person who receives a notice under this section shall comply with it.

This provision is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 64.2(5)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 102(6) requires a person who receives a notice of meeting to comply with the notice. This includes attending the meeting at the specified time and place and bringing or making available for the meeting any records or other documents specified in the notice, in accordance with any direction from the officer with respect to how the records or documents are to be made available.

Use of Technology - s. 102(7)

102(7) The employment standards officer may direct that a meeting under this section be held using technology, including but not limited to teleconference and videoconference technology, that allows the persons participating in the meeting to participate concurrently.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 which came into force on November 6, 2009. It allows for the use of technology to facilitate s. 102 meetings. An employment standards officer may direct a meeting to be held using technology that allows attendees to participate in the meeting concurrently. This may include, but is not limited to, holding the meeting via teleconference or videoconference.

Same - s. 102(8)

102(8) Where an employment standards officer gives directions under subsection (7) respecting a meeting, he or she shall include in the notice referred to in subsection (1) such information additional to that required by subsection (3) as the officer considers appropriate.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, which came into force on November 6, 2009. When an employment standards officer directs that a meeting be held using a technology (such as a teleconference or videoconference), he or she must include in the written notice of the meeting any information, in addition to the time and place at which the person is to attend, that he or she considers appropriate.

For example, if a decision-making meeting is to be held via videoconference, the employment standards officer may consider it appropriate to provide information about the type of technology that will be used, how the person will be set-up with the technology, any call-in numbers or codes that may be necessary, etc.

Same - s. 102(9)

102(9) Participation in a meeting by means described in subsection (7) is attendance at the meeting for the purposes of this section.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 which came into force on November 6, 2009. Where an employment standards officer directs that a meeting be held using technology, such as teleconferencing or videoconferencing, and the person participates in the meeting using that technology, the person will have attended the meeting for the purposes of s. 102.

Determination if Person Fails to Attend, etc. - s. 102(10)

102(10) If a person served with a notice under this section fails to attend the meeting or fails to bring or make available any records or other documents as required by the notice, the officer may determine whether an employer has contravened or is contravening this Act on the basis of the following factors:

1. If the employer failed to comply with the notice,

- i. any evidence or submissions provided by or on behalf of the employer before the meeting, and
- ii. any evidence or submissions provided by or on behalf of the employee before or during the meeting.

2. If the employee failed to comply with the notice,

- i. any evidence or submissions provided by or on behalf of the employee before the meeting, and
- ii. any evidence or submissions provided by or on behalf of the employer before or during the meeting.

3. Any other factors that the officer considers relevant.

Subsection 102(10) was added by the Open for Business Act, 2010, SO 2010, c 16, effective November 29, 2010. It provides that where a person who has been served with a notice under s. 102 requiring him or her to attend a meeting or to attend a meeting and bring or make available certain documents does not attend the meeting or does not bring or make available the documents, the employment standards officer can make a determination about the employer's compliance with the ESA without entertaining any further evidence or submissions from that person.

If it is the employer who failed to comply with the notice, the officer may make a determination based on any evidence or submissions provided by or on behalf of the employer before the meeting, any evidence or submissions provided by or on behalf of the employee before or during the meeting, and any other factors the officer considers relevant.

If it is the employee who failed to comply with the notice, the officer may make a determination based on any evidence or submissions provided by or on behalf of the employee before the meeting, any evidence or submissions provided by or on behalf of the employer before or during the meeting, and any other factors the officer considers relevant.

Note that section 74.13 of the Act modifies the application of s. 102 when it is applied in respect to Part XVIII.1 of the Act (Temporary Help Agencies). See ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.13 for more information.

Employer Includes Representative - s. 102(11)

102(11) For the purposes of subsection (10), if the employer is a corporation, a reference to an employer includes a director or employee who was served with a notice requiring him or her to attend the meeting or to bring or make available any records or other documents.

Subsection 102(11) was added by the Open for Business Act, 2010, effective November 29, 2010. This provision provides that where the employer is a corporation, the reference to an employer in s. 102(10) includes an employee or a director of the corporation who was served with a notice under s. 102 requiring him or her to attend a meeting or to bring or make certain documents available to the employment standards officer.

In other words, a director or an employee of a corporation who is served with a notice under s. 102 requiring attendance at a meeting or requiring the provision of certain documents must abide by the notice. If he or she fails to comply with the notice, an employment standards officer may make a determination as to whether the employer corporation has contravened or is contravening the Act in accordance with s. 102(10).

ESA Part XXII Section 102.1 - Time for Response

Time for Response - s. 102.1(1)

102.1(1) An employment standards officer may, in any of the following circumstances and after giving notice, require an employee or an employer to provide evidence or submissions to the officer within the time that he or she specifies in the notice:

1. The officer is investigating a complaint against an employer.

2. The officer, while inspecting a place under section 91 or 92, comes to have reasonable grounds to believe that an employer has contravened this Act or the regulations with respect to an employee.

3. The officer acquires information that suggests to him or her the possibility that an employer may have contravened this Act or the regulations with respect to an employee.

4. The officer wishes to determine whether the employer of an employee who resides in the employer's residence is complying with this Act.

Section 102.1 is a new section added by the Open for Business Act, 2010, SO 2010, c 16, effective November 29, 2010. This provision gives an employment standards officer authority to issue a notice requiring an employee or employer to provide evidence or submissions within a time period specified in the notice.

The circumstances, in which such a notice can be issued are:

- Where an officer is investigating a complaint against an employer;
- Where an officer conducting an inspection comes to have reasonable grounds to believe that an employer contravened the legislation with respect to an employee;
- Where an officer receives information suggesting that a contravention may have occurred; or
- Where, in the case of an employee who resides in his or her employer's residence, an officer wishes to determine whether the employer is in compliance.

Note that s. 102.1 applies with certain modifications in the context of temporary help agencies and their assignment employees. See ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.13 for more information.

Service of Notice - s. 102.1(2)

102.1(2) The notice shall be served on the employer or employee in accordance with section 95.

This provision requires that the notice to provide evidence or submissions be served on the employer or employee, as the case may be, in accordance with s. 95 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. Please see ESA Part XXI, s. 95 for a discussion of the service provisions under s. 95.

Determination if Person Fails to Respond - s. 102.1(3)

102.1(3) If a person served with a notice under this section fails to provide evidence or submissions as required by the notice, the officer may determine whether the employer has contravened or is contravening this Act on the basis of the following factors:

1. Any evidence or submissions provided by or on behalf of the employer or the employee before the notice was served.

2. Any evidence or submissions provided by or on behalf of the employer or the employee in response to and within the time specified in the notice.

3. Any other factors that the officer considers relevant.

Section 102.1(3) provides that where an employment standards officer gives notice to provide evidence or submissions within a specified time period and a party fails to comply with the notice, the officer may make a decision on the basis of:

- Any evidence or submissions provided by that party before the notice was served;
- Any evidence or submissions provided by the other party before or in response to and within the time specified in the notice; and
- Any other factors the officers considers relevant.

In other words, if one of the parties fails to comply with the notice, the officer may make his or her determination without entertaining any further evidence or submissions from that party.

ESA Part XXII Section 103 - Order to Pay Wages

Order to Pay Wages - s. 103(1)

103(1) If an employment standards officer finds that an employer owes wages to an employee, the officer may,

(a) arrange with the employer that the employer pay the wages directly to the employee;

(a.1) order the employer to pay wages to the employee; or

(b) order the employer to pay the amount of wages to the Director in trust.

Sections 103(1) to (10) deal exclusively with orders for wages under the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Section 103(1)(a) states that where the officer finds wages are owing, they may arrange for the employer to pay the employee(s) directly, without an order being issued.

Section 103(1)(a.1) states that where the officer finds wages owing, the officer may issue an order requiring the employer to pay wages to the employee directly. Note that an order to pay wages issued under clause (a.1) does not include administrative costs.

Section 103(1)(b) states that where the officer finds wages are owing, the officer may issue an order to the employer to pay the wages owing to the employee to the Director of Employment Standards in trust. Note that an order to pay wages issued under clause (b) will include administrative costs. See s.103(2) below.

Administrative Costs - s. 103(2)

103(2) An order issued under clause 1(b) shall also require the employer to pay to the Director in trust an amount for administrative costs equal to the greater of $100 and 10 per cent of the wages owing.

Section 103(2) provides that the order issued under s. 103(1)(b) shall, in addition, contain an amount for administrative costs equal to 10 per cent of the amount of the wages, or $100, whichever is greater. Thus, for example, if the gross amount of the wages owing (before deductions for income tax, Employment Insurance and Canada Pension Plan) is $600, the administrative costs fee added to the order would be $100.

Note that there are similar provisions regarding administrative costs associated with orders issued under ss. 74.14, 74.16, 74.17 and 104.

The administrative costs are not intended to be a penalty and the Program does not use them as such.

If More than One Employee - s. 103(3)

103(3) A single order may be issued with respect to wages owing to more than one employee.

This provision empowers an officer to order wages on behalf of other employees who are entitled under the Act besides the claimant. See Clevelands House Limited v Hay et al (April 30, 1981), ESC 985 (Howe), Unique Media Incorporate v Castello (September 8, 1988), ESC 2372 (Haefling), and Marcello Tranatino Manufacturing Inc. v Scarlett (October 21, 1988), ESC 2404 (Haefling).

Transitional Provisions

Subsection 103(4) was amended by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014 effective February 20, 2015. This section imposed a cap of $10,000 on the amount of wages an employment standards officer could order for a single employee with respect to wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015. Subsection 103(4.1), which was also added to s.103 by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014 effective February 20, 2015, eliminated the $10,000 cap with respect to orders for unpaid wages that come due on or after that date. Subsections 103(4) and 103(4.1) were transitional provisions and both were repealed on February 20, 2017.

Although these subsections are now repealed, it is Program policy that the $10,000 cap on orders to pay wages continues to apply to wages that became due before February 20, 2015, even if any associated orders are issued after February 20, 2017. This is to preserve the vested legal rights of the parties at the time the contravention occurred. This is relevant in situations where a period of time lapses between the time a claim is filed and the time a claim is investigated.

Maximum Amount - s. 103(4) (REPEALED)

103(4) An employment standards officer shall not issue an order under this section for more than $10,000 in wages with respect to any one employee for wages that become due to the employee before the date subsection 7(1) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014 comes into force.

Note that s. 103(4) was a transitional provision that was repealed on February 20, 2017 in accordance with ss. 7(2) and 10(5) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014.

Prior to its repeal, this section put a cap of $10,000 on the amount of wages an employment standards officer could order for a single employee with respect to wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015. However, it is Program policy that the $10,000 cap imposed by s. 103(4) continues to apply to wages that became due before February 20, 2015, even if any associated orders are issued after February 20, 2017.

Note that there is no cap on orders for compensation issued under ss. 74.16, 74.17 or 104, on orders for the recovery of fees under s. 74.14 or on orders against directors under s. 106 and s. 107.

Note that the cap in s. 103(4) applied to the amount of wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015 and not to the amount of the order to pay wages itself. Thus, an order to pay wages for a single employee could be for an amount greater than $10,000. That is, the order could be made out up to a maximum of $10,000 for the gross amount of the assessment, but would also include $1,000 for the 10% administrative fee, for a total of $11,000. In addition, an order could include any amount of wages that come due on or after February 20, 2015. For example, if an employee was owed $12,000 in respect of wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015 but is also owed wages (e.g., $5000) that came due on or after February 20, 2015, the order could be issued in the amount of $15,000 plus $1,500 for the 10% administrative fee as the $10,000 cap does not apply in respect of any wages that came due on or after February 20, 2015.

Questions may arise as to whether an employee who is owed more than $10,000 in wages (e.g., $15,000) that came due prior to February 20, 2015 could have filed a claim with the Ministry for $10,000, have an order issued for that amount and then filed another claim for the excess amount and had a second order issued for $5,000. The answer is no. Such a procedure would have been contrary to the intent of s. 103(4). However, if the employee was owed $10,000 in wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015, filed a claim for that amount, an order was issued, and subsequently a new and separate amount of $5,000 in wages became owing to the employee (again pre-February 20, 2015), it would not be contrary to the intent of s. 103(4) for a second order to be issued under s. 103(1) for the new amount owing.

With respect to wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015, the question may arise as to whether the $10,000 cap applied to limit recovery under the Act even where there was no order issued by an employment standards officer. This issue was considered by the Divisional Court in Ontario (Director of Employment Standards) v Brown, [2004] OLRB Rep 467 in an appeal from a decision of the Ontario Labour Relations Board in Brown v North York Chevrolet Oldsmobile Ltd., 2003 CanLII 19379 (ON LRB). In that case, the employee was terminated without notice by the employer and sought termination pay in lieu of notice, severance pay and vacation pay totalling $37,277.02. The officer advised the employer that an order under the Act would be limited to $10,000 and the employer agreed to pay that amount directly to the employee under s. 103(1)(a).

The employee then filed an appeal to the Board seeking the balance of the monies that had been assessed as owing. The Board found that the arrangement to pay the $10,000 directly to the employee was not a true agreement pursuant to s. 103(1)(a) because the employer had not paid the full amount assessed as owing by the employment standards officer. The Board also found that as no order had been issued under s. 103(1)(b) that the employee was entitled to view the circumstances as a refusal to issue an order. He could therefore appeal the refusal and ask the Board to issue an order with respect to his unpaid entitlements. As the Board also concluded that there was no s. 112 settlement in this case, it concluded that it was empowered to issue an Order to Pay in the amount of $10,000, the maximum amount allowed under the Act at the time.

The employer judicially reviewed the decision at Divisional Court, which overturned the Board's decision. The Divisional Court held that arrangements made under s. 103(1)(a) for direct payment as well as orders issued under s. 103(1)(b) were subject to a limit of $10,000 by virtue of s. 103(4). The Court concluded that if the employee wished to recover more than $10,000 he was obliged to bring a civil action in the courts.

Same - s. 103(4.1) (REPEALED)

103(4.1) There is no limit on the amount of an order issued under this section for wages that become due to an employee on or after the day subsection 7(1) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014 comes into force.

Note that s. 103(4.1) was a transitional provision that was repealed on February 20, 2017 in accordance with ss. 7(2) and 10(5) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014.

This provision was added to the Act by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014, effective February 20, 2015. It eliminated the $10,000 cap with respect to orders for unpaid wages that come due on or after this provision came into force.

Contents of Order - s. 103(5)

103(5) The order shall contain information setting out the nature of the amount found to be owing to the employee or be accompanied by that information.

Section 103(5) is the source of the requirement for the various inclusions to an order to pay wages, such as the covering letter, Officer's Narrative and Worksheet, which must set out enough information that the employer will know the amount to be paid and the nature of the violation of the Act that gives rise to the entitlement ordered to be paid. The language of the section is specific: the order to pay must contain or have attached to it the information required. The fact that the employer had knowledge previously of the nature of the violation and the amount owing does not relieve the officer of the onus of setting out this information as part of the order to pay wages.

Service of Order - s. 103(6)

103(6) The order shall be served on the employer in accordance with section 95.

The provision requires that an order to pay wages be served on the employer in accordance with ESA Part XXI, s. 95.

Notice to Employee - s. 103(7)

103(7) An employment standards officer who issues an order with respect to an employee under this section shall advise the employee of its issuance by serving a letter, in accordance with section 95, on the employee.

Section 103(7) provides that an employee who is the subject of an order to pay (whether or not they were a complainant) is entitled to notice that the order was issued. Such notice is to be served in accordance with ESA Part XXI, s. 95.

This provision should be read together with s. 116(2), which establishes a right of review for such employees, and s. 116(4), which states that the time period for applying for such a review is 30 days after the date on which the letter advising of the order is served. See ESA Part XXIII, s. 116 for a further discussion.

Compliance - s. 103(8)

103(8) Every employer against whom an order is issued under this section shall comply with it according to its terms.

This provision states that an employer against whom an order to pay is issued must comply with the terms of the order. If the employer wishes to have the order reviewed, the procedure for filing for a review of the order is set out in ESA Part XXIII, s. 116. Section 116 is incorporated by reference into the terms of an order to pay wages; therefore filing for a review of the order is considered compliance with the terms of the order. Paying the full amount of the order or filing for review are the employer's only options with respect to complying with the terms of the order.

Effect of Order - s. 103(9); Same - s. 103(10)

103(9) If an employer fails to apply under section 116 for a review of an order issued under this section within the time allowed for applying for that review, the order becomes final and binding against the employer.

103(10) Subsection 9 applies even if a review hearing is held under this Act to determine another person's liability for the wages that are the subject of the order.

Section 103(9) states that if an employer has not applied for a review of an order issued under s. 103 within the time period set out in s. 116, the order becomes final and binding on the employer. Section 103(10) clarifies that if an employer failed to apply for a review of an order for wages, the order becomes final and binding against that employer, even if, for example, a director of that employer obtained a review of an order issued against the director with respect to the same unpaid wages. See ESA Part XXIII, s. 116 for a discussion of the time periods for applying for review.

Likewise, even though a director of the employer reviewed a director's order issued under ss. 106 or 107 and it was held that the employee was not owed monies under the Act, the employer could not rely on that decision in resisting collection efforts with respect to the order issued against it under s. 103, because the employer neither paid nor appealed the s. 103 order.

Similarly, if, for example, employer A fails to pay or apply to review the order issued against it, the order becomes final and binding against it even though company B, allegedly related to A under s. 4 of the Act, applies for a review of a separate order against B. If the result of the hearing concerning B is that B is not liable because A did not owe the employee any wages, A could not rely on that decision in resisting collection efforts against it, since A did not apply to review the order against it.

ESA Part XXII Section 104 – Orders for Compensation or Reinstatement

Orders for Compensation or Reinstatement - s. 104(1); Order to Hire - s. 104(2)

104(1) If an employment standards officer finds a contravention of any of the following Parts with respect to an employee, the officer may order that the employee be compensated for any loss he or she incurred as a result of the contravention or that he or she be reinstated or that he or she be both compensated and reinstated:

1. Part XIV (Leaves of Absence)

2. Part XVI (Lie Detectors)

3. Part XVII (Retail Business Establishments)

4. Part XVIII (Reprisal)

(2) An employment standards officer who finds a contravention of Part XVI may order that an applicant for employment or an applicant to be a police officer be hired by an employer as defined in that Part or may order that he or she be compensated by an employer as defined in that Part or that he or she be both hired and compensated.

This provision creates a single order making power for most of the provisions in the Employment Standards Act, 2000 for which the remedy for a contravention is an order for compensation or reinstatement. These are Part XIV Leaves of Absence, Part XVI Lie Detector Tests, Part XVII Retail Business Establishments and Part XVIII Reprisals. Note that the Part XVIII.1 Temporary Help Agencies provisions also provide for compensation orders issued under s. 74.16 and s. 74.17 for certain contraventions under that part.

Most orders issued under s. 104 are issued for a contravention of ESA Part XVIII, s. 74(1) which states:

74(1) No employer or person acting on behalf of an employer shall intimidate, dismiss or otherwise penalize an employee or threaten to do so,

(a) because the employee,

i. asks the employer to comply with this Act and the regulations,

ii. makes inquiries about his or her rights under this Act,

iii. files a complaint with the Ministry under this Act,

iv. exercises or attempts to exercise a right under this Act,

v. gives information to an employment standards officer,

vi. testifies or is required to testify or otherwise participates or is going to participate in a proceeding under this Act,

vii. participates in proceedings respecting a by-law or proposed by-law under section 4 of the Retail Business Holidays Act,

viii. is or will become eligible to take a leave, intends to take a leave or takes a leave under Part XIV; or

(b) because the employer is or may be required, because of a court order or garnishment, to pay to a third party an amount owing by the employer to the employee.

Section 104(1) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009 to allow an order to be issued against any person (rather than just an employer) who contravenes a provision in one of the listed Parts of the ESA 2000 with respect to an employee. Where a contravention can be committed by a person other than an employer, such as under Part XVI Lie Detectors and Part XVIII Reprisal, an order issued under s. 104 can be issued against the person who violates the provision.

Employees seeking an order for compensation and/or reinstatement are subject to the two-year limitation period for filing a complaint established under ESA Part XXII, s. 96(3). That section provides that a complaint filed more than two years after the contravention has occurred will be deemed not to have been filed. Damages awards made under s. 104 are not subject to the two year limitation on recovery of wages imposed by ESA Part XXII, s. 111. Section 111 states that an employee cannot recover money that came due more than two years preceding the date the complaint was filed. Because the damages awarded in s. 104 orders do not come due until the officer issues the order, s. 111 does not restrict recovery of damages.

However, if some part of the s. 104 order includes an assessment for wages that had come due under the Act, e.g., earned wages, overtime pay, vacation pay, public holiday pay, termination pay or severance pay, that amount would be subject to the limitations on recovery set out in s. 111.

Lastly, s. 104(2) clarifies that an order for compensation and/or hiring (as opposed to reinstatement) may be issued against an employer, as defined in ESA Part XVI, s. 68, with respect to persons who are not hired because they have refused to take a lie detector test, including applicants for the position of a police officer. The section is unique in that it clearly establishes a remedy that includes an order to hire for persons who are not employees under the ESA 2000.

Terms of Orders - s. 104(3)

104(3) If an order made under this section requires a person to compensate an employee, it shall also require the person to,

(a) pay to the Director in trust,

(i) the amount of the compensation, and

(ii) an amount for administration costs equal to the greater of $100 and 10 per cent of the amount of compensation; or

(b) pay the amount of the compensation to the employee.

Where an order is issued for compensation under s. 104, s. 104(3) provides that the order must also require the person to pay the amount of the compensation to either the Director in trust pursuant to s.104(3)(a) or to the employee pursuant to s.104(3)(b). If the terms of the order require the person to pay the amount of the compensation to the Director in trust, the person will also be required to pay an amount for administration costs equal to the greater of 10 per cent of the compensation or $100 to the amount of a compensation order issued under this section to the Director in trust. Note that the required terms in s. 104(3)(b) do not include administrative costs.

How Orders Apply - s. 104(4)

104(4) Subsections 103(3) and (5) to (9) apply, with necessary modifications, with respect to orders issued under this section.

Subsection 104(4) provides that the following subsections of ESA Part XXII, s. 103 regarding orders to pay wages also apply, with necessary modifications, to orders for compensation:

- Section 103(3): a single order may be issued with respect to compensation owing to more than one employee.
- Section 103(5): the order shall contain or be accompanied by information setting out the nature of the amount ordered to be paid.
- Section 103(6): provides for service of the order on the employer.
- Section 103(7): provides for service of a letter on employees affected by the order.
- Section 103(8): requires the employer against whom an order is issued to comply with its terms.
- Section 103(9): provides that where the employer fails to apply for a review of the order within the time period for applying for such a review, the order becomes final and binding on the employer.

ESA Part XXII Section 105 - Employee Cannot be Found

Employee Cannot be Found - s. 105(1); Settlements - s. 105(2)

105(1) If an employment standards officer has arranged with an employer or ordered an employer to pay wages under clause 103 (1) (a) or (a.1) to the employee and the employer is unable to locate the employee despite having made reasonable efforts to do so, the employer shall pay the wages to the Director in trust.

105(2) If an employment standards officer has received money for an employee under a settlement but the employee cannot be located, the money shall be paid to the Director in trust.

Under s. 105(1), if the officer and employer have arranged for the employer to pay monies owing directly to the employee(s)or the officer has issued an order under ESA Part XXII, s. 103(1)(a.1), but the employer is unable to find the employee(s) after having made a reasonable effort to do so, the employer must pay the amount of the wages owing to the employee(s) to the Director of Employment Standards in trust.

Similarly, under s. 105(2), if an officer receives money on behalf of an employee in a settlement under ESA Part XXII, s. 112 and the employee cannot be located, the money shall be paid to the Director in trust. A trust is imposed upon the Director in the name of the Ministry of Labour to preserve the employee's right to the funds collected.

See Delegation of Powers for information regarding to whom the Director has delegated the non-discretionary power to receive monies into trust under ss. 105(1) and 105(2).

When Money Vests in Crown - s. 105(3)

105(3) Money paid to or held by the Director in trust under this section vests in the Crown but may, without interest, be paid out to the employee, the employee's estate or such other person as the Director considers is entitled to it.

Section 105(3) states that where there has been a payment into trust on behalf of an employee and the employee cannot be located, the funds vest in the crown. These funds effectively become part of the government's general revenues, and since there is no interest payable on such funds, the section specifically states that the funds referred to do not earn interest.

The language of this section is permissive; that is the Director is given the discretion to pay out the funds collected to another person in the stead of the employee or to the employee themselves if they are subsequently located. The Director may do this; there is no requirement in the section that the Director do so.

ESA Part XXII Section 106 - Order Against Director, Part XX

Order Against Director - Part XX, s. 106(1)

106(1) If an employment standards officer makes an order against an employer that wages be paid, he or she may make an order to pay wages for which directors are liable under Part XX against some or all of the directors of the employer and may serve a copy of the order in accordance with section 95 on them together with a copy of the order to pay against the employer.

Section 106(1) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, which came into force on November 6, 2009 to make reference to the service provisions in s. 95 as amended by that Act.

Section 106(1) indicates that if an employment standards officer issues an order to pay to an employer for wages under s. 103 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, the officer may also issue an order to pay wages against some or all of the directors of the employer, subject of course to the limits on directors' liability in s. 81(7). Note that directors are not liable for compensation ordered under s. 104. See ESA Part I, s. 1 for a discussion of the definition of wages and also see ESA Part XX (Liability of Directors) for further discussion of directors' liability.

Section 106(1) also indicates that if the officer decides to issue an order against some or all of the directors, the officer should attach to the director's order a copy of the order to pay that was issued against the employer; both the director's order and the attached employer order to pay are to be served together on the director in accordance with s. 95. See ESA Part XXI, s. 95 for a discussion of service under s. 95.

The question arises as to whether the order to pay against the director should be issued at the same time as the order against the company, or whether it should be issued some time later. See the Administration Manual for Employment Standards for guidelines with respect to orders against directors.

Effect of Order - s. 106(2)

106(2) If the directors do not comply with the order or do not apply to have it reviewed, the order becomes final and binding against those directors even though a review hearing is held to determine another person's liability under this Act.

Section 106(2) indicates that if a director does not comply with the order to pay against him or her, and does not apply to have it reviewed, then the order against that director becomes final and binding against him or her, even though a review hearing is held to determine the liability of that person's co-directors, or the liability of the employer.

For example, if director A does not apply to have the order to pay against him or her reviewed and does not comply with it, then the employment standards officer may attempt to collect the amount of the order from that director, (e.g., through third party demands under s. 125 or certificates under s. 126), even though that person's co-directors, B, and C, or the employer, have applied to have the order reviewed. This applies even in cases where B and C are disputing the order against them on the grounds that the employees are not owed wages or vacation pay by the employer. If the result of the hearing concerning the liability of B and C is that they are found not liable on the grounds that the employer did not owe the employees wages or vacation pay, then A may not raise this as a defence in connection with the order against A, since A did not apply to review the order or comply with it voluntarily. Furthermore, where amounts owing under the order against A have been paid through collection efforts under ss. 125 or 126, or otherwise, A could not demand repayment of those monies on the grounds that the Ontario Labour Relations Board had subsequently found, after the hearing concerning B and C, that the employer did not owe the employees wages or vacation pay.

Orders, Insolvent Employer - s. 106(3)

106(3) If an employer is insolvent and the employee has caused a claim for unpaid wages to be filed with the receiver appointed by a court with respect to the employer or with the employer's trustee in bankruptcy, and the claim has not been paid, the employment standards officer may issue an order to pay wages for which directors are liable under Part XX against some or all of the directors and shall serve it on them in accordance with section 95.

Section 106(3) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 effective November 6, 2009 to make reference to the service provisions in s. 95 as amended by that Act.

If there is a trustee in bankruptcy or a court-appointed receiver, the employment standards officer, because of contempt of court principles, is precluded from issuing an order to pay to the employer, but would instead file a proof of claim on behalf of the employees with the receiver or the trustee, as the case may be. If this is done, and the claim is not paid and the 30-day period to apply for a review has expired, the officer may at that point issue an order to pay against some or all of the directors for the wages and vacation pay that are owed to the employees by the employer. Therefore, even though s. 106(1) states that an order to pay against the employer is required before an order can be issued against the directors, an order against the directors is permitted in situations where a proof of claim is issued instead of an order against the employer, because there is a bankruptcy or court-appointed receivership.

An order to pay wages issued against a director under this section must be served in accordance with s. 95 of the Act. See ESA Part XXI, s. 95 for a discussion of the service provisions.

The Ontario Court of Appeal in Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), 1995 CanLII 1225 (ON CA) held that the Ministry of Labour does have the authority to file proofs of claim on behalf of the employees, without the express written authorization of each individual employee. This decision supports Program policy on that particular point.

Procedure - s. 106(4)

106(4) Subsection (2) applies with necessary modifications to an order made under subsection (3).

Section 106(4) indicates that just like an order against a director of a solvent employer, an order issued against a director of an insolvent employer will become final and binding on the director if it is not complied with or if no application for review is made, even though a review hearing is held to determine another person's liability, e.g., a review hearing of a co-director's liability, under the Act.

Maximum Liability - s. 106(5)

106(5) Nothing in this section increases the maximum liability of a director beyond the amounts set out in section 81.

Section 106(5) confirms that the maximum liability of a director with respect to an order issued under s. 106 is as set out in s. 81 of the Act. Under s. 81(7), the maximum liability for directors with respect to wages is a joint and several liability to the employees of the corporation for all debts not exceeding six month's wages (per employee) that became due while the person was a director and 12 months accrued vacation pay (per employee) that accrued while the person was a director. Note that there is no liability for compensation as ordered under s. 104 because such monies are not considered wages under the Act. See ESA Part I, s. 1 for a discussion of the definition of wages.

Under s. 81(8) directors are also liable for interest on the outstanding wages for which they are liable. For further discussion of directors' liability, see ESA Part XX, s. 81.

Interest is to be calculated in a manner to be determined by the Director under ESA Part XXI, s. 88(5).

Payment to Director - s. 106(6)

106(6) At the discretion of the Director, a director who is subject to an order under this section may be ordered to pay the wages in trust to the Director.

This section states that the Director of Employment Standards has the power to require a director who is served with an order under s. 106 to pay the wages and vacation pay covered by the order to the Director of Employment Standards in trust, instead of to the employees directly. For information regarding the persons to whom this power has been delegated, please see Delegation of Powers.

The main purpose of this discretion is to facilitate the refunding mechanism where, due to joint and several liability, more than the amount of the order is received from the directors. For example, if A, B and C are jointly and severally liable for $10,000 in wages and vacation pay, the officer can issue an order to each of A, B and C for $10,000. If A pays $10,000, B pays $5,000 and C pays $5,000, then $10,000 would have to be refunded to the directors. If the monies are paid to the Director of Employment Standards in trust, the refunding is easier than if the monies had been paid directly to the employees.

ESA Part XXII Section 107 - Further Order, Part XX

Further Order, Part XX - s. 107(1)

107(1) An employment standards officer may make an order to pay wages for which directors are liable under Part XX against some or all of the directors of an employer who were not the subject of an order under section 106, and may serve it on them in accordance with section 95,

(a) after an employment standards officer has made an order against the employer under section 103 that wages be paid and they have not been paid and the employer has not applied to have the order reviewed;

(b) after an employment standards officer has made an order against directors under subsection 106(1) or (3) and the amount has not been paid and the employer or the directors have not applied to have it reviewed;

(c) after the Board has issued, amended or affirmed an order under section 119 if the order, as issued, amended or affirmed, requires the employer or the directors to pay wages and the amount set out in the order has not been paid.

Section 107(1) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, which came into force on November 6, 2009 to make reference to the service provisions in s. 95 as amended by that Act.

Section 107(1) sets out three situations in which an employment standards officer may make an order against directors who did not receive orders pursuant to s. 106:

1. After an employment standards officer has issued an order to pay under s. 103 against the employer, but the order has not been paid and is not the subject of an application for review – s. 107(1)(a)

Whereas s. 106(1) provides that the employment standards officer who issued a s. 103 order may issue a director's order, s. 107(1)(a) enables an employment standards officer who did not issue the order under s. 103 to issue a director's order to pay. This is because it provides that an employment standards officer may issue if an employment standards officer has made a s. 103 order against the employer that is unpaid and has not been appealed.

2. After an employment standards officer has made an order against some or all of the directors under s. 106, and the order has not been paid and the directors or the employer have not applied for a review of the order – s. 107(1)(b)

If an employment standards officer has issued s. 106 orders against some of the directors of a corporate employer and the directors (or the employer acting on their behalf) have not paid or appealed such orders, an employment standards officer may issue an order against any other directors under s. 107. Again, because of the reference to an employment standards officer, s. 107(1)(b) enables an employment standards officer who did not issue the s. 106 order(s) to subsequently issue a director's order.

3. After the Ontario Labour Relations Board has issued, amended or affirmed an order under s. 119 (with respect to an application for review under s. 116) that requires the employer or directors to pay wages, and the money has not been paid – s. 107(1)(c)

If on appeal under s. 116, the Board issues, amends or affirms an order to pay against a corporate employer or director, an employment standards officer may make an order against the directors under s. 107. There is no requirement that the employment standards officer issuing a director's order to pay under this section be the same officer that made the determination that the corporate employer or director appealed to the Board.

Note that in a hearing involving an employer's application for review, the monies owing pursuant to the order to pay will have been paid by the employer to the Director of Employment Standards in trust. Consequently, an order to pay would not be issued against the directors under s. 107 unless there were insufficient funds in trust to satisfy the amount of the order because the Board raised the amount of the order, or because, when the application for review was filed, the Director accepted an irrevocable letter of credit for less than the amount ordered.

In a hearing involving a director's application for review of an order issued under s. 106, the officer could issue an order against additional directors under s. 107 if the Board affirmed or amended the order issued under s. 106.

Any orders issued under this section must be serviced in accordance with ESA Part XXI, s. 95.

Payment to Director - s. 107(2)

107(2) At the discretion of the Director, a director who is subject to an order under this section may be ordered to pay the wages in trust to the Director.

This provision is identical to s. 106(6).

This section states that the Director of Employment Standards has the power to require a director who is served with an order under s. 107, to pay the wages and vacation pay covered by the order, to the Director of Employment Standards in trust, instead of to the employees directly. For information regarding the persons to whom this power has been delegated, please see Delegation of Powers.

The main purpose of this power is to facilitate the refunding mechanism where, due to joint and several liability, more than the amount of the order is received from the directors. For example, if A, B and C are jointly and severally liable for $10,000 in wages and vacation pay, the officer can issue an order to each of A, B and C for $10,000. If A pays $10,000, B pays $5,000 and C pays $5,000, then $10,000 would have to be refunded to the directors. If the monies are paid to the Director of Employment Standards in trust, the refunding is easier than if the monies had been paid directly to the employees.

ESA Part XXII Section 108 - Compliance Order

Compliance Order - s. 108(1)

108(1) If an employment standards officer finds that a person has contravened a provision of this Act or the regulations, the officer may,

(a) order that the person cease contravening the provision;

(b) order what action the person shall take or refrain from taking in order to comply with the provision; and

(c) specify a date by which the person must do so.

Section 108, which was introduced by the Employment Standards Act, 2000, created a new enforcement tool for employment standards officers. Where the officer finds a contravention of the ESA 2000 or regulations, the officer may issue an order requiring the person who has contravened the ESA 2000 to, by a date specified in the order:

1. Cease contravening the provision; and
2. Take or refrain from taking action in order to comply with the provision.

Because s. 108 is applicable to any violation under the ESA 2000 it allows an officer to issue a compliance order for violations that could not be the subject of an order under ESA Part XVIII.1, ss. 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, or ESA Part XXII, ss. 103 or 104. Compliance orders can therefore be issued for non-monetary violations, although they are not limited to that purpose. For example, there would be a non-monetary violation if the employer contravened s. 20 by not providing employees with a 30-minute meal break or contravened s. 12 by not providing employees with a statement of wages.

Note that the officer may issue a compliance order to any person that has contravened the ESA 2000. The word "person" indicates that the order may be issued against persons other than an employer. For example, a compliance order could be issued against a person such as an owner or manager of a building who fails to provide information requested by a new provider of services as per ESA Part XIX, s. 77(2). See the definition of person in ESA Part I, s. 1.

Payment May Not Be Required - s. 108(2)

108(2) No order under this section shall require the payment of wages, fees or compensation.

This provision was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009 to include a reference to orders to recover fees under ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.14.

Section 108(2) states that a compliance order itself shall not require the payment of wages, fees or compensation. The compliance order will therefore not be used to require payment of unpaid wages, fees or compensation. It is limited to directing a person who has or is contravening the ESA 2000 to cease doing so or to take action to bring itself into compliance. Note that this provision does not restrict the officer's ability to issue a notice of contravention under ESA Part XXII, s. 113 (which carries with it a financial penalty) with respect to the same violation that triggered the issuance of the compliance order. See the discussion in ESA Part XXII, s. 113(7).

Other Means Not a Bar - s. 108(3)

108(3) Nothing in subsection (2) precludes an employment standards officer from issuing an order under section 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104, 106 or 107 and an order under this section in respect of the same contravention.

This subsection was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 to reference orders under ESA Part XVIII.1.

Although s. 108(2) precludes the compliance order from requiring payment of wages, fees or compensation, s. 108(3) specifically allows the officer to issue a separate order to recover fees under ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.14, order for compensation against a temporary help agency under ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.16, compensation/reinstatement order relating to a client reprisal under ESA Part XVIII.1, s.

74.17, order to pay wages under ESA Part XXII, s. 103, a compensation/reinstatement order under ESA Part XXII, s. 104, or a director's order under ESA Part XXII, s. 106 or 107 with respect to the same contravention for which they issue the compliance order. It follows therefore that the issuance of a compliance order is not limited to situations involving non-monetary contraventions. For example, if an employer is found to have violated ESA Part VIII, s. 22(1), which requires the payment of overtime pay for hours worked in excess of 44 per week, the employment standards officer may issue an order under ESA Part XXII, s. 103 for the overtime pay owing to the employees as well as a compliance order under s. 108 that requires the employer to comply with s. 22(1).

Application of s. 103(6) to (9) – s. 108(4)

108(4) Subsections 103 (6) to (9) apply with respect to orders issued under this section with necessary modifications, including but not limited to the following:

1. A reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency.

2. A reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.

This subsection was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, which came into force November 6, 2009, to include references to clients and assignment employees and prospective assignment employees.

Section 108(4) provides that the rules as set out under ESA Part XXII, s. 103 regarding service, notice to employees, compliance, and the binding effect of an order for which no timely application for review is made apply to compliance orders issued under s. 108.

As a result, a compliance order must be served in accordance with ESA Part XXI, s. 95. Additionally, when an employment standards officer issues a compliance order with respect to an employee, he or she must advise that person of the issuance of the order through a letter served in accordance with s. 95.

The person against whom the compliance order is issued shall comply with it according to its terms and if the person against whom the order is issued does not apply to the Board for a review within the time set out in ESA Part XXIII, s. 116, the order becomes final and binding.

See the discussion at ESA Part XXII, ss. 103(6) to (9). When cross-referencing these provisions, any modifications necessary for ss. 103(6) to (9) to make sense in the context of a compliance order will apply. When an officer issues a compliance order with respect to Part XVIII.1, such modifications include reading the term employer to also mean client of a temporary help agency and reading the term employee to also mean an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.

Injunction Proceeding - s. 108(5); Same - s. 108(6)

108(5) At the instance of the Director, the contravention of an order made under subsection (1) may be restrained upon an application, made without notice, to a judge of the Superior Court of Justice.

108(6) Subsection (5) applies with respect to a contravention of an order in addition to any other remedy or penalty for its contravention.

Section 108(5) enables the Director to apply to the court, without notice to the person to whom a compliance order was issued, for an order of the court requiring that person to cease contravening the terms of the compliance order. Such a court order is referred to as an injunction.

In effect, this provision provides the Director with a mechanism to obtain a court order requiring compliance with the ESA 2000, without the necessity of initiating a prosecution. Section 108(6) makes it clear that the injunction order under s. 108(5) is available in addition to any other remedy or penalty for the contravention of the order. In other words, it would not preclude a prosecution for a contravention of the order or imposition of the penalties and remedies under ESA Part XXV, ss. 132 to 137, inclusive.

See Delegation of Powers for information on how this power has been delegated.

ESA Part XXII Section 109 - Money Paid When No Review

Money Paid When No Review - s. 109(1)

109(1) Money paid to the Director under an order under section 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104, 106 or 107 shall be paid to the person with respect to whom the order was issued unless an application for review is made under section 116 within the period required under that section.

Section 109(1) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009 to broaden its application to monies paid pursuant to orders issued under Part XVIII.1 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Section 109(1) indicates that where there has been payment of wages, fees or compensation that were the subject of an order, and the person against whom the order was issued has not applied for review under s. 116, the money paid into trust will be paid out to the person named in the order. The Trust Funds Unit of the Employment Practices Branch (acting for the Director) will pay out after waiting the 30 days (or longer, if there has been an extension granted in the case) for any application for review by the employer or, in the case of an order issued under ss. 106 or 107, the director.

Note that this section makes no provision for the payment of any interest that may have accrued on the monies paid to the Director in trust. Although s. 88(7) states that where money has been paid to the Director in trust it shall be paid out to the person entitled to receive it together with interest at the rate calculated and manner determined by the Director in ss. 88(5), s. 88(7) only applies where no provision is made elsewhere in the Act for paying out the monies held in trust.

Money Distributed Rateably - s. 109(2)

109(2) If the money paid to the Director under one of those orders is not enough to pay all of the persons entitled to it under the order the full amount to which they are entitled, the Director shall distribute that money, including money received with respect to administrative costs, to the persons in proportion to their entitlement.

Section 109(2) states what happens when the amount received is less than the full amount of the order (including administrative costs).

In this situation, the Director of Employment Standards distributes the money received to each person who is the beneficiary of the order in proportion to the amount they are owed. The Director does not retain any of the money for the administrative costs unless those beneficiaries are paid in full. (This is the case even if the employer specifically submitted some of money for the purpose of paying the administrative costs portion of the order.)

Please see ESA Part I, s.1 for a discussion of the term "person" under the Act.

No Proceeding Against Director - s. 109(3)

109(3) No proceeding shall be instituted against the Director for acting in compliance with this section.

This provision is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 72(5)) in the former Employment Standards Act. Section 109(3) simply states that the distribution of money received in compliance with this section does not leave the Director open to any civil or criminal liability. Though the word "proceeding" is not defined in the Act, it seems clear that its plain meaning is intended by this section. The protection afforded to the Director under this section would extend to the Director's delegate acting under this section. See Delegation of Powers for information.

ESA Part XXII Section 110 - Refusal to Issue Order

Refusal to Issue Order - s. 110(1)

110(1) If, after a person files a complaint alleging a contravention of this Act in respect of which an order could be issued under section 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104 or 108, an employment standards officer assigned to investigate the complaint refuses to issue such an order, the officer shall, in accordance with section 95, serve a letter on the person advising the person of the refusal.

Section 110(1) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, which came into force on November 6, 2009 to include references to refusals to issues orders under Part XVIII.1.

Section 110(1) imposes an obligation on an employment standard officer assigned to investigate a complaint to notify a complainant by letter of his or her decision not to issue any of the following orders:

- Order to recover fees (s. 74.14)
- Compensation order against a temporary help agency (s. 74.16)
- Compensation/reinstatement order relating to client reprisal (s. 74.17)
- Order to pay wages (s. 103)
- Compensation/reinstatement order (s. 104); and/or
- Compliance order (s. 108).

The letter advising the complainant of the refusal to issue an order must be served in accordance with s. 95 - see ESA Part XXI, s. 95 for more information.

Note: this section does not impose any obligation to notify a complainant of a refusal to issue a director's order under ss. 106 or 107, as employees do not have the right to apply to review a refusal to issue an order against a director. It should also be noted that there is no obligation to notify non-complainants of the refusal to issue any of the listed orders.

The rationale for the notice and service provisions in s. 110 may be found in s. 116(4) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. Section 110 effectively establishes the start date of the 30-day period set out in s. 116(4) within which a complainant must apply for a review of the officer's decision not to issue an order under ss. 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104 and 108.

Deemed Refusal - s. 110(2)

110(2) If no order is issued with respect to a complaint described in subsection (1) within two years after it was filed, an employment standards officer shall be deemed to have refused to issue an order and to have served on the person a letter advising the person of the refusal on the last day of the second year.

This provision was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, which came into force on November 6, 2009 to reference a "person" rather than an "employee".

This section is similar to the corresponding section (s. 67(2)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 110(2) indicates that if no order is issued within two years after the complaint was filed, then the employment standards officer shall be deemed to have refused to issue an order on the day before the two-year limitation period expires. Therefore, for example, if during the two years after the person files his or her claim, the officer neither issues an order, nor refuses to issue an order, then the officer will be deemed to have refused to issue an order on the day before the two-year period expires.

One reason for this provision is so that, in the unfortunate and rare event that the Ministry has neither issued an order nor refused to do so during the two-year limitation period set out in s. 114(1)(a) of the Act, the person can still apply for a review by the Ontario Labour Relations Board under s. 116. The person would have 30 days from the day before the two-year period expires in which to apply for a review of the officer's deemed "refusal".

ESA Part XXII Section 111 - Time Limit on Recovery, Employee's Complaint

Time Limit on Recovery, Employee's Complaint - s. 111(1)

111(1) If an employee files a complaint alleging a contravention of this Act or the regulations, the employment standards officer investigating the complaint may not issue an order for wages that became due to the employee under the provision that was the subject of the complaint or any other provision of this Act or the regulations if the wages became due more than two years before the complaint was filed.

Section 111(1) as amended by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014, SO 2014, c 10, effective February 20, 2015 provides that, if an employee has filed a complaint under the Employment Standards Act, 2000, the order for wages that became due to the employee either in respect of the contravention alleged in the complaint or any contravention discovered during the course of the investigation is limited to those wages that became due to the employee within the two-year period preceding the date the complaint was filed.

It must be noted however that s. 111(1) applies only with respect to wages that became due on or after February 20, 2015. See the discussion under Transitional Provisions below on the limitation periods for wages that became due before February 20, 2015.

In order for an employee to recover wages that came due on or after February 20, 2015 in accordance with s. 111(1), such wages must have come due in the two-year period preceding the date the claim was filed.

The following is intended to assist officers in determining when various types of wages become due under the Act:

Type of Entitlement and Due Date

Regular Wages

Come due on the regular pay day as established by employer practice. Following termination, on the later of seven days after termination or the day that would have been the employee's next regular pay day.

Termination and Severance Pay

On the later of seven days after termination or the day that would have been the employee's next regular pay day, unless the severance pay is to be paid out in instalments in accordance with ESA Part XV, s. 66. Note also that where an employee elects to retain recall rights or makes no election, termination and/or severance pay is due when the recall rights expire or are renounced. See the discussion at ESA Part XV, ss. 66 and 67.

Vacation Pay

Vacation pay comes due generally before the employee takes vacation, but in some cases will come due on or before the pay day for the period in which the vacation falls, which must be taken within 10 months following the vacation year or within such shorter period as established by contract. Or, the parties may agree in writing that the vacation pay will come due on each pay day as it accrues. It may also come due at such other time as agreed in writing by the parties. Finally, following termination, vacation pay comes due on the later of seven days after termination or the day that would have been the employee's next regular pay day.

Because vacation pay can be paid in a number of ways under the Act and may therefore come due at different times, the application of s. 111 to vacation pay is quite complex.

Practical Application of s. 111 to Vacation Pay Provisions - When Does Vacation Pay Come Due?

Any vacation pay will be recoverable if it came due in the two year period preceding the date the claim was filed. Note that this applies only to vacation pay that became due on or after February 20, 2015. See s. 111(3.2) for a discussion of the limitation periods for vacation pay due before February 20, 2015.

However, it is important to note that vacation pay may come due at different times in accordance with ESA Part XI, s. 36:

Vacation pay is paid in accordance with s. 36(1):

Pursuant to ESA Part XI, ss. 35 and 35.1, vacation pay is due prior to the commencement of the vacation and vacation time must be taken within 10 months following the end of the period for which it was earned. In the case of the vacation pay accrued over a vacation entitlement year, the latest the vacation pay will be due before the end of the 10-month period following the completion of the vacation entitlement year (assuming that no vacation time has been taken in respect of that vacation entitlement year) would therefore be:

- Two weeks for employees whose period of employment is less than five years when the vacation entitlement year ends, or
- Three weeks for employees whose period of employment is five years or more when the vacation entitlement year ends.

In the case of vacation pay accrued over a stub period, the latest the vacation pay will be due (assuming that no vacation time has been taken in respect of that stub period) would be 10 months following the completion of the stub period less the vacation time earned over the stub period.

Vacation pay is paid in accordance with s. 36(2):

If vacation pay is paid in accordance with s. 36(2), i.e., wages are paid by direct deposit or the employee does not take vacation in complete weeks, the vacation pay is due on or before the pay day for the period in which the vacation falls. Again, the latest the vacation may be taken is within 10 months following the completion of the period for which it was earned. With respect to any completed vacation entitlement year then, the latest the vacation pay accrued in that year would be due (assuming that no vacation time has been taken in respect of that vacation entitlement year) would be the pay day for the last pay period that ended within the 10 months following the completion of the vacation entitlement year. In the case of vacation pay accrued over a stub period, the latest the vacation pay would be due (assuming that no vacation time has been taken in respect of that stub period) would be the pay day for the last pay period within the 10 months following the completion of the stub period.

Vacation pay is paid in accordance with s. 36(3):

If vacation pay is paid in accordance with s. 36(3), i.e., the employer pays vacation pay that accrues in each pay period on the pay day for that period, the vacation pay is therefore due on the pay day for each pay period, regardless of when the vacation time is taken.

Vacation pay is paid in accordance with s. 36(4):

If vacation pay is paid in accordance with s. 36(4), i.e., where the employer and employee may agree to the payment of vacation pay at any time, the vacation pay is due on the date so agreed by the parties regardless of when the vacation time is taken.

Compensation/Reinstatement

Damages owing under a compensation order only come due on the date the officer issues the order. As a result, when an officer is issuing a compensation order under ESA Part XXII, s. 104 for a violation of Part XIV Leaves of Absence, Part XVI Lie Detectors, Part XVII Retail Business Establishments or Part XVIII Reprisal, the limitation on recovery in s. 111 will not apply to the damages awarded pursuant to the order. An order for reinstatement is also not limited by s. 111 because the subject of the order in that case is not wages that come due under the Act. But see the discussion regarding the two-year limitation period on filing claims in ESA Part XXII, s. 96(3).

However, if a compensation or reinstatement order also includes an assessment for wages that were due under the Act, for example, where wages or vacation pay were earned prior to a termination contrary to the reprisal provisions in Part XVIII, those wages will be subject to the s. 111 limitations on recovery based on the date such monies came due under the Act.

Same, Another Employee's Complaint - s. 111(2)

111(2) If, in the course of investigating a complaint, an employment standards officer finds that an employer has contravened this Act or the regulations with respect to an employee who did not file a complaint, the officer may not issue an order for wages that became due to that employee as a result of that contravention if the wages became due more than two years before the complaint was filed.

In accordance with s. 111(2), if an officer is investigating a complaint filed by employee A and during the course of that investigation discovers that monies are also owing to employees B, C and D, the officer may issue an order with respect to employees B, C and D only for those wages including vacation pay that became due within the two-year period preceding the date A filed their complaint. In other words, with respect to any wages, employees A (the complainant) and B, C and D are all able to recover those wages including vacation pay that became due not more than two years prior to the date of A's complaint.

Note that this applies only to wages that became due on or after February 20, 2015. See the discussion under Transitional Provisions below on the limitation periods for wages that became due before February 20, 2015.

Same, Inspection - s. 111(3)

111(3) If an employment standards officer finds during an inspection that an employer has contravened this Act or the regulations with respect to an employee, the officer may not issue an order for wages that became due to the employee more than two years before the officer commenced the inspection.

In accordance with s. 111(3), where an officer is conducting an inspection, the limitation on recovery for all unpaid wages discovered during the inspection will be the two-year period preceding the date the inspection was commenced. In other words, with respect to any unpaid wages, the officer may issue an order for those wages if they came due within the two-year period preceding the date the inspection commenced.

Note that this applies only to wages that became due on or after February 20, 2015. See the discussion under Transitional Provisions below on the limitation periods for wages that became due before February 20, 2015.

Transitional Provisions

On February 20, 2015, the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act introduced a number of transitional provisions that imposed a six-month limitation period on unpaid wages that became due before February 20, 2015, and a 12-month limitation period for repeated contraventions and vacation pay that became due before February 20, 2015. Sections 111(3.1) to (8) were repealed on February 20, 2017 in accordance with ss. 8(6) and 10(6) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014.

Although these sections are now repealed, it is Program policy that the limitation periods imposed by the transitional provisions continue to apply to wages, repeated contraventions and vacation pay that became due before February 20, 2015, even if any associated orders are issued after February 20, 2017. This is to preserve the vested legal rights of the parties at the time the contravention occurred. This is relevant in situations where a period of time lapses between the time a claim is filed and the time a claim is investigated.

Transition - Time Limits - s. 111(3.1) (REPEALED)

111(3.1) Despite subsection (1) to (3), and subject to subsections (3.2) to (8), if some or all of the wages became due to the employee before the day subsection 8(4) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014 came into force, the employment standards officer may not issue an order for the wages that became due before that day if they became due more than six months before the complaint was filed or the inspection was commenced, as the case may be.

Note that s. 111(3.1) was a transitional provision that was repealed on February 20, 2017 in accordance with ss. 8(6) and 10(6) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014.

Prior to its repeal, s. 111(3.1) together with the repealed ss. 111(3.2), (4) and (6) and ss. 111(5), (7) and (8) operated to impose the six-month limitation period on unpaid wages or 12 month limitation for repeated contraventions and vacation pay that applied prior to February 20, 2015, the date s. 111 was amended by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014. Under s. 111(3.1), the six-month limitation period on recovery of wages specifically applied only in respect of those wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015. However, it is Program policy that the six month limitation period imposed by s. 111(3.1) continues to apply to wages that became due before February 20, 2015, even if any associated orders are issued after February 20, 2017.

Note that s. 111(3.1) is also subject to the provisions that impose a 12-month recovery period for repeat contraventions and for vacation pay with respect to monies that came due prior to February 20, 2015.

An example of how s. 111(3.1) applied is as follows:

- Employee files a claim with Ministry on July 15, 2015.
- Employee is owed termination pay due on January 31, 2015.
- All of the unpaid termination pay came due on a single date (no repeat contraventions) prior to February 20, 2015 and there is no unpaid vacation pay. Consequently, the officer may issue an order only for those wages that became due during the six months prior to July 15, 2015, the date the claim was filed, In this case, the employee is able to recover the termination pay that was due on January 31, 2015.

Transition - Vacation Pay - s. 111(3.2) (REPEALED)

111(3.2) The time limit within which vacation pay must have become due under subsection (3.1) is 12 months, rather than six months.

Note that s. 111(3.1) was a transitional provision that was repealed on February 20, 2017 in accordance with ss. 8(6) and 10(6) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014.

Prior to its repeal, s. 111(3.2) imposed a 12-month limitation on the recovery of unpaid vacation pay that applied prior to the amendments made by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014. In accordance with the repealed s. 111(3.1) this 12-month limitation applied only with respect to vacation pay that came due prior to the February 20, 2015, the date the amendments to s. 111 made by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014 came into force. However, it is Program policy that the 12 month limitation period imposed by s. 111(3.2) continues to apply to vacation pay that became due before February 20, 2015, even if any associated orders are issued after February 20, 2017.

As a result, where an employment standards officer is investigating a complaint or conducting an inspection and finds during the course of that investigation or inspection that an employer has failed to pay any vacation pay that came due prior to February 20, 2015, the officer is limited to issuing an order for such vacation pay to that which came due within the 12-month period preceding the date the complaint was filed or the inspection was commenced.

Transition - Repeated Contraventions - s. 111(4) (REPEALED)

111(4) The time limit within which wages must have come due under subsection (3.1) is 12 months, rather than six months, if,

(a) the employment standards officer investigating the complaint or performing the inspection finds that the employer has contravened the same provision of this Act or the regulations more than once with respect to the employee;

(b) the contraventions were in each case with respect to wages to which the employee became entitled under the same provision of this Act or the regulations or under provisions of the employee's employment contract that are identical or are virtually identical; and

(c) at least one of the contraventions occurred within the six-month period referred to in that subsection.

Note that s. 111(4) was a transitional provision that was repealed on February 20, 2017 in accordance with ss. 8(6) and 10(6) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014.

Prior to its repeal, s. 111(4) operated to impose a 12-month limitation period on the recovery of unpaid wages where there are repeated contraventions but only with respect to unpaid wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015, the date the changes to s. 111 made by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014 came into force. However, it is Program policy that the 12 month limitation period imposed by s. 111(4) continues to apply to repeated contraventions of the requirement to pay wages that became due before February 20, 2015, even if any associated orders are issued after February 20, 2017.

Subsection 111(4) therefore extended the limitation on recovery of wages (other than vacation pay) as set out in the repealed s. 111(3.1) from six months to 12 months when there has been a repeated contravention. Specifically, any unpaid wages (other than vacation pay) that came due prior to February 20, 2015, can be recovered if they became due in the 12-month period preceding the date a complaint was filed or inspection commenced and:

1. The employer has contravened the same provision of the Act or regulations more than once with respect to the employee; and
2. Each contravention is for wages that become due under the same provision of the Act or regulations or provisions of the employment contract that are the same or virtually identical; and
3. At least one of the contraventions occurred during the six-month period preceding the date the complaint was filed or inspection commenced.

For example, s. 111(4) would apply where there was a contravention of the requirement to pay overtime and such overtime pay was due more than six months prior to the date the complaint was filed or inspection commenced if there was also a contravention of that same provision on at least one occasion in the six-month period preceding the date the complaint was filed or the inspection commenced.

It is important to note that this section allows for a finding of a repeated violation only in regards to each employee. Thus, for example if the employer violates the public holiday provisions of s. 24 once with regard to employee A and then a second time with regards to employee B and a third time with regards to employee C, so that s. 24 is only violated once with regards to each employee, this is not a repeated violation of the Act with regards to any given employee and therefore s. 111(4) does not apply.

Example

The following example is an illustration of how the repealed repeated contravention provision applied where the investigation reveals multiple entitlements for more than one employee:

- Employee A files a complaint regarding overtime pay on December 1, 2014.
- During the investigation officer finds:
    - Employee A and B - overtime pay due but unpaid November 1, 2014.
    - Employee A - overtime pay due but unpaid July 15, 2014.
    - Employee A, B and C - overtime pay due but unpaid December 15, 2013.

In this case the officer could issue an order for the following:

1. The overtime pay due to employee A on November 1, 2014, July 15, 2014 and December 15, 2013.
    - A's overtime entitlements are repeat contraventions under s. 111(4), so the order may be issued for any overtime due in the 12-month period preceding the date the complaint was filed.
2. The overtime pay due to employee B on November 1, 2014 and December 15, 2013.
    - B's overtime entitlements are repeat contraventions under s. 111(4), so the order may be issued for any overtime due to B in the 12-month period preceding the date A filed their complaint.

The officer could not issue an order for the overtime pay due to employee C on December 15, 2013 because C's overtime entitlement was not a repeat contravention and would therefore have had to come due within six months of the date A filed their complaint in order to be recoverable under the Act.

Same - s. 111(5) (REPEALED)

111(5) Subsection (4) applies with respect to repeated contraventions of section 11 or 13 only if,

(a) none of those contraventions are also contraventions of another provision of this Act or the regulations; or

(b) all of those contraventions are also contraventions of the same provision of this Act or the regulations, other than section 11 or 13, or of provisions of the employee's employment contract that are identical or virtually identical.

Note that s. 111(5) was a transitional provision that was repealed on February 20, 2017 in accordance with ss. 8(6) and 10(6) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014.

Prior to its repeal, its effect was to limit the application of the repeated contravention provision in s. 111(4) (also repealed) such that it applied in respect of wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015 in either of two ways:

1. A repeated contravention will only be found where the contraventions are violations only of the requirement in s. 11 to pay wages on the employee's regular pay day (s. 11) or the prohibition in s. 13 against deductions from wages and no other provisions in the Act; or
2. A repeated contravention will be found only if the contraventions are all for a violation of the same provision in the Act in addition to being a violation of s. 11 or 13.

However, it is Program policy that the limitations imposed by s. 111(5) continue to apply to repeated contraventions of the requirement to pay wages that became due before February 20, 2015, even if any associated orders are issued after February 20, 2017.

For example, s. 111(5)(a) applied so that a repeated contravention would be found where the employer had twice made prohibited deductions from the employee's pay at nine months and three months prior to the date the complaint was filed, because both are s. 13 contraventions but are not also contraventions of any other provision of the Act. Under s. 111(5)(b), a repeated contravention would be found where, on one occasion, the employer failed to pay overtime pay (a contravention of s. 11 and s. 22) and on a second occasion, again failed to pay overtime pay (as they are both contraventions of s. 11 and s. 22). However, a repeated contravention would not be found where the employer failed to pay overtime pay on one occasion and failed to pay minimum wage on another because while they are both s. 11 violations, they are contraventions of s. 22 and s. 23 respectively.

Transition - Complaints from Different Employees - s. 111(6) (REPEALED)

111(6) If two or more employees file complaints alleging contraventions of this Act or the regulations and at least one of the contraventions in each of the complaints arose under the same provision of this Act or the regulations or under identical or virtually identical provisions of their employment contracts, subsection (3.1) applies with respect to all of the complaints, as if all of them had been filed on the day the first complaint was filed.

Note that s. 111(6) was a transitional provision that was repealed on February 20, 2017 in accordance with ss. 8(6) and 10(6) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014.

Prior to its repeal, subsection 111(6) was effectively limited in its application to situations where a complaint or a subsequent complaint had been filed with respect to wages which were subject to the limitations on recovery set out in the repealed s. 111(3.1), which is in turn was subject to ss. 111(3.2) to (8) (also repealed). However, it is Program policy that s. 111(6) continues to apply to complaints from different employees regarding wages that became due before February 20, 2015, even if any associated orders are issued after February 20, 2017.

In other words, if a complaint has been filed and subsequent complaints are filed by different employees against the same employer alleging at least one of the same contraventions alleged in the first complaint and there are wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015, s. 111(6) provides that those wages will be subject to a six month recovery period, or 12 months in the case of repeated contraventions or vacation pay, preceding the date the first complaint was filed.

Section 111(6) must be read subject to s. 111(8), which limits the application of s. 111(6) to situations where the subsequent complaints are filed before the officer has made a determination with respect to that first complaint.

Example

- Employee A files a claim July 1, 2015 for unpaid overtime pay due January 15, 2015.
- On August 15, 2015, during the investigation of A's claim, Employee B files a claim for unpaid overtime pay due January 15, 2015 and July 15, 2014.

Because B's complaint was filed before the officer had issued an order or letter of refusal with respect to A's complaint, B's complaint will be treated as if it had been filed July 1, 2015. As a result, the officer could issue an order for the overtime pay due to both A and B on January 15, 2015 as well as the overtime pay that was due to B on July 15, 2014 because it was a repeated contravention under s. 111(4).

Same - s. 111(7) (REPEALED)

111(7) Subsection (6) applies with respect to contraventions of section 11 or 13 with respect to different employees only if,

(a) none of those contraventions are also contraventions of another provision of this Act or the regulations; or

(b) all of those contraventions are also contraventions of the same provision of this Act or the regulations, other than section 11 or 13, or of provisions of the employees' employment contract that are identical or virtually identical.

Note that s. 111(7) was a transitional provision that was repealed on February 20, 2017 in accordance with ss. 8(6) and 10(6) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014.

This provision is similar to the repealed s. 111(5), but it defined those situations in which the contraventions in different complaints (as compared to repeated contraventions with respect to a particular employee) would be considered to have arisen under the same provision of the Act (or identical or virtually identical provisions of the employees' contracts of employment) for the purpose of treating all the complaints as if they had been filed on the date the first complaint was filed as per s. 111(6) (also repealed). However, it is Program policy that s. 111(7) continues to apply to wages that became due before February 20, 2015, even if any associated orders are issued after February 20, 2017.

Like the repealed s. 111(5), this provision effectively applied only with respect to wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015.

The effect of s. 111(7) was to limit the application of s. 111(6) such that it applies in respect of wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015 in either of two ways:

1. If the contraventions are violations only of the requirement to pay wages on the employee's regular pay day (s. 11) or the prohibition against deductions from wages (s. 13) and no other provisions in the Act,; or

2. If the contraventions are also a violation of the same provision in the Act, in addition to being a s. 11 or 13 violation, or of provisions of the employees' employment contracts that are identical or virtually identical.

For example, if employee A filed a complaint claiming that they had not been paid regular wages and employee B subsequently filed a complaint also alleging non-payment of wages, employee B's complaint would be treated as if it had been filed on the date employee A's complaint was filed. However, the contraventions would not be considered the same if employee A's complaint alleged that the employer failed to pay overtime pay (a contravention of s. 11 and s. 22) and employee B's complaint alleged a failure to pay minimum wage (a contravention of s. 11 and s. 23).

Finally, if both employee A and B alleged a failure to pay overtime pay (a contravention of s. 11 and s. 22), they would be considered the same contravention and employee B's complaint would be treated as if it had been filed on the date A filed their complaint.

Same - s. 111(8) (REPEALED)

111(8) Subsection (6) does not apply with respect to a complaint filed after an employment standards officer has issued an order under subsection (6) with respect to an earlier complaint or advised an earlier complainant of his or her refusal to issue such an order.

Note that s. 111(8) was a transitional provision that was repealed on February 20, 2017 in accordance with ss. 8(6) and 10(6) of Schedule 2 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014.

Prior to its repeal, this provision restricted the application of s. 111(6) to situations where the subsequent complaint(s) is filed before the officer has issued an order with respect to the original complaint or sent a letter advising that complainant of the decision not to issue an order. Because s. 111(6) only applied with respect to wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015, s. 111(8) similarly applied in situations where employees who have filed a subsequent complaint are owed wages that were due prior to February 20, 2015. However, it is Program policy that s. 111(8) continues to apply to wages that became due before February 20, 2015, even if any associated orders are issued after February 20, 2017.

In other words, s. 111(6), which provided that the six-month/one-year limits on recovery run from the date the first complaint has been filed (in the event there are multiple complaints for substantially the same contravention) does not apply if the subsequent complaint(s) are received after the employment standards officer has issued an order or sent a letter advising the earlier complainant that the officer will not be issuing an order.

Extending Time Limits

Despite the mandatory time limits on recovery set out in s. 111, it may be possible for the six/12-month time limits that apply with respect to wages that came due prior to February 20, 2015, as well as the two-year limitation on recovery that applies with respect to wages that came due on or after that date, to be extended in exceptional cases. The Court of Appeal in Halloran v Sargeant, 2002 CanLII 45029 (ON CA) held that in the appropriate circumstances, the equitable doctrine of fraudulent concealment applies to relieve against statutory time limits on recovery.

In Halloran v Sargeant, Mr. Halloran filed a claim for severance pay under the former ESA more than five years after his separation from his employer. The relevant provision of the former Employment Standards Act at that time, s. 82(2), had a two-year limitation on recovery; thus, the section, on its face, barred any recovery for Mr. Halloran as his severance pay would have become due more than five years before he filed his claim. The Court of Appeal held that the Ontario Labour Relations Board should have applied the equitable doctrine of fraudulent concealment in order to relieve against the two-year time limit. The Court of Appeal held that this doctrine was applicable because the employer, on separation, had represented to Mr. Halloran that an unreduced early pension without severance pay exceeded what Mr. Halloran was entitled to under provincial law. The Court found that Mr. Halloran relied on this representation but changed his mind and decided to file a claim under the former Employment Standards Act some years later after reading in the newspaper about the Court decision affirming that certain other employees of the company who had pursued Employment Standards Act claims after their separation were in fact entitled to severance pay. Fraudulent concealment necessary to suspend the operation of the limitation period need not, according to the Court, amount to deceit or fraud in the ordinary sense. There is no suggestion in the case that the employer was fraudulent in the ordinary sense of that word. The Court held that employers have an obligation to provide accurate information to employees and it was not "right or reasonable" for the employer to take the benefit of s. 82(2) where it had made a misrepresentation to the employee concerning his statutory rights and where the employee relied on that misrepresentation to his detriment. The Court held that this was sufficient to engage the fraudulent concealment doctrine.

The principles set out in Halloran v Sargeant may apply to provide relief against the six-month/one-year and two-year limitation period in s. 111 to allow a claim that would otherwise be out of time where:

- An employee has been misled as their entitlements under the ESA 2000 by their employer and for that reason delayed in filing their claim; and
- The employee took prompt steps to file a claim after they found out that what the employer said about the ESA 2000 entitlement was inaccurate.

In determining whether the fraudulent concealment applies to allow recovery of a claim that on its face is time barred or which includes entitlements more than six/12 months or two years before the claim was filed, employment standards officers should inquire as to the reason for delay in filing:

- If the employer made no representation as to the employee's legal entitlements but simply refused to pay, then there would be no relief for the employee under the Halloran principles.
- If the employer tells the employee that the employer does not have to pay, there would be no relief from the time limits.
- If, on the other hand, the employer tells the employee that it has no obligation to pay under the law or under the ESA 2000, then the employee may be entitled to relief under the Halloran v Sargeant principles.

It does not matter whether the employer's misrepresentation is innocent, negligent or dishonest in order for the doctrine of fraudulent concealment to apply.

ESA Part XXII Section 112 – Settlement

Settlement – s. 112(1)

112(1) Subject to subsection (8), if an employee and an employer who have agreed to a settlement respecting a contravention or alleged contravention of this Act inform an employment standards officer in writing of the terms of the settlement and do what they agreed to do under it,

(a) the settlement is binding on the parties;

(b) any complaint filed by the employee respecting the contravention or alleged contravention is deemed to have been withdrawn;

(c) any order made in respect of the contravention or alleged contravention is void; and

(d) any proceeding, other than a prosecution, respecting the contravention or alleged contravention is terminated.

Subsection 112(1) of the ESA 2000 allows an employer and employee to enter into a settlement regarding a contravention or alleged contravention of the ESA 2000 by informing an employment standards officer in writing of the settlement and doing what they have agreed to do under it. Note that s. 112 as well as ESA Part XXII, s. 101.1 (and unlike ss. 120 and 129) apply only to settlements between an employer and employee and so cannot be used to settle a complaint that relates to a corporate director's liability or to settle a director's order to pay issued under ESA Part XXII, s. 106 or s. 107.

However, it should be noted that for the purposes of both s. 101.1 and s. 112 settlements in respect of Part XVIII.1, that a reference to an "employer" includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and a reference to an "employee" includes a reference to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.

Note as well that a settlement agreement may be made by an agent acting on behalf of the employer (e.g., a director of a corporate employer) or the employee. As a result, a director of the employer could, if acting as agent for the employer, enter into a settlement under s. 112 of a complaint against, or corporate order issued to, an employer. In that case, any proceedings other than a prosecution against both the employer and the corporate director would be terminated under s. 112(1)(d). See also ESA Part III, s. 7 for a discussion of the binding effect of an agreement or authorization made by an agent of the employee.

Other Settlement Provisions

The other provisions of the ESA 2000 that allow for settlement agreements between the parties to an employment standards complaint are as follows:

- ESA Part XXII, s. 101.1 provides the authority for an employment standards officer to facilitate a settlement between an employee and an employer respecting a contravention or alleged contravention of the ESA 2000
- ESA Part XXIII, s. 120 provides that the Ontario Labour Relations Board may authorize a labour relations officer to attempt to effect a settlement of matters raised in an application for review under ESA Part XXIII, s. 116
- ESA Part XXIV, s.129 provides that a collector appointed by the Director of Employment Standards may effect a settlement of the amount owing under the ESA 2000 if the creditor (generally the employee) agrees in writing to the settlement

However, s. 112 settlements are unique under the ESA 2000 in that they are not facilitated by a third party such as an employment standards officer or labour relations officer or a collector but are effected by the parties themselves, i.e., the employer and the employee.

When Parties May Enter into Settlement

The parties may enter into such an agreement before or after:

- A determination has been made, e.g., during or following an investigation or inspection;
- An employment standards officer issues an order under ss. 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104, 106 or 107 – see ss. 112(2) and (3) regarding exceptions related to compliance orders and notices of contravention; or
- An application for review has been made or a review hearing is commenced.

This provision clearly contemplates that the parties may enter into a settlement under s. 112 even after initiating an application for review. This intent is also apparent in ESA Part XXIII, s. 117(3), which specifically provides that where an employer applies for a review and the matter is settled under s. 112 or s. 120, monies held in trust shall be paid out in accordance with the settlement, subject to s. 112(6) or s. 120(6). The parties are not restricted to a settlement effected by a labour relations officer under s. 120.

Effect of Entering into Settlement

Where a settlement has been entered into, any complaint filed by the employee respecting the contravention or alleged contravention is deemed to have been withdrawn, any order that may have been issued under ss. 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104, 106 or 107 in respect of the contravention is voided and any application for review or a hearing under s. 116 that has been initiated respecting the contravention is terminated. However, a settlement under this section will have no impact on any prosecution that may have been commenced.

A settlement only settles the issues that the settlement document says it settles, and no more. For example, an employee filed a claim for vacation pay and termination pay. At no point - either in the claim form or afterwards, for example, during any discussion - was an issue of a minimum wage contravention raised. The employee and employer entered into a settlement whose terms specified that it was in settlement of the vacation pay and termination pay claims; it did not state that it was in settlement of all ESA issues that may have arisen during the course of the employment relationship up to the date of the settlement. The employee, after receiving the payment and wage statement from the employer due under the settlement, became aware that she hadn't been paid minimum wage. In this example, as the settlement did not cover the minimum wage issue, the claimant is able to pursue a minimum wage claim. The minimum wage issue would have been covered by the settlement only if:

- The settlement document specifically stated that it covered any claim to minimum wage, or
- The settlement document contained an all-encompassing statement that all ESA issues that arose out of the employment relationships up to the date of settlement are covered, or
- The settlement document contained a statement indicating that it is settling "the claim" or "claim #XXXXX" and the minimum wage issue had been raised - either in the claim form itself or afterwards, for example during discussions, such that both the employee and employer would have known that minimum wage was an issue in the claim and that they therefore intended the settlement to cover that issue.

Subsection 112(1) must be read subject to s. 112(8), which provides that where an employee demonstrates to the Ontario Labour Relations Board that they entered into the settlement as a result of fraud or coercion, the settlement is void.

It should also be noted that the binding effect of the settlement and its impact on a complaint, order or proceeding is dependent on the parties to the settlement doing what they have agreed to do under it. For example, if the employer and employee have settled the matter with the agreement that a specific sum of money will be paid to the employee and such monies are not paid, this section will not apply and the matter will proceed as if there had been no settlement.

See also ESA Part XXIII, s. 120, which deals with settlements effected by a labour relations officer of matters raised in an application for review under ESA Part XXIII, s. 116.

Compliance Orders – s. 112(2)

112(2) Clause 1(c) does not apply with respect to an order issued under section 108.

Subsection 112(2) provides that clause 112(1)(c) which would otherwise void any order if the parties have made a settlement under s. 112(1) does not apply to a compliance order issued under ESA Part XXII, s. 108. In other words, if an employment standards officer has issued a compliance order, it will not be voided by a subsequent settlement.

This subsection precludes the parties from entering into a settlement that would allow the employer to effectively contract out of its obligations to comply with the ESA 2000 imposed by a compliance order. Subsection 112(2) is necessary because settlements under s. 112 may be made by the parties without the approval of the employment standards officer. Under s. 112(1) all that is required is that the parties inform the employment standards officer of the settlement.

Note that where a settlement is effected by a labour relations officer under ESA Part XXIII, s. 120, a compliance order may be voided. However, such settlements require the approval of the Director of Employment Standards as per s. 120(3).

This provision must be read in conjunction with s. 112(9), which provides that for the purposes of applying s. 112 with respect to ESA Part XVIII.1, any reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Notices of Contravention – s. 112(3)

112(3) This section does not apply with respect to a notice of contravention.

Subsection 112(3) provides that there is no settlement option where the officer has issued a notice of contravention under ESA Part XXII, s. 113. The notice of contravention allows an officer to assess a monetary penalty, as set out in O Reg 289/01, where the employer is found to have contravened the ESA 2000. The penalty imposed under the notice of contravention cannot be the subject of any settlement agreement because the parties to the notice of contravention are the Ministry and the employer, rather than the employee and the employer.

Payment by Officer – s. 112(4)

112(4) If an employment standards officer receives money for an employee under this section, the officer may pay it directly to the employee or to the Director in trust.

Subsection 112(4) allows the officer to pay the monies received on a settlement made under s. 112 directly to the employee or to the Director in trust.

This provision must be read in conjunction with s. 112(9) which provides that, for the purposes of applying s. 112 with respect to Part XVIII.1, any reference to an "employer" includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an "employee" includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Same – s. 112(5)

112(5) If money is paid in trust to the Director under subsection (4), the Director shall pay it to the employee.

Subsection 112(5) provides that money collected by the employment standards officer with respect to an employee under the terms of a settlement in s. 112(1) and paid to the Director in trust, is to be paid by the Director to the employee.

This provision must be read in conjunction with s. 112(9) which provides that for the purposes of applying s. 112 with respect to Part XVIII.1, any reference to an "employer" includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an "employee" includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

See Delegation of Powers for information regarding the persons to whom the power to receive monies in trust has been delegated.

Administrative Costs and Collector Fees – s. 112(6)

112(6) If the settlement concerns an order to pay, the Director is, despite clause (1) (c), entitled to be paid,

(a) that proportion of the administrative costs that were ordered to be paid that is the same as the proportion of the amount of wages, fees or compensation ordered to be paid that the employee is entitled to receive under the settlement; and

(b) that proportion of the collector's fees and disbursements that were added to the amount of the order under subsection 128 (2) that is the same as the proportion of the amount of wages, fees or compensation ordered to be paid that the employee is entitled to receive under the settlement.

The Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9 amended this provision effective November 6, 2009 to include a reference to fees paid pursuant to an order issued under s. 74.14. The Fair Workplaces, Better Jobs Act, 2017, SO 2017, c 22 further amended this provision to provide for the recovery of a proportion of a collector's fees and disbursements based on the amount the employee is entitled to receive under a settlement made under s. 112.

Note that while this provision states that it is the Director who is entitled to the collector's fees and disbursements, the Director may delegate collection activities to a collector and authorize the collector to collect the fees and disbursements under s. 127.

Clause 112(6)(a) establishes the Director's entitlement to a proportionate amount for administrative costs, despite the fact that the order has been voided as a result of a settlement. Where there is a settlement of an order, administrative costs payable to the Director of Employment Standards will be a proportion of the administrative costs assessed under the order. The proportion is calculated as the amount paid to the employee under the settlement, divided by the amount assessed as owing to the employee under the order. For example, consider an order issued for $1,000 in wages plus a $100 administrative fee. The employer and employee subsequently enter into a settlement under s. 112 providing for a $500 payment to the employee. The proportion of wages paid under the settlement to the amount assessed under the order is one half. Therefore, the administrative fee payable to the Director would be one half of the $100 assessed under the order, or $50. See also the discussion of ESA Part XXIII, s. 117(3) and s. 120(6).

Clause 112(6)(b) establishes the Director's entitlement to a proportionate amount for the collector's fees and disbursements when a settlement is reached between an employer and employee after the order has been assigned to the collector and the collector has sought to collect the amount owing.

For example, consider an order issued for $1,000 in wages plus a $100 administrative fee that the collector is seeking to collect. Assuming the Director has authorized the collector to collect 20% of the order to pay in respect of the collector's fees in accordance with s. 127(3), a collection fee of $220 (($1000 + $100) x 20%) would be added to the order. If the employer and employee entered into a s. 112 settlement in the amount of $800 (80% of the amount owing to the employee), the collector would be entitled to a proportional amount of the fee in the amount of $176 ($220 x 80% = $176), based on the settlement reached.

Note that this provision must be read in conjunction with s. 112(9) which provides that for the purposes of applying s. 112 with respect to Part XVIII.1, any reference to an "employer" includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an "employee" includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Restrictions on Settlements – s. 112(7)

112(7) No person shall enter into a settlement which would permit or require that person or any other person to engage in future contraventions of this Act.

Section 112(7) restricts the parties' ability to reach a settlement that would allow future contraventions of the ESA 2000. For example, although an employee may agree to accept a payment equivalent to straight pay for overtime hours worked in the past, the employee may not agree to work overtime in the future at straight time.

This provision must be read in conjunction s. 112(9) which provides that for the purposes of applying s. 112 with respect to Part XVIII.1, any reference to an "employer" includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an "employee" includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Application to Void Settlement – s. 112(8)

112(8) If, upon application to the Board, the employee demonstrates that he or she entered into the settlement as a result of fraud or coercion,

(a) the settlement is void;

(b) the complaint is deemed never to have been withdrawn;

(c) any order made in respect of the contravention or alleged contravention is reinstated;

(d) any proceedings respecting the contravention or alleged contravention that were terminated shall be resumed.

Subsection 112(8) provides that a settlement entered into pursuant to s. 112 may be set aside where the employee can demonstrate to the Ontario Labour Relations Board that they entered into the settlement as a result of fraud or coercion. If the Board makes such a finding, the settlement is void, the employee's complaint is deemed never to have been withdrawn, any order made with respect to the contravention or alleged contravention is reinstated and any proceeding that was terminated is resumed.

Only the Ontario Labour Relations Board has the authority to determine that an employee entered into a settlement as a result of fraud or coercion; officers do not have the authority to make that determination.

Note that s. 112(9) provides that, for the purposes of applying s. 112 with respect to Part XVIII.1, any reference to an "employer" includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an "employee" includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

In Dey v Majestic Marble Import Ltd., 2016 CanLII 49544 (ON LRB), the claimant sought to void a settlement agreement regarding an ESA 2000 complaint. He claimed he was tricked into signing it because the employer told him that it was an order from the employment standards officer when it was not. The officer did not issue any orders against the employer in favour of the claimant. The claimant also argued that the settlement agreement should be void because of the way the employer treats its employees.

The Board cited J & Z Holdings Inc., 2005 CanLII 23310 (ON LRB), a previous decision in which the Board found that fraud requires an intent to defraud, and coercion includes persuading an unwilling person, by force, to sign a document. The Board also noted that while duress could be the basis for rendering an agreement void that does not mean that any form of pressure would make a decision void – the pressure would need to be undue or improper in the circumstances. Following the reasoning in J & Z Holdings Inc. that the evidence required for establishing fraud or coercion for the purposes of s. 112(8) must be very compelling, otherwise the effectiveness of the settlement process would be seriously undermined, the Board did not find any evidence of fraud or coercion.

The Board noted that the officer did not issue any orders against the employer, and accepted the employer's evidence that they never misled the claimant regarding the nature of the settlement agreement. The Board also noted that an employer's general behavior in other matters unrelated to the settlement is not a reason to void an otherwise valid settlement agreement. The Board concluded that there was no basis upon which it could reasonably conclude that the employer fraudulently tricked or coerced the claimant into signing the settlement agreement.

Application to Part XVIII.1 – s. 112(9)

112(9) For the purposes of the application of this section in respect of Part XVIII.1, the following modifications apply:

1. A reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency.

2. A reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.

Section 112(9) specifies that for the purpose of applying s. 112 in respect of Part XVIII.1, any reference to an "employer" includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to the term "employee" includes a reference to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee. For a discussion of the terms "assignment employee", "client" and "temporary help agency", see ESA Part I, s.

1(1). For a discussion of the definition of a "prospective assignment employee", see ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.8(4).

ESA Part XXII Section 113 – Notices of Contravention

Notice of Contravention – s. 113(1)

113(1) If an employment standards officer believes that a person has contravened a provision of this Act, the officer may issue a notice to the person setting out the officer's belief and specifying the amount of the penalty for the contravention.

Section 113(1) permits an employment standards officer to issue a notice requiring payment of a specified penalty to a person that the officer believes has contravened the ESA 2000.

The officer's power to issue a notice of contravention is discretionary.

Note that the officer may issue a notice of contravention to any person the officer believes has contravened the ESA 2000. ESA Part I, s. 1 defines the term person. The word "person" indicates that the notice may be issued against persons other than an employer. For example, a notice of contravention could be issued against someone who is not the employer but who has custody of records or documents relevant to an investigation and who refuses to make them available for inspection contrary to ESA Part XXI, s. 91(8).

Section 113(1) must be read in conjunction with ss. 113(8) and (9) which provide that a notice of contravention may not be issued where the contravention is with respect to an employee who is represented by a trade union or where the contravention is committed by a director or officer of a corporate employer.

Amount of Penalty – s. 113(1.1)

113(1.1) The amount of the penalty shall be determined in accordance with the regulations.

This subsection provides that the amount of the penalty is to be determined in accordance with the regulations. The penalty amounts are prescribed in O Reg 289/01 as follows:

For a contravention of ESA Part II, s. 2, ESA Part VI, ss. 15, 15.1 or 16:

- $250
- $500 for a second contravention of the same provision within a three-year period
- $1000 for a third or subsequent contravention of the same provision in a three-year period.

For a contravention of any other provision of the ESA 2000, the above listed penalty amounts apply, but the penalty amount is multiplied by the number of employees affected.

See the discussion at section 1 of O Reg 289/01 for more information about penalties, including when the penalty amount escalates and when the multiplier is applied.

Note: The penalty amounts prescribed in O Reg 289/01 were higher from January 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018. (Instead of $250/$500/1000, the amounts were $350/$700/$1500.) Pursuant to s. 52(5) of the *Legislation Act, those higher amounts apply only if the contravention relating to the Notice of Contravention occurred during the 2018 calendar year AND the Notice of Contravention was issued during the 2018 calendar year. Otherwise, the lower amounts set out in the current O Reg 289/01 apply.

Subsection 52(5) of the Legislation Act provides that if an amendment lowers the amount of a penalty, the lower amount applies when a sanction is imposed (i.e. when the notice is issued) even if it is in respect of a contravention that happened before the amendment.*

Penalty Within Range – s. 113(1.2)

113(1.2) If a range has been prescribed as the penalty for a contravention, the employment standards officer shall determine the amount of the penalty in accordance with the prescribed criteria, if any.

This section states that if a range has been prescribed as the penalty, the employment standards officer shall determine the amount of the penalty from within that range in accordance with any prescribed criteria. At the time of writing, no range has been prescribed. Accordingly, the penalty amounts are as described in the discussion of s. 113(1.1).

Information – s. 113(2)

113(2) The notice shall contain or be accompanied by information setting out the nature of the contravention.

This provision requires the officer to provide information concerning the nature of the contravention together with the notice of contravention. This provision is similar to the obligation to provide information regarding the amount owing under ESA Part XXII, s. 103(5), regarding an order to pay wages.

The notice of contravention and accompanying documents (such as a copy of any order issued with respect to the contravention, a covering letter, officer's narrative and worksheet) must set out enough information that the person to whom the notice is issued will know the nature of the violation of the ESA 2000 and the information that gave rise to the officer's belief that there is or was a contravention of the ESA 2000.

The language of the section is specific: the notice of contravention must contain or have attached to it the information required. The fact that the person to whom the notice is issued had knowledge previously of the nature of the violation does not relieve the officer of the onus of setting out this information as part of the notice of contravention.

Service – s. 113(3)

113(3) A notice issued under this section shall be served on the person in accordance with section 95.

Subsection 113(3) requires that a notice of contravention be served on the person against whom it is issued in accordance with ESA Part XXI, s. 95.

The service requirements set out under s. 113(3) for a notice of contravention are identical to those for all orders issued under the ESA 2000.

REPEALED – s. 113(4)

Deemed Contravention – s. 113(5)

113(5) The person shall be deemed to have contravened the provision set out in the notice if,

(a) the person fails to apply to the Board for a review of the notice within the period set out in subsection 122(1); or

(b) the person applies to the Board for a review of the notice and the Board finds that the person contravened the provision set out in the notice.

Section 113(5) provides that although the officer has issued a notice of contravention under s. 113(1), the contravention is deemed to have occurred only if the person to whom it was issued fails to make an application for a review of the notice of contravention within 30 days after the date of service of the notice, or, on a review of the notice, the Ontario Labour Relations Board finds that the person contravened the provision set out in the notice. In the latter case, this may occur whether the Board affirms the notice or amends it.

Penalty – s. 113(6)

113(6) A person who is deemed to have contravened this Act shall pay to the Minister of Finance the penalty for the deemed contravention and the amount of any collector's fees and disbursements added to the amount under subsection 128(2).

Section 113(6) creates an obligation to pay the penalty set out in the notice of contravention – to the Minister of Finance – once the contravention is deemed to have occurred under s. 113(5).

It also requires payment of any collector's fees and disbursements added to the amount of the penalty under ESA Part XXIV, s. 128(2). In other words, once the notice of contravention has been sent for collection, e.g., following the expiration of the period to apply for a review in ESA Part XXIII, s. 122(1), any authorized collector's fees and disbursements are deemed to have been added to the amount set out in the notice of contravention.

Same – s. 113(6.1)

113(6.1) The payment under subsection (6) shall be made within 30 days after the day the notice of contravention was issued or, if the notice of contravention is appealed, within 30 days after the Board finds that there was a contravention.

Section 113(6.1) establishes the time period within which the payment of the penalty to the Minister of Finance for the deemed contravention must be made. In the event that the notice is not appealed, the payment is due 30 days after the notice was issued. In the event the notice is appealed, the payment is due 30 days after the Board has found that there was a contravention.

Publication re Notice of Contraventions – s. 113(6.2)

113(6.2) If a person, including an individual, is deemed under subsection (5) to have contravened this Act after being issued a notice of contravention, the Director may publish or otherwise make available to the general public the name of the person, a description of the deemed contravention, the date of the deemed contravention and the penalty for the deemed contravention.

This section permits the Director of Employment Standards to publish the name of the person or business that a notice of contravention has been issued against, as well as a description of the contravention, the date of the contravention, and the penalty for the contravention.

Note that the publishing of this information is restricted to situations where a person is deemed to have contravened the ESA 2000 in accordance with s. 113(5). Such contraventions only occur when the recipient fails to file for a review of the Notice with the Ontario Labour Relations Board within the period set out in ESA Part XXIII, s. 122(1). Or, where the person has filed for a review and the Board finds that they did in fact contravene the provision set out in the notice. As a result, the publishing of this information cannot simply occur once the notice was issued, but only after the Board has determined on an application for review that the provision set out in the notice was contravened, or the period for applying for a review in s. 122(1) has expired.

Internet Publication – s. 113(6.3)

113(6.3) Authority to publish under subsection (6.2) includes authority to publish on the Internet.

This subsection clarifies that the authority to publish the information set out in s. 113(6.2) includes authority to publish on the Internet.

Disclosure – s. 113(6.4)

113(6.4) Any disclosure made under subsection (6.2) shall be deemed to be in compliance with clause 42 (1) (e) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

This subsection states that where the Director has published information under s. 113(6.2) that such publication is deemed to be in compliance with clause 42(1)(e) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, RSO 1990, c F.31.

Other Means Not a Bar – s. 113(7)

113(7) An employment standards officer may issue a notice to a person under this section even though an order has been or may be issued against the person under section 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104 or 108 or the person has been or may be prosecuted for or convicted of an offence with respect to the same contravention.

Section 113(7) provides that an officer may issue a notice of contravention even though an order has been issued under the following provisions:

- ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.14: Order to recover fees charged by a temporary help agency
- ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.16: Order for compensation relating to certain prohibited activities of temporary help agencies
- ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.17: Order for compensation or reinstatement relating to a reprisal by the client of a temporary help agency
- ESA Part XXII, s. 103: Order to pay wages
- ESA Part XXII, s. 104: Order for compensation or reinstatement issued for contraventions of Part XIV Leaves of Absence, Part XVI Lie Detectors, Part XVII Retail Business Establishments and Part XVIII Reprisal

- ESA Part XXII, s. 108: Compliance order.

An officer may also issue a notice of contravention if the person is or may be prosecuted for or convicted of an offence with respect to the contravention.

Trade Union – s. 113(8)

113(8) This section does not applyac with respect to a contravention of this Act with respect to an employee who is represented by a trade union.

Section 113(8) provides that a notice of contravention may not be issued with respect to an employee who is represented by a trade union. In other words, an arbitrator (or the Board on a related employer issue) enforcing the ESA 2000 under ESA Part XXII, ss. 99 through 101, or an employment standards officer, enforcing the ESA 2000 in a case where the Director has exercised the discretion under ESA Part XXII, s. 99(6), would not be able to issue a notice of contravention.

Director – s. 113(9)

113(9) This section does not apply with respect to a contravention of this Act by a director or officer of an employer that is a corporation.

Section 113(9) provides that this section does not apply with respect to a contravention of the ESA 2000 by a director or officer of an employer that is a corporation. In other words, neither an employment standards officer nor the Board could issue a notice of contravention for a violation of the ESA 2000 by a director or officer of a corporate employer.

ESA Part XXII Section 114 - Limitation Period Re Orders and Notices

Limitation Period Re Orders and Notices - s. 114(1)

114(1) An employment standards officer shall not issue an order to pay wages, fees or compensation or a notice of contravention with respect to a contravention of this Act concerning an employee,

(a) if the employee filed a complaint about the contravention, more than two years after the complaint was filed;

(b) if the employee did not file a complaint but another employee of the same employer did file a complaint, more than two years after the other employee filed his or her complaint if the officer discovered the contravention with respect to the employee while investigating the complaint; or

(c) if the employee did not file a complaint and clause (b) does not apply, more than two years after an employment standards officer commenced an inspection with respect to the employee's employer for the purpose of determining whether a contravention occurred.

This subsection was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009 to include a reference to orders to recover fees under s. 74.14.

Section 114(1) establishes a two-year limitation period on the Ministry of Labour's ability to issue an order for wages, fees or compensation or a notice of contravention. As no limitation is imposed with respect to an employment standards officer's ability to issue an order for reinstatement, an officer may exercise their discretion to issue an order for reinstatement more than two years after a complaint was filed or an inspection commenced. However, it is Program policy that officers should generally not issue an order for reinstatement beyond the two years, to avoid putting employees who would be beneficiaries of such an order in a better position than employees who would be beneficiaries of an order for compensation, fees or wages.

Because this is a discretionary matter, however, officers should be prepared to consider any arguments that an order for reinstatement should be issued that might be put forward notwithstanding the passage of two years. It may be that in exceptional cases, there are good reasons for issuing a reinstatement order after two years have passed.

It should also be noted that there is no limitation period with respect to the officer's ability to issue an order for compliance. As a result, an officer may exercise their discretion to issue an order for compliance more than two years after a complaint was filed or an inspection commenced. Because this is a discretionary matter, officers should be prepared to consider any arguments that an order for compliance should be issued notwithstanding the passage of two years. However, it is Program policy that officers should generally not issue an order for compliance where the employer is currently operating in compliance with the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

The two-year period for issuing an order for wages, fees or compensation or a notice of contravention commences with the following:

1. If employee A filed on a complaint, on the date the complaint was filed; or
2. If employee B had not filed a complaint but B's entitlement was discovered in the course of an investigation into the complaint filed by A, on the date on which A's complaint was filed; or
3. If C did not file a complaint but C's entitlement was discovered during an inspection (rather than an investigation into another employee's complaint), on the date the inspection was commenced.

This provision must be read in conjunction with s. 114(6) which provides that, for the purposes of applying s. 114 with respect to ESA Part XVIII.1, any reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Example 1:

- Employee A filed a complaint January 1, 2002
- Officer must issue order for wages, fees or compensation or notice of contravention on or before December 31, 2003

Example 2:

- Employee A filed a complaint January 1, 2002
- Employee B's entitlement discovered during course of investigation into A's complaint
- Officer must issue order for wages, fees or compensation or notice of contravention with respect to either or both A and B on or before December 31, 2003

Example 3:

- No complaint filed
- Officer commenced an inspection of workplace January 1, 2002
- During course of inspection, employee A, B and C entitlements are discovered
- Officer must issue order for wages, fees or compensation or a notice of contravention with respect to any or all of A, B and C on or before December 31, 2003

Complaints from Different Employees - s. 114(2)

114(2) If an employee files a complaint about a contravention of this Act by his or her employer and another employee of the same employer has previously filed a complaint about substantially the same contravention, subsection (1) shall be applied as if the employee who filed the subsequent complaint did not file a complaint.

Section 114(2) creates an exception to the rule in s. 114(1)(a) which provides that the two-year limitation period commences on the date the employee filed their complaint. Under s. 114(2), if two or more employees file complaints with respect to substantially the same contravention as defined in ESA Part XXII, s. 115, the date that the first employee filed their complaint will be the start date for the two-year limitation period, subject to s. 114(3).

For example, if employee A filed a complaint regarding overtime pay on December 31, 2001 and employee B subsequently filed a complaint for overtime pay on January 15, 2002, the employment standards officer will be required to issue an order to pay wages or notice of contravention with respect to either or both employee A and B on or before December 30, 2003.

This provision must be read in conjunction with s. 114(6) which came into force on November 6, 2009. Section 114(6) provides that, for the purposes of applying s. 114 with respect to ESA Part XVIII.1, any reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Exception - s. 114(3)

114(3) Subsection (2) does not apply if, prior to the day on which the subsequent complaint was filed, an employment standards officer had, with respect to the earlier complaint, already issued an order or advised the complainant that he or she was refusing to issue an order.

Section 114(3) creates an exception to the rule in s. 114(2), which provides that if two or more employees file complaints with respect to substantially the same contravention as defined in ESA Part XXII s. 115, the date that the first employee filed their complaint will be the start date for the two-year limitation period for issuing, amending or rescinding an order to pay wages, fees or compensation or notice of contravention in respect of not only the first complaint but the subsequent complaint as well.

Under s. 114(3), if the employment standards officer had already issued an order or advised the first complainant that they were refusing to issue an order before the subsequent complaint was filed, an order for wages, fees or compensation or a notice of contravention may be issued with respect to the subsequent complaint (even though it concerns substantially the same contravention as the first complaint) within two years of the date the subsequent complaint was filed.

Note that this provision must be read in conjunction with s. 114(6) which provides that, for the purposes of applying s. 114 with respect to ESA Part XVIII.1, any reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Example 1:

- Employee A filed a complaint for overtime pay against employer Z on December 31, 2009
- Employment standards officer issues an order to pay overtime wages to employer Z on March 15, 2010
- Employee B files a complaint for overtime pay against employer Z on April 1, 2010
- Employment standards officer has until March 31, 2012, to issue an order to pay wages or a notice of contravention with respect to B's complaint

It should be noted that s. 114(3) does not apply if the officer has issued only a notice of contravention (i.e., has not issued an order) with respect to A's complaint, prior to B filing a complaint for substantially the same contravention. Therefore, although the officer has issued a notice of contravention with respect to A's complaint before B's complaint was filed, the limitation period on the officer's ability to issue an order to pay wages, fees or compensation with respect to B's complaint is still the two-year period running from the date A's complaint was filed.

Example 2:

- Employee A filed a complaint for overtime pay against employer Z on December 31, 2009
- Employment standards officer issues a notice of contravention (but no order to pay overtime wages) to employer Z on March 15, 2010
- Employee B files a complaint for overtime pay against employer Z on March 31, 2010
- Employment standards officer has only two years from the date A filed their complaint (i.e., until December 30, 2011) to issue an order or a notice of contravention with respect to B's complain

Restriction on Rescission or Amendment - s. 114(4)

114(4) An employment standards officer shall not amend or rescind an order to pay wages, fees or compensation after the last day on which he or she could have issued that order under subsection (1) unless the employer against whom the order was issued and the employee with respect to whom it was issued consent to the rescission or amendment.

This subsection was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, which came into force on November 6, 2009, to include a reference to orders to recover fees under ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.14.

This provision must be read in conjunction with s. 114(6) which provides that, for the purposes of applying s. 114 with respect to ESA Part XVIII.1, any reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Section 114(4) states that the officer shall not amend or rescind their order to pay wages, fees or compensation after the two-year limitation period in s. 114(1) unless the consent of the employer to whom it was issued and the affected employee(s) is first obtained.

Note that s. 114(4) does not provide for the extension of the two-year limitation for amending or rescinding an order issued against anyone other than an employer or a client of a temporary help agency per s. 114(6). As a result, an order against a corporate director issued under ESA Part XXII, s. 106 or s. 107 could not be amended or rescinded after the two-year limitation period.

The authority for the officer to amend or rescind an order prior to the expiry of the limitation period springs from the Legislation Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 21, Sch F, which states:

54(1) Power to make regulations includes power to amend, revoke or replace them from time to time.

17. "regulation" means a regulation, rule, order or by-law of a legislative nature made or approved under an Act of the Legislature by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, a minister of the Crown, an official of the government or a board or commission all the members of which are appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, but does not include,

(a) a by-law of a municipality or local board as defined in the Municipal Affairs Act, or

(b) an order of the Ontario Municipal Board.

An example of where this section might be applicable is where, in a large and complex case, the employer, the officer, and the employees all agree that the quality of the investigation would be better if the officer carried it on past the two-year time limit. In such a case, with the agreement of the parties, an order could be issued for the amount that was already determined and then amended (in accordance with the subsequent portion of the investigation) after the two-year limit expired. Of course, in such a case, it would be advisable for the officer to obtain the necessary consents before the two-year period expired.

Same - s. 114(5)

114(5) An employment standards officer shall not amend or rescind a notice of contravention after the last day on which he or she could have issued that notice under subsection (1) unless the employer against whom the notice was issued consents to the rescission or amendment.

This section is similar to s. 114(4). It imposes a two-year time limit on the amendment or rescission of a notice of contravention issued under ESA Part XXII, s. 113 except where the officer has the consent of the employer against whom the notice was issued.

This provision must be read in conjunction with s. 114(6) which came into force on November 6, 2009. Section 114(6) provides that, for the purposes of applying s. 114 with respect to ESA Part XVIII.1, any reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Application to Part XVIII.1 - s. 114(6)

114(6) For the purposes of the application of this section in respect of Part XVIII.1, the following modifications apply:

1. A reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency.

2. A reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 which came into force on November 6, 2009.

Section 114(6) specifies that when s. 114 is applied with respect to ESA Part XVIII.1, any reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to the term employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee. For a discussion of the terms assignment employee, client and temporary help agency, see ESA Part I, s. 1(1). For a discussion of the definition of prospective assignment employee see ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.8(4).

ESA Part XXII Section 115 - Meaning of "Substantially the Same"

Meaning of "Substantially the Same" - s. 115(1)

115(1) For the purposes of section 114, contraventions with respect to two employees are substantially the same if both employees became entitled to recover money under this Act as a result of the employer's failure to comply with the same provision of this Act or the regulations or with identical or virtually identical provisions of their employment contracts.

Section 115(1) defines the term "substantially the same" as it is used in ESA Part XXII, s. 114(2). Section 114(2) provides that where more than one employee has filed a complaint about substantially the same contravention, the two-year limitation period on issuing, amending and rescinding an order for wages, fees or compensation begins to run on the date the first complaint was filed, subject to ESA Part XXII, s. 114(3).

Section 115(1) provides that contraventions will be considered to be substantially the same where the employees are entitled to recover money for contraventions that are violations of the same provision of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 or the regulations or identical or virtually identical provisions of the employees' employment contracts. However, this subsection must be read subject to s. 115(2).

This provision must also be read in conjunction with s. 115(1.1) which came into force on November 6, 2009. Section 115(1.1) provides that, when s. 115(1) is applied with respect to ESA Part XVIII.1, any reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Application to Part XVIII.1 - s. 115(1.1)

115(1.1) For the purposes of the application of subsection (1) in respect of Part XVIII.1, the following modifications apply:

1. A reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency.

2. A reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or prospective assignment employee.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, which came into force on November 6, 2009.

Section 115(1.1) provides that when s. 115(1) is applied with respect to a provision under ESA Part XVIII.1, any reference to an employer includes a reference to a client of a temporary help agency and any reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee. For a discussion of the terms assignment employee, client and temporary help agency, see ESA Part I, s. 1(1). For a discussion of the definition of prospective assignment employee, see ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.8(4).

Exception, Payment of Wages, Deductions - s. 115(2)

115(2) Despite subsection (1), contraventions with respect to two employees are not substantially the same merely because both employees became entitled to recover money under this Act as a result of a contravention of section 11 or 13 if the contravention of the section was with respect to wages due under different provisions of this Act or the regulations or under provisions of their employment contracts which are not identical or virtually identical.

Section 115(2) provides that where the contraventions are the same only in that they are a contravention of the payment of wages provision in ESA Part V, s. 11 or the prohibition against deductions from wages in ESA Part V, s. 13, they will not be treated as substantially the same.

As a result, s. 114(2), which allows the limitation period on issuing, amending or rescinding an order for wages, fees or compensation, or a notice of contravention with respect to more than one complaint, to run from the date the first complaint is filed (if subsequent complaints are for substantially the same contraventions) does not apply if the contraventions are substantially the same only because they are all contraventions of ESA Part V, ss. 11 and 13.

Example:

- Employee A files a complaint for unpaid overtime pay on November 1, 2009 (a contravention of s. 22 and s. 11)
- Employee B files a complaint for unpaid public holiday pay on December 1, 2009 (a contravention of s. 26 and s. 11)

In this example, employee A's complaint and employee B's complaint would not be treated as substantially the same. Therefore, the limitation period for issuing, amending or rescinding an order or notice of contravention would end on October 31, 2011, with respect to employee A's complaint and on November 30, 2011, with respect to employee B's complaint.

ESA Part XXIII - Reviews by the Board

Part XXIII of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 is subdivided into four sections. The first section consists of sections 116 to 120 and sets out the review process for orders for wages, compensation or reinstatement, orders against directors and compliance orders, as well as the review process for a refusal to issue an order for wages, compensation or reinstatement or compliance. It also provides for the settlement of matters referred to the Ontario Labour Relations Board ("OLRB" or the "Board") by labour relations officers. The second section consist of s. 121, which sets out the process for referrals to the Board by the Director of Employment Standards for a hearing to determine whether there has been a contravention of ESA Part XIII Benefit Plans. The third section consists of s. 122, which sets out the review process for Notices of Contravention. The fourth section consists of ss. 123 and 124, which set out general provisions respecting the Board, including the non-compellability of Board members, the registrar and Board employees to give evidence in civil and administrative proceedings, and the termination and re-institution of proceedings before the Board.

ESA Part XXIII Section 115.1 – Interpretation

115.1 In this Part, a reference to an employee includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, which came into force on November 6, 2009.

Section 115.1 establishes that any reference to an employee in Part XXIII of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 (i.e., ss. 116 to 124) includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee. For a discussion of the definition of "assignment employee", see ESA Part I, s. 1(1). For a discussion of the meaning of "prospective assignment employee", see ESA Part VXIII.1, s. 74.8(4).

This provision was necessary to make Part XXIII compatible with ESA Part XVIII.1.

ESA Part XXIII Section 116 - Review

Review - s. 116(1)

116(1) A person against whom an order has been issued under section 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104, 106, 107 or 108 is entitled to a review of the order by the Board if, within the period set out in subsection (4), the person,

(a) applies to the Board in writing for a review;

(b) in the case of an order under section 74.14 or 103, pays the amount owing under the order to the Director in trust or provides the Director with an irrevocable letter of credit acceptable to the Director in that amount; and

(c) in the case of an order under section 74.16, 74.17 or 104, pays the lesser of the amount owing under the order and $10,000 to the Director in trust or provides the Director with an irrevocable letter of credit acceptable to the Director in that amount.

Subsection 116(1) sets out the entitlement to a review of an order issued under the following sections:

- ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.14: Order to recover fees relating to fees charged by a temporary help agency
- ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.16: Order for compensation relating to certain prohibited activities of temporary help agencies
- ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.17: Order for compensation or reinstatement relating to a reprisal by the client of a temporary help agency
- ESA Part XXII, s. 103: Order to pay wages
- ESA Part XXII, s. 104: Order for compensation or reinstatement issued for contraventions of Part XIV Leaves of Absence, Part XVI Lie Detectors, Part XVII Retail Business Establishments and Part XVIII Reprisal

- ESA Part XXII, s. 106: Order against director(s)
- ESA Part XXII, s. 107: Further order against director(s), and
- ESA Part XXII, s. 108: Compliance order.

This subsection provides to a person against whom an order has been issued a right to a review of the order if the person applies in writing for a review and:

- If the order is an order to recover fees under ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.14 or an order to pay wages issued under ESA Part XXII, s. 103, the person against whom the order was issued has paid the full amount of the order to the Director of Employment Standards in trust or provided the Director with an irrevocable letter of credit in that amount that is acceptable to the Director; or
- If the order is an order against a temporary help agency to pay compensation under ESA Part XVIII.2, s. 74.16, an order against a temporary help agency client to pay compensation under s. 74.17 or an order against an employer to pay compensation under ESA Part XXII, s. 104, the person against whom the order was issued has paid the lesser of:
    - the full amount of the order and (2) $10,000 to the Director in trust, or
    - provided the Director with an irrevocable letter of credit in that amount that is acceptable to the Director.

Note that while orders to pay compensation, like orders to pay wages or recover fees, may cover more than one employee, the amount that must be paid into trust or covered by an irrevocable letter of credit in the case of a compensation order remains at $10,000 regardless of whether the order covers one or several employees.

Note that under s. 116(4), there is a 30-day time limit for applying for a review. Under s. 116(5), the Ontario Labour Relations Board may extend this time limit.

If an applicant for review wishes to provide an irrevocable letter of credit in favour of the Director of Employment Standards rather than paying an amount to the Director in trust in accordance with s. 116(1)(b) or (c), the letter of credit must be acceptable to the Director. While the Director may consider other factors, generally speaking the Director will find a letter of credit to be acceptable if:

- It is irrevocable
- It contains a condition providing for its automatic renewal following the expiry date of the letter of credit
- It contains no other conditions, i.e., conditions other than the automatic renewal condition
- It permits partial drawings, i.e., the Director can demand and receive payment of less than the entire amount specified in the letter of credit - this is in case the application for review of the order is partially successful and the Ontario Labour Relations Board reduces the amount of the order, and
- It is issued by a bank or similar financial institution having an office in Ontario.

An information sheet about letters of credit and a template letter of credit that employers may wish to use are available on the Ministry's website.

If an employer believes there are good reasons why the Director should consider a letter of credit to be acceptable despite it not meeting the above criteria, those reasons should be provided to the Director in writing and the Director will consider them. Note that s. 116(1) indicates that a letter of credit must be irrevocable - the Director has no authority to accept a letter of credit that is not irrevocable.

While a director of a corporate employer against whom an order to pay has been issued under ESA Part XXII, s. 106 or s. 107 may apply to have the order reviewed by the Board, there is no requirement that the amount of such an order be paid to the Director in trust or that a letter of credit be provided to the Director. Note also that in the case of a compliance order issued under ESA Part XXII, s. 108, because such an order does not require any payment, the person against whom the order was issued may apply to have the order reviewed by the Board without paying any amount to the Director in trust or providing a letter of credit.

Employee Seeks Review of Order - s. 116(2)

116(2) If an order has been issued under section 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103 or 104 with respect to an employee, the employee is entitled to a review of the order by the Board if, within the period set out in subsection (4), the employee applies to the Board in writing for a review.

Section 116(2) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009 to include references to orders issued under Part XVIII.1.

Section 116(2) establishes the right of an employee to request a review an order in respect of themselves that was issued under:

- ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.14: Order to recover fees relating to fees charged by a temporary help agency
- ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.16: Order for compensation relating to certain prohibited activities of temporary help agencies
- ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.17: Order for compensation or reinstatement relating to a reprisal by the client of a temporary help agency
- ESA Part XXII, s. 103: Order to pay wages
- ESA Part XXII, s. 104: Order for compensation or reinstatement issued for contraventions of Part XIV Leaves of Absence, Part XVI Lie Detectors, Part XVII Retail Business Establishments and Part XVIII Reprisal

See s. 116(3) for the right of an employee to review an employment standards officer's refusal to issue certain orders. Such employees include both complainants and non-complainants who are entitled to monies in accordance with the order.

The application for review must be made in writing and must be made within the 30-day period set out in s. 116(4). The requirement that the application for review be in writing is identical to that requirement in s. 116(1). This section should also be read in conjunction with s. 116(5), which allows the Board to extend the time for applying for a review if it considers it appropriate to do so. If an application is made after the 30-day time limit and if an extension is either not requested or not granted, the Board will dismiss the application.

Employees have no entitlement to a review of an order issued against a director under ESA Part XXII, s. 106 or s. 107. Likewise, employees have no entitlement to a review of a compliance order issued under ESA Part XXII, s. 108.

Note that on November 6, 2009, ESA Part XXIII, s. 115.1 came into force. It provides that any reference to an employee in Part XXIII, including s. 116, includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Employee Seeks Review of Refusal - s. 116(3)

116(3) If an employee has filed a complaint alleging a contravention of this Act or the regulations and an order could be issued under section 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104 or 108 with respect to such a contravention, the employee is entitled to a review of an employment standards officer's refusal to issue such an order if, within the period set out in subsection (4), the employee applies to the Board in writing for such a review.

Section 116(3) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009 to include references to orders issued under Part XVIII.1.

Subsection 116(3) provides employees who have filed a complaint alleging a contravention of the Act to review the employment standards officer's decision not to issue an order under:

- ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.14: Order to recover fees relating to fees charged by a temporary help agency
- ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.16: Order for compensation relating to certain prohibited activities of temporary help agencies
- ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.17: Order for compensation or reinstatement relating to a reprisal by the client of a temporary help agency
- ESA Part XXII, s. 103: Order to pay wages
- ESA Part XXII, s. 104: Order for compensation or reinstatement issued for contraventions of Part XIV Leaves of Absence, Part XVI Lie Detectors, Part XVII Retail Business Establishments and Part XVIII Reprisal
- ESA Part XXII, s. 108: Compliance order.

See s. 116(2) for the right of an employee to review certain orders that have been issued. The application for a review must be made in writing within the 30-day period set out in s. 116(4). The 30-day time period applies where an employment standards officer refuses to issue an order, as well as where there is a deemed refusal to issue an order under ESA Part XXII, s. 110(2).

The obligation to serve a letter advising a person of a refusal to issue an order is set out in ESA Part XXII, s. 110. Where there is a deemed refusal to issue an order under s. 110(2) because no order or refusal to issue an order is made within the two-year period from the date the complaint was filed, the letter advising the person of the refusal is deemed to have been served on the last day of the second year. This provision exists so that in the rare and unfortunate circumstance where the officer has neither issued an order nor refused to issue an order within the two-year period, the employee will still have the right to apply to have the matter put before the Board.

A refusal to issue an order has been held to include a situation where the officer rescinded an order previously made.

This subsection should also be read in conjunction with s. 116(5), which allows the Board to extend the time for applying for a review if it considers it appropriate to do so. If an application is made after the 30-day time limit and if an extension is either not requested or not granted, the Board will dismiss the application.

Non-complainants have no right of a review under this section. They do, however, have the right to file a complaint for investigation by an employment standards officer and may apply for a review of that officer's determination.

An employee, whether a complainant or non-complainant, has no right to a review of an officer's refusal to issue an order under ESA Part XXII, s. 106 or s. 107 against a director of a corporate employer. This is consistent with s. 116(2), which precludes an employee from seeking a review of an order against a director issued under s. 106 or s. 107.

Note that on November 6, 2009, ESA Part XXIII, s. 115.1 came into force. It provides that any reference to an employee in Part XXIII, including s. 116, includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Period for Applying for Review - s. 116(4)

116(4) An application for a review under subsection (1), (2) or (3) shall be made within 30 days after the day on which the order, letter advising of the order or letter advising of the refusal to issue an order, as the case may be, is served.

All orders issued under the Act must be served in accordance with ESA Part XXI, s. 95. Likewise, where the Act requires an officer to notify a person that an order has been issued, the requisite letter must also be served in accordance with s. 95. Lastly, a letter advising of the refusal to issue an order under ESA Part XVIII.1, ss. 74.14, 74.16, 74.17 or ESA Part XXII, ss. 103, 104, and 108 must also be served in accordance with s. 95. The following sections establish that service must comply with s. 95:

- Section 74.14 order to recover fees - s. 74.14(4)
- Letter advising of order under s. 74.14 - s. 74.14(4)
- Section 74.16 order for compensation, temporary help agency - s. 74.16(6)
- Letter advising of order under s. 74.16 - s. 74.16(4)
- Section 74.17 order re: client reprisal - s. 74.17(3)
- Letter advising of order under s. 74.17 - s. 74.17(3)
- Section 103 order for wages - s. 103(6)
- Letter advising of order under s. 103 - s. 103(7)
- Section 104 order for compensation - s. 104(4)
- Letter advising of order under s. 104 - s. 104(4)
- Section 106 order against a director - s. 106(1)
- Section 107 further order against directors - s. 107(1)
- Section 108 compliance order - s. 108(4)

- Letter advising of order under s. 108 - s. 108(4)
- Letter advising of refusal to issue order under ss. 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104 and 108, including deemed refusal - s. 110

Extension of Time - s. 116(5)

116(5) The Board may extend the time for applying for a review under this section if it considers it appropriate in the circumstances to do so and, in the case of an application under subsection (1),

(a) the Board has enquired of the Director whether the Director has paid to the employee the wages, fees or compensation that were the subject of the order and is satisfied that the Director has not done so; and

(b) the Board has enquired of the Director whether a collector's fees or disbursements have been added to the amount of the order under subsection 128(2) and, if so, the Board is satisfied that fees and disbursements were paid by the person against whom the order was issued.

Section 116(5) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 effective November 6, 2009 to include references to orders to recover fees issued under ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.14.

Section 116(5) provides that the Board may extend the 30-day time limit for applying for a review set out in s. 116(4) if it considers it appropriate to do so. This discretion is subject to two conditions:

1. The Board has enquired whether the Director of Employment Standards has already distributed to the employee the wages, fees or compensation assessed in the order and is satisfied that the Director has not; and
2. The Board has enquired whether collector's fees or disbursements were added to the amount of the order under ESA Part XXIV, s. 128(2) and, if so, is satisfied that they have been paid by the person against whom the order was issued.

The first condition ensures that the Board does not extend the time for applying for a review if, after the monies assessed as owing under the order had been paid into trust, the Director of Employment Standards had already paid those monies out to the employee(s). The second condition is new under the ESA 2000. It ensures that where the monies were not paid into trust within the 30-day time period for applying for a review and the Ministry has subsequently sent the file out for collection, a late application for review is not granted unless the collector's fees and disbursements have been added to the amount of the order and have been paid.

The Board has ruled that it will not consider a request for an extension by an employer or director unless they have paid into trust the monies directed by the order to pay, or provided the Director of Employment Standards with an acceptable, irrevocable letter of credit - see for example Nebenaigoching Heritage Inc v Jackson, 2014 CanLII 8971 (ON LRB). Because ESA Part XXIV, s. 128(2) deems collector's fees and disbursements (if any) to be included in the amount of the order, it is anticipated that the Board would likewise not consider a request for an extension unless the amount of any collector's fees or disbursement have also been paid into trust, or are reflected in an irrevocable letter of credit.

Requests for extension that were not granted:

- Where the employer filed the application 19 days late and could not provide a substantive reason for the delay – see Dynatec Corp. v Mondoux, 2004 CanLII 24179 (ON LRB)
- Where the employer filed the application more than three months late due to financial difficulties, legal issues and stress – 1714543 Ontario Inc. (Airport Strip Club) v Degroot, 2008 CanLII 56582 (ON LRB)
- Where the employer filed the applications more than two months late due to inadvertence because the employer was dealing with fifteen other matters involving the Ministry of Labour, all of which the employer managed to file on time – Unique Plus Associates Inc. v Owusu, 2005 CanLII 12700 (ON LRB)
- Where the employee did not receive the officer's reasons for decision because he was out of the country and upon receiving the documents waited a further six weeks before filing an application for review – Pozas v Sokolov (Rainbow Stucco Systems), 2009 CanLII 43034 (ON LRB)
- Where the employer did not pay the necessary funds into trust because of financial hardship. Note the ESA 2000 does not give any weight to the inconvenience that may be caused to an applicant by virtue of the requirement to pay a specific amount when filing its application for review – see 2030308 Ontario Inc. v Wherry, 2007 CanLII 5951 (ON LRB)
- Where the employer was aware of a potential calculation error days after the order to pay was issued and also aware of how to remedy the potential error, yet waited more than three months to file for review once it was contacted by a collection agency – 627148 Ontario Limited (Daily Care Health Services) v Langtiwan, 2008 CanLII 29404 (ON LRB)
- Where the Director of Employment Standards returned the employer's cheque for funds to be held in trust due to clerical error – 1869461 Ontario Inc (Regency Family Fitness) v Kirpal, 2015 CanLII 61368 (ON LRB)

Requests for extension that were granted:

- Where the employee's application was filed three weeks late because she was waiting to see if the employer sought a review and the employer delayed providing its email address – see Peters v Cypriot Homes Association, 2016 CanLII 45338 (ON LRB)
- Where the employer filed its application for review filed ten days late but had announced its intention to file an application for review and had paid the monies into trust in advance of the filing deadline – see Halley's Camps Inc. v Penner, 2016 CanLII 60452 (ON LRB)
- Where the employee did not receive the officer's decision because it was incorrectly delivered to his neighbour's house but made reasonable enquiries to determine what happened to it, obtained a copy of the decision and filed his application shortly thereafter – see Feng v Ping Li, 2015 CanLII 54406 (ON LRB)
- Where the employer sought the reduction of the amounts ordered by wage overpayments that were not discovered until the employment had ended. The Board granted the extension even though the application was filed several months late because the employer was not challenging the underlying orders, therefore the proceedings were not prejudicial to the parties – see Cristiano v 1509212 Ontario Limited operating as Oakridge Heating, 2016 CanLII 43411 (ON LRB)

Note that on November 6, 2009, ESA Part XXIII, s. 115.1 came into force. It provides that any reference to an employee in Part XXIII, including s. 116, includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Hearing - s. 116(6)

116(6) Subject to subsection 118(2), the Board shall hold a hearing for the purposes of the review.

Section 116(6) requires the Board to hold a hearing for the purposes of the s. 116 review, subject only to ESA Part XXIII, s. 118(2). Section 118(2) allows the chair of the Board to make rules that allow the Board not to hold a hearing to expedite decisions about the Board's jurisdiction. At the time of writing, no such rule had been made. Aside from this exception, the language of the section is mandatory: the Board shall hold a hearing. This means that the Board must hold a hearing into a s. 116 review application as long as the conditions of application are met, i.e., the 30-day time limit and payment of the amount ordered into trust or guaranteed by an irrevocable letter of credit.

In Jannock Limited and Armtec Inc. o/a Jannock Steel Fabricating Company et al v United Steelworkers of America et al (November 27, 1995), ESC 3506A (Randall), a case under the former Employment Standards Act, an employer argued that the powers exercised by the referees under the old s. 68 employer-review section were judicial and appellate in nature and offended s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, and were therefore ultra vires or void. The employer's argument was rejected by the referee on the basis that although the referees were performing judicial or quasi-judicial functions, they did so as a necessarily incidental aspect of the broader policy goal of providing minimum standards of protection. The referee also held that the hearing under s. 68 was in the nature of a review, rather than an appeal. It continues to be the Ministry's view that the hearings under s. 116 are in the nature of a review rather than an appeal.

Parties - s. 116(7)

116(7) The following are parties to the review:

1. The applicant for the review of an order.

2. If the person against whom an order was issued applies for the review, the employee with respect to whom the order was issued.

3. If the employee applies for the review of an order, the person against whom the order was issued.

4. If the employee applies for a review of a refusal to issue an order under section 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104 or 108, the person against whom such an order could be issued.

5. If a director of a corporation applies for the review, the applicant and each director, other than the applicant, on whom the order was served.

6. The Director.

7. Any other persons specified by the Board.

Section 116(7) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 effective November 6, 2009 to include references to orders under Part XVIII.1.

Section 116(7) identifies those who are considered to be parties to the s. 116 review, and empowers the Board to add relevant persons as parties to the review. Having the status of a party to a hearing means that one is bound by the decision of the Board. Also, only parties to the hearing can apply for judicial review of the Board's decision.

The fact that the Director of Employment Standards is automatically made a party to the hearing may impact on the relevance of the doctrine of issue estoppel in applications for review. Issue estoppel is a doctrine that parties sometimes use to prevent issues that have already been determined in a prior proceeding from being re-litigated. For example, an employer may try to raise the doctrine if an employee files an ESA 2000 complaint under the pregnancy leave provisions after she has already received an unfavourable decision on her application to the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario.

It may be that, because of s. 116(7), the doctrine of issue estoppel may never apply to applications for review. This is because in order for issue estoppel to apply, the issues and the parties to the prior proceeding must be the same as the issues and the parties to the proceedings in which the issue estoppel is raised. By virtue of s. 116(7), the parties to an application for review include the Director of Employment Standards. Because it is unlikely that the Director will have been a party to any prior proceedings (for example, a human rights complaint), the doctrine of issue estoppel could not apply - see Garner Travel International Inc. #744797 o/a Goliger's Travel v Parsonage (December 11, 1998), 3422-97-ES (ON LRB), which was a case under the former Employment Standards Act.

Note that this provision must be read in conjunction with ESA Part XXIII, s. 115.1 which provides that any reference to an employee in s. 116 includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Parties Given Full Opportunity - s. 116(8)

116(8) The Board shall give the parties full opportunity to present their evidence and make their submissions.

Section 116(8) states that the Board must give the parties to the hearing a full opportunity to present their evidence and submissions.

This section should be read subject to ESA Part XXIII, s. 118(2), which allows the chair of the Board to make rules regarding certain matters that may limit the extent of the Board's obligation to give full opportunity to the parties to present their evidence and submissions.

Practice and Procedure for Review - s. 116(9)

116(9) The Board shall determine its own practice and procedure with respect to a review under this section.

Section 116(9) states that Board shall determine its own practice and procedure with respect to a review under this section.

This section should be read in conjunction with ss. 116(6), (7) and (8), which require the Board to hold a hearing, permit parties to be added and, subject to ESA Part XXIII, s. 118(2), give parties full opportunity to present their evidence and make submissions.

ESA Part XXIII Section 117 - Money Held in Trust Pending Review

Money Held in Trust Pending Review - s. 117(1)

117(1) This section applies if money with respect to an order to pay wages, fees or compensation is paid to the Director in trust and the person against whom the order was issued applies to the Board for a review of the order.

This provision was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009 to include a reference to orders to recover fees issued under s. 74.14.

Subsection 117(1) indicates that s. 117 applies where money has been paid to the Director in trust with respect to an application for review of an order issued under s. 74.14 (for fees), s. 75.16 (for compensation (temporary help agency)), s. 75.17 (order re client reprisal), s. 103 (for wages) or s. 104 (for compensation).

Interest-Bearing Account - s. 117(2)

117(2) The money held in trust shall be held in an interest-bearing account while the application for review is pending.

This provision is similar in part to the corresponding section (s. 70(1)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 117(2) requires that any money paid to the Director in trust in the context of a s. 116 application for review of an order for wages, fees or compensation be put into an interest-bearing account pending the review. This includes the money paid in respect of wages, fees and compensation, as well as the administrative costs.

For information regarding the delegation of the Director's non- discretionary power to receive monies into trust under this section, see Delegation of Powers in the Manual for further information.

If Settlement - s. 117(3)

117(3) If the matter is settled under section 112 or 120, the amount held in trust shall, subject to subsection 112(6) or 120(6), be paid out in accordance with the settlement, with interest, calculated at the rate and in the manner determined by the Director under subsection 88(5).

This provision is similar in part to the corresponding sections (s. 69.1(6), 70(3) and s. 70(4)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 117(3) requires the Director of Employment Standards to distribute, in accordance with the terms of a settlement of a s. 116 (application for review) proceeding at the Ontario Labour Relations Board, any money that is held in trust subject to provisions regarding the payment of administrative costs as set out in ss. 112(6) and 120(6). Section 117(3) applies whether the settlement is facilitated by an employment standards officer under s. 112 or by a labour relations officer under s. 120.

The distribution of administrative costs on a settlement under s. 117(3) is subject to s. 112(6) and s. 120 (6). These sections provide that where there is a settlement of an order, the Director is still entitled to be paid a proportion of the administrative costs assessed under the order. That proportion is calculated as the amount paid to the employee under the settlement, divided by the amount assessed as owing to the employee under the order. For further discussion of s. 112(6) and s. 120(6) see ESA Part XXII and ESA Part XXIII.

Section 117(3) also requires the Director to pay interest on the monies paid out under the settlement that were held in trust (wages, compensation and administrative costs), at the rate and calculated in the manner determined by the Director under s. 88(5).

If No Settlement - s. 117(4)

117(4) If the matter is not settled under section 112 or 120, the amount paid into trust shall be paid out in accordance with the Board's decision together with interest calculated at the rate and in the manner determined by the Director under subsection 88(5).

This section is similar in part to the corresponding section (s. 70(1)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 117(4) sets out the Director's obligation to pay out the funds in trust once the Board renders its decision. The Director must distribute the funds as the Board's decision specifies. Subject to an order from the Board to the contrary, it is the general policy of the Trust Funds Unit of the Employment Practices Branch to hold the monies in trust for 30 days following the date of receipt of the decision, in case there is a judicial review and stay application by one of the parties.

The section further requires that the money be paid out according to the Board's decision, along with interest on the money at the rate and calculated in the manner determined by the Director under s. 88(5).

ESA Part XXIII Section 118 - Rules of Practice

Rules of Practice - s. 118(1)

118(1) The chair of the Board may make rules,

(a) governing the Board's practice and procedure and the exercise of its powers; and

(b) providing for forms and their use.

This provision is similar to the corresponding section (s. 68(11)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 118(1) allows the chair of the Board to make rules governing the Ontario Labour Relations Board's practice and procedure in s. 116 cases, and to provide for forms to be used.

The Board published new Rules of Procedure governing all matters that arise before it, including the former Employment Standards Act cases, in August 1999. The rules were subsequently amended and were also made applicable to cases under the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Among other things, rules made pursuant to this section:

- Require applications for review to be made on the Board's Form A-103;
- Require the Director of Employment Standards to provide the following documents or information to the Board within twenty (20) days after the date of the letter or notice from the Board informing the Director that an application has been filed:
    - The name and address of every affected employee, employer and director;
    - A copy of the employment standards officer's narrative report;

- A copy of the Order to Pay and officer's Worksheets, or the letter advising the employee of the Order, or the letter advising of the refusal to issue an Order or a copy of the Notice of Contravention, if applicable;
- Proof of payment to the Director in trust or a statement that an irrevocable letter of credit acceptable to the Director has been provided, if applicable;
- Verification (including the certificate of the employment standards officer made under s. 103(7) and/or s. 95(10) (at the time of writing, the Board's Rules referred to s. 113(4) of the ESA which is substantively the same as s. 95(11), but was repealed on November 6, 2009) that the Order or Notice of Contravention or the letter advising the employee of the Order, as applicable, as referred to in paragraph iii, have been served, together with precise information about how, when and where the documents were delivered;
- Verification that the letter referred to in paragraph iii, advising of the refusal under section 110 to issue an order has been served, together with precise information about how, when and where the documents were delivered; and
- In the case of an application under section 116(1) of the ESA, precise information as to whether the Director has paid the wages or compensation to the employee and whether a collector's fee or disbursements have been added to the amount of the Order under section 128(2) of the ESA, and if so, whether the fees and disbursements were paid by the persons to whom the Order was issued.

Where the Director fails to provide the information required under paragraph vii, in the way required by these Rules, the Board may be satisfied that the Director has not paid to the employees the wages or compensation that were the subject of the Order and the Board may be satisfied that any collector's fees or disbursements that may have been added to the amount of an Order under s. 128(2) of the ESA 2000 were paid by the person to whom the Order was issued.

- A responding party that files a response or other document with the Board must, at the same time, deliver copies to all other parties and must verify in writing that it has done so. For greater certainty, this Rule applies to the documents provided by the Director of Employment Standards.
- The Director of Employment Standards must file a response to an application to review a Compliance Order issued under s. 108 of the ESA 2000, and must file a response to an application to review a Notice of Contravention issued under s. 113 of the ESA. The response must comply with the Board rules and must be filed with the Board not later than twenty (20) days after the date of the Confirmation of Filing sent by the Board.
- Allow parties in applications for review to request the Board to reconsider its decision in their case. The request must be made in writing, including everything the party is relying on in support of the request, and be filed with the Board no more than 20 business days after the date of the Board's decision (except with permission of the Board). Generally, the Board will not reconsider its decision unless the requesting party has new evidence that would be practically conclusive of the case and that it could not have reasonably obtained earlier, or the party has new objections or arguments that it had no opportunity to raise earlier. The Board does not treat its reconsideration power as either a tool for a party to repair the deficiency of its case nor an opportunity to reargue it. If the requesting party relies on matter that could reasonably have been raised at the original hearing, the Board will not normally reconsider its decision.

Expedited Decisions - s. 118(2)

118(2) The chair of the Board may make rules to expedite decisions about the Board's jurisdiction, and those rules,

(a) may provide that the Board is not required to hold a hearing; and

(b) despite subsection 116(8), may limit the extent to which the Board is required to give full opportunity to the parties to present their evidence and make their submissions.

This provision is essentially unchanged from the corresponding section (s. 68(12)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

This section qualifies the requirements of ss. 116(6) and (8) for the Board to hold a hearing and give full opportunity to the parties to present their evidence and make submissions in a s. 116 review application. It provides that the chair of the Board can make rules to expedite decisions about the Board's jurisdiction that exempt those requirements. At the time of writing, no such rules had been made.

Effective Date of Rules - s. 118(3)

118(3) A rule made under subsection (2) comes into force on the day determined by order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

This provision is similar to s. 68(13) of the former Employment Standards Act. It was amended by the Good Government Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 19, effective June 22, 2006 to provide that only those rules made to expedite decisions about the Board's jurisdiction require an order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council to come into force.

Previously s. 118(3) required that all rules made by the chair of the Board under s. 118, including rules made under s. 118(1) regarding the Board's practice, procedure and exercise of its powers and providing for forms and their use, came into force on a date determined by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Conflict with Statutory Powers Procedure Act - s. 118(4)

118(4) If there is a conflict between the rules made under this section and the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, the rules under this section prevail.

This section is essentially the same as the corresponding section (s. 68(14)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

This section states that rules made by the chair of the Board under s. 118 apply, notwithstanding the requirements of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, RSO 1990, c S.22 ("SPPA").

The SPPA (as amended) Part 1 "Minimum Rules for Proceedings of Certain Tribunals", s. 3(1) states that, subject to s. 3(2), Part I applies to proceedings "by a tribunal in the exercise of a statutory power of decision conferred by or under an Act of the Legislature, where the tribunal is required by or under such Act or otherwise by law to hold or to afford to the parties to the proceeding an opportunity for a hearing before making a decision." In effect, the Part I SPPA rules for holding and conducting a hearing, do not apply if they conflict with the Board's rules.

Rules not Regulations - s. 118(5)

118(5) Rules made under this section are not regulations within the meaning of Part III (Regulations) of the Legislation Act, 2006.

This provision is essentially the same as the corresponding section (s. 68(15)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 118(5) simply states that rules made by the chair of the Board under s. 118 are not regulations within the meaning of Part III (Regulations) of the Legislation Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 21, Sch F.

ESA Part XXIII Section 119 - Powers of Board

Powers of Board - s. 119(1)

119(1) This section sets out the Board's powers in a review under section 116.

Section 119(1) states that s. 119 sets out the Ontario Labour Relations Board's powers with respect to a review under ESA Part XXIII, s. 116.

Persons to Represent Groups - s. 119(2)

119(2) If a group of parties have the same interest or substantially the same interest, the Board may designate one or more of the parties in the group to represent the group.

Section 119(2) provides that when there are multiple parties with the same or substantially the same interest in a hearing, the Board may designate one or more of the parties as representatives for the entire group.

Quorum - s. 119(3)

119(3) The chair or a vice-chair of the Board constitutes a quorum for the purposes of this section and is sufficient for the exercise of the jurisdiction and powers of the Board under it.

This section indicates that the chair or a vice-chair of the Board constitutes a quorum and is sufficient for the exercise of all the jurisdiction and powers of the Board under ESA Part XXIII, s. 116.

Posting of Notices - s. 119(4)

119(4) The Board may require a person to post and to keep posted any notices that the Board considers appropriate even if the person is not a party to the review.

Section 119(4) empowers the Board to order a person (which could include a trade union) to post notices that the Board considers appropriate, even if the person is not a party to the review. See the discussion of the definition of person in ESA Part I, s. 1. For example, where a director appeals an order issued under ESA Part XXII, s. 106, the Board could require the employer to post a notice even if the employer was not a party to the review hearing.

Same - s. 119(5)

119(5) If the Board requires a person to post and keep posted notices, the person shall post the notices and keep them posted in a conspicuous place or places in or upon the person's premises where it is likely to come to the attention of other persons having an interest in the review.

Section 119(5) provides that where a person has been required to post a notice under s. 119(4), it must be posted and kept posted in a conspicuous place or places in or upon the premises of that person where it is likely to come to the attention of other persons having an interest in, or who are affected by, the review.

Powers of Board - s. 119(6)

119(6) The Board may, with necessary modifications, exercise the powers conferred on an employment standards officer under this Act and may substitute its findings for those of the officer who issued the order or refused to issue the order.

Together with s. 119(7), this section sets out the Board's powers to arrive at a particular decision respecting an application for review.

The Board has all of the powers of an employment standards officer: it can make any order that an officer can make, and can order the production of records or documents that the officer could have ordered produced for inspection. In applications to review an order, the Board can amend, rescind or affirm the order, or issue a new order. Because the Board has all the powers of an officer, it is the Program's position that the Board can amend an order by increasing or decreasing the amount of the order. In applications to review the refusal to issue an order, the Board can issue an order or affirm the refusal.

The Board may also reconsider one of its own decisions - see the discussion at ESA Part XXIII, s. 118(1).

Dealing with Order - s. 119(7)

119(7) Without restricting the generality of subsection (6),

(a) on a review of an order, the Board may amend, rescind or affirm the order or issue a new order; and

(b) on a review of a refusal to issue an order, the Board may issue an order or affirm the refusal.

Section 119(7) more particularly spells out the Board's powers to issue a decision on a review as set out in s. 119(6).

Labour Relations Officers - s. 119(8)

119(8) Any time after an application for review is made, the Board may direct a labour relations officer to examine any records or other documents and make any inquiries it considers appropriate, but it shall not direct an employment standards officer to do so.

This section allows the Board to, during a review, direct one of its labour relations officers to examine records or conduct any other inquiries that the Board feels are necessary for the review. The Board is explicitly prohibited from directing an employment standards officer to do any of those things.

This section should be read in conjunction with s. 119(9), which states that ESA Part XXI, ss. 91 and 92, whichset out the powers of an employment standards officer as well as the compliance required of people involved in an investigation by an employment standards officer,apply with respect to labour relations officers directed under s. 119(8).

Powers of Labour Relations Officers - s. 119(9)

119(9) Sections 91 and 92 apply with necessary modifications with respect to a labour relations officer acting under subsection (8).

Section 119(9) states that ESA Part XXI, ss. 91 and 92, which set out the powers of employment standards officers and the compliance required of people involved in an investigation by an employment standards officer, apply to labour relations officers who are directed to examine records or conduct other inquiries under s. 119(8).

Wages or Compensation Owing - s. 119(10)

119(10) Subsection (11) applies if, during a review of an order requiring the payment of wages, fees or compensation or a review of a refusal to issue such an order,

(a) the Board finds that a specified amount of wages, fees or compensation is owing; or

(b) there is no dispute that a specified amount of wages, fees or compensation is owing.

Section 119(10) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009 to include a reference to orders to recover fees issued under s. 74.14.

Section 119(10) states that s. 119(11) applies if, during a review under ESA Part XXIII, s. 116, the Board finds any portion of the wages, fees or compensation is owing to the employee, or the parties agree such a portion is owing to the employee.

Note that on November 6, 2009, ESA Part XXIII, s.115.1 came into force. It provides that any reference to an employee in Part XXIII, including s. 119, includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Interim Order - s. 119(11)

119(11) The Board shall affirm the order to the extent of the specified amount or issue an order to the extent of that amount, even though the review is not yet completed.

Section 119(11) provides that where, under s. 119(10), the Board finds that a specified amount of wages, fees or compensation is owing to the employee, or the parties agree such an amount is owing to the employee, the order shall be affirmed to that extent or an order issued to that extent. As a result, that specified amount of wages, fees or compensation may be paid out before the hearing ends, or even before it begins.

Note that on November 6, 2009, ESA Part XXIII, s. 115.1 came into force. It provides that any reference to an employee in Part XXIII, including s. 119, includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

This section is designed to enable moneys to be paid out to an employee who is entitled to it as soon as possible. Note that the language of this section is mandatory: the Board is obliged to issue or affirm the order to a certain extent without delay. See Northern Air Systems v MacLean, 1999 CanLII 19493 (ON LRB), where the Board observed that none of the issues raised in the employer's written application would disentitle the employee to termination pay and, before a hearing was convened, directed that the monies held in trust be released to the employee in accordance with s. 68(23) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Interest - s. 119(12)

119(12) If the Board issues, amends or affirms an order or issues a new order requiring the payment of wages, fees or compensation, the Board may order the person against whom the order was issued to pay interest at the rate and calculated in the manner determined by the Director under subsection 88(5).

Section 119(12) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 effective November 6, 2009 to include a reference to orders to recover fees issued under ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.14.

Section 119(12) allows the Board to order employers, clients of temporary help agencies or directors to pay interest on any money they are ordered to pay in respect of an order for wages, fees or compensation at the rate and calculated in the manner determined by the Director under ESA Part XXI, s. 88(5).

Decision Final - s. 119(13)

119(13) A decision of the Board is final and binding upon the parties to the review and any other parties as the Board may specify.

Section 119(13) provides that the results of an application for review under ESA Part XXIII, s. 116 are final and binding. However this section must be read subject to the right to apply to the Board for reconsideration of that decision or to a judicial review of the decision in accordance with s. 119(14). See the discussion regarding reconsideration requests at ESA Part XXIII, s. 118(1).

Section 116(7) specifies upon whom the results of a review application are binding: the parties to the hearing, including parties whom the Board specified as such. Decisions under ESA Part XXIII, s. 116 have technically, then, no binding effect on anyone who was not a party. Furthermore, where the Board hears subsequent cases with different parties than those in the original hearing, the Board is not bound by the original decision, although it may have some persuasive value.

Judicial Review - s. 119(14)

119(14) Nothing in subsection (13) prevents a court from reviewing a decision of the Board under this section, but a decision of the Board concerning the interpretation of this Act shall not be overturned unless the decision is unreasonable.

This provision codifies the right to apply for a judicial review and establishes the standard of review. It provides that s. 119(13), which provides that the Board's decisions are final and binding, does not limit a court's ability to review a decision of the Board but also provides that the Board's decision with respect to the interpretation of the Act cannot be overturned unless it was unreasonable.

Standard of Review

In Halloran v Sargeant, 2002 CanLII 45029 (ON CA), the Ontario Court of Appeal held that a referee's decision should not be overturned unless it is unreasonable. The unreasonable standard is a somewhat less deferential standard, however, , the decision in question does not have to be correct in law.

In s. 119(4), the Legislature has expressly stated that a decision of the Ontario Labour Relations Board concerning the interpretation of the Act should not be overturned unless it is unreasonable. Interestingly, the Ontario Court of Appeal in the National Automobile, Aerospace Transportation and General Workers Union of Canada (C.A.W. - Canada) Local No. 27 v London Machinery Inc., 2006 CanLII 8711 (ON CA) ruled that the decision of an arbitrator concerning the interpretation of the Act should not be overturned unless it is patently unreasonable. In so ruling, the Court did not discuss s. 119(4).

Prematurity

Several court decisions have addressed the issue of premature judicial review applications; that is, when a party has gone directly to judicial review after the officer's decision, rather than first applying for a review of the decision under the former Employment Standards Act. All of the following decisions dealt with the former Employment Standards Act and before jurisdiction over reviews was transferred to the Ontario Labour Relations Board, but it is anticipated that these principles will apply to the ESA 2000 as well.

The courts have said that employers could not circumvent the former s. 68 review process (now ESA Part XXIII, s. 116), except in rare circumstances. Instead, employers were required to rely on the adjudication provisions of the former ESA before seeking judicial review. In Susan Shoe Industries Ltd. v Ricchiardi, 1994 CanLII 1313 (ON CA) the employer took the employment standards officer's order directly to the Divisional Court on judicial review, and the order was quashed. The officer appealed to the Court of Appeal, which restored the order and said that given the existence of specialized referees appointed under the former Employment Standards Act, "Except in exceptional circumstances . . . the courts ought not to interfere before the procedures under the Act have been exhausted." The court found that in this case there was no compelling reason to go outside of the normal processes provided for by the former Employment Standards Act and therefore the employer should have gone before a referee under the Act prior to seeking judicial review.

This issue was also considered in Stelco Inc. v. Nelson (October 21, 1994) (ON SC). The Divisional Court in Stelco followed the rule in Susan Shoe Industries Ltd. v Ricchiardi and said that the administrative processes under the former Employment Standards Act were not to be circumvented; that is, matters were not to be brought to judicial review prematurely. In 949198 Ontario Inc. v Koskie (March 4, 1993) (ON SC) the courts considered the issue of what would constitute exceptional circumstances such that parties could seek judicial review without first following the course contemplated by the former Employment Standards Act. Such exceptional circumstances included the applicant's being unable because of financial hardship to put money into trust in application for a s. 68 (now ESA Part XXIII, s. 116) appeal; personal liability at issue for an individual employer; or a case where there was a severe breach of the principles of natural justice.

None of these exceptional circumstances was present in either the Stelco case or Susan Shoe case.

In the 550551 Ontario Ltd. v Framingham, 1991 CanLII 7388 (ON SC) case, however, one of these exceptional circumstances existed: that is, personal liability of an individual with regard to an order to pay of several million dollars. In that case, the court allowed judicial review of the employment standards officer's order, even without a referee's decision.

ESA Part XXIII Section 120 – Settlement Through Labour Relations Officer

Settlement Through Labour Relations Officer – s. 120(1)

120(1) The Board may authorize a labour relations officer to attempt to effect a settlement of the matters raised in an application for review under section 116.

Subsection 120(1) provides that the Ontario Labour Relations Board may authorize a labour relations officer to try to settle any cases that are before the Board under ESA Part XXIII, s. 116.

Certain Matters not Bar to Settlement – s. 120(2)

120(2) A settlement may be effected under this section even if,

(a) the employment standards officer who issued the order or refused to issue the order does not participate in the settlement discussions or is not advised of the discussions or settlement; or

(b) the review under section 116 has started.

Subsection 120(2) confirms that a settlement of an application for review proceeding at the Ontario Labour Relations Board is valid and binding even in the two circumstances that are set out:

1. The employment standards officer whose decision is the subject of the proceeding does not participate or is not advised of the settlement; or
2. The proceeding has already started.

Compliance Orders - s. 120(3)

120(3) A settlement respecting a compliance order shall not be made if the Director has not approved the terms of the settlement.

This provision precludes the settlement by a labour relations officer of a compliance order issued by an employment standards officer under ESA Part XXII, s. 108 in the absence of the approval of the Director of Employment Standards.

Note that where a settlement is effected under ESA Part XXII, s. 112, that settlement will not void a compliance order. This is because such settlements are made without the approval of the officer - the parties are only required to inform the officer of the settlement.

Effect of Settlement – s. 120(4)

120(4) If the parties to a settlement under this section do what they agreed to do under the settlement,

(a) the settlement is binding on the parties;

(b) if the review concerns an order, the order is void; and

(c) the review is terminated.

This subsection sets out the effect of settling a matter raised in an application for review under ESA Part XXIII, s. 116. Any settlement entered into by the parties to the proceeding is binding, if the parties to the settlement do what they have agreed to do under the settlement. Such a settlement is binding despite the prohibition against contracting out of the ESA Part III, s. 5. Note that the persons that may enter into such a settlement include an agent acting on behalf of the employee. Subsection 120(4) also provides that where the settlement concerns the review of an order, that order is void and the review is terminated.

Subsection 120(4) must be read subject to s. 120(5), which allows a settlement to be voided if an employee can demonstrate to the Board that they entered into the settlement as a result of fraud or coercion.

Note that on November 6, 2009, ESA Part XXIII, s. 115.1 came into force. It provides that any reference to an employee in Part XXIII, including s. 116 and s. 120, includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Application to Void Settlement – s. 120(5)

120(5) If, upon application to the Board, the employee demonstrates that he or she entered into the settlement as a result of fraud or coercion,

(a) the settlement is void;

(b) if the review concerned an order, the order is reinstated; and

(c) the review shall be resumed.

Subsection 120(5) sets out the situation in which a settlement of an application for review under ESA Part XXIII, s. 116 proceeding at the Ontario Labour Relations Board can be set aside. It provides that if upon an application to the Board, the employee can demonstrate that they entered into the settlement as a result of fraud or coercion, the settlement will be voided, the employment standards officer's order (if any) is restored, and the proceeding that was terminated shall be resumed.

Note that on November 6, 2009, ESA Part XXIII, s. 115.1 came into force. It provides that any reference to an employee in Part XXIII, including ss. 116 and 120, includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

In George v 1008810 Ontario Ltd., 2004 CanLII 33763 (ON LRB), an employee sought to have a settlement agreement made pursuant to s. 120 regarding her claim for termination and vacation pay treated as null and void on the basis that the employer refused to pay the agreed-to amount. The Board concluded that as there had been no fraud or coercion, but rather non-compliance by one party, the settlement could not be voided under s. 120(5). Instead, the Board reasoned that the appropriate remedy was to require the employer to pay the claimant the money she was owed pursuant to the settlement and held that if the employer did not comply, the Board could issue an order to pay under ESA Part XXIII, s. 119(6) together with an administrative fee. Failure to pay that order would result in collection proceedings. The Board also noted that the employee was free to pursue any other claims against the employer including the human rights complaint she had discontinued in accordance with the settlement. (Note: the Program does not agree with the OLRB's view that the remedy for non-compliance with a settlement term is to enforce the settlement. It is the Program's position that the wording of s. 120(4) provides that where a party does not do what they agreed to do under the terms of the settlement, the settlement fails and the review application picks up where it left off.)

In Dufresne v InnVest Hotels GP Ltd. operating as Comfort Inn – Innvest Hotels Group, 2017 CanLII 4460 (ON LRB), the claimant sought to void a settlement agreement on the basis of coercion by the labour relations officer. The Board noted that coercion is the use of force to persuade an unwilling person to do something. The Board set out a number of principles, including: advising a party about the risks and likelihoods of a case does not amount to coercion; the fact that an offer is time-limited does not make it coercive; and where a party understands that they have a choice of accepting a settlement or proceeding to a hearing, the Board is not likely to find that the party was coerced into settling. The Board found that the LRO's explanation of the potential risks of not signing a settlement did not constitute coercion, and that the claimant had already agreed to the settlement in principle before even speaking to the LRO. Therefore, the Board upheld the settlement agreement.

Distribution – s. 120(6)

120(6) If the order that was the subject of the application required the payment of money to the Director in trust, the Director,

(a) shall distribute the amount held in trust with respect to wages, fees or compensation in accordance with the settlement; and

(b) despite clause 4(b), is entitled to be paid,

i) that proportion of the administrative costs that were ordered to be paid that is the same as the proportion of the amount of wages, fees or compensation ordered to be paid that the employee is entitled to receive under the settlement, and

ii) that proportion of the collector's fees and disbursements that were added to the amount of the order under subsection 128 (2) that is the same as the proportion of the amount of wages, fees or compensation ordered to be paid that the employee is entitled to receive under the settlement.

Subsection 120(6) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009 to include a reference to orders to recover fees issued under ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.14. The Fair Workplaces, Better Jobs Act, 2017, SO 2017, c 22 further amended this provision to provide for the recovery of a proportion of a collector's fees and disbursements based on the amount an employee is entitled to receive under a settlement made under s. 116.

Clause 120(6)(b)(i) allows the Director of Employment Standards to distribute, in accordance with the terms of a settlement of an application for review proceeding at the Ontario Labour Relations Board pursuant to ESA Part XXIII, s. 116, any money respecting wages, fees or compensation that is held in trust and all or part of the administrative costs that were paid. Out of the money held in trust that is attributable to administration costs, the Director is entitled to be paid an amount that is proportionate to the amount of wages, fees or compensation ordered to be paid and the amount the employee is entitled to receive under the settlement, despite the fact that the order is voided by the settlement under s. 120(4)(b).

Clause 120 (6)(b)(ii) establishes the director's entitlement to be paid a proportionate amount of the collectors' fees and disbursements when a settlement is reached under an application for review proceeding under ESA Part XXIII, s. 116 between an employer and an employee if the order has been assigned to a collector. Out of the money that is attributable to the collection fees, the Director is entitled to be paid an amount that is proportionate to the amount of wages, fees, or compensation ordered to be paid to the employee and the amount the employee is entitled to receive under the settlement.

While this provision states that it is the Director who is entitled to the collector's fees and disbursements, the Director may authorize the collector to exercise the powers specified in an authorization and collect the fees and disbursements under ESA Part XXIV, s. 127.

For example, consider an order issued for $1,000 in wages plus a $100 administrative fee. Assuming the director has authorized the collector to collect 20% of the order to pay in respect of the collector's fees, in accordance with ESA Part XXIV, s. 127(3), a collection fee of $220 (($1,000 + $100) x 20%) would be added to the order. If the employer and the employee enter into a settlement under s. 120 of $800 (80% of the amount owing to the employee), the collector would be entitled to a proportional amount of the fee in the amount of $176 ($220 x 80%=$176), based on the settlement reached.

Note that on November 6, 2009, ESA Part XXIII, s. 115.1 came into force. It provides that any reference to an employee in ESA Part XXIII, including ss. 116 and 120, includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

See also the discussion of ESA Part XXII, s. 112(6) regarding the payment of administrative costs and recovery of collector's fees and disbursements, where a settlement is reached between the parties

Subsection 120(6) should be read in conjunction with ESA Part XXIII, s. 117(3), which requires the Director to pay interest on any money, which will include any administrative costs, they are required to hold in trust and that is subsequently paid out under a settlement, at the rate and calculated in the manner determined by the Director under ESA Part XXI, s. 88(5).

ESA Part XXIII Section 121 - Referral

Referral - s. 121(1)

121(1) If, as a result of a complaint or otherwise, the Director comes to believe that an employer, an organization of employers, an organization of employees or a person acting directly on behalf of any of them may have contravened Part XIII (Benefit Plans), the Director may refer the matter to the Board.

This provision is similar to the corresponding section (s. 33(4) and s. 69) of the former Employment Standards Act, although the authority for the Director of Employment Standards to refer matters to the Ontario Labour Relations Board extended to potential contraventions of any provision of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, not just those involving Part XIII (Benefit Plans) provisions.

Section 121(1) gives the Director discretionary power to refer an issue to the Ontario Labour Relations Board where the Director believes that an employer, an organization of employers or employees, or a person acting directly on their behalf, may have contravened Part XIII. Part XIII prohibits discrimination in the provision of employment related benefit plans (pension, life insurance, disability insurance, health insurance or a health benefit plan) on the basis of age, sex, marital status or same-sex partnership status of an employee.

The section allows a referral to the Board whether the Director's belief arose as the result of a complaint or not. For example, the referral could be made on the basis of information discovered in the course of an inspection. Since this is not an application for review, but rather a reference by the Director, the power to set it into motion has not been delegated to the Board. The Director retains that power.

Hearing - s. 121(2)

121(2) If a matter is referred to the Board under subsection (1), the Board shall hold a hearing and determine whether the employer, organization or person contravened Part XIII.

This section is similar to the general reference provisions in s. 69 of the former Employment Standards Act, that it makes it mandatory for the Board to hold a hearing if a matter regarding a contravention of Part XIII (Benefit Plans) has been referred (under s. 121(1)) to it by the Director.

Under the former Employment Standards Act, the s. 69 hearing was compared to a "reference" by at least one referee, Ritchie and Associates v Flemming et al (January 2, 1980), ESC 676 (Franks): that is, to a procedural hearing at common law, where a judge decides, at the request of one of the parties involved, a point of law or issue of fact that has been the subject of dispute. One case said that a hearing under s. 69 was more a fact-finding exercise than an adversarial proceeding: John Patrick Sheridan et al v United Steelworkers of America, Local 4440 (May 6, 1994), ESC 94-97 (Novick).

Generally, the employer in a s. 69 hearing did not bear the same degree of onus as it did in a s. 68 employer review hearing under the former Employment Standards Act.

Powers of Board - s. 121(3)

121(3) If the Board determines that the employer, organization or person acting directly on behalf of an employer or organization contravened Part XIII, the Board may order the employer, organization or person,

(a) to cease contravening that Part and to take whatever action the Board considers necessary to that end; and

(b) to compensate any person or persons who may have suffered loss or been disadvantaged as a result of the contravention.

This provision is similar to the corresponding sections (s. 69(5) and (6)) of the general reference provisions in the former Employment Standards Act.

Under this section, the Board may determine that there has been a contravention of Part XIII (Benefit Plans) of the Act and may direct that person to cease contravening Part XIII and take whatever action is necessary to do so. For example, the Board's order making power could extend to a corporate director acting on behalf of the employer. However, the order compensating the employee(s) for any loss or disadvantage in that case would be subject to the provisions regarding director's liability in Part XX of the Act.

The Board may also order the person to compensate any person or persons who may have suffered a loss or been disadvantaged because of the contravention.

Certain Review Provisions Applicable - s. 121(4)

121(4) Subsections 116(8) and (9), 118(1) and (3) to (5), 119(1) to (5), (8), (9), (13) and (14) and 120(1), (4) and (5) apply, with necessary modifications, with respect to a proceeding under this section.

This section provides that certain sections of s. 116 (applications for review), s. 118 (the Board's rules of practice), s. 119 (the powers of the Board) and s. 120 (settlements through labour relations officers) apply, with necessary modifications, with respect to the s. 121 reference. Those sections are:

- Section 116(8): Board's obligation to give parties full opportunity to present evidence and make submissions,
- Section 116(9): Board's power to determine its own practice and procedure
- Section 118(1): power of the chair of the Board to make rules governing the Board's practice and procedure and providing for forms
- Section 118(3): rules made under s. 118 come into force on a day determined by an order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council
- Section 118(4): rules made under s. 118 apply despite a conflict with the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, RSO 1990, c S.22
- Section 118(5): rules made under s. 118 are not regulations within the meaning of Part III (Regulations) of the Legislation Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 21, Sch F
- Section 119(1): provides that s. 119 applies to a review under s. 116 (and as modified by s. 121(4), to a reference under s. 121)
- Section 119(2): power of the Board to designate one or more parties who have substantially the same interest in a proceeding to be a representative of the entire group
- Section 119(3): stipulates what constitutes a quorum of the Board
- Section 119(4): power of the Board to require the posting of notices
- Section 119(5): power of the Board to require notices be posted and kept posted in a conspicuous place
- Section 119(8): Board may direct a labour relations officer to examine records and conduct other inquiries
- Section 119(9): states that ss. 91 and 92 (powers of employment standards officer's and compliance required of people involved in an investigation by an employment standards officer) apply to labour relations officers directed under s. 119(8)
- Section 119(13): provides that the decision of the Board is final and binding
- Section 119(14): allows for the Board's decision to be reviewed by the courts and decision not to be overturned unless it is unreasonable
- Section 120(1): allows the Board to authorize a labour relations officer to effect a settlement
- Section 120(4): settlement effected by labour relations officer is binding and the order is void and review is terminated if parties do what they have agreed to do

- Section 120(5): settlement effected by labour relations officer may be voided, the order (if any) reinstated and the review resumed, if the employee demonstrates it was entered into as a result of fraud or coercion

ESA Part XXIII Section 122 - Review of Notice of Contravention

Review of Notice of Contravention - s. 122(1)

122(1) A person against whom a notice of contravention has been issued under section 113 may dispute the notice if the person makes a written application to the Board for a review,

(a) within 30 days after the date of service of the notice; or

(b) if the Board considers it appropriate in the circumstances to extend the time for applying, within the period specified by the Board.

This provision was introduced in the Employment Standards Act, 2000. It establishes a right of review of a notice of contravention issued under ESA Part XXII, s. 113. It limits the right of review to a person against whom the notice was issued. As a result, an employee has no right to apply for a review of a notice of contravention issued against their employer or a client of a temporary help agency.

ESA Part XXIII, s. 121(1) requires that the application be made within 30 days after the date the notice is served. See the discussions of the service requirements for a notice of contravention in ESA Part XXII, s. 113(3) and ESA Part XXI, s. 95.

In contrast to an employer's application for review of an order issued under ESA Part XXII, s. 103 or s.104, there is no requirement to pay the amount of the notice into trust.

The Ontario Labour Relations Board may extend the time for applying for a review, as it considers appropriate.

Note that ESA Part XXIII, s. 115.1 provides that any reference to an employee in Part XXIII includes a reference to an assignment employee or a prospective assignment employee.

Hearing - s. 122(2)

122(2) The Board shall hold a hearing for the purposes of the review.

This section imposes a mandatory obligation on the Board to hold a hearing for a review of a notice of contravention if the application has been made within 30 days of the date of the service of the notice or within the extended period allowed by the Board under s. 122(1).

Parties - s. 122(3)

122(3) The parties to the review are the person against whom the notice was issued and the Director.

Section 122(3) identifies the parties to a review of a notice of contravention as the person against whom the notice was issued, and the Director of Employment Standards.

Onus - s. 122(4)

122(4) On a review under this section, the onus is on the Director to establish, on a balance of probabilities, that the person against whom the notice of contravention was issued contravened the provision of this Act indicated in the notice.

Section 122(4) places the onus on the Director of Employment Standards to show, on a balance of probabilities, that the person against whom the notice of contravention was issued has contravened the provision of the ESA 2000 that was the subject of the notice.

The balance of probabilities standard of proof is consistent with the standard applied in proceedings before an administrative tribunal and in civil proceedings. It requires the Director to convince the Board that the evidence shows it is more likely than not that the person against whom the notice was issued committed the contravention. This standard is less onerous than that applied in criminal proceedings where it must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the crime was committed.

Decision - s. 122(5)

122(5) The Board may,

(a) find that the person did not contravene the provision and rescind the notice;

(b) find that the person did contravene the provision and affirm the notice; or

(c) find that the person did contravene the provision but amend the notice by reducing the penalty.

This section lists the findings that the Board may make on a review of a notice of contravention. The Board has three options:

1. It may find that the person did not commit the contravention and so rescind the notice;
2. It may find that the person did commit the contravention and affirm the notice; or
3. It may find that the person committed the contravention but amend the notice by reducing the penalty.

The third option may apply, for example, where the officer has imposed a higher penalty for the contravention on the basis that it was the second time the employer had contravened the same provision of the ESA 2000 (for a contravention of ss. 2, 15 or 16) or has multiplied the penalty by the number of employees affected (for a contravention of a provision other than ss. 2, 15 or 16). See O Reg 289/01 for the schedule of penalties. In either case, the Board could reduce the penalty if, for example, it determined that this was only the first time the employer contravened ss. 2, 15 or 16 of the ESA 2000 or, in the case of a contravention of a provision other than ss. 2, 15 or 16, that the number of employees affected was less than the number found by the employment standards officer.

The Board's options do not extend to amending the notice by increasing the penalty. For example, where the employer standards officer had assessed the penalty based on a finding that an employer had contravened ESA Part XI, s. 33 with respect to five employees and on review, the Board determines that, in fact, 10 employees were affected by the contravention of s. 33, the Board could not increase the penalty.

Collector's Fees and Disbursements - s. 122(6)

122(6) If the Board finds that the person contravened the provision and if it extended the time for applying for a review under clause (1) (b),

(a) before issuing its decision, it shall enquire of the Director whether a collector's fees and disbursements have been added to the amount set out in the notice under subsection 128(2); and

(b) if they have been added to that amount, the Board shall advise the person of that fact and of the total amount, including the collector's fees and disbursements, when it issues its decision.

This section provides that where the Board has extended the time for applying for a review and subsequently finds that the person applying for the review contravened the ESA 2000, it must enquire whether any collector's fees and disbursements were added to the notice under ESA Part XXIII, s. 128(2). If they were, the Board must advise the person to whom the notice was issued that such amounts are owing, when it issues its decision.

ESA Part XXIV, s. 128(2) provides that when a file is sent for collection, the collector's fees and disbursements are added to the amount of the order or notice of contravention.

Certain Provisions Applicable - s. 122(7)

122(7) Subsections 116(8) and (9), 118(1), (3), (4) and (5) and 119(3), (4), (5), (13) and (14) apply, with necessary modifications, to a review under this section.

This section provides that certain sections of ESA Part XXIII, s. 116 (applications for review), ESA Part XXIII, s. 118 (the Board's rules of practice) and ESA Part XXIII, s. 119 (the powers of the Board) apply, with necessary modifications, with respect to a review of a notice of contravention. Those sections are:

- Section 116(8) - Board's obligation to give parties full opportunity to present evidence and make submissions;
- Section 116(9) - Board's power to determine its own practice and procedure;
- Section 118(1) - power of the chair of the Board to make rules governing the Board's practice and procedure and providing for forms;
- Section 118(3) - rules made under s. 118 come into force on a day determined by an order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council;
- Section 118(4) - rules made under s. 118 apply despite a conflict with the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, RSO 1990, c S.22;
- Section 118(5) - rules made under s. 118 are not regulations within the meaning of Part III (Regulations) of the Legislation Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 21, Sch F;
- Section 119(3) - stipulates what constitutes a quorum of the Board;
- Section 119(4) - power of the Board to require the posting of notices;
- Section 119(5) - power of the Board to require notices be posted and kept posted in a conspicuous place;
- Section 119(13) - provides that the decision of the Board is final and binding;
- Section 119(14) - allows for the Board's decision to be reviewed by the courts and decision not to be overturned unless it is unreasonable.

ESA Part XXIII Section 123 - Persons from Board not Compellable

Persons from Board not Compellable - s. 123(1)

123(1) Except with the consent of the Board, none of the following persons may be compelled to give evidence in a civil proceeding or in a proceeding before the Board or another board or tribunal with respect to information obtained while exercising his or her powers or performing his or her duties under this Act:

1. A Board member.

2. The registrar of the Board.

3. An employee of the Board.

This provision is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 69.2(1)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 123(1) provides that the consent of the Board is required before an Ontario Labour Relations Board member, the Registrar, or any employee of the Board can be required to give testimony in any civil proceeding, Board proceeding, or proceeding before another tribunal respecting any information obtained in the exercise of his or her powers or the discharge of his or her duties under the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Note that criminal proceedings are not covered by this provision.

Non-Disclosure - s. 123(2)

123(2) A labour relations officer who receives information or material under this Act shall not disclose it to any person or body other than the Board unless the Board authorizes the disclosure.

This provision is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 69.2(2)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 123(2) ensures the confidentiality of settlement discussions with the Ontario Labour Relations Board's labour relations officers by providing that information or material revealed during the course of dealing with a labour relations officer is not to be disclosed unless authorized by the Board. See for example a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, Hammond v 748403 Ontario Limited o/a Happy Landing Truck Stop (June 7, 1999), 3160-98-ES (ON LRB).

ESA Part XXIII Section 124 - When no Decision After Six Months

When No Decision After Six Months - s. 124(1)

124(1) This section applies if the Board has commenced a hearing to review an order, refusal to issue an order or notice of contravention, six months or more have passed since the last day of hearing and a decision has not been made.

Section 124(1) provides that s. 124 applies if the Ontario Labour Relations Board has not made a decision six months after the last day of a hearing on a review of an order issued under any the following sections:

- Section 74.14 order to recover fees

- Section 74.16 order for compensation, temporary help agency
- Section 74.17 order re client reprisal
- Section 103 order for wages
- Section 104 order for compensation or reinstatement
- Section 106 order against a director
- Section 107 further order against directors
- Section 108 compliance order

Section 124 also applies if the Board has not made a decision six months after the last day of a hearing on a review of a notice of contravention under s. 122 or on a review under s. 116 of a refusal to issue an order under the any of the following sections of the Employment Standards Act, 2000:

- Section 74.14 order to recover fees
- Section 74.16 order for compensation, temporary help agency
- Section 74.17 order re: client reprisal
- Section 103 order for wages
- Section 104 order for compensation or reinstatement
- Section 108 compliance order

This section provides the parties and the Board with a mechanism to ensure a timely decision on a review.

Termination of Proceeding - s. 124(2)

124(2) On the application of a party in the proceeding, the chair may terminate the proceeding.

Where the condition in s. 124(1) is present, s. 124(2) enables the chair to terminate the proceeding on the application of a party in the proceeding.

Re-institution of Proceeding - s. 124(3)

124(3) If a proceeding is terminated according to subsection (2), the chair shall re-institute the proceeding upon such terms and conditions as the chair considers appropriate.

Section 124(3) allows the chair to re-institute proceedings it has terminated under s. 124(2), on terms and conditions it considers appropriate. The re-institution of proceedings under this section will enable the chair to direct, for example, that a decision be made within a specified period of time.

ESA Part XXIV - Collection

The intent of this Part is to facilitate the collection of money owed under the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

ESA Part XXIV Section 125 - Third Party Demand

Third Party Demand – s. 125(1)

125(1) If an employer, director or other person is liable to make a payment under this Act and the Director believes or suspects that a person owes money to or is holding money for, or will within 365 days owe money to or hold money for the employer, director or other person, the Director may demand that the person pay all or part of the money that would otherwise be payable to the employer, director or other person to the Director in trust on account of the liability under this Act.

Subsection 125(1) was amended by the Strengthening and Improving Government Act, 2015 effective December 3, 2015.

Section 125 is the source of the authority to issue third party demands to persons the Director of Employment Standards believes or suspects owe money to, or are holding money, or will within 365 days owe or hold money for an employer, corporate director, or another person who is liable to make a payment under the Employment Standards Act, 2000. This includes the power to issue third party demands to persons owing money to or holding money for an employer, corporate director, or another person who owes money in respect of a notice of contravention under ESA Part XXII, s. 113.

Subsection 125(1) sets out the conditions that must be met before a third party demand may be issued. The conditions are as follows:

1. The Director must believe or suspect that a person owes money to, or is holding money for, or will within 365 days owe money to or hold money for an employer, a corporate director or other person (such as a client of a temporary help agency); and
2. The employer, corporate director, or other person must be liable to make a payment under the ESA 2000.

Therefore, the Director has the discretion to issue a third party demand on the basis of a reasonable belief that a person owes money to or is holding money or will, within the next 365 days, owe or hold money for another person who is liable to make a payment under the ESA 2000.

An employer, corporate director, or other person is liable to make a payment under the ESA 2000 where:

1. An order to pay is issued to it under ss. 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104, 106 or s. 107 as the case may be, or a notice of contravention is issued under s. 113.

Generally, no third party demand would be issued unless the employer, corporate director, or other person does not comply with the order or notice and does not apply for a review of the order or notice within 30 days of service, and no settlement of the order has been effected under s. 112, s. 120 or s. 129. However, in extraordinary circumstances and with the manager's approval a third party demand may also be issued after the order/notice has been issued but before the 30-day appeal period has expired. Because a review application may ultimately be filed in such cases, any money collected within 30 days after the order/notice is issued is held in trust for a reasonable period of time after the expiry of the appeal period.

2. An order to pay is issued or amended by the Board under s. 119 or 121, or a notice of contravention is affirmed or amended under s. 122, and the employer, corporate director, or other person does not comply with the order or notice as required by the Board.

If the above criteria are met and a third party demand is issued, the demand will indicate that the money the third party owes to the employer, corporate director or other person is, in whole or in part, to be paid to the Director of Employment Standards, in trust, for payment of monies owed under the ESA 2000. For example, a third party demand may be issued to a bank where money is held in an account of a person who owes money under the ESA 2000.

The power to issue third party demands for payment has been delegated under ESA Part XXI, s. 88. For further information see Delegation of Powers. In addition, under ESA Part XXIV, s. 127, the Director of Employment Standards has given to the Ministry of Finance, the Ministry's authorized collector, authorization to exercise this power on the Director's behalf for purposes of those orders and notices assigned to them.

Same, Duration – s. 125(1.1)

125(1.1) A demand made under subsection (1) remains in force for 365 days from the date the notice of the demand is served.

This subsection provides that a demand issued under s. 125(1) remains in force for 365 days from the date the notice of the demand is served.

Client of Temporary Help Agency - s. 125(2)

125(2) Without limiting the generality of subsection (1), that subsection applies where a client of a temporary help agency owes money to or is holding money for a temporary help agency.

Subsection 125(2) indicates that s. 125(1) applies where a client of a temporary help agency owes money to, or is holding money for, a temporary help agency. For a discussion of the definition of the term "client" when used in relation to a temporary help agency, see ESA Part I, s. 1(1).

Service - s. 125(3)

125(3) The Director shall, in accordance with section 95, serve notice of the demand on the person to whom the demand is made.

This provision states that the Director must serve the notice of the third party demand on the person to whom the demand is being made, in accordance with ESA Part XXI, s. 95.

The power with respect to service of a third party demand has been delegated under ESA Part XXI, s. 88. For further information see Delegation of Powers. In addition, under ESA Part XXIV, s. 127, the Director of Employment Standards has authorized collectors to exercise this power, for the purposes of recovering monies owing in respect of those files assigned to them for collection.

Discharge - s. 125(4)

125(4) A person who pays money to the Director in accordance with a demand under this section is relieved from liability for the amount owed to or held for the employer, director or other person who is liable to make a payment under this Act, to the extent of the payment.

Subsection 125(4) was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 effective November 6, 2009 to replace the former s. 125(3).

Subsection 125(4) provides that a third party is automatically relieved of liability, upon compliance with a demand under this provision, to the extent of the payment. (No receipt is required to discharge the liability.) The liability may relate to an amount owed to or held for an employer, director or other person who is liable to make a payment under the ESA 2000.

For example, if a bank owes $1,000 to an employer who is liable to pay the Ministry $700 on behalf of an employee entitled under the Act, the Ministry can serve a third party demand on the bank for the $700. Where the bank pays the Ministry the $700 pursuant to the demand, the bank is immediately relieved of its obligation to pay that amount to the employer. However, the bank would still be obliged to pay the employer the remaining $300.

Liability - s. 125(5)

125(5) If a person who receives a demand under this section makes a payment to the employer, director or other person with respect to whom the demand was made without complying with the demand, the person shall pay to the Director an amount equal to the lesser of,

(a) the amount paid to the employer, director or other person; and

(b) the amount of the demand.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 effective November 6, 2009 to replace the former s. 125(4).

Subsection 125(5) sets out the consequences of failure to comply with a third party demand. If a third party who has received a demand under s. 125 pays money to the employer, corporate director, or other person who is liable to make a payment under the ESA 2000 before complying with the demand, the third party will be required to pay to the Director the lesser of:

- The amount paid out to the employer or corporate director; or
- The amount originally demanded.

ESA Part XXIV Section 125.1 – Security for Amounts Owing 125.1 If the Director considers it advisable to do so, the Director may accept security for the payment of any amounts owing under this Act in any form that the Director considers satisfactory.

Section 125.1 is a new provision added by the Fair Workplaces, Better Jobs Act, 2017, SO 2017, c 22, effective January 1, 2018.

This new provision is an additional tool to assist in the collection of outstanding orders and penalties under the Employment Standards Act, 2000. Section 125.1 allows the Director to accept security in any form satisfactory to the Director for the payment of amounts owing under the ESA 2000. The Director of Employment Standards, in accordance with ESA Part XXIV, s. 127, may authorize a collector to exercise this power.

ESA Part XXIV Section 125.2 – Warrant

125.2 If an order to pay money has been made under this Act, the Director may issue a warrant, directed to the sheriff for an area in which any property of the employer, director or other person liable to make a payment under this Act is located, to enforce payment of the following amounts, and the warrant has the same force and effect as a writ of execution issued out of the Superior Court of Justice:

1. The amount the order requires the person to pay, including any applicable interest.
2. The costs and expenses of the sheriff.

Section 125.2 is a new provision added by the Fair Workplaces, Better Jobs Act, 2017, SO 2017, c 22, effective January 1, 2018.

This new provision is an additional tool to assist in the collection of outstanding orders and penalties under the Employment Standards Act, 2000. It enables the Director to issue a warrant to a sheriff to enforce payment of an order to pay and the costs and expenses of the sheriff. A Director's warrant has the same force and effect as a Writ of Seizure and Sale issued by a Superior Court of Justice Registrar under rule 60 of RRO 1990, Reg 194 Rules of Civil Procedure and is filed with the relevant sheriff (enforcement office). The Director of Employment Standards, in accordance with ESA Part XXIV, s. 127, may authorize a collector to exercise this power.

ESA Part XXIV Section 125.3 – Lien on Real and Personal Property

125.3 (1) If an order to pay money has been made under this Act, the amount the order requires the person to pay, including any applicable interest is, upon registration by the Director in the proper land registry office of a notice claiming a lien and charge conferred by this section, a lien and charge on any interest the employer, director or other person has in the real property described in the notice.

125.3 (2) If an order to pay money has been made under this Act, the amount the order requires the person to pay, including any applicable interest is, upon registration by the Director with the registrar under the Personal Property Security Act of a notice claiming a lien and charge under this section, a lien and charge on any interest in personal property in Ontario owned or held at the time of registration or acquired afterwards by the employer, director or other person liable to make a payment.

125.3 (3) The lien and charge conferred by subsection (1) or (2) is in respect of all amounts the order requires the person to pay, including any applicable interest at the time of registration of the notice or any renewal of it and all amounts for which the person afterwards becomes liable while the notice remains registered and, upon registration of a notice of lien and charge, the lien and charge has priority over,

(a) any perfected security interest registered after the notice is registered;

(b) any security interest perfected by possession after the notice is registered; and

(c) any encumbrance or other claim that is registered against or that otherwise arises and affects the employer, director or other person's property after the notice is registered.

125.3 (4) For the purposes of subsection (3), a notice of lien and charge under subsection (2) does not have priority over a perfected purchase money security interest in collateral or its proceeds and is deemed to be a security interest perfected by registration for the purpose of the priority rules under section 30 of the Personal Property Security Act.

125.3 (5) A notice of lien and charge under subsection (2) is effective from the time assigned to its registration by the registrar and expires on the fifth anniversary of its registration unless a renewal notice of lien and charge is registered under this section before the end of the five-year period, in which case the lien and charge remains in effect for a further five-year period from the date the renewal notice is registered.

125.3 (6) If an amount payable under this Act remains outstanding and unpaid at the end of the period, or its renewal, referred to in subsection (5), the Director may register a renewal notice of lien and charge; the lien and charge remains in effect for a five-year period from the date the renewal notice is registered until the amount is fully paid, and is deemed to be continuously registered since the initial notice of lien and charge was registered under subsection (2).

125.3 (7) Where an employer, director or other person liable to make a payment has an interest in real property but is not shown as its registered owner in the proper land registry office,

(a) the notice to be registered under subsection (1) shall recite the interest of the employer, director or other person liable to make a payment in the real property; and

(b) a copy of the notice shall be sent to the registered owner at the owner's address to which the latest notice of assessment under the Assessment Act has been sent.

125.3 (8) In addition to any other rights and remedies, if amounts owed by an employer, director or other person liable to make a payment remain outstanding and unpaid, the Director has, in respect of a lien and charge under subsection (2),

(a) all the rights, remedies and duties of a secured party under sections 17, 59, 61, 62, 63 and 64, subsections 65 (4), (5), (6), (6.1) and (7) and section 66 of the Personal Property Security Act;

(b) a security interest in the collateral for the purpose of clause 63 (4) (c) of that Act; and

(c) a security interest in the personal property for the purposes of sections 15 and 16 of the Repair and Storage Liens Act, if it is an article as defined in that Act.

125.3 (9) A notice of lien and charge under subsection (2) or any renewal of it shall be in the form of a financing statement or a financing change statement as prescribed under the Personal Property Security Act and may be tendered for registration under Part IV of that Act, or by mail addressed to an address prescribed under that Act.

125.3 (10) A notice of lien and charge or any renewal thereof is not invalidated nor is its effect impaired by reason only of an error or omission in the notice or in its execution or registration, unless a reasonable person is likely to be materially misled by the error or omission.

125.3 (11) Subject to Crown rights provided under section 87 of that Act, nothing in this section affects or purports to affect the rights and obligations of any person under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (Canada).

125.3 (12) In this section,

"real property" includes fixtures and any interest of a person as lessee of real property.

Section 125.3 is a new provision added by the Fair Workplaces, Better Jobs Act, 2017, SO 2017, c XX, effective January 1, 2018.

This new provision is an additional tool to assist in the collection of outstanding orders and penalties under the Employment Standards Act, 2000. It allows the Director to register a real property lien directly on title for identifiable real property. It also allows the Director to register a Personal Property Security Act, RSO 1990, c P.10 lien and charge on personal property for amounts owing on an order to pay and any applicable interest. The Director of Employment Standards, in accordance with ESA Part XXIV, s. 127, may authorize a collector to exercise these powers.

ESA Part XXIV Section 126 - Filing of Order

Filing of Order - s. 126(1)

126(1) If an order to pay money has been made under this Act, the Director may cause a copy of the order, certified by the Director to be a true copy, to be filed in a court of competent jurisdiction.

This provision permits the Director of Employment Standards to certify a copy of an order as a true copy and to file a certified true copy of an order to pay in court.

The effect of the section is to enable an order to pay money under the Employment Standards Act, 2000 to be enforced through the Ontario courts. The provision grants to the Director a status comparable to that of a judgment creditor, thereby making available such creditors' remedies as writs of seizure and sale, garnishments, and directions to enforce by sheriffs or bailiffs.

This section is the basis of a large part of the collection process under the Act. Once the certified copy of the order to pay is filed, it can be enforced like a judgment of the court, which means that the Rules of Civil Procedure respecting the enforcement of judgments apply.

Section 126(1) states that the order to pay may be filed in a "court of competent jurisdiction". There are two aspects to the concept of competent jurisdiction. Courts are subject to both monetary and geographical limits. If the order is for $25,000 or less, the order to pay money may be filed with the Small Claims Court located in the geographic area or areas where the employer resides or carries on business. If the amount exceeds the Small Claims Court threshold, then the Superior Court of Justice is the proper level of court in which to file the certified copy of the order; the certified copy may be filed with the Superior Court in any geographical area of the province. A writ of seizure and sale must be filed with the office of the Sheriff or Small Claims Court bailiff in the jurisdiction where the employer or director has assets, in order that enforcement may be carried out.

The Director's power to certify a copy of an order as a true copy and to file a certified copy of an order to pay money has been delegated under s. 88 of the Act. See Delegation of Powers for further information. In addition, under s. 127, the Director of Employment Standards has authorized collectors to exercise this power, for the purposes of recovering monies owing in respect of those files assigned to them for collection.

Advice to Person Against Whom Order was Made - s. 126(2)

126(2) If the Director files a copy of the order, he or she shall serve a letter in accordance with section 95 upon the person against whom the order was issued advising the person of the filing.

Under s. 126(2), where a certified true copy of an order to pay is filed, the Director of Employment Standards is required to serve a copy of the order on the employer or corporate director, so that the affected parties are notified of the collection action against them.

This non-discretionary power has been delegated under s. 88 of the Act. See Delegation of Powers for further information. In addition, under s. 127, the Director of Employment Standards has authorized collectors to exercise this power for the purposes of recovering monies owing in respect of those files assigned to them for collection.

Certificate Enforceable - s. 126(3)

126(3) The Director may enforce an order filed under subsection (1) in the same manner as a judgment or order of the court.

Section 126(3) states that once filed with a court of competent jurisdiction, a certified copy of an order to pay is enforceable in the same manner as a judgment or order of the court.

This authority has been delegated under s. 88 of the Act. See Delegation of Powers for further information. In addition, under s. 127, the Director of Employment Standards has authorized collectors to exercise this power for the purposes of recovering monies

126(4) Subsections (1), (2) and (3) apply, with necessary modifications, to a notice of contravention.

Section 126(4) establishes that, as with orders to pay, the Director, or his or her delegate, may certify a copy of a notice of contravention as a true copy and file a certified true copy of a notice of contravention with a court of competent jurisdiction, in accordance with s. 126(1). Where this is done, an advisory letter must be served in accordance with s. 126(2). The notice of contravention, once filed, may be enforced as an order of the court in accordance with s. 126(3).

The Director's power to certify a copy of a notice of contravention as a true copy and to file a certified copy of the notice has been delegated under s. 88 of the Act. See Delegation of Powers for further information. In addition, under s. 127, the Director of Employment Standards has authorized collectors to exercise this power, for the purposes of recovering monies owing in respect of those files assigned to them for collection.

ESA Part XXIV Section 127 - Director May Authorize Collector

Director May Authorize Collector – s. 127(1)

127(1) The Director may authorize a collector to exercise those powers that the Director specifies in the authorization to collect amounts owing under this Act or under an order made by a reciprocating state to which section 130 applies.

Subsection 127(1) permits the Director to authorize collectors to collect amounts owing under the Employment Standards Act, 2000, whether for employees or for the Minister of Finance for amounts owed to the former Employee Wage Protection Program or with respect to a notice of contravention, or to the Director for administrative costs. The Director's authorization also extends to the collection, in Ontario, of amounts owed under legislation of reciprocating states to which ESA Part XXIV, s. 130 applies.

Subsection 127(1) must be read in conjunction with the definition of "collector" in ESA Part I, s. 1(1). Collector means a person (other than an employment standards officer) who is authorized by the Director of Employment Standards to collect amounts owing under the ESA 2000.

Same - s. 127(2)

127(2) The Director may specify his or her powers under sections 125, 125,1, 125.2, 125.3, 126, 130 and subsection 135(3) and the Board's powers under section 19 of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act in an authorization under subsection (1).

Subsection 127(2) identifies the powers that the Director of Employment Standards may authorize a collector to exercise. Any of the following powers, as the Director specifies in an authorization under s. 127(1), may be exercised in collecting amounts owing under the ESA 2000:

Powers of the Director of Employment Standards

- Section 125: Power to issue third party demands
- Section 125.1: Power to accept security for amounts owing under the ESA 2000
- Section 125.2: Power to issue a Warrant directed to the sheriff, to enforce payment of the following amounts:
    - The amount the order requires the person to pay, including any applicable interest
    - The costs and expenses of the sheriff
- Section 125.3: Powers to register a lien in the proper land registry office in an attempt to enforce an order and obtain outstanding amounts owing under the ESA 2000 and/or register a lien and charge on personal property under the Personal Property Security Act, RSO 1990, c P.10.
- Section 126: Power to file a certified copy of an order or notice of contravention in court
- Section 130: Power to file a certified copy of an order issued from a reciprocating jurisdiction and to recover costs of enforcing the order
- Subsection 135(3): Power to enforce an order of the court by filing a copy of it in a court of competent jurisdiction

Powers of the Ontario Labour Relations Board under the SPPA

- Section 19 of the Statutory Powers Procedure Act, RSO 1990, c S.22 (“SPPA”): Power to file a certified copy of the Board's decision in court

For reference, s. 19 of the SPPA states:

19(1) A certified copy of a tribunal's decision or order in a proceeding may be filed in the Ontario Court (General Division) by the tribunal or by a party and on filing shall be deemed to be an order of that court and is enforceable as such.

(2) A party who files an order under subsection (1) shall notify the tribunal within 10 days after the filing.

(3) On receiving a certified copy of a tribunal's order for the payment of money, the sheriff shall enforce the order as if it were an execution issued by the Ontario Court (General Division).

Therefore, if given this power by the Director of Employment Standards, the collector may file a certified copy of an order, notice of contravention or a decision of the Board in court and direct the sheriff or bailiff to take enforcement measures, such as seizure and sale of assets.

Costs of Collection – s. 127(3)

127(3) Despite clause 22 (a) of the Collection and Debt Settlement Services Act, the Director may also authorize the collector to collect a reasonable fee or reasonable disbursements or both from each person from whom the collector seeks to collect amounts owing under this Act.

Subsection 127(3) states that the Director of Employment Standards may authorize the collector to collect a reasonable fee or reasonable disbursements, or both, from the persons from whom the collector is seeking to collect amounts owing under the ESA 2000, despite clause 22(a) of the Collection and Debt Settlement Services Act, RSO 1990, c. C.14.

Clause 22(a) of the Collection and Debt Settlement Services Act states that no collection agency or collector shall "collect or attempt to collect, on its own behalf or for a person for whom it acts, any money in addition to the amount owing by the debtor.”

It is necessary for s. 127(3) to create an exception to the prohibition in s. 22(a) of the Collection and Debt Settlement Services Act for fees authorized under s. 127(3), since those fees are deemed, under s. 128 (2), to be added to the amount of the order, and must be collected from the person owing the money under the ESA 2000.

This provision must be read in conjunction with ESA Part XXII, s. 112(6)(b) and ESA Part XXIII, s. 120(6)(b)(ii) which limit the recovery of collector’s fees and disbursements to a proportion that is the same as the proportion of the amount of wages, fees or compensation ordered to be paid that the employee is entitled to receive as a result of a settlement under s. 112 or s. 120.

Same - s. 127(4)

127(4) The Director may impose conditions on an authorization under subsection (3) and may determine what constitutes a reasonable fee or reasonable disbursements for the purposes of that subsection.

Subsection 127(4) provides that the Director may impose conditions on the authorization of a collector and may determine what constitutes a reasonable fee or disbursements in the circumstances.

This provision must be read in conjunction with ESA Part XXII, s. 112(6)(b) and ESA Part XXIII, s. 120(6)(b)(ii) which limit the recovery of collector's fees and disbursements to a proportion that is the same as the proportion of the amount of wages, fees or compensation ordered to be paid that the employee is entitled to receive as a result of a settlement under s. 112 or s. 120.

Exception Re Disbursements - s. 127(5)

127(5) The Director shall not authorize a collector who is required to be registered under the Collection and Debt Settlement Services Act to collect disbursements.

Subsection 127(5) means that the Director of Employment Standards may not authorize a collector who is required to register under the Collection and Debt Settlement Services Act to collect disbursements, although the Director may authorize such a collector to collect fees. The difference between fees and disbursements is that the latter consist of expenses that the collector has incurred, (photocopying, gas, long distance charges), whereas the former represent the payment for the collector's services, whether a flat fee, a commission or some other consideration.

Subsection 4(1) of the Collection and Debt Settlement Services Act states:

No person shall carry on the business of a collection agency unless the person is registered by the Registrar under this Act.

In s. 1(1) of the Collection and Debt Settlement Services Act, "collection agency" and "collector" are defined as follows:

"collection agency" means,

(a) a person, other than a collector, who obtains or arranges for payment of money owing to another person or who holds oneself out to the public as providing such a service,

(b) any person who sells or offers to sell forms or letters represented to be a collection system or scheme,

(c) a person, other than a collector, who provides debt settlement services, or

(d) a person who purchases debts that are in arrears and collects them

"collector" means an individual employed, appointed or authorized by a collection agency to collect debts for the agency, to deal with or trace debtors for the agency or to provide debt settlement services to debtors on behalf of the agency

Generally, a collector working for a collection agency must be registered under the Collection and Debt Settlement Services Act and therefore, the Director of Employment Standards may not authorize such a collector to collect disbursements.

Note that s. 2 of the Collection and Debt Settlement Services Act states that, subject to the regulations, the Act (and hence the requirement for registration) does not apply to certain persons who might be involved in collections work, such as, for example, lawyers and banks; thus, if the collector falls within s. 2, the Director could authorize that collector to collect both fees and disbursements.

Disclosure – s. 127(6) and (7)

127(6) The Director may disclose or allow to be disclosed information collected under the authority of this Act or the regulations to a collector for the purpose of collecting an amount payable under this Act.

(7) Any disclosure of personal information made under subsection (6) shall be deemed to be in compliance with clause 42 (1) (d) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

Subsections 127(6) and (7) allow the Director to disclose information collected under the authority of the Act or the regulations to a collector for the purpose of collecting an amount payable under the ESA 2000.

Any disclosure of personal information made by the Director under s. 127(6) is deemed to be in compliance with clause 42(1)(d) of the Freedom of Information and Protection and Privacy Act, RSO 1990, c F.31 (“FIPPA”).

Clause 42(1)(d) of FIPPA states:

An institution shall not disclose personal information in its custody or under its control except,

(d) where disclosure is made to an officer, employee, consultant or agent of the institution who needs the record in the performance of their duties and where disclosure is necessary and proper in the discharge of the institution’s functions;

ESA Part XXIV Section 128 - Collector's Powers

Collector's Powers - s. 128(1)

128(1) A collector may exercise any of the powers specified in an authorization of the Director under section 127.

Subsection 128(1) permits the collector to exercise the powers specified by the Director of Employment Standards. It must be read in conjunction with ESA Part XXIV, s. 127(2), which enumerates the enforcement powers that the Director may delegate to a collector in an authorization provided under ESA Part XXIV, s. 127(1).

Fees and Disbursements Part of Order - s. 128(2)

128(2) If a collector is seeking to collect an amount owing under an order or notice of contravention, any fees and disbursements authorized under subsection 127(3) shall be deemed to be owing under and shall be deemed to be added to the amount of the order or notice of contravention.

Subsection 128(2) provides that the authorized fees and disbursements of the collector will be deemed to be part an order or notice of contravention that has been assigned to a collector. This means that the employer, corporate director or person who owes the money under the Employment Standards Act, 2000 will be responsible for the costs of collection. It also means that the same mechanisms under the ESA 2000 used to enforce and collect an order for wages or compensation (including administrative costs) and penalties assessed under a notice of contravention, can also be used to enforce and collect the collector's authorized fees and disbursements.

Distribution of Money Collected Re Wages or Compensation - s. 128(3)

128(3) Subject to subsection (4) a collector,

(a) shall pay any amount collected with respect to wages, fees or compensation,

i. to the Director in trust, or

ii. with the written consent of the Director, to the person entitled to the wages, fees or compensation;

(b) shall pay any amount collected with respect to administrative costs to the Director;

(c) shall pay any amount collected with respect to a notice of contravention to the Minister of Finance; and

(d) may retain any amount collected with respect to the fees and disbursements.

Subsection 128(3) sets out how the collector must disburse the money collected. It only applies where the collector has collected the full amount owing to all persons under the order or notice of contravention, including the person in favour of whom the order was written, the Director (in regard to administrative costs), the collector (in regards to fees and disbursements) and the Minister of Finance (in regard to a notice of contravention). Interest on money collected will be allocated according to the corresponding principal amount, except for interest on the collection fees and disbursements collected, which will be allocated according to the terms of the contract or other agreement between the Director and the collector. Where less than the full amount is collected, the provisions of s. 128(4) apply instead.

The Director's power to provide a collector with written consent to pay directly to a person the wages or compensation they are entitled to has been delegated under ESA Part XXI, s. 88. See Delegation of Powers for further information.

Apportionment - s. 128(4)

128(4) If the money collected is less than the full amount owing to all persons including the Director and the collector, the money shall be apportioned among those to whom it is owing in the proportion each is owed and paid to them.

Subsection 128(4) states what happens when the amount collected is less than the full amount of the order including administrative costs and the collector's fee. In this situation, the money is to be distributed to each person including the Director of Employment Standards and the collector in proportion to the amount they are owed.

Disclosure by Collector – s. 128 (5) and (6)

128(5) A collector may disclose to the Director or allow to be disclosed to the Director any information that was collected under the authority of this Act or the regulations for the purpose of collecting an amount payable under this Act.

(6) Any disclosure of personal information made under subsection (5) shall be deemed to be in compliance with clause 42 (1) (d) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

Subsections 128(5) and (6) allow the collector to disclose information collected under the authority of the ESA 2000 or the regulations to the Director if the information was collected for the purposes of collecting an amount payable under the ESA 2000

Any disclosure of personal information made by the Director under s. 128(6) is deemed to be in compliance with clause 42(1)(d) of the Freedom of Information and Protection and Privacy Act, RSO 1990, c F.31 (“FIPPA”).

Clause 42(1)(d) of FIPPA states:

An institution shall not disclose personal information in its custody or under its control except,

(d) where disclosure is made to an officer, employee, consultant or agent of the institution who needs the record in the performance of their duties and where disclosure is necessary and proper in the discharge of the institution’s functions;

ESA Part XXIV Section 129 - Settlement by Collector

Settlement by Collector - s. 129(1)

129(1) A collector may agree to a settlement with the person from whom he or she seeks to collect money but only with the written agreement of,

(a) the person to whom the money is owed; or

(b) in the case of a notice of contravention, the Director.

Section 129(1) states that a collector appointed by the Director may effect a settlement of the amount owing under the Employment Standards Act, 2000 if the creditor (generally the employee) agrees in writing to the settlement. The provision also states that in the case of a notice of contravention, the collector may effect a settlement of the amount owing under the Act if the Director agrees in writing to the settlement.

This provision should be read together with subsection 129(2), which restricts the authority of the collector to effect a settlement where the person to whom the money is owed would receive less than 75 per cent of the money to which he or she is entitled.

The Director's power to agree in writing to a settlement in the case of a notice of contravention has been delegated under s. 88 of the Act. See Delegation of Powers for further information.

Restriction - s. 129(2)

129(2) A collector shall not agree to a settlement under clause (1)(a) without the Director's written approval if the person to whom the money is owed would receive less than,

(a) 75 per cent of the money to which he or she was entitled; or

(b) if another percentage is prescribed, the prescribed percentage of the money to which he or she was entitled.

This provision is substantially the same as s. 73.0.3(2) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 129(2) states that the written approval of the Director is required if the collector is to effect a settlement under which the person to whom the money is owed would receive less than 75 per cent (or such other percentage as may be prescribed by regulation) of the money to which he or she is entitled. At the time of writing, no other percentage had been prescribed.

The Director's power under this provision has been delegated under s. 88 of the Act. See Delegation of Powers for further information.

Orders Void Where Settlement - s. 129(3)

129(3) If an order to pay has been made under section 74.14, 74.16, 74.17, 103, 104, 106 or 107 and a settlement respecting the money that was found to be owing is made under this section, the order is void and the settlement is binding if the person against whom the order was issued does what the person agreed to do under the settlement unless, on application to the Board, the individual to whom the money was ordered to be paid demonstrates that the settlement was entered into as a result of fraud or coercion.

Section 129(3) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009 to include a reference to orders issued under Part XVIII.1.

This provision was introduced by the Employment Standards Act, 2000. It is similar in part to s. 73.0.3(3) and s. 73.0.3(5) of the former Employment Standards Act and codifies the common law as well as Program policy under the former Act.

Section 129(3) states that the order, upon which the settlement is based, becomes void when the person against whom the order was made does what they have agreed to do in the settlement. Section 129(3) also incorporates the common law and Program policy by stating that a settlement that is entered into as a result of fraud or coercion will not be binding.

A question concerning the voiding of an order under this section may arise where the order pertains to the entitlements of several individuals, and a settlement is achieved respecting one or more but not all of the individuals. Program policy is that in these circumstances, only the portion of the order that relates to the individual covered by the settlement would be void.

Notice of Contravention - s. 129(4)

129(4) If a settlement respecting money that is owing under a notice of contravention is made under this section, the notice is void if the person against whom the notice was issued does what the person agreed to do under the settlement.

This provision was introduced by the ESA 2000.

Section 129(4) states that a notice of contravention, upon which a settlement (made with the agreement of the Director, s. 129(1)(b)) is based, becomes void when the person against whom the notice was made does what they have agreed to do in the settlement.

Payment - s. 129(5)

129(5) The person who owes money under a settlement shall pay the amount agreed upon to the collector, who shall pay it out in accordance with section 128.

This provision is similar to ss. 73.03(3) and (4) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 129(5) states that when a settlement is made, any money owing under the settlement must be paid to the collector and the collector must then pay the money out in accordance with s. 128(3) and s. 128(4).

ESA Part XXIV Section 130 - Definitions

Definitions - s. 130(1)

130(1) In this section,

"order" includes a judgment and, in the case of a state whose employment standards legislation contains a provision substantially similar to subsection 126(1), includes a certificate of an order for the payment of money owing under that legislation;

"state" includes another province or territory of Canada, a foreign state and a political subdivision of a state.

Section 130(1) defines the two key terms used in the reciprocal enforcement provisions. Both definitions are "inclusive". This means that they are not exhaustive, and other terms similar to those listed will also fit the definitions.

In this instance, the word "order" will include any order to pay money issued under employment standards legislation in another state. It may also include a judgment or certificate.

The term "state" is also given a broad meaning: it may be taken to include any jurisdiction outside of Ontario, since another province or territory of Canada or any foreign state or part of a foreign state would be included in the definition. The definition of "state" must be read in conjunction with s. 130(2) and s. 2 of O Reg 289/01, which lists those states that are reciprocating states for the purposes of reciprocal enforcement under the Act. This list in s. 2 of O Reg 289/01 was amended by O Reg 475/06 filed on October 6, 2006 to include Newfoundland and Labrador, and by O Reg 295/11, effective July 1, 2011, to include Quebec. All Canadian provinces and territories are now reciprocating states.

Reciprocating States - s. 130(2)

130(2) The prescribed states are reciprocating states for the purposes of this section and the prescribed authorities with respect to those states are the authorities who may make applications under this section.

Section 130(2) provides that those states prescribed by regulation may make use of the reciprocal enforcement of orders provisions in the Act.

Section 2 of O Reg 289/01 prescribes the reciprocating states as follows:

2(1) Each state listed in Column 1 of the Table to this section is prescribed as a reciprocating state for the purposes of section 130 of the Act.

(2) Each authority listed in Column 2 of the Table to this section is prescribed as the designated authority for the state listed opposite it in Column 1.

COLUMN 1	COLUMN 2
Alberta	Director of Employment Standards for Alberta
British Columbia	Director of Employment Standards for British Columbia
Manitoba	Director of Employment Standards for Manitoba
New Brunswick	Director of Employment Standards for New Brunswick
Newfoundland and Labrador	Director of Labour Standards for Newfoundland and Labrador
Northwest Territories	Labour Standards Board of the Northwest Territories
Nova Scotia	Director of Employment Standards for Nova Scotia
Nunavut	Nunavut Labour Standards Board
Prince Edward Island	Inspector of Labour Standards for Prince Edward Island
Quebec	Commission des norms du travail
Saskatchewan	Director of Labour Standards for Saskatchewan
Yukon	Director of Employment Standards for the Yukon

With the addition of Quebec, added to O Reg 289/01 by O Reg 295/11, all Canadian provinces and territories are now reciprocating states.

Application for Enforcement - s. 130(3)

130(3) The designated authority of a reciprocating state may apply to the Director for enforcement of an order for the payment of money issued under the employment standards legislation of that state.

Section 130(3) permits a reciprocating state to apply to the Director for enforcement in Ontario of an order issued by the reciprocating state.

Copy of Order - s. 130(4)

130(4) The application shall be accompanied by a copy of the order, certified as a true copy,

(a) by the court in which the order was filed, if the employment standards legislation of the reciprocating state provides for the filing of the order in a court; or

(b) by the designated authority, if the employment standard legislation of the reciprocating state does not provide for the filing of the order in a court.

This provision is virtually identical to s. 73.1(4) the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 130(4) states that an application for reciprocal enforcement must be accompanied by a certified true copy of the order. Clauses 130(4)(a) and (b) designate who may certify the copy of the order: either the court where the original was filed or the responsible authority (if the employment standards legislation of the other state does not have provision for filing an order with a court).

Enforcement - s. 130(5)

130(5) The Director may file a copy of the order in a court of competent jurisdiction and, upon its filing, the order is enforceable as a judgment or order of the court,

(a) at the instance and in favour of the Director; or

(b) at the instance and in favour of the designated authority.

This provision is virtually identical to subsection 73.1(5) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 130(5) is a parallel provision to ss. 126, which allows for the filing of an order with a court of competent jurisdiction for enforcement purposes.

Section 130(5) provides the power to enforce an order of a reciprocating state through the Ontario courts. Pursuant to s. 130(1), an "order" may include a judgement as well as an order issued under a provision similar to s. 126(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. It permits the Director to file a certified copy of the order in a court of "competent jurisdiction". Once filed, the order is enforceable as a judgment or order of the court. The effect of this section is that an order of a reciprocating state will be enforceable in the same manner as an order issued under the ESA 2000.

The Director's power under this section has been delegated under s. 88 of the Act. See Delegation of Powers for further information.

Costs - s. 130(6)

130(6) The Director or the designated authority, as the case may be,

(a) is entitled to the costs of enforcing the order as if it were an order of the court in which the copy of it was filed; and

(b) may recover those costs in the same manner as sums payable under such an order may be recovered.

This provision is substantially the same as s. 73.1(6) of the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 130(6) permits the recovery of the costs of enforcing the order as if it were an order of the court in which it is filed.

The Director's power under this provision has been delegated under s. 88 of the Act. See Delegation of Powers for further information.

ESA Part XXV - Offences and Prosecutions

The purpose of the Offences and Prosecutions part of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 is to set out the offences for which employers, including officers and directors of employers, and other individuals, such as claimants providing false information, can be prosecuted under the Provincial Offences Act, RSO 1990, c P.33.

ESA Part XXV Section 131 - Offence to Keep False Records

Offence to Keep False Records - s. 131(1)

131(1) No person shall make, keep or produce false records or other documents that are required to be kept under this Act or participate or acquiesce in the making, keeping or production of false records or other documents that are required to be kept under this Act.

This provision is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 77(1)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 131(1) prohibits any person from making, keeping or producing false or deceptive records, or other documents required to be kept under the Employment Standards Act, 2000 and regulations. It also prohibits any person from having a hand in the making, keeping or production of such records, whether such participation is active (e.g., actually making the records) or passive (e.g., agreeing to such records or having knowledge of them but not doing anything to stop the practice).

This prohibition applies to all records or other documents required to be kept by the employer as set out in ss. 15 and 16 of the Act. These sections require specified information to be kept (including a register for homeworkers) and retained for specified periods of time and made available for inspection by an employment standards officer.

In the context of s. 131(1), "produced" does not mean "made", but rather "produced for inspection, audit or examination", i.e., given over to the employment standards officer, pursuant to a demand for records. Thus, if the employer gives the officer false or deceptive records (records that are required to be kept under the Act), pursuant to a demand under ss. 91 or 102, the employer would be guilty of an offence under s. 131(1).

What if the employer gives the information voluntarily, rather than pursuant to a demand? In that case, the employer would still be guilty of making or keeping the false records in the first place, which is also an offence under s. 131(1) if those are the types of records that the employer is required to make and keep under the Act. Also, the employer may be guilty of an offence under s. 131(2) for providing false or misleading information, regardless of whether the information was supplied voluntarily or not, and regardless of whether the employer is required to keep such information.

False or Misleading Information - s. 131(2)

131(2) No person shall provide false or misleading information under this Act.

This provision is identical to the corresponding section (s. 77(2)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 131(2) prohibits any person from providing false or misleading information under the Act. It has a general application in prohibiting any person, whether it be an employer (including a corporate employer, since in law a corporation is considered a "person"), an employee, a director or officer or agent of an employer, or any other person, from providing false or misleading information under the Employment Standards Act, 2000. It covers situations where the information is provided voluntarily, as well as pursuant to a demand or a subpoena, and situations where the information is required to be kept by the Act, as well as those in which the information is not required to be kept.

ESA Part XXV Section 132 - General Offence

132 A person who contravenes this Act or the regulations or fails to comply with an order, direction or other requirement under this Act or the regulations is guilty of an offence and on conviction is liable,

(a) if the person is an individual, to a fine of not more than $50,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than 12 months or to both;

(b) subject to clause (c), if the person is a corporation, to a fine of not more than $100,000; and

(c) if the person is a corporation that has previously been convicted of an offence under this Act or a predecessor to it,

i. if the person has one previous conviction, to a fine of not more than $250,000, and

ii. if the person has more than one previous conviction, to a fine of not more than $500,000.

This provision is similar to s. 78(1) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 132 applies to every person, which includes a corporation and trade union, who violates a provision of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 or regulations, or disobeys a decision, requirement or order made under the Act.

Section 132 makes it an offence to violate a provision of the Act: for example, a failure to pay overtime pay, or a failure to reinstate an employee after a pregnancy or parental leave. It also makes it an offence to disobey an order, direction or requirement under the Act: for example, a failure to comply with an order to pay issued under s. 103(1)(b), a failure to comply with a compliance order under s. 108(1), or a failure to comply with a notice requiring attendance at a meeting with an officer under s. 102.

To obtain a conviction for an offence, the Crown has to prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt, which is the standard of proof in criminal and quasi-criminal cases.

Prosecutions for an offence under the ESA 2000 may be initiated under Part I or Part III of the Provincial Offences Act, RSO 1990, c P.33 ("POA"). A Part I prosecution can only be commenced by a person who has been appointed a provincial offences officer. Part I prosecutions are commenced by filing a certificate of offence with the Ontario Court of Justice and serving the accused with either an offence notice ("ticket") or summons. A ticket may only be used where a set fine for the offence in question has been established by the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice. Set fines have been established for many Employment Standards Act, 2000 offences. As well, abbreviated descriptions of those offences for use on the tickets have been authorized by regulation under the POA. See Schedules 4.2, 4.3 and 4.4 to RRO 1990, Reg 950.

A provincial offences officer may also use the Part I summons procedure for ESA 2000 offences. The POA provides that where the summons procedure is used in respect of an offence under an Act, the provisions in the Act respecting maximum fines and terms of imprisonment do not apply; instead the POA provides that the maximum fine that can be imposed on conviction is $1,000. A sentence of imprisonment cannot be imposed if the summons procedure is used.

If a prosecution is commenced under Part III of the POA, the section 132 provisions regarding maximum fines and (in the case of an individual) maximum terms of imprisonment would apply.

Under s. 132, an individual who is found guilty of an offence is liable to a fine of not more than $50,000 or 12 months in jail, or both. The maximum jail term is increased in the ESA 2000 from six months under the former Act to 12 months.

A corporation that is found guilty of an offence is liable to a fine of not more than $100,000 for a first conviction, $250,000 for a second conviction, and $500,000 for a third or subsequent conviction. These escalating monetary penalties for corporations are a new deterrence provision in the ESA 2000.

Appeals from decisions of a justice of the peace are to a judge of the Ontario Court of Justice, from which a further appeal to the Court of Appeal may be made with the leave of that Court. Appeals from the decision of a provincial judge are to the Superior Court of Justice, from which a further appeal to the Court of Appeal may be made with the leave of that Court.

ESA Part XXV Section 133 – Additional Orders

Additional Orders – s. 133(1)

133(1) If an employer is convicted under section 132 of contravening section 74 or paragraph 4, 6, 7 or 10 of subsection 74.8(1) or if a client, is convicted under section 132 of contravening section 74.12, the court shall, in addition to any fine or term of imprisonment that is imposed, order that the employer or client, as the case may be, take specific action or refrain from taking specific action to remedy the contravention.

This provision was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009 c 9, effective November 6, 2009 to include references to contraventions under Part XVIII.1.

Section 133(1) applies if:

1. An employer is convicted of an offence under s. 132 for contravening the reprisal provisions in ESA Part XVIII, s. 74, or the prohibitions against temporary help agencies in paragraph 4, 6, 7 or 10 of ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.8(1); or
2. A client is convicted of an offence under s. 132 for contravening the prohibition against reprisal by clients in ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.12.

If either of the conditions above is met, the justice of the peace or the provincial judge making the conviction shall, in addition to the fine or term of imprisonment, order specific action that the convicted person must take or refrain from taking in order to remedy the contravention. This provision should be read in conjunction with s. 133(2) which discusses the types of orders that may be made by the court.

In R v Hartro Office Systems the employer was convicted under the predecessor to s. 132, since the only logical explanation of the reason for the employee's dismissal was that he filed a complaint under the Employment Standards Act, 2000. The employer was fined $8,000. However, in R v Marconi, the defendant was acquitted on the grounds that the evidence showed the employee was dismissed prior to the defendant becoming aware that the employee had filed a complaint under the Act.

Same – s. 133(2)

133(2) Without restricting the generality of subsection (1), the order made by the court may require one or more of the following:

1. A person be paid any wages that are owing to him or her.

2. In the case of a conviction under section 132 of contravening section 74 or 74.12, a person be reinstated.

3. A person be compensated for any loss incurred by him or her as a result of the contravention.

Section 133(2) was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 effective November 6, 2009 to include a reference to a contravention of ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.12.

In addition to the powers granted to the court under s. 133(1), if an employer is convicted of contravening ESA Part XVIII, s. 74 or paragraph 4, 6, 7 or 10 of ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.8(1), s. 133(2) authorizes, but does not require, the court to order that the employee be paid any wages that are owing to the employee and/or that the employee be compensated for any loss incurred as a result of the contravention. Where the employer has been convicted for violating s. 74, the court may also order that the person be reinstated.

Note that for convictions relating to contraventions of sections other than s. 74 or paragraphs 4, 6, 7, or 10 of s. 74.8(1), the court is required to order the employer to pay any amount owing to the employee with respect to the contravention pursuant to ESA Part XXV, s. 135(1).

In addition to the powers granted to the court under s. 133(1), if a client is convicted of contravening s. 74.12, s. 133(2) authorizes, but does not require, the court to order that the assignment employee be paid any wages that are owing, be compensated for any loss incurred by them, and/or be reinstated.

For a discussion of the meaning of the term "client" when used in relation to a temporary help agency, see ESA Part I, s. 1(1).

Part XVI – s. 133(3)

133(3) If the contravention of section 74 was in relation to Part XVI (Lie Detectors) and the contravention affected an applicant for employment or an applicant to be a police officer, the court may require that the employer hire the applicant or compensate him or her or both hire and compensate him or her.

Section 133(3) provides that if a conviction is obtained under ESA Part XXV, s. 132 in relation to a contravention of the lie detector provisions of the ESA 2000 and the contravention concerned an applicant for employment or an applicant to be a police officer, the court could order the employer to hire the applicant and or/compensate them for the violation.

ESA Part XXV Section 134 - Offence re Order for Reinstatement

134 A person who fails to comply with an order issued under section 133 is guilty of an offence and on conviction is liable,

(a) if the person is an individual, to a fine of not more than $2,000 for each day during which the failure to comply continues or to imprisonment for a term of not more than six months or to both; and

(b) if the person is a corporation, to a fine of not more than $4,000 for each day during which the failure to comply continues.

Section 134 was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009.

Section 134 sets out the fine for a failure to comply with an order of a court made under ESA Part XXV, s. 133. For example, if the court, on conviction, orders an employer to reinstate an employee, with compensation for lost wages and benefits, and the employer fails to comply, the court may further order the employer, if an individual, to pay a fine of up to $2,000 for each day that the employer failed to comply with the order of the court. If the employer is a corporation, the court could order that the employer pay a fine of up to $4,000 for each day the employer failed to comply with the court's order.

For example, if the employer was ordered to reinstate the employee by March 1, 2002, and the employee did not do so until April 1, 2002, the employer could be fined up to $124,000, if a corporation, or $62,000, if an individual, for the failure to comply in a timely manner with the order of the court. This fine would also apply where the employer had not complied in a timely manner with an order of the court to pay compensation to the employee. The fine under s. 134 would be in addition to any fine and/or imprisonment imposed pursuant to ESA Part XXV, s. 132 with respect to the prohibited reprisal. This provision also applies with respect to clients, as defined in ESA Part I, s. 1(1) who fail to comply with an order issued under ESA Part XXV, s. 133.

ESA Part XXV Section 135 - Additional Orders Re Other Contraventions

Additional Orders Re Other Contraventions - s. 135(1)

135(1) If an employer is convicted under section 132 of contravening a provision of this Act other than section 74 or paragraph 4, 6, 7 or 10 of subsection 74.8(1), the court shall, in addition to any fine or term of imprisonment that is imposed, assess any amount owing to an employee affected by the contravention and order the employer to pay the amount assessed to the Director.

This provision was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, effective November 6, 2009 to specifically exclude convictions for contraventions of paragraphs 4, 6, 7 or 10 of s. 74.8(1). References to paragraphs 4, 6, 7 and 10 of s. 74.8.1 were added to s. 133(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. For a discussion of s. 133, see ESA Part XXV, s. 133.

Section 135(1) indicates that where an employer is convicted of an offence under s. 132, other than a conviction for a violation of s. 74 (reprisal) or paragraph 4, 6, 7, or 10 of s. 74.8(1) (temporary help agency prohibitions), the court is required to assess the amount owing to the employees by the employer as a result of the employer's contravention of the Act, and to order the employer to pay the amount involved, in addition to any other penalty (i.e., fine and/or term of imprisonment) ordered. For example, where the employer had not paid an order to pay and accordingly committed an offence that resulted in a conviction under s. 132, the court is required (in addition to any fine or jail sentence that may be ordered,) to assess the amount owing and to order the employer to pay the amount owing to the Director of Employment Standards in trust, who in turn then pays the amounts owing to the affected employee(s).

Under s. 135(1), the court could not order the employer to pay the 10 per cent administration costs portion of the order to pay, since the section refer specifically to an "amount owing to an employee". However, the court's assessment of the amount owed to the employee could include interest.

Collection by Director - s. 135(2)

135(2) The Director shall attempt to collect the amount ordered to be paid under subsection (1) and if he or she is successful shall distribute it to the employee.

Section 135(2) provides that the Director of Employment Standards must attempt to collect any money that is ordered to be paid under s. 135(1) and pay it to the employee.

Enforcement of Order, s. 135(3)

135(3) An order under subsection (1) may be filed by the Director in a court of competent jurisdiction and upon filing shall be deemed to be an order of that court for the purposes of enforcement.

This provision is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 78(3)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 135(3) provides that the Director, for enforcement purposes, may file an order issued by the court under s. 135(1) in a court of competent jurisdiction. The order then becomes enforceable as an order of the court for purposes of enforcement. This means, for example, that a writ of seizure and sale could be obtained so that the Director could seize the defaulting employer's assets and property and sell them in order to satisfy the amounts owing.

ESA Part XXV Section 136 - Offence Re Directors' Liability

Offence Re Directors' Liability - s. 136(1)

136(1) A director of a corporation is guilty of an offence if the director,

(a) fails to comply with an order of an employment standards officer under section 106 or 107 and has not applied for a review of that order; or

(b) fails to comply with an order issued under section 106 or 107 that has been amended or affirmed by the Board on a review of the order under section 116 or with a new order issued by the Board on such a review.

This provision was first introduced by the Employment Standards Act, 2000. It provides that a director of a corporation is guilty of an offence where he or she fails to comply with an order of an employment standards officer made under ss. 106 or 107, and has not applied for a review of the order, or fails to comply with such an order that has been affirmed by the Ontario Labour Relations Board or with a new order issued by the Board.

Penalty - s. 136(2)

136(2) A director convicted of an offence under subsection (1) is liable to a fine of not more than $50,000.

This provision was first introduced by the ESA 2000. It provides that a director convicted under s. 136(1) is liable to a fine of not more than $50,000. Note that directors convicted under s. 136(1) are not liable to imprisonment.

ESA Part XXV Section 137 - Offence re Permitting Offence by Corporation

Offence re Permitting Offence by Corporation - s. 137(1); Same - s. 137(2)

137(1) If a corporation contravenes this Act or the regulations, an officer, director or agent of the corporation or a person acting or claiming to act in that capacity who authorizes or permits the contravention or acquiesces in it is a party to and guilty of the offence and is liable on conviction to the fine or imprisonment provided for the offence.

(2) Subsection (1) applies whether or not the corporation has been prosecuted or convicted of the offence.

These provisions are substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 79(1)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 137(1) provides that where a corporation contravenes any provision of the Act or the regulations, an officer, director or agent of the corporation, (or a person acting or claiming to act in such a role), who participates in such a contravention, is a party to, and guilty of, the offence, and is liable on conviction to the penalty provided for the offence, i.e., a maximum of $50,000 fine and/or 12 months' imprisonment. This applies whether such a person participates actively, e.g., by authorizing it, or passively by knowing of it, but failing to take steps to prevent it.

Section 137(2) indicates that the individual officer, director or agent may be convicted under this subsection, even though the corporate employer has not been prosecuted or convicted. Thus, a corporate director could be prosecuted under s. 137, even though a prosecution had not been commenced against the corporate employer under s. 132, or if it was, even though it did not result in a conviction.

The key to s. 137 is that the officer, director or agent of the corporation must be a person who "authorizes or permits. . . or acquiesces" in a contravention of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 or regulations by the corporate employer.

The predecessor section to s. 137 was considered by the trial court in R v Lark Manufacturing Inc. and court's decision was upheld by the Ontario Court of Appeal. In that case, the trial court stated that the directors would not be liable under s. 79 of the former Employment Standards Act (now s. 137) if they proved, on a balance of probabilities, that they were duly diligent. In this regard, the trial court noted several points. Section 137 is a strict liability and not a full mens rea offence. The latter type of offence is one in which the accused must have had the intention to commit the act or omission that constitutes the offence or crime in question.

A strict liability offence, on the other hand, is one in which it is not necessary to show intent, but merely that the act or omission occurred, except that the accused can usually be acquitted by showing that he or she was duly diligent (i.e., took all reasonable precautions in the circumstances to prevent the violation from taking place). An absolute liability offence is one in which it is not necessary to show intent, and the accused cannot be acquitted, even if he or she demonstrates due diligence. Therefore, a strict liability offence lies somewhere between a full mens rea offence and an absolute liability offence as far as the issue of due diligence is concerned.

The court in R v Lark also noted that corporate directors have the authority to run the company and the ultimate responsibilities for the actions of its employees unless the directors can show that in spite of all reasonable precautions being taken, the employees acted outside their instructions.

The court further noted that Supreme Court of Canada authority indicates that the reverse onus clause in the predecessor clause to s. 137(3) is not contrary to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The trial judge in R v Lark Manufacturing Inc. found the directors guilty of an offence pursuant to s. 79 of the former Employment Standards Act (now s. 137) in that they did not prove, on a balance of probabilities, that they did not participate (actively or passively) in the corporation's failure to pay wages, vacation pay and termination pay to the employees. The court found that the directors foresaw or ought to have foreseen the closing of the business by the bank, and were aware of and contributed to the decision that was made to terminate the employees without proper notice as the business situation deteriorated. The trial court pointed to a number of pieces of evidence in this regard, including the fact that the defendants, in advance of the closure of Lark, were engaged in setting up a new business to perform the same work as Lark did.

On appeal, the Ontario Court (General Division) (now the Superior Court of Justice) reversed the conviction of the directors by the trial judge, finding that there was no evidence that the defendant directors knew in advance of the bank's intention to close the business, and no evidence that they knew in advance or concurrently that the bank would withhold the last payroll cheques. The Crown then appealed to the Ontario Court of Appeal, which restored the convictions imposed by the trial judge on the basis that the findings made by the trial judge were supported by evidence and should have been accepted by the judge on appeal, especially given the onus placed on the respondent directors by s. 137(3).

One of the issues that arose in the Lark case was whether or not the defendants were directors at the relevant times. The directors claimed to have resigned one week before the business closed and were therefore arguing that they were not responsible for the resulting failure of the employer to pay the employees. The trial court noted that s. 121(2) of the Ontario Business Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c B.16 requires that a notice of resignation by a director is not effective until such time as it is received by the corporation, and there was no evidence that the alleged notice of resignation was received by the corporation.

It is interesting to note that s. 137(2) states that an individual liable under the section may be an officer, director or agent of the corporation, or a person acting or claiming to act in such a capacity. This would cover individuals, for example, who were acting in the capacity of directors, and were holding themselves out as such, but who were technically, due to some defect in their appointment, not directors of the company. It would also cover situations such as where persons were not authorized to be agents of a company with regards to certain matters, but took it upon themselves to do so anyway, and in that unauthorized capacity participated in the contravention of the Act by the company.

137(3) In a trial of an individual who is prosecuted under subsection (1), the onus is on the individual to prove that he or she did not authorize, permit or acquiesce in the contravention.

This provision is similar to s. 79(2) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 137(3) is a reverse onus provision. It states that in a prosecution under s. 137, the onus is on the director, officer or agent to prove that he or she did not participate, actively or passively, in the corporation's contravention of the Act and regulations. The individual does not have to prove this beyond a reasonable doubt. He or she need only prove it on a balance of probabilities. If he or she fails to prove this on a balance of probabilities, then a conviction would be entered by the Court provided that the Crown had proved beyond a reasonable doubt the other elements of the case, e.g., that the corporation violated the Act or regulations.

There is authority from the Supreme Court of Canada that such reverse onus clauses do not violate the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. See, for example, R v Wholesale Travel Group Inc., [1991] 3 SCR 154, 1991 CanLII 39 (SCC).

Additional Penalty - s. 137(4); Collection by Director - s. 137(5)

137(4) If an individual is convicted under this section, the court may, in addition to any other fine or term of imprisonment that is imposed, assess any amount owing to an employee affected by the contravention and order the individual to pay the amount assessed to the Director.

(5) The Director shall attempt to collect the amount ordered to be paid under subsection (4) and if he or she is successful shall distribute it to the employee.

These provisions are similar in effect to the corresponding section (s. 79(3)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Sections 137(4) and (5) indicate that where an individual is convicted of an offence under s. 137, the court may, in addition to any other penalty, assess the amount owed by the corporation in regards to the employee(s), and may order the individual to pay the amount assessed to the Director of Employment Standards in trust, who would distribute to the employee(s) the amounts owed. Please note that unlike section 135(1) this section does not require the court to make an assessment and order the payment of wages to the Director upon the conviction of an individual.

Section 79(3) of the former Employment Standards Act was used by the Crown in the R v Lark Manufacturing Inc. case to obtain a court order for three directors of the company to pay approximately $500,000 in unpaid wages, vacation pay and termination pay to the Director of Employment Standards in trust for distribution to the employees. Note that the court's order against a director may exceed the maximum liability for wages and vacation pay in Part XX (Liability of Director) and may also include termination and severance pay. The limitations on directors' liabilities set out in Part XX do not apply where the director has been prosecuted and convicted of an office under s. 137.

It should be noted that under s. 79(3) of the former Employment Standards Act it was possible for the court to include in the order against the directors amounts for interest as well as the 10 per cent administration costs portion of the order to pay against the employer (although that was not done in R v Lark Manufacturing Inc.). Under s. 137 of the ESA 2000, the court could not order the employer to pay the 10 per cent administration costs portion of the order to pay, since s. 137(4) refers specifically to an "amount owing to an employee". However, the court's assessment of the amount owed to the employee could include interest.

Furthermore, no fine or imprisonment was ordered by the Court in R v Lark Manufacturing Inc., presumably because the Court was of the view that the requirement for the directors personally to pay about $500,000 in employee entitlements was a sufficient deterrent on its own.

Finally, it should be noted that in s. 137 prosecutions (as in s. 79 prosecutions under the former Employment Standards Act) the court could put the convicted director on probation and make such probation conditional on payment of the monies ordered to be paid to the Director of Employment Standards in trust. In other words, if the convicted director does not pay as ordered by the court, that individual would have his or her probation revoked and would be liable to a jail sentence. However, such a conditional probation order, although asked for by the Crown in the Lark case, was not given by the trial Court, although a simple probation order was given, requiring the convicted individuals "to keep the peace and to be of good behaviour", meaning that the probation could be revoked if further violations of the law occurred.

137(6) No prosecution shall be commenced under this section without the consent of the Director.

This provision read together with s. 137(7) is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 79(4)) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 137(6) provides that a prosecution under s. 137 of an officer, director or agent (or person acting or claiming to act in such a capacity) of a corporation that has contravened the Act or regulations can only be commenced with the consent of the Director of Employment Standards. This power has been delegated under s. 88 of the Act. See Delegation of Powers for further information.

Proof of Consent - s. 137(7)

137(7) The production of a document that appears to show that the Director has consented to a prosecution under this section is admissible as evidence of the Director's consent.

Section 137(7) provides that a document that appears to be the consent of the Director (or his delegate pursuant to s. 88 of the Act) to prosecute under s. 137 is admissible as evidence of the Director's consent.

ESA Part XXV Section 137.1 - Prosecution of Employment Standards Officer

Prosecution of Employment Standards Officer - s. 137.1(1)

137.1(1) No prosecution of an employment standards officer shall be commenced with respect to an alleged violation of subsection 89(2) without the consent of the Deputy Attorney General.

Section 137.1(1) provides that a prosecution of an employment standards officer for a failure to follow policy as established by the Director, as required by s. 89(2), may only be commenced if consented to by the Deputy Attorney General. For further discussion of s. 89(2) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, see ESA Part XXI, s. 89(2).

Proof of Consent - s. 137.1(2)

137.1(2) The production of a document that appears to show that the Deputy Attorney General has consented to a prosecution of an employment standards officer is admissible as evidence of his or her consent.

Section 137.1(2) provides that a document that appears to be the consent of the Deputy Attorney General to prosecute an employment standards officer is admissible as evidence of his or her consent.
Prosecution of Employment Standards Officer, s. 137.1(1) Proof of Consent, s. 137.1(2)

ESA Part XXV Section 138 - Where Prosecution May be Heard

138(1) Despite section 29 of the Provincial Offences Act, the prosecution of an offence under this Act may be heard and determined by the Ontario Court of Justice sitting in the area where the accused is resident or carries on business, if the prosecutor so elects.

(2) The Attorney General or an agent for the Attorney General may by notice to the clerk of the court require that a judge of the court hear and determine the prosecution.

These provisions are similar to the corresponding section (s. 81) of the former Employment Standards Act. Section 138 provides that the prosecutor can choose, by giving notice to the clerk of the court, to have the prosecution of an offence conducted in the area where the accused resides or carried on business, rather than where the offence occurred. In addition, the Attorney General or his or her agent may request the matter to be heard by a judge rather than a justice of the peace.

For example, if the accused is a director of a corporation and resides in Toronto, the Crown may have the case heard by the Ontario Court of Justice in Toronto, even though the company carried on business in Hamilton.

ESA Part XXV Section 138.1 - Publication Re Convictions

138.1(1) If a person, including an individual, is convicted of an offence under this Act, the Director may publish or otherwise make available to the general public the name of the person, a description of the offence, the date of the conviction and the person's sentence.

(2) Authority to publish under subsection (1) includes authority to publish on the Internet.

(3) Any disclosure made under subsection (1) shall be deemed to be in compliance with clause 42(e) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

This provision was first introduced by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Hours of Work and Other Matters), 2004, SO 2004, c 21, effective March 1, 2005.

Where a person has been convicted of an offence under the Employment Standards Act, 2000, this provision authorizes the Director to publish or otherwise make available to the public - including publication on the Internet - the name of the convicted person, a description of the offence, the date of the conviction, and the sentence received by the person.

Subsection (3) deems any disclosure made under subsection (1) to be in compliance with s. 42(e) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, RSO 1990, c F.31. That section reads:

Where disclosure permitted

42. An institution shall not disclose personal information in its custody or under its control except,

(e) for the purpose of complying with an Act of the Legislature or an Act of Parliament or a treaty, agreement or arrangement thereunder;

ESA Part XXV Section 139 - Limitation Period

139 No prosecution shall be commenced under this Act more than two years after the date on which the offence was committed or alleged to have been committed.

This provision is similar in effect to the corresponding section (s. 82) of the former Employment Standards Act, except that the two-year period in the former Employment Standards Act commenced with the date on which the facts upon which the prosecution was based first came to the knowledge of the Director. Section 139 provides that no prosecution can be commenced under the Act more than two years after the date on which the offence was committed or alleged to have been committed.

The date on which an offence has been committed or is alleged to have been committed is determined by the nature of the offence. For example, a contravention of the Employment Standards Act, 2000's requirements concerning the payment of wages (e.g., regular wages, overtime pay etc.) occurs on the date such wages were due under the Act. A contravention of s. 74 (Reprisal) may occur on the date the employer penalized the employee for exercising or attempting to exercise a right under the Act (e.g., the date the employee was suspended for having refused to agree to work excess hours). Finally, an offence may be committed when the employer (or other person) has failed to comply with an order, requirement or direction under this Act.

As an example, consider a case where an employer fails to pay overtime pay due on the employee's regular pay day on November 15, 2001 (for hours worked on November 1). The employee files a claim related to this contravention on February 1, 2002. An employment standards officer issues and serves an order to pay on May 1, 2002, and the employer neither pays the money required to be paid under the order nor files an appeal by May 31, 2002 (within 30 days of the order being served as required under s. 116(4)).

In this example, the Ministry at its discretion may prosecute the employer for failure to pay overtime, in which case prosecution must commence with two years of November 15, 2001, or the ministry may elect to prosecute for failure to comply with the order to pay, in which case the prosecution must commence within two years of the date the order was served, May 31, 2002.

Given that there is more time to commence a prosecution if the prosecution is for failure to comply with an order to pay, rather than where it is for failure to pay the wages on the regular pay day as required by the Act, why would the Crown ever be required to proceed within the latter period? The answer is that if the Crown wishes to prosecute the directors of the corporation under s. 137(1) of the Act for authorizing, permitting or acquiescing in the violation by the corporation, it may, in some situations, be more appropriate if the violation, which is the foundation of the prosecution, is considered to be the employer's failure to pay the wages on the regular pay day, rather than the subsequent failure to comply with the order to pay. This might be because the directors were no longer associated with the corporation at the time the order was served, but had been associated with the corporation at the time the wages first became owed to the employee.

See ESA Part XXII, s. 114 for further discussion of limitation periods for orders and notices.

A prosecution under Part III of the Provincial Offences Act, RSO 1990, c P.33 is generally considered to commence when a document called an "information" is laid under oath before a provincial judge or a justice of the peace.

ESA Part XXVI – Miscellaneous Evidentiary Provisions

The intent of Part XXVI of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 is to establish certain evidentiary rules for prosecutions and proceedings under the Act.

ESA Part XXVI Section 140 - Copy Constitutes Evidence

Copy Constitutes Evidence - s. 140(1)

140(1) In a prosecution or other proceeding under this Act, a copy of an order or notice of contravention that appears to be made under this Act or the regulations and signed by an employment standards officer or the Board is evidence of the order or notice and of the facts appearing in it without proof of the signature or office of the person appearing to have signed the order or notice.

This provision is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 80(1)(a)) in the former Employment Standards Act. Section 140(1) means that in a prosecution or proceeding under the Act, a copy of an order or notice of contravention that appears to have been signed by an employment standards officer or the Board is evidence of the order or notice and the facts contained therein without proof of the signature or office of the person who appears to have signed it.

This section does not mean that the copy is irrefutable proof of the order or notice and the facts contained therein. It merely means that it is evidence that can be rebutted by contrary evidence.

Same - s. 140(2)

140(2) In a prosecution or other proceeding under this Act, a copy of a record or other document or an extract from a record or other document that appears to be certified as a true copy or accurate extract by an employment standards officer is evidence of the record or document or the extracted part of the record or document and of the facts appearing in the record, document or extract without proof of the signature or office of the person appearing to have certified the copy or extract or any other proof.

This provision is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 80(1)(b)) in the former Employment Standards Act. Section 140(2) means that in a prosecution or proceeding under the Act, a copy of a record or other document or a copy of an extract from a record or other document that appears to have been certified as a true copy or accurate extract by an employment standards officer is evidence of the record or document or extracted part of the record or document and the facts contained therein without proof of the signature or office of the person who appears to have certified it or any other proof.

This section does not mean that a certified copy or extract is irrefutable proof that it is a true copy or extract and that the facts contained therein are true. It merely means that it is evidence that can be rebutted by contrary evidence.

Same - s. 140(2.1)

140(2.1) In a prosecution or other proceeding under this Act, a copy of a record or other document or an extract from a record or other document that appears to be certified as a true copy or accurate extract by the Workplace Safety and Insurance Board is evidence of the record or document or the extracted part of the record or document and of the facts appearing in the record, document or extract without proof of the signature or office of the person appearing to have certified the copy or extract or any other proof.

This provision was added to the ESA effective April 29, 2021 by the COVID-19 Putting Workers First Act, 2021 which brought about paid infectious disease emergency leave and an associated reimbursement scheme for employers that is administered by the Workplace Safety and Insurance Board.

Subsection 140(2.1) means that in a prosecution or proceeding under the Act, a copy of a record or other document or a copy of an extract from a record or other document that appears to have been certified as a true copy or accurate extract by the Workplace Safety and Insurance Board is evidence of the record or document or extracted part of the record or document and the facts contained therein without proof of the signature or office of the person who appears to have certified it or any other proof.

This section does not mean that a certified copy or extract is irrefutable proof that it is a true copy or extract and that the facts contained therein are true. It merely means that it is evidence that can be rebutted by contrary evidence.

Certificate of Director Constitutes Evidence - s. 140 (3)

140(3) In a prosecution or other proceeding under this Act, a certificate that appears to be signed by the Director setting out that the records of the ministry indicate that a person has failed to make the payment required by an order or notice of contravention issued under this Act is evidence of the failure to make that payment without further proof.

This provision was amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009 effective November 6, 2009 to reflect the fact that orders and notices of contravention may be issued to a "person" (e.g. a client of a temporary help agency) and not just an employer.

Section 140(3) states that in a proceeding or prosecution under the Act, a certificate that appears to be signed by the Director setting out that a person has failed to make any payment under an order or notice of contravention issued under the Act is evidence of the failure to pay without any further proof.

The section does not mean that such a certificate is irrefutable proof of non-payment. It merely means that it constitutes evidence of the non-payment, which may be rebutted by contrary evidence.

The section refers to "an order or notice of contravention issued under this Act" and therefore would include orders issued by employment standards officers, as well as orders issued by an arbitrator (pursuant to s. 100) or by the Board.

The Director of Employment Standards has not delegated this power.

Same, Collector - s. 140(4)

140(4) In a prosecution or other proceeding under this Act, a certificate shown by a collector that appears to be signed by the Director setting out any of the following facts is evidence of the fact without further proof:

1. The Director has authorized the collector to collect amounts owing under this Act.

2. The Director has authorized the collector to collect a reasonable fee or reasonable disbursements or both.

3. The Director has, or has not, imposed conditions on an authorization described in paragraph 2 and has, or has not, determined what constitutes a reasonable fee or reasonable disbursements.

4. Any conditions imposed by the Director on an authorization described in paragraph 2.

5. The Director has approved a settlement under subsection 129(2).

This provision is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 80(3)) in the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 140(4) sets out various facts relating to the functioning of private collectors, which the Director of Employment Standards may certify. The section does not mean that the certificate of the Director is irrefutable proof of the facts set out therein. It merely means that it constitutes evidence of such facts, which may be rebutted by contrary evidence.

The Director of Employment Standards has not delegated this power.

Same, Date of Complaint - s. 140(5)

140(5) In a prosecution or proceeding under this Act, a certificate that appears to be signed by the Director setting out the date on which the records of the ministry indicate that a complaint was filed is evidence of that date without further proof.

This provision is substantially the same as the corresponding section (s. 80(4)) in the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 140(5) recognizes that the Director of Employment Standards can issue a certificate setting out the date on which the records of the ministry indicate that a complaint was filed. This date is important with regards to the limitation periods in the Act (e.g., ss. 96(3) and 114) and s. 111, which creates a limit on the recovery of monies under the Act. The certificate of the Director under this subsection is evidence of that date without further proof. The section does not mean, however, that the certificate of the Director is irrefutable proof of the date. It merely means that it constitutes evidence of such a fact, which may be rebutted by contrary evidence.

The Director of Employment Standards has not delegated this power.

ESA Part XXVII - Regulations

Statutes enacted by Ontario's Legislature often delegate the authority to make further laws to the Lieutenant Governor in Council (in effect the Cabinet). These additional laws, referred to as regulations, may, among other things, establish exemptions from the statute, set out detailed rules to complement what is in the statute, vary the rules or create additional rules to what is in the statute, provide definitions, etc.

Part XXVII of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 contains s. 141, which sets out the type of regulations that the Legislature has authorized the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make. A number of regulations have been made using this authority. In interpreting these regulations, some general rules of interpretation should be remembered.

Firstly, the same rules of interpretation apply to regulations as to the statute itself.

Secondly, and probably most importantly, regulations are subordinate to the Employment Standards Act, 2000. If there is a conflict between a provision in the statute and a provision in a regulation, the statute prevails. (Note, however, that if the statute authorizes the making of regulations that create different rules than those set out in the Act, the regulation will, generally speaking, not be invalid.)

Thirdly, a regulation will not be considered to be valid, even if it is not in conflict with the Act if the Act does not authorize the making of the regulation.

Finally, it should be noted that the regulations made under the former Employment Standards Act would continue to apply (where relevant), with respect to matters governed by the former Employment Standards Act.

ESA Part XXVII Section 141 – Regulations

Regulations – s. 141(1)

141(1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations for carrying out the purposes of this Act and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, may make the following regulations:

1. Prescribing anything for the purposes of any provision of this Act that makes reference to a thing that is prescribed.

1.1 Prescribing a method of payment for the purposes of clause 11 (2) (d) and establishing any terms, conditions or limitations on its use.

2. Establishing rules respecting the application of the minimum wage provisions of this Act and the regulations.

2.0.1 Prescribing a class of employees that would otherwise be in the class described in subparagraph 1 iv of subsection 23.1 (1) and prescribing the minimum wage that applies to the class for the purposes of subsection 23.1 (2).

2.1 Establishing a maximum pay period, a maximum period within which payments made to an employee shall be reconciled with wages earned by the employee or both.

3. Exempting any class of employees or employers from the application of this Act or any Part, section or other provision of it.

4. Prescribing what constitutes the performance of work.

5. Prescribing what information concerning the terms of an employment contract should be provided to an employee in writing.

6. Defining an industry and prescribing for that industry one or more terms or conditions of employment that apply to employers and employees in the industry or one or more requirements or prohibitions that apply to employers and employees in the industry.

7. Providing that any term, condition, requirement or prohibition prescribed under paragraph 6 applies in place of or in addition to one or more provisions of this Act or the regulations.

8. Providing that a regulation made under paragraph 6 or 7 applies only in respect of workplaces in the defined industry that have characteristics specified in the regulation, including but not limited to characteristics related to location.

9. Providing that an agreement under subsection 17 (2) to work hours in excess of those referred to in clause 17 (1) (a) that was made at the time of the employee's hiring and that has been approved by the Director is, despite subsection 17 (6), irrevocable unless both the employer and the employee agree to its revocation.

10. Providing a formula for the determination of an employee's regular rate that applies instead of the formula that would otherwise be applicable under the definition of "regular rate" in section 1 in such circumstances as are set out in the regulation.

11. Providing for the establishment of committees to advise the Minister on any matters relating to the application or administration of this Act.

11.1 Providing, for the purposes of subsection 51 (4), that subsections 51 (1), (2) and (3) apply in respect of an employee during a leave under section 50.2.

11.2 Providing, for the purposes of subsection 51 (5), that subsections 51 (1), (2) and (3) do not apply in respect of an employee during a period of postponement under subsection 53 (1.1).

12. Prescribing the manner and form in which notice of termination must or may be given and the content of such notice.

13. Prescribing what constitutes a constructive dismissal.

14. Providing that the common law doctrine of frustration does not apply to an employment contract and that an employer is not relieved of any obligation under Part XV because of the occurrence of an event that would frustrate an employment contract at common law except as prescribed.

14.1 Providing that payments to an employee by way of pension benefits, insurance benefits, workplace safety and insurance benefits, bonus, employment insurance benefits, supplementary employment insurance benefits or similar arrangements shall or shall not be taken into account in determining the amount that an employer is required to pay to an employee under clause 60 (1) (b), section 61 or section 64.

15. Providing for and governing the consolidation of hearings under this Act.

16. Prescribing the minimum number of hours in a day or week for which an employee is entitled to be paid the minimum wage or a contractual wage rate and imposing conditions in respect of that entitlement.

16.1 Governing penalties for contraventions for the purposes of subsection 113 (1).

17. Defining any word or expression used in this Act that is not defined in it.

18. Prescribing the manner in which the information required by subsection 58 (2) shall be given to the Director.

19. Respecting any matter necessary or advisable to carry out effectively the intent and purpose of this Act.

Restricted Application – s. 141(1.1)

141(1.1) A regulation made under paragraph 11.1 or 11.2 of subsection (1) may be restricted in its application to one or more of the following:

1. Specified benefit plans.

2. Employees who are members of prescribed classes.

3. Employers who are members of prescribed classes.

4. Part of a leave under section 50.2

Regulations re Part XIII – s. 141(2)

141(2) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations respecting any matter or thing necessary or advisable to carry out the intent and purpose of Part XIII (Benefit Plans), and without restricting the generality of the foregoing, may make regulations,

(a) exempting a benefit plan, part of a benefit plan or the benefits under such a plan or part from the application of Part XIII;

(b) permitting a differentiation in a benefit plan between employees or their beneficiaries, survivors or dependants because of the age, sex or marital status of the employees;

(c) suspending the application of Part XIII to a benefit plan, part of a benefit plan or benefits under such a plan or part for the periods of time specified in the regulation;

(d) prohibiting a reduction in benefits to an employee in order to comply with Part XIII;

(e) providing the terms under which an employee may be entitled or disentitled to benefits under a benefit plan.

Regulations Re Organ Donor Leave – s. 141(2.0.1)

141(2.0.1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations,

(a) prescribing other organs for the purpose of section 49.2;

(b) prescribing tissue for the purpose of section 49.2;

(c) prescribing one or more periods for the purpose of subsection 49.2 (5).

Same – s. 141(2.0.2)

141(2.0.2) A regulation made under clause (2.0.1) (c) may prescribe different periods with respect to the donation of different organs and prescribed tissue.

Transitional Regulations – s. 141(2.0.3)

141(2.0.3) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations providing for any transitional matter that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary or advisable in connection with the implementation of the amendments made by the Fair Workplaces, Better Jobs Act, 2017.

Same – s. 141(2.0.3.1)

141(2.0.3.1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations providing for any transitional matter that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary or advisable in connection with the implementation of the amendments made by the Making Ontario Open for Business Act, 2018.

Transitional Regulations – s. 141(2.0.3.2)

141(2.0.3.2) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations providing for any transitional matter that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary or advisable in connection with the implementation of the amendments made by the Restoring Ontario's Competitiveness Act, 2019.

Transitional Regulations – s. 141(2.0.3.3)

141(2.0.3.3) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations providing for any transitional matter that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary or advisable in connection with the implementation of the amendments made by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Infectious Disease Emergencies), 2020.

Transitional Regulations – s. 141(2.0.3.4)

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations providing for any transitional matter that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary or advisable in connection with the implementation of the amendments made by the COVID-19 Putting Workers First Act, 2021.

Transitional Regulations – s. 141(2.0.3.5)

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations providing for any transitional matter that the Lieutenant Governor in Council considers necessary or advisable in connection with the implementation of the amendments made by the Working for Workers Act, 2021.

Conflict With Transitional Regulations – s. 141(2.0.4)

141(2.0.4) In the event of a conflict between this Act or the regulations and a regulation made under subsection (2.0.3), (2.0.3.1), (2.0.3.2), (2.0.3.3), (2.0.3.4) or (2.0.3.5), the regulation made under subsection (2.0.3),(2.0.3.1), (2.0.3.2), (2.0.3.3), (2.0.3.4) or (2.0.3.5) prevails.

Regulations Re Infectious Disease Emergencies – s. 141(2.1)

141(2.1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations,

(a) designating an infectious disease for the purposes of section 50.1;

(b) prescribing, for the purposes of subsection 50.1 (5.1), the date on which the entitlement to emergency leave under clause 50.1 (1.1) (b) starts or is deemed to have started;

(b.1) prescribing, for the purposes of subsection 50.1 (5.2), a later date on which the entitlement to paid leave under subsection 50.1 (1.2) ends;

(b.2) prescribing, for the purposes of subsection 50.1 (5.3), additional periods during which employees are entitled to paid leave under subsection 50.1 (1.2);

(c) providing that section 50.1 or any provision of it applies to police officers and prescribing one or more terms or conditions of employment or one or more requirements or prohibitions respecting emergency leave for infectious disease emergencies that shall apply to police officers and their employers;

(d) exempting a class of employees from the application of section 50.1 or any provision of it, and prescribing one or more terms or conditions of employment or one or more requirements or prohibitions respecting emergency leave for infectious disease emergencies that shall apply to employees in the class and their employers;

(d.1) exempting the Crown, a Crown agency, or an authority, board, commission or corporation, all of whose members are appointed by the Crown, from the application of section 50.1 or any provision of it;

(e) providing that a term, condition, requirement or prohibition prescribed under clause (c) or (d) applies in place of, or in addition to, a provision of section 50.1.

Same, Police Officers – s. 141(2.1.1)

141(2.1.1) A regulation made under clause (2.1) (c) may also provide that subsection 15 (7), sections 51, 51.1, 52 and 53, Part XVIII (Reprisal), section 74.12, Part XXI (Who Enforces this Act and What They Can Do), Part XXII (Complaints and Enforcement), Part XXIII (Reviews by the Board), Part XXIV (Collection), Part XXV (Offences and Prosecutions), Part XXVI (Miscellaneous Evidentiary Provisions) and Part XXVII (Regulations) apply to police officers and their employers for the purposes of section 50.1.

Regulations Re Emergency Leaves, Declared Emergencies, Infectious Disease Emergencies – s. 141(2.2)

141(2.2) A regulation made under subsection (2.0.3.3), (2.0.3.4) or (2.1), or a regulation prescribing a reason for the purposes of subclause 50.1 (1.1) (a) (iv) or (b) (vii) may,

(a) provide that it has effect as of the date specified in the regulation;

(b) provide that an employee who does not perform the duties of his or her position because of the declared emergency and the prescribed reason, or because of the prescribed reason related to a designated infectious disease, as defined in section 50.1, is deemed to have taken leave beginning on the first day the employee does not perform the duties of his or her position on or after the date specified in the regulation; or

(c) provide that clauses 74 (1) (a) and 74.12 (1) (a) apply, with necessary modifications, in relation to the deemed leave described in clause (b).

Retroactive Regulation – s. 141(2.2.1)

141(2.2.1) A regulation referred to in subsection (2.2) that specifies a date may specify a date that is earlier than the day on which the regulation is made.

Regulation Extending Leave – s. 141(2.3)

141(2.3) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make a regulation providing that the entitlement of an employee to take leave under clause 50.1 (1.1) (a) is extended beyond the day on which the entitlement would otherwise end under subsection 50.1 (5) or (6), if the employee is still not performing the duties of his or her position because of the effects of the declared emergency and because of a reason referred to in subclause 50.1 (1.1) (a) (i), (ii), (iii) or (iv).

Same – s. 141(2.4)

141(2.4) A regulation made under subsection (2.3) may limit the duration of the extended leave and may set conditions that must be met in order for the employee to be entitled to the extended leave.

Regulations Re s. 50.1.1 – s. 141(2.5)

141(2.5) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations,

(a) prescribing the process for overpayment recovery under subsection 50.1.1 (18);

(b) prescribing the date by which the Board is required to repay the Ministry under subsection 50.1.1 (21);

(c) prescribing, for the purposes of subsection 50.1.1 (31), persons who may investigate possible contraventions of section 50.1.1;

(d) prescribing the powers under this Act that a person prescribed under clause (c) may exercise;

(e) specifying the parts of this Act that apply, with necessary modifications, if a person prescribed under clause (c) investigates a possible contravention of section 50.1.1;

(f) exempting the Crown, a Crown agency, or an authority, board, commission or corporation, all of whose members are appointed by the Crown, from the application of section 50.1.1 or any provision of it.

Regulations Re Part XIX – s. 141(3)

141(3) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations prescribing information for the purposes of section 77.

Regulations Re Part XXII – s. 141(3.1)

141(3.1) A regulation made under paragraph 16.1 of subsection (1) may,

(a) establish different penalties or ranges of penalties for different types of contraventions or the method of determining those penalties or ranges;

(b) specify that different penalties, ranges or methods of determining a penalty or range apply to contraveners who are individuals and to contraveners that are corporations; or

(c) prescribe criteria an employment standards officer is required or permitted to consider when imposing a penalty.

Regulations re Part XXV – s. 141(4)

141(4) If the Lieutenant Governor in Council is satisfied that laws are or will be in effect in the state for the enforcement of orders made under this Act on a basis substantially similar to that set out in section 126, the Lieutenant Governor in Council may by regulation,

(a) declare a state to be a reciprocating state for the purposes of section 130; and

(b) designate an authority of that state as the authority who may make applications under section 130.

Classes – s. 141(5)

141(5) A regulation made under this section may be restricted in its application to any class of employee or employer and may treat different classes of employee or employer in different ways.

Regulations May Be Conditional – s. 141(5.1)

141(5.1) A regulation made under this section may provide that it applies only if one or more conditions specified in it are met.

Terms and Conditions of Employment for an Industry – s. 141(6)

141(6) Without restricting the generality of paragraphs 6 and 7 of subsection (1), a regulation made under paragraph 6 or 7 may establish requirements for the industry respecting such matters as a minimum wage, the scheduling of work, maximum hours of work, eating periods and other breaks from work, posting of work schedules, conditions under which the maximum hours of work set out in the regulation may be exceeded, overtime thresholds and overtime pay, vacations, vacation pay, working on public holidays and public holiday pay and treating some public holidays differently than others for those purposes.

Repealed – s. 141(7)

Conditions, Revocability of Approval – s. 141(8)

141(8) A regulation made under paragraph 9 of subsection (1) may authorize the Director to impose conditions in granting an approval and may authorize the Director to rescind an approval.

Restriction Where Excess Hours Agreements Approved – s. 141(9)

141(9) An employer may not require an employee who has made an agreement approved by the Director under a regulation made under paragraph 9 of subsection (1) to work more than 10 hours in a day, except in the circumstances described in section 19.

Revocability of Part of Approved Excess Hours Agreement – s. 141(10)

141(10) If an employee has agreed to work hours in excess of those referred to in clause 17 (1) (a) and hours in excess of those referred to in clause 17(1)(b), the fact that the Director has approved the agreement in accordance with a regulation made under paragraph 9 of subsection (1) does not prevent the employee from revoking, in accordance with subsection 17(6), that part of the agreement dealing with the hours in excess of those referred to in clause 17(1)(b).

ESA Part XXVIII – Transition

Part XXVIII of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 provides transitional provisions, amendments to the former Employment Standards Act, the repeal of five employment-related statutes, a provision for the Act to come into force on a date to be proclaimed by the Lieutenant Governor and the official short title of the Act.

ESA Part XXVIII Section 142 - Transition

Transition - s. 142(1)

142(1) Part XIV.1 of the Employment Standards Act, as it read immediately before its repeal by this Act, continues to apply only with respect to wages that became due and owing before the Employee Wage Protection Program was discontinued and only if the employee to whom the wages were owed provided a certificate of claim, on a form prepared by the Ministry, to the Program Administrator before the day on which this section comes into force.

Section 142(1) provides that Part XIV.1 of the Employment Standards Act will continue to apply, even though the former Employment Standards Act was repealed on September 4, 2001. See ESA Part XXVIII, s. 144 for further discussion.

Part XIV.1 of the former Act provides for employee eligibility for compensation for unpaid wages that were due and owing under the Employee Wage Protection Program, prior to the Program's discontinuance on October 29, 1997, by the Public Sector Transition Stability Act, 1997.

As of September 4, 2001, the application of Part XIV.1 of the former Employment Standards Act is limited to situations where:

1. The wages became due and owing before the discontinuance of the Employee Wage Protection Program on October 29, 1997; and
2. Prior to September 4, 2001, the employee to whom the wages were owed had submitted a certificate of claim to the Program Administrator of the Employee Wage Protection Program, on a form prepared by the Ministry of Labour.

For further information on the history and application of Part XIV.1 of the former Employment Standards Act, please see Legislative History.

ESA Part XXVIII - Section 143 OMITTED (Amends or repeals other Acts)

Amendment to Employment Standards Act - s. 143(1)

143(1) Section 38 of the Employment Standards Act, as amended by the Statutes of Ontario, 1993, chapter 27, Schedule and 1996, chapter 23, section 8, is further amended by adding the following subsection:

Birth, etc., after Dec. 30, 2000

(2.1) Despite subsection (2), an employee may, if the child in respect of which the employee wishes to take parental leave was born or came into the employee's custody, care and control for the first time on or after December 31, 2000, begin parental leave no more than 52 weeks after the day the child was born or came into the custody, care and control of the parent for the first time.

Section 38(1) of the former Employment Standards Act provided that an employee must commence parental leave no more than 35 weeks after the day in which the child was born or came into the employee's custody, care and control for the first time.

Section 143(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 amended s. 38 of the former Employment Standards Act by including s. 38(2.1). Section 38(2.1) extended the deadline for commencing parental leave to 52 weeks for any employee whose child was born or came into their custody, care and control for the first time on or after December 31, 2000.

Please see the discussion on pregnancy and parental leave in Legislative History for further information.

Amendment to Employment Standards Act - s. 143(2)

143(2) Section 40 of the Act is amended by adding the following subsection:

Birth, etc., after Dec. 30, 2000

(2) Despite subsection (1) and section 41, an employee may, if the child in respect of which the employee takes parental leave was born or came into the employee's custody, care and control for the first time on or after December 31,2000, extend the leave without notice to the employee's employer,

(a) if the employee took pregnancy leave, to the day that is 35 weeks after the parental leave began; or

(b) if the employee did not take pregnancy leave, to the day that is 37 weeks after the parental leave began.

Section 40 of the Employment Standards Act provided that an employee was entitled to 18 weeks of parental leave with regards to the birth or the coming into custody, care and control of a child.

Section 143(2) amended section 40 of the former Employment Standards Act by adding a new subsection (s. 40(2)). Section 40(2) increased the entitlement to parental leave for any employee whose child was born or came into their custody, care and control for the first time on or after December 31, 2000. Parental leave for such employees was extended from 18 weeks to 35 weeks, for an employee who took pregnancy leave. For employees who did not take pregnancy leave, parental leave was extended to 37 weeks.

Please see the discussion on pregnancy and parental leave in Legislative History for further information.

ESA Part XXVIII - Section 144 OMITTED (Amends or repeals other Acts)

Repeals - s. 144(1)

144(1) The Employment Standards Act and section 143 of this Act are repealed.

On September 4, 2001, the Employment Standards Act, 2000 was proclaimed in force. It replaces the former Employment Standards Act as the legislation governing employment standards entitlements for the majority of Ontario workplaces.

With the coming into force of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, the former Employment Standards Act and s. 143 of the ESA 2000 were repealed. Please note, however, that the repeal of s. 143 of the ESA 2000 and the former Employment Standards Act does not affect any rights or entitlements that employees had under the former Employment Standards Act prior to September 4, 2001. The ESA 2000 cannot be retroactively applied. Instead, the ESA 2000 takes effect and only replaces the former Employment Standards Act as of September 4, 2001.

Application of the former Employment Standards Act

1. The former Employment Standards Act will continue to be the source for employment standards and for investigation procedures and remedies for any alleged contraventions occurring prior to September 4, 2001.

Example:

Wally files a complaint on December 3, 2001, that he has not been paid wages for 8 hours of work he performed on July 27, 2001. The amount should have appeared on his August 10, 2001, pay cheque, which covers the pay period July 15, 2001, to July 28, 2001.

Wally earned the wages for 8 hours of work on July 27, 2001, but the wages did not become due until August 10, 2001, the pay day for the pay period which covers July 27, 2001.

Even though the complaint was filed after the coming into force of the ESA 2000, both the date the wages were earned (July 27, 2001) and the date the alleged contravention of an employment standard (August 11, 2001 - one day after the pay cheque was due) occurred prior to September 4, 2001.

Therefore, the former Employment Standards Act would govern the investigation and available remedies for the alleged contravention. An order to pay for a contravention of s. 7(3) would be issued by an employment standards officer under s. 65(1.2) of the former Employment Standards Act.

2. In addition, it is Program Policy that the former Employment Standards Act will also apply to the investigation and available remedies of an alleged contravention of an employment standard that occurred on or after September 4, 2001, but was based on an employment standard entitlement arising prior to September 4, 2001.

Example:

Dana files a complaint on November 20, 2001, that her employer did not pay the premium rate for work she performed on Labour Day, 2001 (September 3, 2001). The amount was due on her September 15, 2001, pay cheque which covered the pay period August 26 to September 8, 2001.

The alleged contravention of an employment standard occurred when the employer failed to pay the premium rate on September 15, 2001. Although September 15 occurs after the coming into force date of the ESA 2000, the entitlement to the premium rate arose when it was earned on Labour Day, which was prior to the coming into force of the ESA 2000 on September 4, 2001.

The date of the entitlement to the premium rate (September 3, 2001) and not the date upon which it became due (September 15, 2001) is the determining date of which Act governs the investigation and available remedies for Dana's claim.

Therefore, an order to pay for a contravention of s. 7(3) would be issued by an employment standards officer under s. 65(1.2) of the former Employment Standards Act.

3. Lastly, it is Program Policy that the former Employment Standards Act will also apply to the investigation and available remedies with respect to a contravention concerning a pregnancy leave or parental leave that commenced prior to September 4, 2001.

Example 1:

April files a complaint on January 7, 2002, that her employer did not reinstate her to her position at the end of her parental leave on December 31, 2001.

The parental leave had commenced on May 1, 2001. Although the leave ended after the coming into force of the ESA 2000, the leave commenced prior to the coming into force of the ESA 2000 on September 4, 2001.

The date the leave commenced (and not the date the leave ended) is the determining date of which Act governs the investigation and available remedies for April's claim.

Therefore an order for compensation for a contravention of s. 43 of the former Employment Standards Act would be issued by an employment standards officer under s. 45 of the former Employment Standards Act.

Example 2:

Glenda files a complaint on May 29, 2002, that she was not reinstated to her position at the end of her parental leave on May 20, 2002.

Glenda had commenced a pregnancy leave on May 21, 2001, and that leave had ended on September 17, 2001. Her parental leave commenced on September 17, 2001, after the ESA 2000 came into force.

Because Glenda's complaint concerns her rights to reinstatement following her parental leave, the date the parental leave commenced is the determining date of which Act governs the investigation and available remedies for Glenda's claim.

Therefore an order for compensation and/or reinstatement for a contravention of s. 53 of the ESA 2000 would be issued by an employment standards officer under s. 104 of that Act.

Same - s. 144(2)

144(2) The One Day's Rest in Seven Act is repealed.

The One Day's Rest in Seven Act, RSO 1990, c O.7, provided that hospitality industry workers in towns with a population greater than 10,000 would have to receive at least one day off work in every seven-day period. The Act required that, if possible, the day off be a Sunday. Watchmen, janitors, supervisors, managers and certain part-time workers were excluded from the Act. A violation of the Act was subject to a maximum fine of $25,000. The One Day's Rest in Seven Act was repealed on September 4, 2001.

Section 18(4) of the ESA 2000 now provides a general entitlement for a period free from the performance of work of at least 24 consecutive hours in every work week or at least 48 consecutive hours in every two consecutive work weeks. The weekly and bi-weekly rest entitlements provided in s. 18(4) are applied to employees generally and are not limited to hospitality industry workers within towns with a population greater than 10,000.

For further information on the application of s. 18(4), please see ESA Part VII, s. 18(4).

Same - s. 144(3)

144(3) The Government Contracts Hours and Wages Act is repealed.

The Government Contracts Hours and Wages Act, RSO 1990, c G.8*,* was first enacted in 1936. It was enacted to establish a legislative foundation for a government fair wage policy for hours of work and wages for workers employed by private sector employers who were carrying out construction contracts for the provincial government.

The Government Contracts Hours and Wages Act was repealed on September 4, 2001. It should be noted, however, that in recent years, the government's fair wage policy has been established pursuant to an order-in-council independently of the Government Contracts Hours and Wages Act. The repeal of the Government Contracts Hours and Wages Act, therefore, has no impact on the current fair wage policy.

Same - s. 144(4)

144(4) The Employment Agencies Act is repealed.

The Employment Agencies Act, RSO 1990, c E.13, required that employment agencies, whether engaged in finding employees for employers or in finding employers for employees, be licensed. This Act was repealed on March 31, 2001. As a result, employment agencies in Ontario are no longer required to obtain a licence to operate.

Same - s. 144(5)

144(5) The Industrial Standards Act is repealed.

The Industrial Standards Act, RSO 1990, c I.6*,* was first enacted in 1935. It provided a means for establishing minimum standards for hours, wages and other working conditions for specific industries that were different from the entitlements provided under the former Employment Standards Act. These entitlements were set out in schedules contained in regulations under the former Employment Standards Act.

By the time of the former Employment Standards Act's repeal on September 4, 2001, only two industries were covered by active schedules: the women's coat and suit industry and the women's dress and sportswear industry. Entitlements for these two industries are now set out in O Reg 291/01 (Terms and Conditions of Employment in Defined Industries) under the ESA 2000.

ESA Part XXVIII - Section 145 OMITTED (Provides for coming into force of provisions of this Act)

145 This Act comes into force on a day to be named by proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor.

Section 143 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 was proclaimed into force as of December 30, 2000, amending the parental leave provisions of the former Employment Standards Act. Subsection 144(4) of the ESA 2000, providing for the repeal of the Employment Agencies Act, was proclaimed in force as of March 31, 2001. All remaining provisions of the ESA 2000 (including s. 144(1) which repealed s. 143) were proclaimed in force as of September 4, 2001.

ESA Part XXVIII - Section 146 OMITTED (Enacts short title of this Act)

146 The short title of this Act is the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

All bills introduced in the Legislative Assembly contain both a long title and a short title. However, once the bill receives Royal Assent, the statute created by the bill will for convenience usually be referred to only by its short title.

Employment Standards Act, 2000 – Regulations

Ontario Regulation 66/20 - Infectious Disease Emergency Leave REVOKED

O. Reg 66/20 was made on March 19, 2020 but pursuant to section 3 was deemed to have come into force on January 25, 2020. It prescribed certain matters related to infectious disease emergency leave.

On May 29, 2020, O. Reg 66/20 was revoked and replaced by O. Reg. 228/20. All of the substantive provisions of O. Reg 66/20 were maintained in O. Reg 228/20 - see O. Reg 228/20 for details

O Reg 125/16 Section 1 – Credit Card Charges

1. For the purposes of clause (f) of the definition of "tip or other gratuity" in subsection 1(1) of the Act, a tip or other gratuity does not include the portion of a service charge or similar charge imposed by a credit card company on an employer for processing a credit card payment made to the employer by a customer, as determined in accordance with the following:

1. Multiply the total amount of the tip or other gratuity by the greater of,
    i. the per cent charged by the credit card company for processing the payment, and
    ii. 1.5 per cent.

O Reg 125/16 came into force on June 10, 2016. Clause (f) of the definition of "tip or other gratuity" in subsection 1(1) states that "tip or other gratuity" does not include such charges as may be prescribed relating to the method of payment used, or a prescribed portion of those charges. Accordingly, this regulation sets out what is not included for the purposes of clause (f) of the definition.

The regulation excludes some of the credit card processing fees from the definition of "tip or other gratuity". The amount that is excluded is determined by calculating the greater of: a) the amount of the tip or other gratuity multiplied by the per cent charged by the credit card company for processing the payment, or b) the amount of the tip or other gratuity multiplied by 1.5%.

By virtue of this exclusion, the amount that results from applying the formula in paragraph (1) is not governed by the rules in Part V.1 of the Act that prohibit employers from withholding tips or other gratuities from employees.

As such, where tips or other gratuities are paid by a customer on a credit card, an employer can deduct or withhold the amount that results from applying the formula in paragraph (1) from the amount of the tip or gratuity that was provided by the customer.

For example:

- a customer pays for a $100 restaurant bill on a credit card and adds a $10 tip onto the credit card that is intended for the waiter.
- the credit card processing fee is 1.5%.
- pursuant to this regulation, 15 cents ($10 x 1.5%) of the $10 tip is considered not to be a tip or other gratuity.
- therefore, the employer is not prohibited under Part V.1 from withholding 15 cents from the $10 tip.

This regulation addresses credit card processing fees only.eEmployers are not permitted to deduct or withhold from an employee’s tips or other gratuities any amounts representing debit card processing fees or any other type of processing fee..

Ontario Regulation 159/05 – Terms and Conditions of Employment in Defined Industries – Mineral Exploration and Mining

This regulation sets out special rules for certain employees engaged in the mineral exploration industry and the mining industry. Currently, the regulation's scope is limited to days free from work.

O Reg 159/05 Section 1 – Definitions

1. In this Regulation,

"defined industries" means the mineral exploration industry and the mining industry;

"mineral exploration" means prospecting, staking or exploration for minerals and any related activities, and includes,

(a) advanced exploration such as the excavation of an exploratory shaft, adit or decline, the extraction of minerals for the purpose of proving a mineral deposit, and the installation of a mill for test purposes, and

(b) site rehabilitation;

"mining" means the extraction, concentration and smelting of economic minerals from a mineral deposit for commercial purposes, and "mine" has a corresponding meaning.

O Reg 159/05 came into effect on March 31, 2005.

Defined Industry

Section 1(1) defines two industries to which O Reg 159/05 applies: the "mineral exploration" industry and the "mining" industry. (Note, however, that by virtue of s. 2, the regulation applies only to certain employees in the industry.)

Mineral Exploration

"Mineral exploration" is defined to mean prospecting, staking or exploration for minerals and related activities, and includes advanced exploration (such as the excavation of an exploratory shaft, adit or decline, the extraction of minerals for the purpose of proving a mineral deposit, and the installation of a mill for test purposes), and site rehabilitation. It should be noted that this is an inclusive definition rather than exhaustive. Other kinds of work might qualify as "related activities" to mineral exploration even though they are not listed in this s. 1 definition.

Mining

"Mining" is defined to mean the extraction, concentration and smelting of economic minerals from a mineral deposit for commercial purposes. "Mine" has a corresponding meaning.

O Reg 159/05 Section 2 – Scope

2(1) This Regulation is restricted in its application to,

(a) employees in the mineral exploration industry who work at sites of mineral exploration, subject to subsection (2);

(b) employees in the mining industry who,

i. work at mines, and

ii. during periods of consecutive days of work, do not live at their principal residences but instead live in bunkhouses, hotels or motels, or other temporary accommodation; and

(c) employers of the employees described in clauses (a) and (b).

(2) Clause (1) (a) does not apply to an employee whose employer's principal business is mining.

Section 2 narrows the scope of O Reg 159/05, by restricting its application in the following ways:

- To employees in the mineral exploration industry who work at sites of mineral exploration, subject to subsection (2). Subsection (2) states that an employee in the mineral exploration industry does not include an employee whose employer's principal business is mining. The effect is to restrict the scope of O Reg 159/05 so that it does not apply to employees engaged in mineral exploration if the principal business of their employer is mining.
- To employees in the mining industry who work at mines and who, during periods of consecutive days of work, do not live in their principal residences but instead are housed in temporary accommodation (e.g., bunkhouses, hotels, motels).
- To employers of the employees so defined.

The terms "mineral exploration" and "mining" are both defined in s. 1 of O Reg 159/05.

O Reg 159/05 Section 3 – Terms and Conditions of Employment

3. This Regulation sets out terms and conditions of employment that apply to employees and employers described in section 2.

Section 3 simply states that O Reg 159/05 sets out terms and conditions of employment that apply to those employees and employers in the defined industries of mineral exploration and mining described in s. 2.

O Reg 159/05 Section 4 – Days Free From Work

Application of ss. 4(2) & (3) – s. 4(1)

4(1) If the employer and the employee agree, subsections (2) and (3) apply instead of subsection 18 (4) of the Act.

Section 4(1) of O Reg 159/05 provides that, where the employer and employee in the defined industry agree, ss. 4(2) and 4(3) apply instead of s. 18(4) of the ESA 2000:

18(4) An employer shall give an employee a period free from the performance of work equal to,

(a) at least 24 consecutive hours in every work week; or

(b) at least 48 consecutive hours in every period of two consecutive work weeks.

There can be no substitution of ss. 4(2) and (3) of O Reg 159/05 for s. 18(4) of the ESA 2000 unless the employer and employee (or union) agree. Agreements to substitute the rest period requirement in s. 4 of O Reg 159/05 for the requirement in s. 18(4) of the ESA 2000 must be in writing in order to be valid. See ESA Part I, s. 1(3) and ESA Part 1, s. 1(3.1) for a full discussion of the requirements regarding written agreements.

Days Free From Work – s. 4(2)

4(2) The employer shall not require or permit the employee to perform work on more than 28 consecutive days.

Under s. 4(2) of O Reg 159/05, the requirement to provide a period of at least 24 consecutive hours free from performing work in every work week or at least 48 consecutive hours free from performing work in every period of two consecutive work weeks (under s. 18(4) of the ESA 2000), is replaced, if the employer and employee agree, by a provision that the employer not require or permit the employee to perform work on more than 28 consecutive days.

Determining Days Free From Work – s. 4(3)

4(3) The employer shall give the employee days free from work in accordance with the following:

1. The number of days free from work shall be equal to the number of consecutive days on which the employee worked before the period of days free from work, divided by three.

2. Despite paragraph 1, if dividing by three under that paragraph produces a mixed number, the number of days free from work shall be the next higher whole number.

3. If the employee is entitled to more than one day free from work, those days shall be consecutive, and all of them shall be given before the employee returns to work.

Subsection 4(3) of O Reg 159/05 then provides a formula for determining the days free from work that an employee is given following the work period of no more than 28 consecutive days, as follows:

1. The number of days free from work will be equal to the number of consecutive days the employee worked, divided by three. For example, if the employee worked 21 consecutive days, the employee would be given seven days free from work.
2. If the number of days off arrived at after dividing by three is a mixed number, then the result is "rounded up" to the next number. For example, if the employee worked 28 consecutive days under s. 4(2), applying the formula would give 9.33 days off, which would be rounded up to 10 days.
3. If the employee is entitled to more than one day off, the days free from work will be taken consecutively.

Like s. 18(4) of the ESA 2000 which it replaces, the maximum days of work permitted in s. 4(2) and the alternate rest period in s. 4(3) of O Reg 159/05 are employment standards as defined in s. 1(1) of the ESA 2000 and cannot be contracted out of or waived (s. 5(1) of the ESA 2000). An employer and an employee (or union) cannot, for example, agree that the employee will work more than twenty-eight days in a row or take fewer consecutive days free from work than would be required under the s. 4(3) formula. Once an employer and employee (or union) in the defined industry have agreed to vary from the weekly/biweekly rest provisions in s. 18(4) of the ESA 2000 and to substitute the provisions in s. 4 of O Reg 159/05, the employer cannot require or permit more consecutive days of work than 28 days in a row and the employee cannot be given fewer consecutive days free from work than outlined in the s. 4(3) formula. There is no "switching back and forth" between the requirements of s. 18(4) and the alternate rest periods provided in s. 4(3) of the Regulation as the Regulation operates in lieu of s. 18(4).

Interaction with Other Hours of Work Provisions

The requirement in s. 4(2) that the employer not require or permit the employee to perform work on more than 28 consecutive days and the formula in s. 4(3) for determining the days free from work that an employee is given following the work period of no more than 28 consecutive days, operate simultaneously with the hours of work provisions in Part VII of the ESA 2000, as follows:

Maximum Daily Hours

Section 17(1) of the ESA 2000 provides for maximum daily hours of work of eight hours per day or, if there is an established workday that is longer than eight hours, the number of hours in that work day. However, under s. 17(2) of the ESA 2000, employers and employees can agree, in writing, that the employee will work up to a specified number of hours in excess of the daily limit. For such an agreement to be valid, s. 17(5) requires that non-unionized employees first be provided with a copy of the Ministry of Labour's information sheet on hours of work and overtime and that the agreement contains a statement by the employee acknowledging such receipt.

For further details about the maximum daily hours of work set out in s. 17(1); about agreements to vary from the maximum daily hours in s. 17(2); and about the requirement to provide the Ministry's information sheet as set out in s. 17(5), see ESA Part VII, s. 17.

Maximum Weekly Hours

Section 17(1) of the ESA 2000 provides for maximum weekly hours of work of 48 hours. However, under s. 17(3) of the ESA 2000, employers and employees can agree, in writing, that the employee will work up to a specified number of hours in excess of the weekly limit. For such an agreement to be valid, s. 17(5) requires that non-unionized employees first be provided with a copy of the Ministry of Labour's information sheet on hours of work and overtime and that the agreement contains a statement by the employee acknowledging such receipt.

For further details about the maximum weekly hours of work set out in s. 17(1); about agreements to vary from the maximum weekly hours in s. 17(3); and about the requirement to provide the Ministry's information sheet as set out in s. 17(5), see ESA Part VII, s. 17.

Daily Rest

Section 18(1) of the ESA 2000 requires that an employee be free from performing work for a particular employer for a period of at least 11 consecutive hours in each day. This requirement is subject to s. 18(2) (on-call employees) and s. 19 (exceptional circumstances).

For a discussion of the daily rest requirement in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000, see ESA Part VII, s. 18.

On-Call Exception

Section 18(2) of the ESA 2000 sets out an "on-call exception" to s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000.

Under s. 18(2), the requirement that an employee have at least 11 hours free from performing work in each day (in accordance with s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000) does not apply to an employee who is on call and is called in during a period the employee would not otherwise have been expected to work. The on-call exception is an exception only to the requirement to provide 11 consecutive hours free from work each day as per s. 18(1); it does not operate as an exception to any other hours of work provisions.

For a discussion of the on-call exception in s. 18(2) of the ESA 2000, see ESA Part VII, s. 18 of the Manual.

Free From Work Between Shifts

Section 18(3) of the ESA 2000 requires employers to provide employees with a minimum period free from work of eight hours between successive shifts, with two exceptions. First, an employee may work successive shifts without the eight-hour free period if the total number of hours worked on the successive shifts is 13 or less. Second, the employer and employee can agree, in writing, to forego the eight-hour period entirely or to reduce its length. For a discussion of the interaction of s. 18(3) with the required daily rest in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000, see ESA Part VII, s. 18 of the Manual.

Exceptional Circumstances

Section 19 of the ESA 2000 allows employers to require employees to work more daily or weekly hours than are permitted under s. 17 of the ESA 2000, or to work during a free period (daily, in between shifts and weekly or biweekly) as required by s. 18 of the ESA 2000 (and s. 4 of O Reg 159/05) in any of the specified circumstances, but only so far as is necessary to avoid serious interference with the ordinary working of the employer's establishment or operations.

For a discussion of the exceptional circumstances set out in s. 19 of the ESA 2000, see ESA Part VII, s. 19 of the Manual.

Eating Periods

Under s. 20 of the ESA 2000, an employer is required to provide an eating period of at least 30 minutes, timed so that no employee works longer than five consecutive hours without receiving an eating period, or, if the employer and employee agree (not necessarily in writing), two eating periods that together total at least 30 minutes within the same period of five consecutive hours.

For further details about eating periods in s. 20 of the ESA 2000, see ESA Part VII, s. 20.

Ontario Regulation 160/05 – Terms and Conditions of Employment in Defined Industries – Live Performances, Trade Shows and Conventions

This regulation sets out special rules for the terms and conditions of employment for employees engaged in the production of live performances (e.g., theatre, dance, comedy, etc.), trade shows and conventions. Currently, the regulation’s scope is limited to hours free from work.

O Reg 160/05 Section 1 – Definitions

O Reg 160/05 came into effect on March 31, 2005.

Defined Industry

1. In this Regulation,

"defined industry" means the industry of producing,

(a) live performances of theatre, dance, comedy, musical productions, concerts and opera, and

(b) trade shows and conventions;

Section 1 defines the industry to which O Reg 160/05 applies, to mean the industry of producing live performances of theatre, dance, comedy, musical productions, concerts and opera as well as trade shows and conventions.

Technical and Production Support

"technical and production support" includes stage and set construction, hair cutting and styling, preparation and fitting of wigs and costumes, preparation and application of make-up, preparation and operation of lighting, sound and stage equipment and props, and stage management.

Section 1 defines "technical and production support" to include the following activities: stage and set construction, hair cutting and styling, the preparation and fitting of wigs and costumes, the preparation and application of make-up, the preparation and operation of lighting, sound and stage equipment and props, and stage management.

It should be noted that this is an inclusive definition rather than exhaustive. Other kinds of work might qualify as "technical and production support" even though they are not listed in this s. 1 definition.

O Reg 160/05 Section 2 – Scope

2. This Regulation is restricted in its application to,

(a) employees in the defined industry who provide technical and production support; and

(b) employers of the employees described in clause (a).

Section 2 narrows the scope of O Reg 160/05 by restricting it in its application to employees in the defined industry who provide technical and production support and to their employers.

The terms “defined industry” and “technical and production support” are both defined in s. 1 of O Reg 160/05.

O Reg 160/05 Section 3 – Terms and Conditions of Employment

3. This Regulation sets out terms and conditions of employment that apply to employees and employers described in section 2.

Section 3 simply states that O Reg 160/05 sets out terms and conditions of employment that apply to employers and employees in the defined industry of live performances, trade shows and conventions.

O Reg 160/05 Section 4 – Hours Free From Work

Application of s. 4(1) – s. 4(1)

4(1) If the employer and the employee agree, subsection (2) applies instead of subsection 18(1) of the Act.

Section 4(1) of O Reg 160/05 provides that, where the employer and employee in the defined industry agree, s. 4(2) applies instead of s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000:

18(1) An employer shall give an employee a period of at least 11 consecutive hours free from performing work in each day.

Hours Free from Work – s. 4(2)

4(2) An employer shall give an employee a period of at least eight consecutive hours free from performing work in each day.

Under s. 4(2) of O Reg 160/05, the period of at least 11 consecutive hours free from performing work in each day (in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000) is replaced by a period of at least eight consecutive hours free from performing work in each day. See ESA Part VII, s. 18(1) for a discussion of the meaning of "day".

There can be no substitution of s. 4(2) for s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000 unless the employer and employee (or union) agree. An agreement to substitute the eight-hour daily rest period in s. 4(2) for the eleven-hour daily rest period in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000 must be in writing. See ESA Part I, s. 1(3) for a full discussion of the requirements regarding written agreements.

Like s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000 which it replaces, the daily rest in s. 4(2) of O Reg 160/05 is an employment standard as defined in s. 1(1) of the ESA 2000 and cannot be contracted out of or waived (s. 5(1)). An employer and employee (or union) in the defined industry could not, for example, agree to a six-hour daily rest period.

For a discussion of how the 11-hour daily rest operates, see s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000. (Substitute "eight hours" for "11 hours" each time it appears in order to understand the operation of the eight-hour daily rest period under s. 4(2) of O Reg 160/05.)

Interaction with Other Hours of Work Provisions

The requirement in s. 4(2) for at least eight consecutive hours off work in each day operates simultaneously with the hours of work provisions in Part VII of the ESA 2000, as follows:

On-Call Exception

Section 18(2) of the ESA 2000 sets out an "on-call exception" to s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000. This exception also applies if the daily rest period is eight consecutive hours as per s. 4(2) of O Reg 160/05, when it replaces the 11-hour daily rest requirement in s. 18(1) in the defined industry.

Under s. 18(2), the requirement that an employee have at least 11 hours free from performing work in each day (in accordance with s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000) or at least eight hours free from performing work in each day (in accordance with s. 4(2) of O Reg 160/05) does not apply to an employee who is on call and is called in during a period the employee would not otherwise have been expected to work. The on-call exception is an exception only to the requirement to provide 11 or eight consecutive hours free from work each day as per s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000 or s. 4(2) of O Reg 160/05. It does not operate as an exception to any other hours of work provisions.

For a discussion of the on-call exception, see s. 18(2) of the ESA 2000. Substitute s. 4(2) of O Reg 160/05 for s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000, and substitute eight hours for 11 hours, wherever the references appear.

Maximum Daily Hours

Section 17(1) of the ESA 2000 provides for maximum daily hours of work of eight hours per day or, if there is an established workday that is longer than eight hours, the number of hours in that work day. However, under s. 17(2) of the ESA 2000, employers and employees can agree, in writing, that the employee will work up to a specified number of hours in excess of the daily limit. For such an agreement to be valid, s. 17(5) requires that non-unionized employees first be provided with a copy of the Ministry of Labour's information sheet on hours of work and overtime and that the agreement contains a statement by the employee acknowledging such receipt.

For further details about the maximum daily hours of work, see ESA Part VII, s. 17(1); about agreements to vary from the maximum daily hours, see ESA Part VII, s. 17(2); and about the requirement to provide the Ministry's information sheet, see ESA Part VII, s. 17(5).

Maximum Weekly Hours

Section 17(1) of the ESA 2000 provides for maximum weekly hours of work of 48 hours. However, under s. 17(3) of the ESA 2000, employers and employees can agree, in writing, that the employee will work up to a specified number of hours in excess of the weekly limit. For such an agreement to be valid, s. 17(5) requires that non-unionized employees first be provided with a copy of the Ministry of Labour's information sheet on hours of work and overtime and that the agreement contains a statement by the employee acknowledging such receipt.

For further details about the maximum weekly hours, see ESA Part VII, s. 17(1); about agreements to vary from the maximum weekly hours, see ESA Part VII, s. 17(3); and about the requirement to provide the Ministry’s information sheet, see ESA Part VII, s. 17(5).

Free from Work between Shifts

Section 18(3) of the ESA 2000 requires employers to provide employees with a minimum period free from work of eight hours between successive shifts, with two exceptions. First, an employee may work successive shifts without the eight-hour free period if the total number of hours worked on the successive shifts is 13 or less. Second, the employer and employee can agree, in writing, to forego the eight-hour period entirely or to reduce its length. For a discussion of the interaction of s. 18(3) with the required daily rest in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000, see s. 18(3).

Per s. 4 of O Reg 160/05, an employee and employer in the defined industry could agree in writing to a minimum daily rest of 8 hours (instead of the 11 hours in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000). That employee could then agree in writing to work an eight and a 10-hour shift back to back, without any break between them. The agreement in writing would comply with s. 18(3) of the ESA 2000, but if it resulted in the employee receiving a daily rest of less than eight consecutive hours (per the agreement under s. 4 of O Reg 160/05), the schedule would be in violation of O Reg 160/05 and, therefore, would not be permitted. In other words, an employee in the defined industry cannot agree to work hours under s. 18(3) of the ESA 2000 that would result in the employee getting less than the eight consecutive hours free from work each day stipulated in s. 4(2) of O Reg 160/05.

Weekly/Biweekly Rest Periods

Section 18(4) of the ESA 2000 establishes weekly or bi-weekly free time requirements for employees. The free time periods must be at least either 24 consecutive hours in every "work week" or 48 consecutive hours in every two consecutive "work weeks".

See ESA Part VII, s. 18(4) for a discussion of the weekly/biweekly rest period provisions.

Exceptional Circumstances

Section 19 of the ESA 2000 allows employers to require employees to work more daily or weekly hours than are permitted under s. 17 of the ESA 2000, or to work during a free period (daily, in between shifts and weekly or biweekly) as required by s. 18 of the ESA 2000 (and s. 4(2) of O Reg 160/05) in any of the specified circumstances, but only so far as is necessary to avoid serious interference with the ordinary working of the employer's establishment or operations.

For a discussion of the exceptional circumstances, see ESA Part VII, s. 19.

Eating Periods

Under s. 20 of the ESA 2000, an employer is required to provide an eating period of at least 30 minutes, timed so that no employee works longer than five consecutive hours without receiving an eating period, or, if the employer and employee agree (not necessarily in writing), two eating periods that together total at least 30 minutes within the same period of five consecutive hours.

For further details about eating periods, see ESA Part VII, s. 20.

Ontario Regulation 228/20 - Infectious Disease Emergency Leave

O. Reg. 228/20 – Infectious Disease Emergency Leave - was filed on May 29, 2020. It revoked and replaced O. Reg. 66/20, which had the same title.

As of May 29, 2020, O. Reg. 228/20:

1. Incorporated the provisions from O. Reg. 66/20, which:
    - was made on March 19, 2020 but pursuant to s. 3 of that regulation was deemed to have come into force on January 25, 2020,
    - established which diseases are designated as infectious diseases for purposes of unpaid infectious disease emergency leave (and paid infectious disease emergency leave from April 19, 2021 to December 31, 2021),
    - prescribed a start date of January 25, 2020 for the entitlement to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave because of a reason set out in subclauses 50.1(1.1)(b)(i) to (vi) of the ESA related to coronavirus (COVID-19).
        - During the time O. Reg. 66/20 was in effect, the only reasons for which there was an entitlement to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave for COVID-19 were set out in subclauses 50.1(1.1)(b)(i) to (vi) of the ESA – i.e. there were no prescribed reasons pursuant to subclause (vii)).

2. Introduced new provisions that apply to non-unionized employees during the defined COVID-19 period and that:

    - prescribes a new reason pursuant to subclause 50.1(1.1)(b)(vii) of the ESA for which there is an entitlement to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave: the employee's hours of work are temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19,
    - deems employees who are not performing the duties of their position because of the prescribed reason to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave under the ESA in respect of any time that the employee is not performing their duties for that reason,
    - provides that employees whose hours of work or wages are temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19 are not considered to be laid off under the ESA,
    - provides that a temporary reduction or temporary elimination of an employee's hours of work or wages by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19 does not constitute a constructive dismissal under the ESA,
    - deems, with exceptions, complaints not to have been filed with the Ministry if they were filed for termination or severance of employment on the basis that the employee's wages or hours of work were temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19 during the defined COVID-19 period.

O. Reg. 228/20 initially defined the "COVID-19 period" to be retroactive to March 1, 2020 and to extend until six weeks after the day the emergency declared by Order in Council 518/2020 (Ontario Regulation 50/20) pursuant to the Emergency Management and Civil Protection Act is terminated or disallowed. That emergency was terminated on July 24, 2020, which meant the final day of the COVID-19 period was initially set to be September 4, 2020. However, the definition of the "COVID-19 period" has been amended several times:

- On September 3, 2020, the definition of "COVID-19 period" was amended to extend the COVID-19 period until January 2, 2021.
- On December 17, 2020, the definition was amended to extend the COVID-19 period until July 3, 2021.
- On June 4, 2021, the definition was amended to extend the COVID-19 period until September 25, 2021.
- On September 16, 2021, the definition was amended to extend the COVID-19 period until January 1, 2022.

As such, the "COVID-19 period" is March 1, 2020 to January 1, 2022.

O. Reg. 228/20 was amended on August 24, 2020 to prescribe an additional reason pursuant to clause (vii) of s. 50.1(1.1)(b) of the ESA for which employees are entitled to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave, retroactive to July 24, 2020: an order made under s. 7.0.2 of the Emergency Management and Civil Protection Act that is continued under the Reopening Ontario (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020, or any amendment to such an order, that relates to the designated infectious disease applies to the employee.

O. Reg. 228/20 was amended on August 31, 2021 to prescribe, in s. 11, a later end date for entitlements to paid infectious disease emergency leave.

O. Reg. 228/20 Subsection 1(1) – Interpretation and Application

1. (1) In this Regulation,

"COVID-19 period" means the period beginning on March 1, 2020 and ending on January 1, 2022.

Subsection 1(1) provides the definition of the term "COVID-19 period". This term is used in several provisions of the regulation to establish the time period during which certain rules in the regulation apply.

"COVID-19 period" means the period beginning on March 1, 2020 and ending on January 1, 2022.

The definition of "COVID-19 period" in s. 1(1) originally provided that it ended on the date that is six weeks after the day the COVID-19 declared emergency (i.e. the emergency declared by Order in Council 518/2020 – O. Reg. 50/20 - on March 17, 2020) is terminated or is disallowed by the Legislature. As that emergency was terminated on July 24, 2020, the final day of the COVID-19 period was originally set to be September 4, 2020. The definition was amended on September 3, 2020 to extend the COVID-19 period to January 2, 2021, on December 17, 2020 to extend the COVID-19 period to July 3, 2021, on June 4, 2021 to extend the COVID-19 period to September 25, 2021, and on September 16, 2021 to extend the COVID-19 period to January 1, 2022.

O. Reg. 228/20 Subsection 1(2) – Interpretation and Application

1 (2) Subsection 2 (2) and sections 4 to 10 do not apply to an employee who is represented by a trade union.

Subsection 1(2) provides that certain provisions of O. Reg. 228/20 do not apply to employees who are represented by a trade union.

It does not matter for the purposes of ss. 1(2) whether or not the unionized employees are covered by a collective agreement. So long as the employees are represented by a trade union, the specified provisions do not apply to them. If an employee is or was represented by a trade union for only part of the COVID-19 period (e.g. a trade union was certified to represent the employee on March 27, 2020) and the employee meets the conditions for the deemed leave and other specified provisions, the specified provisions will not apply to the employee during the time the employee is or was represented by the trade union but will apply during the rest of the COVID-19 period.

The provisions that do not apply to employees who are represented by a trade union are:

- ss. 2(2), 4 and 5: these provisions create an entitlement to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave - and deem employees to be on the unpaid leave - when the employer temporarily reduces or temporarily eliminates an employee's hours of work for reasons related to COVID-19 during the COVID-19 period.
- s. 6: provides that employees whose hours of work or wages are temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19 during the COVID-19 period are not considered to be laid off under the ESA.
- s. 7: provides that employees whose hours of work or wages are temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19 during the COVID-19 period are not considered to be constructively dismissed under the ESA.
- s. 8: deems certain complaints not to have been filed with the Ministry.
- s. 9: establishes when an employee's hours of work or wages are considered to be reduced for the purposes of O. Reg. 228/20.

- s. 10: provides that, for greater certainty, O. Reg. 228/20 applies to assignment employees and provides that certain provisions apply with necessary modifications.

O. Reg. 228/20 Section 2 – Designated Diseases

2. (1) For the purposes of section 50.1 of the Act, the following diseases are designated as infectious diseases:

> 1. Diseases caused by a novel coronavirus, including Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS), Middle East Respiratory Syndrome (MERS) and coronavirus (COVID-19).

(2) Despite subsection (1), the designation of coronavirus (COVID-19) as an infectious disease applies with respect to the reason prescribed in paragraph 1 of subsection 4 (1) only during the COVID-19 period.

Subsection 2(1) establishes which diseases are designated as infectious diseases for the purposes of unpaid infectious disease emergency leave in ESA Part XIV, s. 50.1 (and paid infectious disease emergency leave from April 19, 2021 to December 31, 2021). It establishes that diseases caused by a novel coronavirus are designated as infectious diseases. The provision specifically names Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS), Middle East Respiratory Syndrome (MERS) and coronavirus (COVID-19). Note, however, that the list of diseases is an inclusive list. This means that there may be other diseases caused by a novel coronavirus that are also designated as infectious diseases for the purposes of infectious disease emergency leave.

Subsection 2(2) says that despite ss. 2(1), COVID-19 is designated as an infectious disease with respect to the reason prescribed in paragraph 1 of ss. 4(1) (i.e. where an employer temporarily reduces or temporarily eliminates an employee's hours of work for reasons related to the designated infectious disease) only during the COVID-19 period.

The COVID-19 period is defined in s. 1 to start on March 1, 2020 and to end January 1, 2022.

Pursuant to ss. 1(2) of O. Reg. 228/20, ss. 2(2) does not apply to employees who are represented by a trade union.

Section 2 must be read subject to ss. 3, 3.1(2) and 4(1.1) of O. Reg. 228/20, which establish start dates for the different reasons that create an entitlement to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave. At the time of writing, coronavirus (COVID-19) was the only infectious disease for which there is a start date. This means that at the time of writing, even though there are additional diseases designated as infectious diseases per section 1, the only disease for which unpaid infectious disease emergency leave may be taken is coronavirus (COVID-19).

O. Reg. 228/20 Section 3 – Entitlement Start Date, Reasons Under the Act

3(1). Entitlement to emergency leave under clause 50.1 (1.1) (b) of the Act because of a reason set out in subclauses 50.1(1.1)(b)(i) to (vi) of the Act related to coronavirus (COVID-19) is deemed to have started on January 25, 2020.

ESA Part XIV, s. 50.1(5.1) provides that "An employee is entitled to take a leave under clause (1.1)(b) [unpaid infectious disease emergency leave] starting on the prescribed date."

Subsection 3(1) prescribes a start date for the entitlement to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave because of a reason related to coronavirus (COVID-19) set out in subclauses 50.1(1.1)(b)(i)-(vi) of the ESA. Pursuant to ss. 3(1), the entitlement related to these reasons is deemed to have started on January 25, 2020. (Paid infectious disease emergency leave has a different start date, and a specified end date: see ss. 50.1(5.2) for details.)

Different start dates are prescribed for other reasons giving rise to the entitlement to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave:

- Subsection 3.1(2) prescribes a start date for the entitlement to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave that arises because of the prescribed reason in paragraph 1 of subsection 3.1(1) of O. Reg. 228/20 pursuant to subclause 50.1(1.1)(vii) – i.e. certain orders under the Emergency Management and Civil Protection Act that were continued under the Reopening Ontario (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020, or any amendment to those orders, apply to the employee – see below for details.
- Subsection 4(1.1) prescribes a start date – and a specific period during which the entitlement applies – for the entitlement to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave that arises because of the prescribed reason in paragraph 1 of subsection 4(1) of O. Reg. 228/20 related to COVID-19 pursuant to subclause 50.1(1.1)(vii) - i.e. where an employer temporarily reduces or temporarily eliminates a non-unionized employee's hours of work for reasons related to COVID-19) – see below for details.

Note that this regulation does not prescribe a start date for an entitlement to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave with respect to any of the other designated infectious diseases set out in O. Reg. 228/20, s. 2 (i.e., other diseases caused by a novel coronavirus, including Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) and Middle East Respiratory Syndrome (MERS)). As such, at the time of writing, employees are not entitled to take unpaid infectious disease emergency leave with respect to any of the other designated diseases; the entitlement arises pursuant to s. 3 only in respect of the coronavirus (COVID-19).

Note that this regulation provides an entitlement to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave for a reason related to Coronavirus (COVID-19) that is:

- retroactive to January 25, 2020 if the leave was for a reason set out in subclauses (i)-(vi) of 50.1(1.1)(b) of the Act,
- retroactive to March 1, 2020 if the leave was for the reason prescribed in paragraph 1 of ss. 4(1) of O. Reg. 228/20 per subclause (vii) of s. 50.1(1.1)(b) of the Act, and
- retroactive to July 24, 2020 if the leave was for the reason prescribed in paragraph 1 of ss. 3.1(1) of O. Reg. 228/20 per subclause (vii) of s. 50.1(1.1)(b) of the Act.

This means that an employee could retroactively designate absences from work for a reason set out in subclauses (i)-(iv) of s. 50.1(1.1)(b) between January 25, 2020 and March 18, 2020 (prior to when the infectious disease regulation was first put in place) as unpaid infectious disease emergency leave if the employee met the required eligibility criteria (i.e., a reason listed in s. 50.1(1.1)(b)(i)-(vi)) for the leave at that time. A retroactive leave of this nature raises a number of practical questions. For more information, see the discussion in ESA Part XIV, s. 50.1.

It also means that an employee is retroactively deemed to have been on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave in respect of any time the employee does not perform the duties of his or her position because the employer temporarily reduced or eliminated the employee's hours of work for COVID-19 related reasons from March 1, 2020 to May 28, 2020 (prior to O. Reg. 228/20 being filed).

With respect to the reason prescribed in paragraph 1 of ss. 3.1(1) of O. Reg. 228/20 (i.e., certain orders issued under the Emergency Management and Civil Protection Act that are continued under the Reopening Ontario (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020 apply to the employee): although the regulation was amended August 24, 2020 to prescribe this reason and provide that the entitlement is retroactive to July 24, 2020, it was Program policy that employees in the situation described in the regulation were entitled to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave through clause (iii) of s. 50.1(1.1)(b) and that the amendment simply provides greater certainty that employees who are subject to such orders are entitled to the leave.

3.1 (1) For the purposes of subclause 50.1 (1.1) (b) (vii) of the Act, the following reason is prescribed:

1. An order made under section 7.0.2 of the Emergency Management and Civil Protection Act that is continued under the Reopening Ontario (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020, or any amendment to such an order, that relates to the designated infectious disease applies to the employee.

3 (2) Entitlement to emergency leave under clause 50.1 (1.1) (b) of the Act because of the reason prescribed in paragraph 1 of subsection (1) related to coronavirus (COVID-19) is deemed to have started on July 24, 2020.

Clause 50.1(1.1)(b) of the ESA sets out the reasons for which an employee may take unpaid infectious disease emergency leave. Subclause (vii) of that provision provides that additional reasons may be prescribed by regulation.

Subsection 3.1(1) prescribes an additional reason that qualifies an employee for unpaid infectious disease emergency leave: an order made under section 7.0.2 of the Emergency Management and Civil Protection Act (EMCPA) that is continued under the Reopening Ontario (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020 (ROA), or any amendment to such an order, that relates to the designated infectious disease applies to the employee.

When the ROA came into force on July 24, 2020, some emergency orders that were initially made under section 7.0.2 of the EMCPA when the first declared emergency for COVID-19 was in effect (March 17, 2020 to July 24, 2020) ceased to be EMCPA orders but were continued under the ROA.

As per s. 3.1 of O. Reg. 228/20, employees who are not performing their duties because any such orders apply to them are entitled to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave.

The Program considers an order to "appl[y] to" an employee only if the order is directed at the employee, i.e., where the employee, either individually or as part of a group, is the subject of the requirement, prohibition or other direction made in the order.

In other words, this condition is not satisfied if an employee is only indirectly affected by the order or by the consequences of someone else complying with the order.

For example, an order that requires restaurants to close "applies to" the owners of restaurants. It does not apply to the employees of restaurants, even though they are affected by the closure.

At the time of writing, the orders referred to as "one employer" and "one location" orders (O. Reg. 158/20 – "Limiting Work to a Single Retirement Home", O. Reg. 146/20 – "Limiting Work to a Single Long-Term Care Home", and O. Reg. 177/20 "Congregate Care Settings") are orders continued under the ROA that may entitle certain employees to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave under this provision.

As the ROA orders – including who they apply to - may be amended from time to time, s. 3.1 provides that an employee is eligible for unpaid infectious disease emergency leave pursuant to s. 3.1 only if the order applies to the employee at the relevant time.

The start date for the entitlement to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave for this prescribed reason is retroactive to July 24, 2020, as that is the date the ROA took effect, and the EMCPA orders ceased to be orders under the EMCPA and were continued under the ROA.

Prior to July 24, 2020 - when the first emergency declaration was in place and the orders were EMCPA orders – it was Program policy that employees who were not performing the duties of their position because of a s. 7.0.2 EMCPA order that applied to them met the eligibility criteria for both declared emergency leave and unpaid infectious disease emergency leave. With respect to declared emergency leave, the Act explicitly references s. 7.0.2 EMCPA orders; with respect to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave it was Program policy that the entitlement arose based on subclause (iii) of s. 50.1(1.1)(b): these employees were considered to be subject to a control measure on the basis of a direction issued by the Government of Ontario. (It continues to be the Program's position that orders under the EMCPA amount to a "direction" issued "by the Government of Ontario" for employees to whom the order applies.)

It was similarly Program policy that employees who were not performing the duties of their position because of an EMCPA order that applied to the employee and that was continued under the ROA were eligible for unpaid infectious disease emergency leave based on subclause (iii) of s. 50.1(1.1)(b): these employees were considered to be subject to a control measure on the basis of a direction issued by the Government of Ontario. From the Program's perspective, this amendment provides greater certainty that employees in this situation are entitled to unpaid infectious disease emergency leave. As such, it is the Program's view that employees' entitlements have not changed as a result of the amendment. (Similarly, even though there is no provision corresponding to s. 3.1 of O. Reg. 228/20 that applies with respect to paid infectious disease emergency leave, it is the Program's position that employees meet the eligibility criterion for paid infectious disease emergency leave in ss. 50.1(1.2), para. 3 – which is worded the same as the criterion for unpaid infectious disease emergency leave set out in subclause (iii) of s. 50.1(1.1)(b) - where the employee is not performing the duties of his or her position because the employee is subject to an order that relates to COVID-19 under the ROA.)

O. Reg. 228/20 Section 4 – Prescribed Leave, Deemed Leave

4(1). For the purposes of subclause 50.1 (1.1) (b) (vii) of the Act, the following reason is prescribed:

1. The employee's hours of work are temporarily reduced or eliminated by the employer for reasons related to the designated infectious disease.

4 (1.1). Entitlement to emergency leave under clause 50.1 (1.1) (b) of the Act because of the reason prescribed in paragraph 1 of subsection (1) related to coronavirus (COVID-19) is deemed to have started on March 1, 2020, and applies during the COVID-19 period.

4(2). An employee who does not perform the duties of his or her position because of the reason set out in paragraph 1 of subsection (1) is deemed to be on infectious disease emergency leave under section 50.1 of the Act in respect of any time during the COVID-19 period that the employee does not perform such duties because of that reason.

Pursuant to ss. 1(2) of O. Reg. 228/20, s. 4 does not apply to employees who are represented by a trade union.

Clause 50.1(1.1)(b) of the ESA sets out the reasons for which an employee may take unpaid infectious disease emergency leave. Subclause (vii) of that provision provides that additional reasons may be prescribed by regulation.

Subsection 4(1) prescribes an additional reason that qualifies an employee for unpaid infectious disease emergency leave, ss. 4(1.1) provides the start date for the entitlement and specifies the period during which the entitlement applies, and ss. 4(2) deems an employee who fits within that reason to be on the leave in respect of any time during the COVID-19 period (March 1, 2020 to January 1, 2022) the employee is not performing the duties of the employee's position for that reason.

These subsections must be read together with ss. 50.1(1.1), which reads in part:

> "An employee is entitled to a leave of absence without pay if the employee will not be performing the duties of his or her position,
> (b) because of one or more of the following reasons related to a designated infectious disease…" [emphasis added]

Together, s. 4 of O. Reg. 228/20 and ss. 50.1(1.1) of the ESA establish that where, from March 1, 2020 to the end of the COVID-19 period (as defined in s. 1 of O. Reg. 228/20), an employee who was not/is not be performing the duties of his or her position because the employee's hours of work are temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19, is deemed to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave in respect of any time the employee is not performing his or her duties because of that reason.

For example, for reasons related to COVID-19, an employer temporarily changes an employee's schedule of 9 am–5 pm every weekday to 9 am–1 pm every weekday from April 1, 2020 to August 30, 2020. As per ss. 4(2), this employee is deemed to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave every weekday from 1 pm to 5 pm from April 1, 2020 to August 30, 2020. As per ss. 4(3), all requirements and prohibitions that apply to Part XIV leaves (with the exceptions set out in ss. 4(4)-(6)) apply to employees who are deemed to be on a leave under this provision. (See the discussion of ss. 4(4)-(6) below for details.)

It is Program policy that the condition that the temporary reduction or temporary elimination of the employee's hours by the employer "for reasons related to the designated infectious disease" will be met so long as at least one of the reasons for the temporary reduction or elimination was related to the designated infectious disease.

For a discussion of the term "temporarily" in relation to a reduction or elimination, see the discussion under s. 6. For a discussion of the terms "reduced or eliminated", see the discussion under s. 9.

Note that it may be argued that there is some overlap between s. 4 of O. Reg. 228/20, which prescribes an additional reason for which employees are entitled to infectious disease emergency leave and also deems employees who meet this criteria to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave and both clause (iv) of s. 50.1(1.1)(b) and para. 3 of s. 50.1(1.2), which provide that an employee is entitled to take unpaid infectious disease emergency leave or paid infectious disease emergency leave, respectively, where the employee is under a direction given by his or her employer to, for example, not attend work, in response to the employer's concern that the employee may expose other individuals in the workplace to COVID-19. Although it may be argued that s. 4(1) of O. Reg. 228/20 should apply to the situation where the employer temporarily reduced or eliminated an employee's hours of work out of a concern that the employee may expose others in the workplace to COVID-19, it is Program policy that where employees are not performing the duties of their position because they are under a direction given by their employer in response to a concern of the employer that they may expose other individuals in the workplace to the designated infectious disease, the employee is eligible for infectious disease emergency leave under clause (iv) of s. 50.1(1.1)(b) and/or para. 3 of s. 50.1(1.2), rather than under s. 4(1) of O. Reg. 228/01.

An employee is deemed to be on unpaid leave only during the hours of work that the employee would have otherwise been working had the employer not temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated the hours for reasons related to COVID-19. In other words, the deemed leave provisions do not give employees a right to a leave and to refuse hours/not attend work during hours the employer schedules them to work (and assert that they instead are deemed to be on leave for that time), solely because the employer has temporarily reduced the employee's hours. For example, take a situation where an employer, for reasons related to COVID-19, temporarily reduces an employee's hours from March 15, 2020 to June 20, 2020 from eight hours a day Monday to Friday down to eight hours on Mondays only. The employee is deemed to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave from Tuesday through Friday during this period. Does this employee have a right to be on infectious disease emergency leave on Mondays pursuant to s. 4(1), paragraph 1?

The answer is no. As per s. 50.1(1.1) of the ESA, an employee is entitled to infectious disease emergency leave if the employee will not be performing the duties of his or her position because of one of the listed reasons. Where the employee is scheduled to work, the listed reason in s. 4 of Reg 228/20 does not apply. An employee who used to be scheduled to work every weekday and who is now only scheduled to work Mondays is not considered to not be performing the duties of his or her position on Mondays just because the employer reduced her hours the rest of the week. Employees have the right to be on infectious disease emergency leave only for as long as the event or condition that triggered the entitlement lasts. After the triggering event is over or the condition is no longer present, the employee's normal obligations to attend at work are resumed (assuming the employee does not have an entitlement to infectious disease emergency leave pursuant to a different eligibility criterion – or to another leave – on the Monday). This result is also made clear in the words of ss. 4(2), which provide that the employee is deemed to be on the leave "in respect of any time … that the employee does not perform such duties because of that reason".

Employers are not prohibited under the ESA from scheduling employees to be on vacation at times when the employee's hours could – absent the vacation - have been temporarily reduced or eliminated for reasons related to COVID-19 and the employee - had he or she not been scheduled for vacation - could have been deemed to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave. Note that this is different in the context of a leave that is not triggered by a deeming provision. In the context of those leaves, the employer does not have the right to treat an employee's leave absences as vacation (although it is open to the employee to agree to take the days as vacation days - subject to the ESA's requirements applicable to some leaves that they be taken in single period or periods of at least one week). In the deemed leave context, it is the employer whose actions trigger the conditions that result in the employee being deemed to be on the leave. If the employer schedules an employee for vacation, the conditions necessary for the deemed leave will not be met and the employee who is scheduled to be on vacation will not trigger the deemed leave provision.

Section 4 must be read subject to s. 5 of O. Reg. 228/20, which provides that certain employees are not considered to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave. See the discussion of s. 5 later in this chapter.

4(3). Subject to subsections (4), (5) and (6), all requirements and prohibitions under the Act that apply in respect of a leave apply in respect of a leave that is deemed to be taken under subsection (2).

Subsection 4(3) provides that with the exceptions set out in ss. 4(4) (re: the requirement to give notice to the employer of the leave), and ss. 4(5) and 4(6) (re: benefit plan participation / contributions during the leave) all of the requirements and prohibitions that apply to Part XIV leaves apply equally to deemed leaves under ss. 4(2) (e.g. the anti-reprisal protection, reinstatement obligation, and provisions re: continued accrual of seniority, length of employment and length of service credits).

Issues may arise as to how the reinstatement obligation under s. 53 of the ESA applies where there have been layoffs and/or wage reductions in the workplace during a statutory leave. This issue is addressed in the discussion of s. 53 of the Manual.

4(4). An employee who is deemed to be on leave under subsection (2) is exempt from the subsections 50.1 (2) and (3) of the Act.

Subsection 4(4) exempts employees who are deemed to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave pursuant to ss. 4(2) of O. Reg. 288/20 from ss. 50.1(2) and (3) of the ESA.

Subsection 50.1(2) of the ESA requires an employee who takes unpaid infectious disease emergency leave to advise his or her employer that he or she will be doing so. Subsection 50.1(3) provides that if the employee begins the leave before advising the employer, the employee shall advise the employer of the leave as soon as possible after beginning it.

Since an employee who is deemed to be on leave is on the leave because of the employer's action there is nothing to be achieved in requiring the employee to give notice of the leave to the employer. As such, ss. 4(4) exempts an employee who is deemed to be on a leave pursuant to ss. 4(2) from these notice requirements.

4(5). If an employee who is deemed to be on leave under subsection (2) stopped participating in any benefit plan described in subsection 51 (2) of the Act as of May 29, 2020, the employee is exempt from subsection 51 (1) during the COVID-19 period with respect to that benefit plan.

4(6). If an employer of an employee who is deemed to be on leave under subsection (2) was not, as of May 29, 2020, making the employer's contributions for any benefit plan described in subsection 51 (2) of the Act that is related to the employee's employment, the employer is exempt from subsection 51 (3) during the COVID-19 period with respect to that benefit plan.

Section 51 of the ESA provides that employees who are on a statutory leave continue to participate in certain benefit plans unless the employee elects in writing not to do so, and it requires employers to continue to make the employer's contributions for any of those benefit plans unless the employee advises the employer in writing that the employee is not going to pay his or her contributions. (See the discussion of s. 51 of the ESA for more information.)

Subsections 4(5) and (6) of O. Reg. 228/20 provide exemptions to those requirements in certain situations.

Subsection 4(5) provides that if an employee had stopped participating in a benefit plan described in subsection 51(2) of the ESA as of May 29, 2020 (the date O. Reg. 228/20 was filed), the employee does not have a statutory right to continue to participate in that particular benefit plan while on the deemed leave during the COVID-19 period.

Similarly ss. 4(6) exempts employers from the requirement in ss. 51(2) of the ESA to continue making the employer contributions to a particular benefit plan described in ss. 51(2) of the ESA while their employee is on a deemed leave during the COVID-19 period if the employer had already discontinued its contributions to that particular benefit plan before May 29, 2020 (the date O. Reg. 228/20 was filed).

The exemptions in ss. 4(5) or (6) apply only with respect to benefit plans that are described in ss. 51(2) of the ESA: pension plans, life insurance plans, accidental death plans, extended health plans, dental plans, and any prescribed type of benefit plan (of which there are none at the time of writing). The exemptions do not apply with respect to plans that are not described in ss. 51(2) but that employees are nonetheless entitled to participate in by virtue of O. Reg. 286/01, s. 10. Section 10 of O. Reg. 286/01 provides that if employees on a leave other than a leave under Part XIV (e.g. educational leave) are entitled to participate in a benefit plan then employees on a Part XIV leave must also be entitled to participate in that plan. The most significant types of plans that are not described in ss. 51(2) are short-term and long-term disability plans. Section 51 and the exemptions in ss. 4(5) and (6) do not apply to such plans. As such, if the employer's plan provides short-term or long-term disability benefits to employees on leaves other than Part XIV leaves employees must be entitled to participate in those plans when they are deemed to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave.

The exemptions in ss. 4(5) and (6) only apply to employees who are deemed to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave. If an employee is on infectious disease emergency leave (paid or unpaid) pursuant to a different eligibility criterion – or on another statutory leave – the exemptions do not apply and s. 51 applies in its usual course.

4(7). Nothing in this section or subsection 5(2) affects any payments or benefits the employee received from the employer during the period starting on March 1, 2020 and ending on May 29, 2020.

Subsection 4(7) states that nothing in section 4 (the "prescribed leave/deemed leave" provision) or ss. 5(2) (which provides that certain employees who were given notice of termination are not considered to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave for the prescribed reason in s. 4 unless the employer and employee agree to withdraw the notice of termination) affects any payments or benefits the employee received from the employer during the period March 1, 2020 to May 29, 2020 (the date that O. Reg. 228/20 was filed).

This provision addresses questions that may arise because of the retroactive deeming of the leave (i.e. between March 1, 2020 and May 29, 2020, the date O. Reg. 228/20 was filed, when combined with s. 6, which provides that in certain circumstances employees are not considered to be laid off starting March 1, 2020 (see s. 6 below for details).

For example, an employer temporarily eliminated an employee's hours of work as of March 1, 2020 for reasons related to COVID-19, and the employee's weekly earnings fell to $0. Because O. Reg. 228/20 was not yet filed, at that time the employee was considered to be on weeks of layoff under the ESA. The employer expected the elimination of hours to last for a significant amount of time and so continued to make substantial payments to the employee in order to extend the period of a temporary layoff per ss. 56(2) from 13 weeks in any period of 20 consecutive weeks to 35 weeks in any period of 52 weeks. O. Reg. 228/20 – which came into force only on May 29, 2020, after the employer had already made these payments – retroactively provides that this employee is deemed to have been on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave and not to be considered to have been laid off under the ESA during that time (see s. 6). As such, the employer may have made certain payments or provided certain benefits to the employee prior to May 29, 2020 that it wouldn't have otherwise done had the employee been deemed to have been on a leave, and not a layoff, at the time.

Subsection 4(7) provides that the retroactive deeming of that period of layoff as unpaid infectious disease emergency leave does not affect any payments that were made by the employer March 1, 2020 to May 29, 2020. In other words, nothing about the retroactive application of s. 4 requires employees to pay these amounts back. Note, however, that the ESA does not prohibit an employer from recovering the amounts of those payments through wage deductions under s. 13 if the employee provides written authorization to do so in writing in accordance with s. 13(3) of the ESA.

O. Reg. 228/20 Section 5 – When Employee Not on Leave

5. (1) For greater certainty, an employee whose employment is,

(a) terminated under clause 56 (1) (a) of the Act or severed under clause 63 (1) (a), (d) or (e) of the Act on or after March 1, 2020; or

(b) terminated under clause 56 (1) (b) or (c) of the Act or severed under clause 63 (1) (b) or (c) of the Act before May 29, 2020, shall not be considered to be on infectious disease emergency leave for the reason set out in paragraph 1 of subsection 4 (1).

(2) An employee who has been given written notice of termination in accordance with section 57 or 58 of the Act shall not be considered to be on infectious disease emergency leave for the reason set out in paragraph 1 of subsection 4 (1) unless the employer and employee agree to withdraw the notice of termination.

Pursuant to ss. 1(2) of O. Reg. 228/20, s. 5 does not apply to employees who are represented by a trade union.

Subsection 5(1)

O. Reg. 228/20 does not prevent employers from terminating or severing their employees' employment by dismissing them or refusing/being unable to continue employing them during the COVID-19 period and nothing about the regulation's retroactive application resurrects employment relationships that were already terminated or severed before the regulation was filed. Employees in these situations are not deemed to be on infectious disease emergency leave.

Subsection 5(1) simply reinforces that outcome by providing that for greater certainty:

- Clause (a): an employee whose employment is terminated under s. 56(1)(a) or severed under s. 63(1)(a), (d) or (e) any time on or after March 1, 2020 (the first day an employee can be deemed to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave under this regulation) will not, from the date of the termination or severance, be considered to be on the leave.

- Clause (b): an employee whose employment was terminated and/or severed before May 29, 2020 (the date the regulation was filed) as the result of a constructive dismissal and subsequent resignation by the employee in response will not be considered to have been on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave for the prescribed reason prior to the termination or severance even if the conditions in the prescribed reason were present.

  This provision clarifies that a pre-May 29, 2020 termination that resulted from a constructive dismissal and subsequent resignation that was based on the employer unilaterally temporarily reducing or eliminating an employee's hours of work or wages for reasons related to COVID-19 during the defined COVID-19 period isn't "undone" by retroactively deeming that reduction or elimination to be a leave.

  Note that this provision applies if the termination or severance resulting from a constructive dismissal happened before May 29, 2020, not the constructive dismissal itself. (To be a termination or severance resulting from a constructive dismissal under the ESA, there must be a constructive dismissal and the employee must resign in response to the constructive dismissal within a reasonable period of time. In other words, this provision applies only if the employee who was constructively dismissed resigned in response to that constructive dismissal prior to May 29, 2020.)

Subsection 5(2)

Subsection 5(2) states that an employee whose employer gave him or her written notice of termination in accordance with s. 57 or s. 58 of the ESA is not deemed to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave, even if the relevant criteria are met, unless the employer and employee agree in writing to withdraw the notice of termination before the termination crystallized. (An employer may wish to withdraw notices of termination where, for example, it provided them in anticipation of a layoff exceeding the length of a temporary layoff under the ESA before O. Reg. 228/20 was filed and the rules of temporary layoff were altered.)

Notice of termination, once given, generally cannot be withdrawn unless the employee consents to the withdrawal – see she discussion of this issue in s. 56 of the Manual for details.

If the notice of termination is withdrawn, the rules with respect to the application of the deemed leave provision apply as per usual from the date of the withdrawal forward.

(Note: if the criteria for being on a deemed leave were met before the employee received written notice of termination – i.e. there was a COVID-19 related reduction or elimination before notice of termination was given and the reduction or elimination was intended at the time only to be temporary - the employee would be deemed to be on unpaid infectious disease emergency leave with respect to that time.)

As per ss. 4(7) of O. Reg. 228/20, ss. 5(2) does not affect any payments that were made by the employer from March 1, 2020 to May 29, 2020. For example, as required by s. 60 of the ESA, an employer who provided notice of termination paid its employees their regular wages during the notice period even though the employees were not working. Subsection 4(7) provides that ss. 5(2) does not affect those payments and does not require the employee to pay those amounts back to the employer even if the employer and employee agree to withdraw the notice of termination.

O. Reg. 228/20 Section 6 – Reduction in Hours, Wages Not a Layoff

6(1) An employee whose hours of work are temporarily reduced or eliminated by the employer, or whose wages are temporarily reduced by the employer, for reasons related to the designated infectious disease during the COVID-19 period is exempt from the application of sections 56 and 63 of the Act for the purposes of determining whether the employee has been laid off, and the employee shall not be considered to be laid off under those sections, other than under clause 63 (1) (d) of the Act.

Pursuant to subsection 1(2) of this regulation, section 6 does not apply to an employee who is represented by a trade union.

Subsection 6(1) states that where an employee's wages are temporarily reduced and/or hours of work are temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated by the employer during the defined "COVID-19 period" for reasons related to COVID-19, the employee is not considered to be laid off for the purposes of sections 56 and 63 of the ESA (other than clause 63(1)(d)) and the employee is exempt from the application of sections 56 and 63 for the purposes of determining whether the employee has been laid off.

The effect of this provision is to "freeze" the temporary layoff clock from ticking as of March 1, 2020 and for the duration of the COVID-19 period where the prescribed conditions are met. In other words, the provision stops specified weeks from being counted as a week of layoff. Only the numerator in the 13/20 or 35/52 thresholds is affected. The provision does not freeze or otherwise affect the denominator in the "count", i.e. the 20- or 52-week rolling periods. As such, for an employee to whom this provision applies, a termination of employment cannot be triggered during the defined COVID-19 period by virtue of s. 56(1)(c), nor can a severance of employment be triggered by virtue of s. 63(1)(c) by way of a layoff exceeding the length of a temporary layoff.

Note that subsection (2) clarifies that where an employee was terminated pursuant to clause 56(1)(c) or severed under clause 63(1)(c) prior to May 29, 2020 (the date O. Reg. 228/20 was filed), this provision does not apply to that employee.

The following discussion will look at each of the five conditions that must be present for this provision to apply:

1. The employee is subject to a reduction or elimination in hours of work and/or wages

This provision specifies that it applies to reductions or eliminations in the following situations: it applies where “hours of work are temporarily reduced or eliminated” and where “wages are temporarily reduced”. The Program views this condition as being met if the employee experiences a reduction or an elimination in either hours of work or wages. In other words, though not explicitly stated, the provision is interpreted to include the elimination of wages. As such, an employee will meet this condition if the employee is subject to any of the following: a reduction in hours of work, a reduction in wages, or an elimination in hours of work and an elimination in wages. All other ESA rules, such as the obligation to comply with the minimum wage requirements where work is performed, continue to apply as usual.

Section 9 of the regulation establishes specific rules to be used in determining whether hours and/or wages have been reduced for the purposes of the regulation. Subsection 9(1), read in conjunction with ss. 9(3) and (4), establishes what is a reduction in hours of work for the purpose of this provision. Subsection 9(2), read in conjunction with ss. 9(3) and (4), establishes what is a reduction in wages for the purpose of this provision. Please see the discussion of section 9 for more information.

2. The reduction or elimination of hours of work and/or wages must be temporary

This condition is met only where the employee is subject to a temporary reduction or a temporary elimination in hours of work or wages. The condition is not met if the reduction or elimination is a permanent change.

Determining whether a reduction or elimination of hours of work or wages is temporary or permanent is a question of fact that can only be answered on a case-by-case basis taking all relevant facts into consideration. Note, however, that key elements in this assessment are the employer’s intention and the parties’ understanding at the time the change was made. Did the employer intend for the change to be temporary or did the employer instead intend to initiate a permanent change to the terms and conditions of the employee’s employment? What was the employee’s understanding of the change? If the change was intended to be a permanent change, this condition would not be met and section 6 would therefore not apply to the employee.

Given the climate of economic uncertainty brought about by COVID-19, it is possible that an employer may, at the time the change is made, be unsure whether the reduction or elimination of an employee’s hours of work and/or wages will be temporary or permanent. It may be that the employer is taking a “wait and see” approach to its ability to maintain employment relationships and to return terms and conditions of employment to their pre-COVID-19 period state. These outcomes may depend on factors such as when the business is permitted to reopen, demand for the employer’s products during the pandemic, production capacity while maintaining physical distancing for employees etc. The Program takes the view that, in this type of situation, the employer is generally considered to have intended the change to be temporary, unless there is evidence to the contrary.

3. It must be the employer that temporarily reduces or eliminates the employee’s hours of work and/or wages

The temporary reduction or elimination of the employee’s hours of work and/or wages must be initiated by the employer for section 6 to apply. In other words, if the employee works fewer hours for a reason that is initiated or brought about by the employee – for example, if the employee was away from work because the employee elected to take a statutory leave of absence such as sick leave or family responsibility leave, or requested personal time away from work – this provision does not apply.

Note that in a situation where the employer gives the employee an ultimatum between accepting a reduction in hours and/or wages or termination, if the employee "chooses" the reduction in hours and/or wages, the Program considers this change to have been initiated by the employer and not the employee.

4. The temporary reduction or elimination of the employee's hours of work and/or wages must have occurred for reasons related to the designated infectious disease

This condition is met where the employer's decision to temporarily reduce or temporarily eliminate an employee's hours of work and/or wages is made in whole or in part for reasons related to the designated infectious disease. The designated infectious disease referenced here is COVID-19, pursuant to section 2.

In some cases, there will be more than one reason an employer temporarily reduces or temporarily eliminates an employee's hours or wages. As long as one of the reasons is related to the COVID-19, this condition is met. The reason for the reduction or elimination can be directly related to COVID-19 or it can be indirect. Examples of reasons related to COVID-19 include: an employer's business was ordered to suspend operations by order under the Reopening Ontario (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020 or by an emergency order under the Emergency Management and Civil Protection Act; a brewer reduced its employees' hours because the demand for beer was reduced since restaurants and pubs had been ordered pursuant to an order to close temporarily; a private children's bus line eliminated some of its employees' hours because schools were closed; a party supply business reduced its employees' wages due to reduced revenue resulting from a lack of demand for party supplies when physical distancing rules were in effect; an employee's hours were temporarily eliminated because the employer was concerned that the employee might expose others in the workplace to COVID-19.

5. The above four conditions must occur during the defined COVID-19 period

Subsection 1(1) of this regulation defines the "COVID-19 period". The COVID-19 period is March 1, 2020 to January 1, 2022.

Only where the four conditions discussed above occur during the defined COVID-19 period does section 6 to apply. For example, it could be that an employee's hours of work were temporarily reduced by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19 beginning on February 23, 2020 and ending on June 1, 2020. In that case, section 6 applies only to the reduction in hours that occurred from March 1, 2020 to June 1, 2020; the reduction in hours that occurred prior to March 1, 2020 (i.e. from February 23, 2020 to February 29, 2020) is unaffected by O. Reg. 228/20.

Where the conditions are met

Where all five of these conditions are met, the employee is exempt from the application of sections 56 and 63 of the Act for the purposes of determining whether the employee has been laid off. The employee is not considered to be laid off under section 56 or section 63, with the exception of clause 63(1)(d). (Clause 63(1)(d) provides that an employee's employment is severed where the employer lays off an employee due to a permanent discontinuance of all of the employer's business at an establishment.)

The effect of this provision is to “freeze” the temporary layoff clock from ticking from March 1, 2020 to January 1, 2022 where the prescribed conditions are met. In other words, the provision stops specified weeks from being counted as a week of layoff. Only the numerator in the 13/20 or 35/52 thresholds is affected. The provision does not freeze or otherwise affect the denominator in the “count”, i.e. the 20- or 52-week rolling periods. As such, for an employee to whom this provision applies, a termination of employment cannot be triggered during the defined COVID-19 period by virtue of s. 56(1)(c), nor can a severance of employment be triggered by virtue of s. 63(1)(c) by way of a layoff exceeding the length of a temporary layoff.

Note, however, that there may be situations where a reduction or elimination in hours and/or wages starts out as a reduction to which section 6 applies – and therefore to which a layoff under sections 56 and 63 do not apply - but the circumstances change partway through such that the five conditions in section 6 are no longer met. At the point in time where any one of the conditions is no longer met, section 6 stops applying and the rules set out in section 56 and 63 resume their application.

For example, say the employee’s hours of work were temporarily eliminated due to the closure of a business resulting from an order issued under the Reopening Ontario (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020 or under the Emergency Management and Civil Protection Act. The elimination of hours originally falls within purview of section 6. If, for example, at a particular point in time, the business is no longer viable and, as such, it becomes clear to the employer that there is no longer a possibility of the employee’s hours of work being reinstated, the reduction in hours is no longer “temporary” and so this provision no longer applies. As of that point in time, the exemption no longer applies and sections 56 and 63 resume application.

6(2). Subsection (1) does not apply to an employee whose employment was terminated under clause 56 (1) (c) of the Act or severed under clause 63 (1) (c) of the Act before May 29, 2020.

Subsection 6(2) clarifies that where an employee was terminated under clause 56(1)(c) or severed under clause 63(1)(c) prior to May 29, 2020 (the date O. Reg. 228/20 was filed), this provision does not apply to that employee. In other words, where an employee was on a temporary layoff that lasted longer than the period of temporary layoff, and which consequently resulted in the termination or severance of the employee’s employment before May 29, 2020, the employee is not affected by this provision. The employment relationship is not resurrected by the regulation.

O. Reg. 228/20 Section 7 – Reduction in Hours, Wages Not a Constructive Dismissal

7(1) The following does not constitute constructive dismissal if it occurred during the COVID-19 period:

1. A temporary reduction or elimination of an employee’s hours of work by the employer for reasons related to the designated infectious disease.

2. A temporary reduction in an employee’s wages by the employer for reasons related to the designated infectious disease.

Pursuant to subsection 1(2) of this regulation, section 7 does not apply to an employee who is represented by a trade union.

This provision establishes that where, during the defined "COVID-19 period" an employee's hours of work or wages are temporarily reduced or eliminated by the employer for reasons related in whole or in part to COVID-19, the change does not constitute constructive dismissal for the purposes of the ESA. As such, since an employee who is in this situation is not constructively dismissed for the purposes of the ESA, a termination of employment will not be triggered in these circumstances by virtue of s. 56(1)(b), nor will a severance of employment be triggered by virtue of s. 63(1)(b).

Note that subsection (2) clarifies that where an employee was terminated under clause 56(1)(b) or severed under clause 63(1)(b) prior to May 29, 2020, this provision does not apply to that employee.

The following discussion will look at each of the five conditions that must be present for this provision to apply:

1. The employee is subject to a reduction or elimination in hours of work and/or wages

This provision states that it applies to reductions or eliminations in the following situations: it applies where "hours of work are temporarily reduced or eliminated" and where "wages are temporarily reduced". The Program views this condition as being met if the employee experiences a reduction or an elimination in either hours of work or wages. In other words, though not explicitly stated, the provision is interpreted to include the elimination of wages where there has been an elimination of hours. As such, an employee will meet this condition if the employee is subject to any of the following: a reduction in hours of work, a reduction in wages, an elimination in hours of work or a corresponding elimination in wages.

Section 9 of the regulation establishes specific rules to be used in determining whether hours and/or wages have been reduced for the purposes of the regulation. Subsection 9(1), read in conjunction with ss. 9(3) and (4), establish what is a reduction in hours of work for the purpose of this provision. Subsection 9(2), read in conjunction with ss. 9(3) and (4), establish what is a reduction in wages for the purpose of this provision. Please see the discussion of section 9 for more information.

2. The reduction or elimination of hours of work and/or wages must be temporary

This condition is met only where the employee is subject to a temporary reduction or a temporary elimination in hours of work or wages. The condition is not met if the reduction or elimination is a permanent change.

Determining whether a reduction or elimination of hours of work or wages is temporary or permanent is a question of fact that can only be answered on a case-by-case basis taking all relevant facts into consideration. Note, however, that key elements in this assessment are the employer's intention and the parties' understanding at the time the change was made. Did the employer intend for the change to be temporary or did the employer instead intend to initiate a permanent change to the terms and conditions of the employee's employment? What was the employee's understanding of the change? If the change was intended to be a permanent change, this condition would not be met and subsection 7(1) would therefore not apply to the employee.

Given the climate of economic uncertainty brought about by COVID-19, it is possible that an employer may, at the time the change is made, be unsure whether the reduction or elimination of an employee's hours of work and/or wages will be temporary or permanent. It may be that the employer is taking a "wait and see" approach to its ability to maintain employment relationships and to return terms and conditions of employment to their pre-COVID-19 period state. These outcomes may depend on factors such as when the business is permitted to reopen, demand for the employer's products during the pandemic, production capacity while maintaining physical distancing for employees etc. The Program takes the view that, in this type of situation, the employer is generally considered to have intended the change to be temporary, unless there is evidence to the contrary.

3. It must be the employer that temporarily reduces or eliminates the employee's hours of work and/or wages

The temporary reduction or elimination of the employee's hours of work and/or wages must be initiated by the employer for subsection 7(1) to apply. In other words, if the employee works fewer hours for a reason that is initiated or brought about by the employee – for example, if the employee was away from work because the employee elected to take a statutory leave of absence such as sick leave or family responsibility leave or requested personal time away from work – this provision does not apply.

Note that in a situation where the employer gives the employee an ultimatum between accepting a reduction in hours and/or wages or termination, if the employee "chooses" the reduction in hours and/or wages, the Program considers this change to have been initiated by the employer and not the employee.

4. The temporary reduction or elimination of the employee's hours of work and/or wages must have occurred for reasons related to the designated infectious disease

This condition is met where the employer's decision to temporarily reduce or temporarily eliminate an employee's hours of work/wages is made in whole or in part for reasons related to the designated infectious disease. The designated infectious disease referenced here is COVID-19, pursuant to section 2.

In some cases, there will be more than one reason an employer temporarily reduces or temporarily eliminates an employee's hours or wages. As long as one of the reasons is related to the COVID-19, this condition is met. The reason for the reduction or elimination can be directly related to COVID-19 or it can be indirect. Examples of reasons related to COVID-19 include: an employer's business was ordered to suspend operations by order under the Reopening Ontario (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020 or by an emergency order under the Emergency Management and Civil Protection Act; a brewer reduced its employees' hours because the demand for beer was reduced since restaurants and pubs had been ordered pursuant to an emergency order to close temporarily; a private children's bus line eliminated some of its employees' hours because schools were closed; a party supply business reduced its employees' wages due to reduced revenue resulting from a lack of demand for party supplies when physical distancing rules were in effect an employee's hours were temporarily eliminated because the employer was concerned that the employee might expose others in the workplace to COVID-19.

5. The above four conditions must occur during the defined COVID-19 period

Subsection 1(1) of this regulation defines the "COVID-19 period". The "COVID-19 period" is March 1, 2020 to January 1, 2022.

Subsection 7(1) applies only where all four of the conditions discussed above occur during the defined COVID-19 period.

(Note, however, this condition must be read subject to subsection 2 that provides that where a temporary reduction or elimination in hours of work or wages occurred prior to May 29, 2020 – even ones brought about by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19 that occurred during the COVID-19 period – if the change resulted in a constructive dismissal and the employee resigned from his or her employment in response to the change within a reasonable period of time and the resignation occurred prior to May 29, 2020, a claim relating to this constructive dismissal can be filed with the Ministry of Labour, Training and Skills Development investigated, and may result in a finding that the employee was terminated pursuant to ss. 56(1)(b). See the discussion of ss. 7(2) and s. 8 for more details.)

Where the conditions are met
Where the conditions are met, the temporary reduction or elimination of the employee's hours of work or wages by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19 during the COVID-19 period does not constitute constructive dismissal for the purposes of the ESA.

Since an employee who is in this situation is not constructively dismissed for the purposes of the ESA, a termination of employment will not be triggered in these circumstances by virtue of s. 56(1)(b), nor will a severance of employment be triggered by virtue of s. 63(1)(b). Without subsection 7, a unilateral reduction in hours of work or wages might otherwise amount to a constructive dismissal if the reduction was significant enough, and it would create termination and severance pay obligations if the employee resigned in response within a reasonable period of time.

Note that this provision addresses constructive dismissal only under the ESA. The provision does not address what constitutes a constructive dismissal at common law.

7(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to an employee whose employment was terminated under clause 56 (1) (b) of the Act or severed under clause 63 (1) (b) of the Act before May 29, 2020.

This provision took effect when O. Reg. 228/20 was filed on May 29, 2020.

Subsection 7(2) clarifies that where an employee was terminated under clause 56(1)(b) or severed under clause 63(1)(b) prior to May 29, 2020, this provision does not apply to that employee.

Note that in order to be terminated under clause 56(1)(b) or severed under clause 63(1)(b), the employee must have been constructively dismissed and must have resigned from his or her employment in response employer's actions within a reasonable period. It is only where both the constructive dismissal and the employee's resignation occurred prior to May 29, 2020 that the employee is not affected by subsection 7(1). If an employee was constructively dismissed by his or her employer and the employee resigned in response to the employer's actions after May 29, 2020, subsection 7(1) applies.

Note that nothing in section 7 affects a constructive dismissal that arises for reasons other than the employer temporarily reducing or eliminating an employee's hours of work or wages for reasons related to COVID-19 during the defined COVID-19 period. If, for example, an employee was constructively dismissed during the defined COVID-19 period as the result of changes to the employee's wages or hours for reasons wholly unrelated to COVID-19, or if the change that results in a constructive dismissal is made for a COVID-related reason but relates to something other than hours of work or wages – such as a significant change in the employee's work location or a significant reduction in the employee's job responsibilities etc. – the employee may be found to be terminated and/or severed per the usual application of s. 56(1)(b) and/or s. 63(1)(b).

O. Reg. 228/20 Section 8 – Complaint Deemed Not to Have Been Filed

8. (1) A complaint filed with the Ministry that a temporary reduction or elimination of an employee's hours of work by the employer or a temporary reduction in an employee's wages by the employer constitutes the termination or severance of the employee's employment shall be deemed not to have been filed if the temporary reduction or elimination of hours or the temporary reduction in wages occurred during the COVID-19 period for reasons related to the designated infectious disease.

(2) Subsection (1) does not apply if the employee's complaint relates to,

(a) a termination under clause 56 (1) (a) of the Act or a severance under clause 63 (1) (a), (d) or (e) of the Act; or

(b) a termination under clause 56 (1) (b) or (c) of the Act or a severance under clause 63 (1) (b) or (c) of the Act before May 29, 2020.

Subsection 8(1) provides that certain complaints regarding termination and/or severance filed with the Ministry of Labour, Training and Skills Development are deemed not to have been filed. By deeming the complaint not to have been filed, employees who filed the complaint are not prohibited by s. 97 of the ESA from commencing a civil proceeding regarding their termination and/or severance entitlements. For example, an employee could choose to pursue wrongful dismissal litigation in the courts.

Pursuant to ss. 1(2) of O. Reg. 228/20, s. 8 does not apply to employees who are represented by a trade union.

In general terms, this provision applies to claims for termination pay and/or severance pay that are based on a constructive dismissal or on a layoff that exceeded the period of a temporary layoff if the foundation for the constructive dismissal or layoff was a temporary reduction or temporary elimination of wages or hours of work for reasons related to COVID-19 during the COVID-19 period.

Specifically, complaints are deemed not to have been filed if the complaint is with respect to termination and/or severance and the foundation of the complaint meets all of these conditions:

- the employee's wages or hours of work were temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated by the employer,
- the temporary reduction or temporary elimination was for reasons related in whole or in part to COVID-19, and
- the temporary reduction or temporary elimination occurred during the COVID-19 period, which is defined in s. 1 of O. Reg. 228/20 to be March 1, 2020 to January 1, 2022.

Subsection 8(1) applies equally whether the employee specifically raised the disallowed allegations in the claim form, or whether the issue arose during the course of an investigation.

Subsection 8(1) applies regardless of the date the claim is filed. Subject to ss. 8(2), the provision applies, for example, to claims that were filed before O. Reg. 228/20 was made and those filed after the COVID-19 period is over.

The deeming provision applies only to the portion of the claim relating to the disallowed termination and/or severance allegation. If the claim contains allegations that are not disallowed per ss. 8(1), those other allegations are investigated in the usual course.

For example, if a claim was made for termination pay and it was based on a temporary reduction or temporary elimination of wages or hours of work by the employer that was for reasons related in whole or in part to COVID-19 from February 1, 2020 to April 30, 2020, the claim would proceed for investigation as per usual with respect to the reduction or elimination that occurred in February, i.e. prior to the March 1, 2020 beginning of the COVID-19 period.

Another example relates to reprisal allegations. Even if a reprisal allegation arises from a temporary reduction or temporary elimination in hours of work or wages that are related to COVID-19 during the COVID-19 period, that allegation will be investigated as per usual. Take a situation where a claimant alleges that an employer who had to eliminate the hours of 20% of its workforce because of COVID-19 during the COVID-19 period selected the claimant in part because he had taken a statutory leave or exercised another ESA right. The reprisal allegation would be investigated as per usual.

Employment Standards Officers address the question as to whether there are disallowed allegations at the outset of an investigation. A claim that is deemed not to have been filed does not trigger the application of s. 97 of the ESA..

Subsection 8(1) must be read in conjunction with ss. 8(2), which provides that ss. 8(1) doesn't apply if the employee's complaint relates to:

(a) a termination under clause 56(1)(a) of the Act or a severance under clause 63(1)(a) of the Act, (i.e. where an employer dismisses the employee or otherwise refuses or is unable to continue employing the employee) or a severance under clause 63(1)(d) or (e), (i.e. where the severance of employment is because of a permanent discontinuance of all of the employer's business at an establishment or because the employee gave written notice of resignation during the statutory notice period where certain conditions were met.)

    Claims for termination or severance pay based on these kinds of terminations or severances are not disallowed pursuant to ss. 8(1) and are investigated as per usual.

    Such claims are allowed even if the reason for the termination or severance was related to COVID-19 (e.g. the employer permanently closed its business because of COVID-19 and the employee claims the employer did not provide the required notice of termination or pay in lieu).

    This provision, while not strictly necessary since terminations and severances under clause 56(1)(a) of the Act or a severance under clause 63(1)(a), (d) and (e) of the Act are permanent and therefore do not fall within the condition in ss. 8(1) that the changes be "temporary", clarifies that claims filed with the Ministry for termination and/or severance pay based on this kind of termination and/or severance are not disallowed.

(b) a termination under clause 56(1)(b) or (c) or a severance under section 63(1)(b) or (c) that occurred before May 29, 2020 (the date O. Reg. 228/20 was filed).

    Clause (b) creates an exception to the "deemed not filed" rule in ss. 8(1).

    It allows claims to be filed and investigated where the termination or severance resulting from a layoff or constructive dismissal crystallized before the law was changed by O. Reg. 228/20.

    Specifically, it provides that claims for termination or severance pay that are based on a layoff exceeding the period of a temporary layoff or on a constructive dismissal are not disallowed pursuant to ss. 8(1) and therefore are investigated as per usual if they occurred before May 29, 2020 (the date O. Reg. 228/20 was filed).

    Such claims are allowed even if the reason for the layoff or constructive dismissal was COVID-19 related and even if the termination or severance occurred during the defined COVID-19 period.

    With respect to terminations or severances resulting from a constructive dismissal, note that the termination and severance occur on the date that the employee resigns in response to the constructive dismissal, not on the date the constructive dismissal occurred.

Although ss. 8(1) states that certain claims are disallowed if they are based on a situation where an employee's "hours of work are temporarily reduced or eliminated" or where "wages are temporarily reduced" the Program's position is that this provision also applies to disallow a claim if the allegation is based on a temporary elimination of wages for reasons related to COVID-19 during the COVID-19 period.

Some might argue that the inclusion of the phrase "wages are temporarily reduced" without also including "wages are temporarily eliminated" means that a claim based on the temporary elimination of wages is not disallowed. The Program's position is that the reference to an elimination in hours of work also captures the situation where there has been a corresponding elimination in employees' wages resulting from the eliminated hours, and as such, claims based on the temporary elimination of wages are disallowed by the phrase “hours of work are temporarily … eliminated”. The phrase “wages are temporarily reduced” captures a scenario where an employee’s wages were temporarily reduced where there was no corresponding reduction in the employee’s hours, i.e. where an employee’s wage rate was reduced.

O. Reg. 228/20 Section 9 – Reduction in Hours of Work, Wages

Pursuant to subsection 1(2) of this regulation, section 9 does not apply to an employee who is represented by a trade union.

The provision sets out formulas to be used in establishing whether an employee’s hours of work and/or wages are considered to have been reduced for the purposes of the regulation. In general terms, the formulas are based on comparing the employee’s hours of work and/or wages during the COVID-19 period to the employee’s hours of work and/or wages during a period of time before the effects of COVID-19 were felt in most workplaces.

9 (1) For the purposes of this Regulation, an employee’s hours of work are considered to be reduced as follows:

1. If the employee has a regular work week, the employee’s hours of work are considered to be reduced if the employee works fewer hours in the work week than they worked in the last regular work week before March 1, 2020.

2. If the employee does not have a regular work week, the employee’s hours of work are considered to be reduced if the employee works fewer hours in the work week than the average number of hours they worked per work week in the period of 12 consecutive work weeks that preceded March 1, 2020.

3. If the employee was not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020, the employee’s hours of work are considered to be reduced if the employee works fewer hours in the work week than they worked in the work week in which they worked the greatest number of hours.

Reduction in Hours of Work

Subsection 9(1), read in conjunction with ss. 9(3) and (4), establish when an employee’s hours of work are considered to have been reduced for the purposes of the regulation.

Assessing whether an employee’s hours of work have been reduced is relevant in the application of the following provisions:

- Section 4: an employee is deemed to be on unpaid leave if the employee’s hours of work have been temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19 during the defined COVID-19 period.
- Section 6: an employee is not considered to be on a temporary layoff for the purposes of sections 56 and 63 if the employer has temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated the employee’s hours of work for reasons related to COVID-19 during the defined COVID-19 period.
- Section 7: a temporary reduction or temporary elimination of hours by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19 during the defined COVID-19 period does not constitute constructive dismissal for the purposes of the ESA.
- Section 8: complaints filed with the Ministry that a temporary reduction or elimination of an employee’s hours of work by the employer constitutes the termination or severance of the employee’s employment are deemed not to have been filed if the temporary reduction or elimination occurred during the COVID-19 period for reasons related to COVID-19.

The provision establishes different formulas that apply depending on which of three categories the employee falls into: the employee has a regular work week, the employee does not have a regular work week, or, regardless of whether or not the employee has a regular work week, the employee was not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020. Each of these categories are discussed below:

1. Employee has a regular work week

If the employee has a regular work week, the employee's hours of work are considered to be reduced if the employee works fewer hours in the work week than the employee worked in the last regular work week before March 1, 2020. (Note that if the employee was not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020, the employee falls into category 3.)

However, per ss. 9(3), if the employee was on vacation, not able to work, not available for work, subject to a disciplinary suspension or was not provided with work because of a strike or lock-out occurring at his or her place of employment or elsewhere for any part of the last work week before March 1, 2020, then the work week to be applied is, instead, the last regular work week before March 1, 2020 in which such conditions did not apply for any part of the work week.

This formula therefore involves comparing the number of hours the employee worked in the last regular work week before March 1, 2020 during which none of the scenarios set out in subsection 9(3) occurred, to the work week in question.

Work week is defined in s. 1 of the ESA as follows:

> "Work week " means,
>
> (a) a recurring period of seven consecutive days selected by the employer for the purpose of scheduling work, or
> (b) if the employer has not selected such a period, a recurring period of seven consecutive days beginning on Sunday and ending on Saturday.

In order to determine what is the last regular work week before March 1, 2020, it is necessary to first establish the work week that includes March 1, 2020. From there, look back one full work week. This will be the last full work that occurred prior to March 1, 2020. If none of the scenarios set out in subsection (3) apply for any part of the work week, then then this is the work week used in the comparison. However, if, during that work week, any of the scenarios set out in subsection 9(3) applied for any period of time, then it is necessary to continue to look back work week by work week to find the first work week in which none of the scenarios set out in subsection 9(3) are present.

Once the comparator work week is established, the number of hours the employee worked in that work week is compared to the number of hours the employee worked in the work week in question (i.e. the work week during the COVID-19 period). If the employee worked more hours in the pre-March 1, 2020 "comparator week" as compared to the work week in question, then the employee is considered to have had a reduction in his or her hours of work for the purposes of sections 4, 6, 7 and 8.

For example, assume that in applying this formula, the employee has a comparator work week of 40 hours. If during the COVID-19 period, the employee works anything less than 40 hours in a given work week, then there will have been a reduction for the purposes of sections 4, 6, 7 and 8 of the regulation.

2. Employee does not have a regular work week

If the employee does not have a regular work week, the employee's hours of work are considered to be reduced if the employee works fewer hours in the work week than the average number of hours the employee worked per work week in the period of 12 consecutive work weeks that preceded March 1, 2020. (Note: if the employee was not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020, the employee falls into category 3.)

However, per ss. 9(4), if the employee was not employed, was on vacation, was not able to work, was not available for work, was subject to a disciplinary suspension or was not provided with work because of a strike or lock-out occurring at his or her place of employment or elsewhere for any part of a work week in the 12-week period referred to in those paragraphs, then that work week is excluded for the purposes of the averaging.

This formula therefore involves comparing the average number of hours the employee worked in the 12 consecutive work weeks prior to March 1, 2020 (or lesser number of averaged weeks if there are any excluded weeks pursuant to ss. 9(4)) to the number of hours the employee worked in the work week in question during the COVID-19 period.

Work week is defined in s. 1 of the ESA as follows:

> "Work week " means,
>
> (a) a recurring period of seven consecutive days selected by the employer for the purpose of scheduling work, or
> (b) if the employer has not selected such a period, a recurring period of seven consecutive days beginning on Sunday and ending on Saturday.

In order to establish the period of 12 consecutive work weeks that preceded March 1, 2020, it is necessary to first establish the work week that includes March 1, 2020. From there, look back 12 work weeks.

Next, determine if during any of those 12 work weeks, any of the scenarios set out in subsection (4) apply for any period of time. If any of the scenarios apply during a work week, that work week is excluded from the averaging calculation, meaning the average is calculated over a period shorter than 12 weeks. For example, if the only condition that applied during the 12-week timeframe was that the employee was on vacation for one week or a part of a week, the average of the remaining 11 weeks would be calculated.

Once the comparator average is established, the next step is to determine the number of hours the employee worked during the work week in question (i.e. the work week during the COVID-19 period). If the average number of hours of work determined pursuant to subsection 9(2) amounts to more hours than the employee worked in the work week in question, then the employee is considered to have a reduction in his or her hours of work for the purposes of sections 4, 6, 7 and 8.

3. Employee was not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020

If the employee was not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020, then the employee's hours of work are considered to be reduced if the employee worked fewer hours in the work week in question than the employee worked in the work week in which he or she worked the greatest number of hours. This formula applies regardless of whether or not the employee has a regular work week.

Where an employee falls into this category, a comparison is made between the work week in which the employee worked the greatest number of hours - regardless of when that occurred during the employment relationship - and the number of hours the employee worked during the work week in question during the COVID-19 period.

If the employee worked more hours during any previous work week than he or she worked in the work week in question, then the employee is considered to have a reduction in his or her hours of work for the purposes of sections 4, 6, 7 and 8.

9(2) For the purposes of this Regulation, an employee's wages are considered to be reduced as follows:

> 1. If the employee has a regular work week, the employee's wages are considered to be reduced if the employee earns less regular wages in the work week than they did in the last regular work week before March 1, 2020.
> 2. If the employee does not have a regular work week, the employee's wages are considered to be reduced if the employee earns less regular wages than the average amount of regular wages they earned per work week in the period of 12 consecutive work weeks that preceded March 1, 2020.
> 3. If the employee was not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020, the employee's wages are considered to be reduced if the employee earns less regular wages than they did in the work week in which they earned the most regular wages.

Reduction in Wages

Subsection 9(2), read in conjunction with ss. 9(3) and (4), establish when an employee's wages are considered to have been reduced for the purposes of this regulation.

Assessing whether an employee's wages are considered to have been reduced is relevant in the application of the following provisions:

- Section 6: an employee is not considered to be on a temporary layoff for the purposes of sections 56 and 63 if the employer has temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated the employee's wages for reasons related to COVID-19 during the defined COVID-19 period.
- Section 7: a temporary reduction or temporary elimination of an employee's wages by the employer for reasons related to COVID-19 during the defined COVID-19 period does not constitute constructive dismissal for the purposes of the ESA.
- Section 8: complaints filed with the Ministry that a temporary reduction or elimination of an employee's wages by the employer constitutes the termination or severance of the employee's employment are deemed not to have been filed if the temporary reduction or elimination occurred during the COVID-19 period for reasons related to COVID-19.

The provision establishes different formulas that apply depending on which of three categories the employee falls into: the employee has a regular work week, the employee does not have a regular work week, or, regardless of whether or not the employee has a regular work week, the employee was not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020. Each of these categories are discussed below:

1. Employee has a regular work week

If the employee has a regular work week, the employee's wages are considered to be reduced if the employee earns less regular wages in the work week than he or she earned in the last regular work week before March 1, 2020. (Note, if the employee was not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020, the employee falls into category 3.)

However, per ss. 9(3), if the employee was on vacation, not able to work, not available for work, subject to a disciplinary suspension or was not provided with work because of a strike or lock-out occurring at his or her place of employment or elsewhere for any part of the last work week before March 1, 2020, then the work week to be applied is, instead, the last regular work week before March 1, 2020 in which such conditions did not apply for any part of the work week.

This formula therefore involves comparing the regular wages the employee earned during the last regular work week before March 1, 2020 in which none of the scenarios set out in subsection 9(3) occurred, to the regular wages the employee earned in the work week in question.

Work week is defined in s. 1 of the ESA as follows:

> "Work week " means,
>
> (a) a recurring period of seven consecutive days selected by the employer for the purpose of scheduling work, or
> (b) if the employer has not selected such a period, a recurring period of seven consecutive days beginning on Sunday and ending on Saturday.

"Regular wages" is defined in ESA Part I, s. 1 as follows:

> "regular wages" means wages other than overtime pay, public holiday pay, premium pay, vacation pay, domestic or sexual violence leave pay, infectious disease emergency leave pay, termination pay, severance pay and termination of assignment pay and entitlements under a provision of an employee's contract of employment that under subsection 5(2) prevail over Part VIII, Part X, Part XI, section 49.7, Part XV or section 74.10.1.

In order to determine what is the last regular work week before March 1, 2020, it is necessary to first establish the work week that includes March 1, 2020. From there, look back one full work week. This will be the last full work that occurred prior to March 1, 2020. If none of the scenarios set out in subsection (3) apply for any part of the work week, then then this is the work week used in the comparison. However, if during that work week, any of the scenarios set out in subsection 9(3) applied for any part of that work week, then it is necessary to continue to look back work week by work week to find the first work week in which none of the scenarios set out in subsection 9(3) are present.

Once the comparator work week is established, the regular wages the employee earned in that work week are compared to the regular wages the employee earned in the work week in question (i.e. the work week during the COVID-19 period). If the employee earned more regular wages in the pre-March 1, 2020 “comparator week” as compared to the work week in question, then the employee is considered to have had a reduction in his or her wages for the purposes of sections 6, 7 and 8.

2. Employee does not have a regular work week

If the employee does not have a regular work week, the employee’s wages are considered to be reduced if the employee earns less regular wages in the work week than the average amount of regular wages the employee earned per week in the period of 12 consecutive work weeks that preceded March 1, 2020. (Note that if the employee was not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020, the employee falls into category 3.)

However, per ss. 9(4), if the employee was not employed, was on vacation, was not able to work, was not available for work, was subject to a disciplinary suspension or was not provided with work because of a strike or lock-out occurring at his or her place of employment or elsewhere for any part of a work week in the 12-week period referred to in those paragraphs, then that work week is excluded for the purposes of the averaging.

This formula therefore involves comparing the average regular wages the employee earned in the 12 consecutive work weeks prior to March 1, 2020 (or lesser number of averaged weeks if there are any excluded weeks pursuant to ss. 9(4)) to the regular wages the employee earned in the work week in question during the COVID-19 period.

Work week is defined in s. 1 of the ESA as follows:

> "Work week " means,
> (a) a recurring period of seven consecutive days selected by the employer for the purpose of scheduling work, or
> (b) if the employer has not selected such a period, a recurring period of seven consecutive days beginning on Sunday and ending on Saturday.

"Regular wages" is defined in ESA Part I, s. 1 as follows:

> "regular wages" means wages other than overtime pay, public holiday pay, premium pay, vacation pay, domestic or sexual violence leave pay, infectious disease emergency leave pay, termination pay, severance pay and termination of assignment pay and entitlements under a provision of an employee's contract of employment that under subsection 5(2) prevail over Part VIII, Part X, Part XI, section 49.7, Part XV or section 74.10.1.

In order to establish the period of 12 consecutive work weeks that preceded March 1, 2020, it is necessary to first establish the work week that includes March 1, 2020. From there, look back 12 work weeks.

Next, determine if during any of those 12 work weeks, any of the scenarios set out in subsection (4) apply for any part of a work week. If any of the scenarios apply during a work week, that work week is excluded from the averaging calculation, meaning the average is calculated over a period shorter than 12 weeks. For example, if the only condition that applied during the 12-week timeframe was that the employee was on vacation for a portion of one week, the average of the remaining 11 work weeks would be calculated.

Once the comparator average of the employee's regular wages is established, the next step is to determine the regular wages the employee earned during the work week in question (i.e. the work week during the COVID-19 period). If the employee earned more regular wages pursuant to the averaging calculation than the regular wages the employee earned during the work week in question, then the employee is considered to have a reduction in his or her wages for the purposes of sections 6, 7 and 8.

3. Employee was not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020

If the employee was not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020, then the employee's regular wages are considered to be reduced if the employee earns less regular wages than they did in the work week in which they earned the most regular wages. This formula applies regardless of whether or not the employee has a regular work week.

Where an employee falls into this category, a comparison is made between the work week in which the employee earned the most regular wages - regardless of when that occurred during the employment relationship - and the regular wages the employee earned during the work week in question during the COVID-19 period.

If the employee earned more regular wages during any previous work week than he or she worked in the work week in question, then the employee is considered to have a reduction in his or her wages for the purposes of sections 6, 7 and 8.

9(3) For the purposes of paragraph 1 of subsection (1) and paragraph 1 of subsection (2), if the employee was on vacation, not able to work, not available for work, subject to a disciplinary suspension or was not provided with work because of a strike or lock-out occurring at his or her place of employment or elsewhere for any part of the last work week before March 1, 2020, then the work week to be applied is, instead, the last regular work week before March 1, 2020 in which such conditions did not apply for any part of the work week.

Subsection 9(3) affects the application of paragraph 1 of subsection 9(1) and paragraph 1 of subsection 9(2). These paragraphs establish the formula that applies to determine whether there has been a reduction in hours of work (ss. 9(2)) or wages (ss. 9(3)) for an employee who has a regular work week. (These paragraphs do not apply to employees who were not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020.)

If any of the listed scenarios applied to the employee for any part of the last regular work week before March 1, 2020, then this provision provides that the "comparator" week to be used in the formula is, instead, the last regular work week before March 1, 2020 in which none of the listed scenarios applied for any part of the work week.

The listed scenarios are as follows:

The employee is on vacation

This includes any time during which the employee was on vacation.

The employee is not able to work

This includes any time the employee was not able to work because the employee was, for example, off on sick leave, workers' compensation, or is otherwise unable to work for medical reasons.

The employee is not available for work

This includes any time in which the employee was unavailable for work (for example, because the employee was in jail, or on a Part XIV leave).

The employee is subject to disciplinary suspension

This includes any time in in which the employee was on a bona fide disciplinary suspension that was within the employer's express or implied authority under the contract of employment.

The employee was not provided with work because of a strike or lock-out occurring at his or her place of employment or elsewhere

This includes any time in which the employee was not provided with work by the employer due to a strike or lock-out at the employee's place of employment or elsewhere. For example, if there is a strike or lock-out at a supplier, and the employer is a manufacturer dependent upon the supplier for its parts, that employer may be forced to close down until the strike or lock-out is over or a new supplier can be found. In that case, this condition is met. Whether or not the strike or lockout is legal pursuant to the Labour Relations Act, 1995 is irrelevant in applying this condition

(4) For the purposes of paragraph 2 of subsection (1) and paragraph 2 of subsection (2), if the employee was not employed, on vacation, not able to work, not available for work, subject to a disciplinary suspension or was not provided with work because of a strike or lock-out occurring at his or her place of employment or elsewhere for any part of a work week in the 12-week period referred to in those paragraphs, then that work week is excluded for the purposes of the calculation.

Subsection 9(4) affects the application of subsection 9(1) paragraph 2 and subsection 9(2) paragraph 2. These paragraphs establish the formula that applies to determine whether there has been a reduction in hours of work (ss. 9(2)) or wages (ss. 9(3)) for an employee who does not have a regular work week. (These paragraphs do not apply to employees who were not employed by the employer during the entire work week that immediately preceded March 1, 2020.)

If any of the listed scenarios applied to the employee for any part of a work week in the 12-week period referred to in those paragraphs, then that work week is excluded for the purposes of the calculation.

The listed scenarios are as follows:

The employee was not employed

This includes any time during which the employee was not employed by the employer.

The employee is on vacation

This includes any time during which the employee was on vacation.

The employee is not able to work

This includes any time the employee was not able to work because the employee is, for example, off on sick leave, workers' compensation, or was otherwise unable to work for medical reasons.

The employee is not available for work

This includes any time in which the employee was unavailable for work (for example, because the employee was in jail, or on a Part XIV leave).

The employee is subject to disciplinary suspension

This includes any time in which the employee was on a bona fide disciplinary suspension that was within the employer's express or implied authority under the contract of employment.

The employee was not provided with work because of a strike or lock-out occurring at his or her place of employment or elsewhere

This includes any time in which the employee was not provided with work by the employer due to a strike or lock-out at the employee's place of employment or elsewhere. For example, if there is a strike or lock-out at a supplier, and the employer is a manufacturer dependent upon the supplier for its parts, that employer may be forced to close down until the strike or lock-out is over or a new supplier can be found. In that case, this condition is met. Whether or not the strike or lockout is legal pursuant to the Labour Relations Act, 1995 is irrelevant in applying this condition.

O. Reg. 228/20 Section 10 – Assignment Employees

10. For greater certainty, this Regulation applies to assignment employees, and sections 6 and 9 apply to such employees with necessary modifications.

Pursuant to subsection 1(2) of this regulation, section 10 does not apply to an employee who is represented by a trade union.

Section 10 provides that sections 6 and 9 of O. Reg. 228/20 apply to assignment employees with necessary modifications. It also provides "for greater certainty" that this regulation applies, in its entirety, to assignment employees.

Section 6 provides that where, during the defined "COVID-19 period", an employee's hours of work or wages are temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated by the employer for reasons related in whole or in part to COVID-19, the employee is not considered to be laid off for the purposes of sections 56 and 63 of the ESA. Section 9 sets out the formulas to be used in determining, for the purposes of this regulation, whether an employee has had a reduction in his or her hours of work or wages during the defined COVID-19 period.

An example of a necessary modification to section 6 relates to the reference in that provision to a temporary layoff under sections 56 and 63 of the ESA. Section 74.11 of the ESA modifies the application of Part XV ("Termination and Severance of Employment") to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees. Some of these modifications establish different rules from those under s. 56 and s. 63 to determine when an assignment employee is considered to be on a temporary layoff and what are excluded weeks. As such, the reference in section 6 of the regulation to sections 56 and 63 of the ESA is to be read to include the relevant modifications to the temporary layoff scheme that are brought about by section 74.11.

O. Reg. 228/20 Section 11 – Prescribed Date, Entitlement to Paid Leave

11. For the purposes of subsection 50.1 (5.2) of the Act, December 31, 2021 is prescribed as the date on which an employee's entitlement to paid leave ends.

Subsection 50.1(5.2) of the Act establishes that entitlements to paid infectious disease emergency leave end on September 25, 2021 or such later date as may be prescribed. Section 11 of O. Reg. 228/20 prescribes a later end date. It establishes that employee's entitlements to paid infectious disease emergency leave end on December 31, 2021.

Ontario Regulation 285/01 – When Worked Deemed to Be Performed, Exemptions and Special Rules

This regulation sets out special rules for certain categories of employees and exemptions to Parts VII to XI which deal with hours of work and eating periods, overtime pay, minimum wage, public holidays and vacation with pay, respectively, and ESA Part XVII, s. 73 that deals with retail business establishments. The regulation also establishes the minimum wage rates for categories of employees and exemptions to those rates.

O Reg 526/17 amended the name of this regulation from “Exemptions, Special Rules and Establishment of Minimum Wage” to “When Work Deemed to Be Performed, Exemptions and Special Rules”, effective January 1, 2018.

O Reg 285/01 Section 1 – Definitions

Construction Employee, Construction Industry

"construction employee" means,

(a) an employee employed at the site in any of the activities described in the definition of "construction industry", or

(b) an employee who is engaged in off-site work, in whole or in part, but is commonly associated in work or collective bargaining with an employee described in clause (a);

"construction industry" means the businesses that are engaged in constructing, altering, decorating, repairing or demolishing buildings, structures, roads, sewers, water or gas mains, pipe lines, tunnels, bridges, canals or other works at the site;

The term "construction employee" is referred to in the exemptions from the hours of work, daily rest, and weekly and bi-weekly rest provisions set out in O Reg 285/01. The term construction employee is also referred to in those provisions setting out the exemptions from public holiday entitlements in O Reg 285/01, s. 9(2). See also O Reg 288/01, s. 1 with respect to the construction employee exemptions from notice of termination and severance entitlements in that regulation. Note that although the definition of construction employee in O Reg 285/01 is cross-referenced in O Reg 288/01, employees who are engaged in the maintenance of roads and who are considered construction employees for the purposes of the hours of work exemptions in O Reg 285/01, are not considered construction employees for the purposes of O Reg 288/01. As a result, they are not exempt as construction employees from notice of termination under O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) paragraph 9. However, they are specifically exempted from severance entitlements under O Reg 288/01, s. 9(1) paragraph 8.

The definition of construction employee includes employees engaged at the site in any of the activities described in the definition of construction industry (i.e., constructing, altering, decorating, repairing or demolishing buildings structures, roads, sewers, water or gas mains, pipe lines, tunnels, bridges, canals or other works) "At the site" simply refers to a place where employees are engaged in construction activities. For example, it would refer to a downtown lot where an office building is being constructed but would also refer to the yard of a manufacturing plant where employees were engaged in constructing storage sheds to store materials or products manufactured at the plant.

Note that despite the reference to "construction industry" within the definition of "construction employee", the employee's employer does not have to be carrying out construction, alteration, etc., as its sole or even primary business; construction, alteration, etc. could be just a minor or incidental activity so far as the employer is concerned. As a result, the employees of an employer whose primary business is manufacturing would be construction employees if they were engaged in performing construction activities as described in the definition of construction industry at the manufacturing plant.

The definition also includes employees who work off-site (either in whole or in part), if the off-site employees are "commonly associated in work or collective bargaining" with employees who are employed at the site in any of the activities referred to in the construction industry definition (i.e., constructing, altering, decorating, repairing or demolishing buildings, structures, roads, sewers, water or gas mains, pipe lines, tunnels, bridges, canals or other works). Note again that the definition does not require an off-site employee's employer to be solely or primarily engaged in the construction business in order for the employee to be a construction employee; the critical issue is whether the employee is "commonly associated in work or collective bargaining" with employees employed at the site in any of the activities described in the definition of construction industry. See 1703171 Ontario Inc. o/a The Construction Group and Bath Solutions v Russo-Janzen, 2016 CanLII 8145 (ON LRB) for a discussion of what it means to be “commonly associated in work” with on-site construction employees.

The definition includes repair work but not maintenance work. Maintenance is distinguished from repair work in that maintenance involves the preserving of the functioning of a system, whereas repair involves restoration of a system to a functional state. However, the dividing line between maintenance and repair is not always clear, particularly since some maintenance activity may involve procedures that bear a close resemblance to repair (e.g., replacing worn or broken components). In determining whether an employee should be considered to be engaged in repair or in maintenance, one should look to the activity in which the employee spends the majority of their working hours. See: Stearns Catalytic Ltd. v Everingham (September 3, 1986), ESC 2166 (Kerr); Beaver Engineering Limited v Lightfoot and Woods (April 26, 1985), ESC 1840 (Franks); and Warren v Rexway Sheet Metal (January 10, 1995), ESC 95-06 (Palumbo).

However, it is the Program's position that the term construction employee in O Reg 285/01 does include employees engaged in the on-site maintenance of roads (e.g., snow ploughing and salting of roads). The rationale for this position is as follows:

- The definition of construction employee covers on-site employees employed in any of the activities described in the definition of construction industry
- The definition of construction industry includes the "constructing . . . of . . . roads", which phrase we consider to be equivalent to road building
- Road building is defined as including the maintenance of roads
- Therefore, an employee engaged in the maintenance of roads falls under the definition of construction employee.

As a result, employees engaged in on-site road maintenance are:

- Exempted from ESA Part VII, ss. 17, 18 and 19 by virtue of being a construction employee, and
- Are subject to the special overtime threshold in O Reg 285/01, s. 13 by virtue of being a road building employee.

One question that has arisen concerns the definition of construction industry in the Employment Standards Act, 2000 as compared to the definition of construction in the Occupational Health and Safety Act, RSO 1990, c O.1 ("OHSA"). The definition of construction in the OHSA specifically excludes "any work or undertaking underground in a mine" and persons engaged in such work are therefore not considered construction workers for the purposes of the OHSA.

However, the ESA 2000 definition of the construction industry contains no similar exception. Therefore, an employee engaged in the construction of a mine, whether at the surface or underground, is a construction employee for the purposes of the ESA 2000. In this regard, see the Ontario Labour Relation Board's decision in Hollos v Cementation Canada Inc., 2007 CanLII 17545 (ON LRB). In that case, the employee was employed as a "development miner" performing work in the construction of mine shafts. He argued that because he worked primarily underground he was engaged in mining but the Board held that regardless of where it was being performed, the nature of the work was construction and accordingly, he was a construction employee.

The definitions of construction industry and construction employee are substantially the same in scope as the construction industry definition in s. 1(1) of the Labour Relations Act, 1995, SO 1995, c 1, Sch A ("LRA 1995") and the employee definition in the Construction Industry part of the LRA 1995.

Domestic Worker

"domestic worker" means a person who is employed by a householder to perform services in the household or to provide care, supervision or personal assistance to children, senior or disabled members of the household, but does not include a sitter who provides care, supervision or personal assistance to children on an occasional, short-term basis;

The domestic worker definition is referred to in the special rules for domestic workers section in O Reg 285/01, s. 19. These special rules require the employer to provide the domestic worker with written particulars of employment, and sets out special rates for room and board.

Domestic workers are defined to include persons who are employed by the householder to perform services in the household (e.g., housekeeping or cleaning) as well as those providing care, supervision or personal assistance to children, senior or disabled members of the household. The definition makes no distinction between full-time, part-time, live-in or live-out workers. However, the definition specifically excludes babysitters who work on an occasional and short-term basis.

Employed by the householder

A domestic worker must be employed by the householder of the residence where they work. If the householder hired the worker through an agency, they are still a domestic worker if it is the householder who employs the worker and the householder was just using the agency as a "head-hunter". However, if the householder contracts with the agency for services and the employee is employed by that agency, or if the worker, although working in the residence is employed not by the householder but by some other employer, this definition will not apply (although the worker may be a homemaker in that case).

Perform services in the household

A domestic worker is defined to include persons employed by the householder who perform services in the household. This would include such functions as cleaning, dusting, vacuuming, laundry and the preparation of meals. A domestic worker is not a homeworker. See ESA Part I, s. 1(1) for the definition of homeworkers and ESA Part and O Reg 285/01, s. 12 for further information regarding the special rules that apply to homeworkers.

To provide, care supervision or personal assistance to children

An employee will fall under the definition of domestic worker if they provide care, supervision or personal assistance to a child of the householder. This would include a nanny who has received formal training in child care as well as a sitter who has had no formal training. Note, however, that a sitter who provides care on an occasional, short-term basis is not covered under the definition of domestic worker. For example, a teenager who occasionally babysits on weekend evenings for a neighbour would not fall under this definition.

To provide, care supervision or personal assistance to senior or disabled members of the household

To fall within this category of domestic worker, the employee would have to be providing care, assistance, supervision or protection to a person who, because of advanced age or physical or mental disability, cannot care for their own needs. The services could include household work related to the care of the person (for example, meal preparation, bed-making, etc.). In addition, the worker must be employed by the householder and be attending to the needs of a member of the employer's household. Thus, for example, the definition would not apply to someone employed to provide personal care to a resident in a nursing home, where the employer is the resident's adult son who does not live in the nursing home, even if the resident used to live in the son's household.

Election Official

"election official" means,

(a) an employee appointed as a returning officer under the Election Act,

(b) an employee who is employed on a temporary basis to assist in the administration of a general election or by-election under the Election Act and who is managed or supervised, directly or indirectly, by a returning officer, and

(c) an employee of the Chief Electoral Officer who is assigned on a temporary basis to provide support to returning officers in the administration of a general election or by-election under the Election Act within a region made up of one or more, but not all, electoral districts as determined under the Representation Act, 2015; ("membre du personnel électoral")

The definition of "election official" was added to section 1 of O Reg 285/01, effective March 9, 2018. The definition of election official covers:

a) An employee who is appointed as a returning officer the under *Election Act

   Note that each riding has a returning officer who is appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council for a ten-year term.

b) An employee who is employed on a temporary basis to assist in the administration of a general election or by-election under the Election Act and who is managed or supervised, directly or indirectly, by a returning officer,

   In order to fall under clause (b) of this definition, the following must be met:

   - The employee must be employed temporarily.
   - The employee's work must involve assisting in the administration of a general election or a by-election under the Election Act.
   - The employee must be managed or supervised directly or indirectly by a returning officer.

Note that the reference to indirect management or supervision means that the exemption can apply even if the returning officer is not the immediate manager or supervisor of the employee in question.

For example, a poll clerk who is supervised by a deputy returning officer, who in turn is supervised by a returning officer, would be "indirectly" supervised by a returning officer for the purposes of this definition.

c) An employee of the Chief Electoral Officer who is assigned on a temporary basis to provide support to returning officers in the administration of a general election or by-election under the Election Act within a region made up of one or more, but not all, electoral districts.

In order to fall under clause (c) of this definition, the following must be met:

- The employee must be an employee of the Chief Electoral Officer.

  The Chief Electoral Officer is appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council under the Election Act. The Chief Electoral Officer has overall responsibility for conducting Ontario provincial elections. The Chief Electoral Officer employs permanent staff to work at the Office of the Chief Electoral Officer.
- The employee must be assigned on a temporary basis to provide support to returning officers in the administration of a general election or a by-election under the Election Act
- The employee must provide this support within a region that has one or more, but not all, electoral districts.

  In other words, if an employee provides support to all electoral districts, the employee would not meet the definition as set out in clause (c).

Election officials defined in this section are referred to in O Reg 285/01, s. 4(1)(g). During the period specified in section 4(1.1), these employees are exempt from s. 17, 18 & 19 of the ESA, which cover the hours of work, daily rest, and weekly and bi-weekly rest provisions of the Act.

Hotel, Motel, Tourist Resort, Restaurant and Tavern

"hotel, motel, tourist resort, restaurant and tavern" means an establishment that provides accommodation, lodging, meals or beverages for payment, and includes hotels, motels, motor hotels, tourist homes, tourist camps, tourist cabins and cottages, tourist inns, catering establishments and all other establishments of a similar nature;

This definition is referred to in the public holiday exemption in O Reg 285/01, s. 9(1)(j) regarding seasonal workers in such establishments, i.e., those who work 16 weeks or less in a calendar year and who are provided with room and board. It is also referred to in O Reg 285/01, s. 14, which establishes special rules and exemptions for overtime pay for employees in such establishments who are employed for 24 weeks or less in a calendar year and who are provided with room and board.

Information Technology Professional

"information technology professional" means an employee who is primarily engaged in the investigation, analysis, design, development, implementation, operation or management of information systems based on computer and related technologies through the objective application of specialized knowledge and professional judgement;

Information technology professionals ("IT professionals") as defined in this section are exempt from the hours of work provisions in ESA Part VII by O Reg 285/01, s. 4(3)(b) and overtime pay provisions in ESA Part VIII by O Reg 285/01, s. 8(1).

It is important to note that this definition does not include all people working in the information technology field.

The exemption is limited to professional employees who use specialized knowledge and professional judgement in their work. Webster's Third New International Dictionary defines "professional" as a person "engaged in one of the learned professions or in an occupation requiring a high level of training and proficiency" and "characterized by or conforming to technical or ethical standards of a profession or occupation". "Judgement" is defined as "the mental or intellectual process of forming an opinion or evaluation by discerning or comparing".

It is the Program's view that employment as an information technology professional would be characterized by the exercise of professional judgement requiring the application of specialized knowledge in accordance with technical standards. For example, this could include the assessment of the information systems needs of a client and the evaluation of risks and benefits associated with the various options in accordance with generally accepted principles in the computer and related technologies field. The Program would consider an employee who is responsible for the development of a company's software or the day-to-day maintenance of a company's software and hardware products to be an IT professional. On the other hand, an employee whose responsibility was to repair or "trouble-shoot" home computers sold by their employer would not be considered to be an IT professional.

In addition, a person using the hardware and software products developed and maintained by IT professionals would not themselves be considered IT professionals. For example, persons employed as computer animators would not likely be considered IT professionals as their work would involve using the systems and software created by IT professionals but would not involve developing or maintaining such systems or software. Note however that some computer animators may fall within the definition of employees in the recorded visual and audio-visual entertainment industry and consequently would be exempt from the hours of work and eating periods in the Act.

Although "related technologies" is not defined, the Program would not consider an employee who was responsible for the development or operation of "high tech" equipment such as TVs, DVDs or stereos to be an IT professional.

Formal educational attainment or the absence thereof is not determinative of whether the employee will be exempt. The Program will also recognize informal, on the job training and experience and training outside the traditional education sector.

In applying this definition, it is necessary to recognize that there will also be non-professional information technology staff, such administrative and support staff. These employees may perform routine tasks involving or pertaining to information technology, but they do not perform the more sophisticated tasks contemplated in the definition and will not be exempt. If a job description includes a large proportion of tasks that are not specific to the information technology field, it will not likely be exempt. Furthermore, the mere fact that an employee works for an information technology business does not mean that the exemption will apply. Conversely, an IT professional may be employed by an employer that produces cars, TVs or furniture.

Recorded Visual and Audio-Visual Entertainment Production Industry

"recorded visual and audio-visual entertainment production industry" means the industry of producing visual or audio-visual recorded entertainment that is intended to be replayed in cinemas or on the Internet, as part of a television broadcast, or on a VCR or DVD player or a similar device, but does not include the industry of producing commercials (other than trailers), video games or educational material;

The "recorded visual and audio-visual entertainment production industry" definition refers generally to the film and television industry. This definition is relevant to O Reg 285/01, s. 4, which exempts all employees in that industry from Part VII Hours of Work and Eating Periods, and O Reg 285/01, and O Reg 285/01, s. 9.1, which exempts employees in that industry from ESA Part XII, s. 42.1. Such employees include all employees of foreign and domestic companies that produce recorded visual and audio-visual entertainment in Ontario. This may include employees working as computer animators in the recorded visual and audio-visual industry.

The exemption generally does not apply to live performers in that industry as they typically do not fall within the definition of "employee" in ESA Part I, s. 1.

Residential Care Worker

"residential care worker" means a person who is employed to supervise and care for children or developmentally handicapped persons in a family-type residential dwelling or cottage and who resides in the dwelling or cottage during work periods, but does not include a foster parent;

The residential care workers as defined in O Reg 285/01 are subject to special rules and exemptions regarding hours of work, free time, overtime, minimum wage entitlement and records of hours as set out in O Reg 285/01, ss. 20 to 23.

The definition of residential care worker in O Reg 285/01 has a number of elements as follows:

Supervises and cares for children or develop-mentally handicapped persons

"Supervision" and "care" are broad terms and include all those activities involved in looking after children and developmentally handicapped adults: preparing meals, feeding, cleaning, organizing play activities, and so on. An employee may perform duties that are similar to a domestic worker, a superintendent, or a caretaker. However, if they perform those duties in a residential care facility and meets the other requirements of O Reg 285/01, this regulation will apply. See Marshall Children's Foundation v Grieve et al (November 8, 1976), ESC 378 (Aggarwal).

Children are generally considered by the Program to be persons under the age of 18 years. Previously, it was the Program's policy that developmentally handicapped persons were considered to be persons with a condition or handicap that was present or occurred before the age of 18 years, which was consistent with the Board's decision in Pacaldo v Dolega-Kamienski Estate, 2003 CanLII 35096 (ON LRB). In that decision, the Board referred to the Day Nurseries Act, RSO 1990, c D.2 (repealed) and the Developmental Services Act, RSO 1990, c D.11 (repealed), which defined the term "developmentally disabled" as "a condition of mental impairment present or occurring during the person's formative years . . .", and a definition from an authoritative medical dictionary which defined "developmental disability" as a "substantial handicap of indefinite duration with the onset before the age of 18 years, such as mental retardation, autism, cerebral palsy, epilepsy or other neuropathy", and concluded that "developmentally handicapped" has the same meaning as developmentally disabled. As a result, where a disability was related to such things as the aging process (e.g., Alzheimer's disease) or an accident, the Program did not consider the person to be developmentally disabled for the purposes of the residential care worker rules and exemptions in O Reg 285/01, ss. 20 to 23.

However, in Lorraine Fraser Viscount Residence et al. v Ontario Labour Relations Board et al., the Divisional Court overturned an Ontario Labour Relations Board decision that held that two applicant group homes which provided residential care for schizophrenic adults were not entitled to the residential care worker exemptions and special rules because there was no evidence before the Board that the residents of the group homes were diagnosed with schizophrenia before the age of 18. In reversing the Board's decision, the Court expressed concerns about the imposition of the "18 year old" test saying that while the Board had addressed the purpose of the ESA, it had failed to consider the purpose of the exclusion or exemption for residential care workers, which it said is to facilitate the operation of the homes, while at the same time protecting workers.

As a result, the Program has amended its operational policy to now consider a person to be developmentally disabled for the purposes of the residential care worker rules and exemptions in O Reg 285/01, ss. 20 to 23 if the person possesses a disability of indefinite duration, manifested in their formative years, that is characterized by significant limitations to cognitive and adaptive functioning. "Cognitive functioning" refers to a person's intellectual capacity, including the capacity to reason, organize, plan, make judgments and identify consequences. "Adaptive functioning" refers to a person's capacity to gain personal independence, based on the person's ability to learn and apply conceptual, social and practical skills in their everyday life.

Works in a family-type residential dwelling or cottage

Only work in a residential care facility that is designed to provide a home-like atmosphere is covered. Work in an institution, such as a hospital, is not covered.

Resides in the dwelling or cottage during work periods

Program policy is that the employee must be required by the employer to reside at the facility and must actually do so, that is, eat, sleep, and spend rest periods there. If the employer merely provides accommodation for the employees and it is their option whether or not to use them, the regulation does not apply. The regulation is meant to apply in those situations where it is essential that the worker remain at the facility virtually 24 hours per day.

"Work period" refers to the period between the time the employee enters the facility for the purpose of working and residing there through to the time when they leave. Residence need not be permanent in order for the regulation to apply. In other words, the employee may have accommodation elsewhere where they reside when not on a shift. For example, an employee may be scheduled to work a set number of days at the facility, until they are relieved, at which time they can leave and live elsewhere.

Road Building

"road building" means the preparation, construction, reconstruction, repair, alteration, remodelling, renovation, demolition, finishing and maintenance of streets, highways or parking lots, including structures such as bridges, tunnels or retaining walls in connection with streets or highways, and all foundations, installation of equipment, appurtenances and work incidental thereto;

Employees who are engaged in "road building" are subject to special rules (different overtime thresholds) for overtime pay as set out in O Reg 285/01, s. 13.

Employees engaged in road building will also fall under the general definition of construction employees in O Reg 285/01, s. 1. As a result, such employees may also be exempt from the hours of work, daily rest and weekly and bi-weekly rest provisions and public holiday provisions of the Act. See the discussion of the definition of construction employee above for further information.

Seasonal Employee

"seasonal employee" means an employee who works not more than 16 weeks in a calendar year for an employer;

The seasonal employee definition is referenced in O Reg 285/01, s. 9(1)(j) and s. 15.

Section 9(1)(j) establishes an exemption from the public holiday provisions of the Act for seasonal employees of a hotel, motel, tourist resort, restaurant or tavern, who are provided with room and board.

Section 15 establishes special rules and exemptions for overtime pay for seasonal employees in fresh fruit and vegetable processing.

Taxi Cab

"taxi cab" means a vehicle, with seating accommodation for not more than nine persons exclusive of the driver, used to carry persons for hire;

This definition is referenced in O Reg 285/01, s. 8(j) and S. 9(1)(i), which exempt taxi cab drivers from overtime pay and public holiday pay.

In order for a vehicle to be a taxi cab, both elements of the definition must be met; it must seat no more than nine people (not counting the driver), and it must be used for the carriage for hire of people. Therefore, a car driven by a private chauffeur for one employer is not a taxi cab; nor is a bus that seats more than nine people plus the driver (even if it is often the case that nine or fewer people are actually riding in it).

Employers sometimes operate a mix of regular taxi cabs and larger vehicles that seat more than nine people. Employees who drive both types of vehicles will fall under this definition for the purposes of the overtime and public holiday exemptions, only if they spend the majority of their time driving vehicles that fall within the definition of taxi cab.

Wage Rate

"wage rate" means, where an employee is paid for piecework, the rate paid per piece and if there is more than one piece rate, each of the piece rates, and the number of pieces paid at each rate.

This definition applies with respect to the wage statement obligations in ESA Part V, s. 12. Under that section, an employer is required to provide, on the employee's pay day, a written statement setting out, among other things, the employee's wage rate.

The definition is inclusive but is intended to indicate what an employee's wage rate is if the employee is paid on a piecework basis. The definition provides that wage rate includes the piece rate or rates together with the number of pieces paid at each rate.

For example, in the case of fruit, vegetable or tobacco harvesters it may refer to the rate paid for each of bushel or pound of produce harvested by the employee and the number of bushels or pounds paid for.

In the case of homeworkers, the piece rate would be the rate paid for a specified number of articles or things manufactured. "Manufacture" is defined in O Reg 285/01, s. 12(3) to include preparation, improvement, repair, alteration, assembly or completion. See O Reg 285/01, s. 12 for information regarding special rules for homeworkers.

O Reg 285/01 Section 1.1 – When Work Deemed to Be Performed

When Work Deemed to Be Performed – s. 1.1(1)

1.1 (1) Subject to subsection (2), work shall be deemed to be performed by an employee for the employer,

(a) where work is,

(i) permitted or suffered to be done by the employer, or

(ii) in fact performed by an employee although a term of the contract of employment expressly forbids or limits hours of work or requires the employer to authorize hours of work in advance; or

(b) where the employee is not performing work and is required to remain at the place of employment,

(i) waiting or holding himself or herself ready for call to work, or

(ii) on a rest or break-time other than an eating period. O. Reg. 526/17, s. 2.

Section 1.1(1), which deems work to be performed in certain circumstances, is subject to s. 1.1(2), which sets out circumstances where work will not be deemed to be performed. As a consequence, in the circumstances set out in s. 1.1(2), work will not be deemed to be performed even though it would otherwise be deemed to have been performed under s. 1.1(1).

The fact that O Reg 285/01, s. 1.1(1) deems work to be performed in specified circumstances means that the deemed working time must be taken into account in determining compliance with the statutory requirements, such as the hours of work, minimum wage and overtime pay standards*. How the employee is paid for that time however, is a separate issue. Under the ESA, it is possible for an employee to be paid different rates for different types of work, including receiving no financial compensation or a rate that is lower than the hourly minimum wage rate for some types of work (so long as the minimum wage requirements, which are based on a pay period basis, are met). See “Payment for Time Worked” at the end of the discussion on s. 1.1 for details.

Work Permitted or Suffered to be Done

Section 1.1(1)(a)(i) provides that an employee is considered to have performed work if the employer allowed the employee to perform work. In other words, it is not necessary that the employer have asked or authorized the employee to do the work; the employee will be considered to have performed the work if the employer was aware that the employee was working or could have anticipated that they might be working but failed to take steps to prevent it. In M. Alzner Contractors Ltd. v Standard (December 16, 1985), ESC 2015 (Brown), the referee found that the employer had "permitted or suffered" work to be done by the employee because the employer knew that the employee was present on the job site, but did not ask him to leave or instruct him not to engage in any work on behalf of the employer. Similarly, employees who perform work prior to the start of their scheduled shift (e.g. because the employee regularly arrives at the workplace early) or after the end of the scheduled shift (e.g. because the employee is finishing up with a customer) will be considered to be performing work during that time so long as the employer was aware or could have anticipated that the employee might be working and didn't take steps to prevent it.

Work in Fact Performed Even if Forbidden / Not Authorized by Contract

Section 1.1(1)(a)(ii) is, in effect, an elaboration of s. 1.1(1)(a)(i). It provides that work is deemed to be performed if it is in fact performed, even though the employment contract prohibited the performance of the work or the employee failed to obtain the employer's approval despite the fact that the contract required such approval.

For example, work was deemed to be performed where the employee's actual hours of work exceeded those for which the employee was scheduled - see Weiche-Huttenkofer Corporation Limited v Masschelein (August 25, 1980), ESC 872 (Gorsky); and where the employee performed work that was not authorized in advance as required by the employer - see 469754 Ontario Limited o/a Rumors Restaurant & Tavern v Lalonde (October 16, 1982), ESC 1305 (Betcherman). The fact that the work performed by the employee was unnecessary (i.e., it was not required to be done) does not render s. 1.1(1) inapplicable - see Keyes Supply Company Limited o/a Amalgamated Iron & Metal Co. v Cabral (February 15, 1979) ESC 582 (Picher); nor does the fact that the work was unsatisfactory - see The Living Institute v Roberts (March 6, 1978), ESC 489 (Haladner) and Elgin Lumber & Packaging Corp. Ltd. v Tait et al (June 19, 1978) ESC 524 (Brent).

Not Performing Work But Required to Remain at Place of Employment

i. Section 1.1(1)(b)(i) provides that work is deemed to be performed where an employee is not in fact performing work but is required to be at the place of employment waiting to be called to work.

Where the employee is holding themselves ready for work but not at the place of employment, work is not deemed to be performed. See 379480 Ontario Ltd. c.o.b.a. Arlington Public House and Restaurant v Kish (November 26, 1981), ESC 1107 (Davis) and the discussion in s. 1.1(2) below.

ii. Section 1.1(1)(b)(ii) provides that work is deemed to be performed where an employee is not in fact performing work but is required to be at the place of employment while on a break or rest period other than an eating period. See Cardelli and Cardarelli o/a Dina's Beauty Salon v Grey (March 6, 1978), ESC 488 (Springate) where the employee was at his place of work, ready for a call to work, but not actively working.

If the employee is allowed to leave or is required to leave the place of employment during a break, work will not be deemed to be performed – see Cancoil Thermal Corporation v Hawkins (April 13, 1999), 4529-97-ES (ON LRB).

There may be situations where some employees are deemed to have performed work during their breaks while others are not, for example, at workplaces where employers require employees who wish to smoke on their breaks to leave the place of employment, while requiring non-smoking employees to stay. Neither the ESA 2000 nor the regulations prohibit that kind of situation. Generally speaking, "place of employment" for the purposes of O Reg 285/01, s. 1.1(1) may encompass both the building and the land, including the parking lot, owned by the employer, but would exclude public sidewalks and roads.

Scenarios where the issue as to whether work is being performed may arise

The question as to when time constitutes “work” for the purposes of the ESA often arises. The Program’s policy for some scenarios in which this question has arisen is set out below.

i. Travel Time

It is Program policy that any time a person spends traveling (irrespective of the mode of transportation) for the purpose of getting to or from some-where where work will be or was performed, with the exception of commuting time, counts as working time.

Commuting time for an employee who has a usual workplace means the time required for the employee to travel to their usual workplace from home and vice versa.

In situations where an employee does have a usual workplace but is required to travel to a location other than the usual workplace to perform work, all time spent travelling to and from that location is considered working time rather than commuting time. For example, if an employee who usually works in City A is required to travel to City B for work, all time spent getting either from home or the workplace in City A (depending on whether the employee was beginning their journey from home or the workplace) to the destination in City B will count as working time. (In the case where the employee travels by air, for example, the time spent getting to the airport, waiting to get on the plane, time on the plane and time spent getting to the destination in City B after the plane lands all counts as working time.)

In situations where an employee does not have a usual workplace, commuting time is generally considered to be the time it takes the employee to get from their residence to the first work location and the time it takes for the employee to get home from their last work location. For example, if an employee works for a housecleaning service, time spent travelling from their home to the first residence they are scheduled to clean is considered to be commuting time as will the trip home from the last residence. However, time spent travelling during the work day to go from residence to residence would be considered working time rather than commuting time. If the employee is required to attend at the employer’s shop at the start of the shift in order to pick up supplies and at the end of the shift to drop off the supplies and do paperwork, the time spent travelling from the shop to the first house and from the last house to the shop is considered working time. See, for example, Hopkins v 1719453 Ontario Inc. (Clean Team), 2012 CanLII 25680 (ON LRB).

As noted, commuting time is not counted as working time. However, there are exceptions to this rule:

- If the employee takes a work vehicle home in the evening for the convenience of the employer, the hours of work begin when the employee leaves home in the morning and end when they arrive home in the evening.
- If the employee is required to pick up other staff or supplies on the way from home to work, or to drop off other staff or supplies on the way from work to home, all the time spent from home to work and vice versa must be treated as working time.

ii. Training Time

It is Program policy that time spent in training that is required by the employer or by law as a condition of employment or continued employment will be considered working time.

Training that is taken at the option of the employee, i.e., training that is not required by the employer as a condition of employment or continued employment or that is not otherwise necessary for the performance of the employee’s job would not be considered working time. This includes training that is required to meet the qualifications for a new position with the current employer (e.g., a course and certificate in project management as a condition for promotion to manager).

iii. Time Spent at the Workplace Prior To/After Scheduled Shift & Punching In and Out

Employees are often required for practical reasons to be at their workplace and/or to perform work functions in advance of their scheduled shift start time in order to ensure they are ready at their workstation (be in the right place such as, for example, a desk, in front of a cash station, on an assembly line, etc.) to start their shift on time. Some situations that would require an employee to arrive at the workplace in advance of their scheduled shift include:

- putting on a required uniform or personal protective equipment when that can be done only on the work premises either because that is where the employer requires the uniform/equipment to be kept or because it would not be practical for the employee to wear the uniform/equipment during the commute from home to work)
- counting the cash in a till prior to replacing another colleague at the register
- lining up at the punch clock where there is often a wait

The Program considers that where it is necessary for the employee to spend time or to perform functions in the workplace in order to start a shift on time, that time is considered working time.

The same policy applies with respect to time spent performing functions after the end of a shift. For example, time after the end of the scheduled shift that an employee spends counting the cash in the till or waiting in line to punch out at the time clock is considered working time.

iv. Employer/Contract Deems Employees Not to Have Worked

A related issue arises when employers deem employees to have worked less time than they in fact did for purposes of calculating employees' wages.

For example, some employers may, under the terms of the employment contract, pay an employee who punches in more than 5 minutes but fewer than 15 minutes late wages only for 45 minutes for that hour. This method of calculating an employee's wages is not prohibited under the ESA 2000. (Although note that depending on the employee's wage rate, there may be an issue with minimum wage compliance – see the discussion udner "Deductions, s. 13(1))".)

However, compliance with the hours of work provisions is determined on the basis of time worked (whether actually worked or deemed to have been worked under this section of the regulation), not on the provisions of the contract that might, in some circumstances, deem the employee to have worked less time than they in fact did.

Payment for Time Worked

Once it is determined that time is considered working time, the next issue is whether the employee is entitled to be paid for that work, and if so, at what rate. The question to be answered is what pay, if any, was payable under the contract in respect of the work.

The ESA does not prohibit employers from entering into contracts with employees to pay them different rates for different types of work, including paying some types of work at a rate that is lower than the hourly minimum wage rate – including no payment at all – so long as the minimum wage requirements, which are based on a pay period basis, are met.

For example, a contract may provide that the time an employee spends lining up to punch in and out will not be compensated, even though that time is considered to be work. Or, it may provide that the time an employee spends donning and doffing personal protective equipment at the workplace will not be compensated even though that time is considered to be work. Similarly, a contract may provide that travel time will be compensated at 50% of the employee's regular rate. These types of contractual terms are not prohibited under the ESA 2000, so long as the minimum wage requirements – compliance with which are determined on a pay period basis, not an hourly basis – are satisfied.

The contractual terms regarding payment may be explicitly set out in a written contract, but in many cases they won't be and officers will rely on other evidence, including the individual employee's understanding, to determine what the parties' agreement – explicit or implied – was with respect to payment.

Same – s. 1.1(2)

1.1(2) Work shall not be deemed to be performed for an employer during the time the employee,

(a) is entitled to,

(i) take time off work for an eating period,

(ii) take at least six hours or such longer period as is established by contract, custom or practice for sleeping and the employer furnishes sleeping facilities, or

(iii) take time off work in order to engage in the employee's own private affairs or pursuits as is established by contract, custom or practice; or

(b) is not at the place of employment and is waiting or holding himself or herself ready for call to work. O. Reg. 526/17, s. 2.

Section 1.1(1), which deems work to be performed (e.g., where work was permitted or suffered to be done or the employee was on-call at their place of work), is subject to s. 1.1(2). As a consequence, in the circumstances set out in s. 1.1(2), work will not be deemed to be performed, even though it would otherwise be found that work had been performed pursuant to s. 1.1(1).

An example of the joint effect of ss. 1.1(1) and (2) occurs where a live-in employee is required to remain on the premises of an employer operating a remote location hunting or fishing camp. If the employee is called to do work from time to time as the need arises, without any defined period(s) of time off, they will be deemed, pursuant to s. 1.1(1)(b)(i), to be working during all hours. This, however, is subject to s. 1.1(2), which states that work is not deemed performed during the time an employee is entitled to take time off for eating, sleeping or private pursuits. In order to apply s. 1.1(2), the employer must demonstrate that the employee was in fact entitled to take such time off.

Meal Breaks

Section 1.1(2)(a)(i) establishes that where the employee is entitled to take time off for a meal break, that time will not be deemed to be work time.

Note that while an employee may ostensibly have an entitlement to take time off, there may be no entitlement in fact. For example, if the employer advises an employee that they have an eating period at, say, noon, each day but then makes it impossible for the employee to take the break, s. 1.1(2) would not apply. As a result, the meal break would not be deemed non-work time. (In such a case, there may also be a violation of the ESA Part VII, ss. 20 and 21 requirement to provide the employee with a meal break.)

For example, if the employer provides a meal break from 1:00 to 1:30 p.m. but advises the employee at 1:00 p.m. that 50 widgets must be made by 1:30 p.m., the employer has effectively denied the entitlement to the meal break. No entitlement means that s. 1.1(2) does not apply and the officer will find that work was performed. Note that if the employee decided on their own initiative to make another 50 widgets between 1:00 and 1:30 p.m., that time would not count as hours of work. The employee was entitled to take the meal break and, therefore, work is deemed not to be performed during that period.

The Program takes the position that an employee may be required to take an ESA Part VII, s. 20 meal break in a designated place (e.g., on the employer's premises) and to be on call while on that break. If an eating period is not provided in compliance with ESA Part VII, s. 20(1) or (2), because the employee was on call and the meal break was interrupted, the employee is considered not to have had a meal break for the purposes of s. 20. As a result, s. 1.1(2) will not apply and the officer will find that work was performed as per s. 1.1(1)(b).

For example, an employer provides a 30-minute eating period for an employee and requires the employee to take his/her eating period in a designated place on the employer's premises and to be on call. The employee is only able to complete 20 minutes of the 30-minute eating period before getting called back to work. Because the employee was not able to have an uninterrupted 30-minute eating period, a s. 20(1) eating period is considered not to have been provided, and a new uninterrupted 30-minute period must be given. Further, because a s. 20(1) eating period has not been provided, the 20 minutes taken would not be considered an eating period and the “work deemed not to be performed” provision of s. 1.1(2)(a)(i) would not apply. The 20 minutes would be deemed to be work performed under s. 1.1(1)(b).

Similarly, the above would also apply to situations under s. 20(2) where the eating period is split into two periods of time that total 30 minutes within a five hour period. For example, an employer and employee have agreed that the employee will receive two 15-minute eating periods within a five hour period of work. The two 15-minute periods are not scheduled and the employer requires the employee to take the eating period on the employer's premises and to be on call while on break. The employee is able to take the first 15-minute eating period without an interruption. However, 10 minutes into the second 15-minute eating period, the employee is called back to work. Because the second 15-minute eating period was not completed, s. 20(2) has not yet been complied with. Another 15-minute eating period must be provided in order to achieve compliance with s. 20(2). Should the employee not be able to complete the second 15-minute eating period within a 5-hour period of work, then there would not be compliance with s. 20(2). All of the break time taken, including the first 15-minute break would not be considered an eating period per s. 1.1(2)(a)(i) and would be deemed to be work per s. 1.1(1)(b).

Sleeping Periods

Section 1.1(2)(a)(ii) establishes that a sleeping period of at least six hours where sleeping facilities are provided by the employer will not be deemed to be work time so long as the employee is entitled to the time off. The employee must be entitled to uninterrupted sleep for at least six hours and entitled to refuse work during the period designated as a sleep period in order for the sleeping period to be deemed non-working time. If the employee does not have the right to refuse work during the sleeping period, the entire sleeping period is included in hours of work, whether or not the employee is actually called on to work - see Stark v Kerry's Place (Autism Services) (June 16, 1999), 3048-97-ES (ON LRB).

Time Off for Personal Matters

Section 1.1(2)(a)(iii) establishes that when an employee is given time off to engage in private affairs or pursuits, the employee will not be considered to be working. For this provision to apply, it must be clear that the employee was entitled to take the time off and was not simply on-call, waiting to be assigned or put to work.

On Call to Work

Section 1.1(2)(b) establishes that on call employees are not considered to be working if they are not at their place of employment while waiting to be called in to work – see 379480 Ontario Ltd. c.o.b.a. Arlington Public House and Restaurant v Kish. For a discussion of what is meant by on call see ESA Part VII, s. 18(2).

O Reg 285/01 Section 2 – Exemptions from Parts VII to XI of Act

Exemptions from Parts VII to XI of the Act – s. 2(1)

Exempted Professionals – s. 2(1)(a) and (b)

2(1) Parts VII, VII.1, VIII, IX, X and XI of the Act do not apply to a person employed,

(a) as a duly qualified practitioner of,

- i. architecture,
- ii. law,
- iii. professional engineering,
- iv. public accounting,
- v. surveying, or
- vi. veterinary science;

(b) as a duly registered practitioner of,

- i. chiropody,
- ii. chiropractic,
- iii. dentistry,
- iv. massage therapy,
- v. medicine,
- vi. optometry,
- vii. pharmacy,
- viii. physiotherapy, or
- ix. psychology;

The professionals listed above are exempt from the Hours of Work and Eating Periods (Part VII), Three Hour Rule (Part VII.1), Overtime Pay (Part VIII), Minimum Wage (Part IX), Public Holidays (Part X) and Vacation with Pay (Part XI) provisions of the ESA 2000.

In order for the exemption to apply, two conditions must be met. For the professionals listed in s. 2(1)(a), the employee must be "duly qualified" and must be a "practitioner" of the profession.

For the professionals listed in s. 2(1)(b) the employee must be "duly registered" and must be a "practitioner" of the profession.

Duly Qualified

The employees listed in s. 2(1)(a) must be entitled to practise the profession under the following legislation:

Profession	Legislation
Architecture	Architects Act, RSO 1990, c A.26
Law	Law Society Act, RSO 1990, c L.8
Professional Engineering	Professional Engineers Act, RSO 1990, c P.28
Public Accounting	Public Accounting Act, 2004, SO 2004, c 8
Surveying	Surveyors Act, RSO 1990, c S.29
Veterinary Science	Veterinarians Act, RSO 1990, c V.3

Duly Registered

The employees listed in s. 2(1)(b) must be duly registered under the following legislation:

Profession	Legislation
Chiropody	Chiropody Act, 1991, SO 1991, c 20
Chiropractic	Chiropractic Act, 1991, SO 1991, c 21
Dentistry	Dentistry Act, 1991, SO 1991, c 24
Massage Therapy	Massage Therapy Act, 1991, SO 1991, c 27

Profession	Legislation
Medicine	Medicine Act, 1991, SO 1991, c 30
Optometry	Optometry Act, 1991, SO 1991, c 35
Pharmacy	Pharmacy Act, 1991, SO 1991, c 36
Physiotherapy	Physiotherapy Act, 1991, SO 1991, c 37
Psychology	Psychology Act, 1991, SO 1991, c 38

Duly Qualified/Registered

The practitioner in a profession described in s. 2(1)(a) or s. 2(1)(b) must be duly qualified or registered under the legislation referred to above.

For example, "duly qualified practitioner of . . . law" means an individual who is licensed by the Law Society of Ontario to practise law. Paralegals are not covered by this exemption, because although they are governed by the Law Society Act and Law Society of Ontario, they are licensed only to "provide legal services", not to "practise law".

A duly qualified practitioner of architecture includes an architect, intern architect and a student architect licensed to practice architecture by the Ontario Association of Architects ("OAA") under the Architects Act. It may also include persons designated as Licensed Technologists if they are issued a restricted or limited certificate of practice by the OAA.

Note that a midwife is not considered to be a practitioner of medicine as the practise of midwifery is governed by the Midwifery Act, 1991, SO 1991, c 31 and not the Medicine Act, 1991.

Duly Qualified Practitioner with License to Practise Public Accounting – s. 2(1)(a)(iv)

A duly qualified practitioner of public accounting refers to a person who is a practitioner of and who is qualified to practise public accounting under the Public Accounting Act, 2004 ("PAA"). This means that the employee either:

- Has a license to practise public accounting under the Public Accounting Act, 2004 ("PAA"); or
- Is exempt from the licensing requirement under the PAA.

The Public Accountants Council for the Province of Ontario (the Council) is the corporate body that oversees the regulation of public accounting in Ontario. The Public Accountants Council may authorize other organizations (called "designated bodies") to license and govern the activities of their members as public accountants. In order to become an "authorized designated body", the designated body must meet certain standards set by the Public Accountants Council.

The Public Accountants Council had previously authorized the following "designated bodies" to issue licenses to its members to practise public accounting in Ontario:

- Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario
- Certified General Accountants Association of Ontario (as of June 2010)
- Certified Management Accountants of Ontario (as of January 2012)

As a result, individuals licensed to practise public accounting under the PAA may include members of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario, members of the Certified General Accountants Association of Ontario, and members of the Certified Management Accountants of Ontario.

In 2014, the three designated bodies amalgamated into the Chartered Professional Accountants of Ontario (CPA Ontario) in 2014.

Effective May 17, 2017, this amalgamation was recognized in the Chartered Professional Accountants of Ontario Act, 2017 (CPA Act). CPA Ontario is now the sole “designated body” under the Public Accounting Act, 2004 authorized to license its members to practice public accounting in Ontario and govern the activities of its members as public accountants.

Concurrent with the coming into force of the CPA Act, the enabling statutes for the predecessor designated bodies (Certified General Accountants Act, 2010, Certified Management Accountants Act, 2010 and the Chartered Accountants Act, 2010) were repealed. However, all members of the former three designated bodies carry a CPA Ontario designation in conjunction with their legacy designation until November 1, 2022.

Qualified Practitioner of Public Accounting Exempted from Licensing Requirements – s. 2(1)(a)(iv)

A person may also be duly qualified to practise public accounting under the PAA even though they are not required to hold a license if they provide public accounting services exclusively in respect of:

- Any public authority or any commission, committee or emanation of a public authority, including a Crown corporation;
- Any bank, loan or trust company;
- Any transportation company incorporated by an Act of the Parliament of Canada; or
- Any other publicly-owned or publicly-controlled public utility organization.

Therefore, an employee who provides public accounting services exclusively for one of the above-listed organizations, may be considered duly qualified in the practise of public accounting even if they are not been issued a license in public accounting.

Practitioner

An employee in a profession described in s. 2(1)(a) or s. 2(1)(b) above must actually be practising the profession in order for the exemption to apply. For example, a store clerk who is a member of the Law Society of Ontario is duly qualified; however as she is not practising law, the exemption will not apply.

With respect to what is meant by the "practise" of public accounting, the Public Accountants Council for the Province of Ontario defines public accounting as: the business of expressing independent assurance and certain other services in respect of financial statements and other financial information of enterprises where it can reasonably be expected that the services will be relied upon or used by a third party.

For clarity, a person is not practising public accounting if they are engaging solely in bookkeeping, cost accounting, or the installation of bookkeeping or business systems. Likewise, the preparation of financial statements solely as part of tax returns without provision of an opinion independent of the taxpayer in respect of the financial statements, is not considered practising public accounting.

Duly Registered Practitioner Under the Naturopathy Act, 2007 – s. 2(1)(c)

2(1) Parts VII, VII.1, VIII, IX, X and XI of the Act do not apply to a person employed,

(c) as a duly registered practitioner under the Naturopathy Act, 2007;

This clause was amended effective January 1, 2019 to replace the reference to the (repealed) Drugless Practitioners Act (DPA) with a reference to the Naturopathy Act, 2007. (At the time of the repeal the only remaining class of drugless practitioners under the DPA were the drugless therapists/naturopaths.)

A duly registered naturopathic practitioner is exempt from the Hours of Work and Eating Periods (Part VII), Three Hour Rule (Part VII.1), Overtime Pay (Part VIII), Minimum Wage (Part IX), Public Holidays (Part X), and Vacation with Pay (Part XI) provisions of the ESA 2000.

In order for the exemption to apply, the employee must be duly registered under the Naturopathy Act, 2007 and be practising the profession of naturopathy. The Naturopathy Act, 2007 (s. 3) defines the practice of naturopathy as follows:

> "The practice of naturopathy is the assessment of diseases, disorders and dysfunctions and the naturopathic diagnosis and treatment of diseases, disorders and dysfunctions using naturopathic techniques to promote, maintain or restore health."

All persons who were registered to practice under the Drugless Practitioners Act by the Board of Directors of Drugless Therapy immediately before July 1, 2015 were deemed to be holders of a certificate of registration issued under the Naturopathy Act, 2007.

Teacher as Defined in the Teaching Profession Act – s. 2(1)(d)

2(1) Parts VII, VII.1, VIII, IX, X and XI of the Act do not apply to a person employed,

(d) as a teacher as defined in the Teaching Profession Act;

Certain teachers are exempt from the Hours of Work and Eating Periods (Part VII), Three Hour Rule (Part VII.1), Overtime Pay (Part VIII), Minimum Wage (Part IX), Public Holidays (Part X), and Vacation with Pay (Part XI) provisions of the ESA 2000.

"Teacher" is defined in the Teaching Profession Act, RSO 1990, c T.2 ("TPA"):

"teacher" means a person who is a member of the Ontario College of Teachers and is employed to teach by a board as a teacher but does not include a supervisory officer, a principal, a vice-principal or an instructor in a teacher-training institution.

A person may be employed to teach, but that in itself does not mean that the person falls within the exemption. In the first place, as the definition indicates, the term "teacher" does not include supervisory officers (e.g., directors of education), principals and vice-principals, or instructors in a teacher-training institution.

Secondly, some teachers are not employed by a board as that term is used in the definition. While the term "board" is not defined in O Reg 285/01 or the TPA, the Education Act, RSO 1990, c E.2., defines it as a "district school board or school authority". Based on the principle of statutory interpretation that holds that words and expressions used in different statutes dealing with the same subject matter should be interpreted consistently and on the fact that the TPA, the Education Act and s. 2(1)(d) of O Reg 285/01 all deal with the teachers, it is the Program's position that the word "board" as it appears in the exemption should be construed as a district school board or school authority (as opposed to, say, a board of directors or board of governors).

It follows that teachers who are not employed by a district school board or school authority, such as teachers in a private school or a college or university, do not fall within the exemption. See, for example, Guru Tegh Bahadur International School Inc. v. Director of Employment Standards, 2019 CanLII 22126 (ON LRB). (Note that teachers in these institutions are not required by legislation to be members of the Ontario College of Teachers, and if they are not they would be outside the scope of the exemption on that ground as well.)

Student in Training for an Occupation Mentioned in Clause (a),(b),(c) or (d) – s. 2(1)(e)

2(1) Parts VII, VII.1, VIII, IX, X and XI of the Act do not apply to a person employed,

(e) as a student in training for an occupation mentioned in clause (a), (b), (c) or (d);

Students in training to be one of the professionals listed in clause (a) or (b), a naturopathic practitioner as mentioned in clause (c), or a teacher as defined in clause (d) are exempt from the Hours of Work and Eating Periods (Part VII), Three Hour Rule (Part VII.1), Overtime Pay (Part VIII), Minimum Wage (Part IX), Public Holidays (Part X), and Vacation with Pay (Part XI) provisions of the ESA 2000.

Most of these professions and callings have some type of work experience or apprenticeship requirement that must be completed before a person can qualify to practise the profession. This work experience requirement is often mandated by the authorizing statute. It is only while a student is engaged in obtaining work experience as per the statute that they are exempted from the above standards. For example, the Professional Engineers Act requires applicants for a license as a duly qualified practitioner of professional engineering to have certain educational qualifications and 48 months of experience in the practice of engineering. After completing the 48 months of work experience, the Council of the Association of Professional Engineers of Ontario reviews the experience to determine whether it is sufficient to allow the student to meet the generally accepted standards of practical skill required to engage in the practice of professional engineering. Some students in training enroll in the Engineering Intern Training ("EIT") Program. This Program, which is administered by the Professional Engineers of Ontario, provides the student with an annual review of their engineering experience (as well as a subscription to certain professional publications). For the purposes of the ESA 2000, a student-in-training would include a student in the EIT Program but would also include a student who is not in the Program but is currently engaged in obtaining the 48 months of experience required under the Professional Engineers Act.

If the student is merely studying the subject area of the profession at university or college, the exemption will not apply to any employment they undertake while studying. For example, a person may be studying dentistry while employed by the operator of a restaurant part-time as a waiter; the exemption will not apply to exempt the restaurant operator from the obligation to comply with the above standards.

Commercial Fishing – s. 2(1)(f)

2(1) Parts VII, VII.1, VIII, IX, X and XI of the Act do not apply to a person employed,

(f) in commercial fishing;

Employees engaged in commercial fishing and who fall under provincial jurisdiction will be exempt from the Hours of Work and Eating Periods (Part VII), Three Hour Rule (Part VII.1), Overtime Pay (Part VIII), Minimum Wage (Part IX), Public Holidays (Part X) and Vacation with Pay (Part XI) provisions of the ESA 2000. Please refer to ESA Part III, s. 3(2) for further information. Note, however, that this exemption has not been held to apply to "in plant" employees on the basis that employees engaged in preparing and distributing the fish for market were not engaged in commercial fishing – see Kingsville Fishermen's Company Limited v Ontario Ministry of Labour (April 8, 1988), ESC 2324 (Springate).

Salesperson or Broker, as Defined in the Real Estate and Business Brokers Act, 2002 – s. 2(1)(g)

2(1) Parts VII, VII.1, VIII, IX, X and XI of the Act do not apply to a person employed,

(g) as a salesperson or broker, as those terms are defined in the Real Estate and Business Brokers Act, 2002;

A registered salesperson of a real estate broker is exempt from the Hours of Work and Eating Periods (Part VII), Three Hour Rule (Part VII.1), Overtime Pay (Part VIII), Minimum Wage (Part IX), Public Holidays (Part X), and Vacation with Pay (Part XI) provisions of the ESA 2000.

This exemption was amended effective March 31, 2006 by O Reg 92/06 to reflect the repeal and replacement of the Real Estate Business and Brokers Act, RSO 1990, c R.4 with the Real Estate Business and Brokers Act, 2002, SO 2002, c 30, Sch C which came into force on that date.

In order for the exemption to apply, the salesperson must be registered as a broker under the Real Estate and Business Brokers Act, 2002 and be employed by a brokerage to trade in real estate. They must actually be employed as a salesperson. Other types of employees, even if they also happen to be registered as salespersons, would not be exempted, for example, a secretary or an office manager – see Luft and Beaudry Inc. and Broom and Associates Realty Inc. v Bradshaw (September 6, 1991), ESC 2901 (Hovius).

Salesperson – s. 2(1)(h)

2(1) Parts VII, VII.1, VIII, IX, X and XI of the Act do not apply to a person employed,

(h) as a salesperson, other than a route salesperson, who is entitled to receive all or any part of his or her remuneration as commissions in respect of offers to purchase or sales that,

i. relate to goods or services, and

ii. are normally made away from the employer's place of business.

Salespersons (other than route salespersons) who earn, as part or all of their remuneration, commissions for the sale of goods or services where such sales are normally made away from the employer's place of business are exempt from the Hours of Work and Eating Periods (Part VII), Three Hour Rule (Part VII.1), Overtime Pay (Part VIII), Minimum Wage (Part IX), Public Holidays (Part X), and Vacation with Pay (Part XI) provisions of the ESA 2000.

Other Than a Route Salesperson

The question of what is a route salesperson has frequently been considered by the Ontario Labour Relations Board. In Orlov v Amato, 2003 CanLII 2984 (ON LRB), the Board found that children who were selling boxed chocolates door-to-door on streets determined by the employer were route salespersons and therefore not exempt from the core employment standards under s. 2(h) of O Reg 285/01. The Board cited six cases under the corresponding exemption under the former Act, which was substantially the same as s. 2(h), where a determination was made regarding the exclusion of "route salespersons" from the salesperson exemption. These cases focused on the purpose of the exemption and noted that although the term "route salesperson" was not defined in the Act or regulations, the degree of control exercised by the employee (as opposed to the employer) was a significant factor in determining whether the work in issue was "route" sales but also noted that the issue of whether an employee was a route salesperson could not turn on the matter of control alone.

Another case on the question of what is a route salesperson, Schiller v P & L Corporation Ltd., 2012 CanLII 12611 (ON LRB), concerned an employee selling newspaper subscriptions door-to-door who was picked up by the employer with other employees each day and dropped off in an assigned neighbourhood. She was provided with a list of non-subscribers on particular streets within the neighbourhood to solicit and she could not increase her ability to earn more by working at times or in neighbourhoods other than those assigned to her by the employer. The Board held that she was a route salesperson because sales in this case were conducted on the basis of "routes" which were established and determined by the employer.

Normally Made Away from the Employer's Place of Business

In Evangelista v Number 7 Sales Limited, 2008 ONCA 599 (CanLII), the Court of Appeal interpreted s. 2(1)(h)(ii) and considered the meaning of "normally made away from the employer's place of business". The case involved a used car sales manager who was paid on a commission basis and who spent one day each week away from the employer's premises buying and selling used cars at an auction. The Court asserted that the exemption was not intended to deny rights to salespersons who carry out only a small portion of their duties away from the employer's business premises. The Court held that the exemption is "directed at salespersons who normally carry out their duties off-site in the sense that they spend most of their time away from their employer's place of business."

Exemptions from Parts VII to XI of the Act – s. 2(2)

2(2) Subject to sections 24, 25, 25.1, 26 and 27 of this Regulation, Parts VII, VII.1, VIII, IX, X and XI do not apply to a person employed on a farm whose employment is directly related to the primary production of eggs, milk, grain, seeds, fruit, vegetables, maple products, honey, tobacco, herbs, pigs, cattle, sheep, goats, poultry, deer, elk, ratites, bison, rabbits, game birds, wild boar and cultured fish.

Certain farm employees are exempt from the Hours of Work and Eating Periods (Part VII), Three Hour Rule (Part VII.1), Overtime Pay (Part VIII), Minimum Wage (Part IX), Public Holidays (Part X), and Vacation with Pay (Part XI) provisions of the ESA 2000.

In order for the exemption to apply:

1. The person must be employed on a farm; and
2. The person's employment must be directly related to the primary production of any of the specified commodities: eggs, milk, grain, seeds, fruit, vegetables, maple products, honey, tobacco, herbs, pigs, cattle, sheep, goats, poultry, deer, elk, ratites, bison, rabbits, game birds, wild boar and cultured fish.

Current Program policy with respect to this exemption incorporates the Divisional Court decision in Rouge River Farms Inc. v. Director of Employment Standards and Ontario Labour Relations Board, 2019 ONSC 3498.

1. "Employed on a Farm"

The normal, ordinary meaning of "a farm" is a tract of land under cultivation or used for pasture for the growing or raising of agricultural products. However, it is Program policy that the term can also cover other types of facilities used in the primary production of the specified commodities such as greenhouses, insulated buildings containing frame beds for the growing of mushrooms, storage facilities, or industrial buildings used to carry out post-harvest primary production activities (see Rouge River Farms Inc. v. Director of Employment Standards and Ontario Labour Relations Board, 2019 ONSC 3498).

It is the Program's position that there is no requirement that the land or buildings in question be contained on a single tract of land or even on contiguous lots or part lots. So long as all of the tracts of land and/or buildings are worked or managed by the same farmer, they will all be considered to be "a farm"; this is true regardless of the distance between the locations. For example:

- where, in expanding his or her operations, Farmer A has purchased fields that are separated by roads or highways or even another farmer's field, all the fields owned by Farmer A are considered to be a farm.
- where a farmer purchases a building in an industrial park to carry out post-harvest primary production activities for corn, that building can be a farm even if it is very distant from the farmer's land where the corn was grown. (Rouge River Farms Inc. v. Director of Employment Standards and Ontario Labour Relations Board, 2019 ONSC 3498)

"Employed on a farm" requires that the employment duties relate to the activities surrounding or flowing out of the main enterprise of growing agricultural products or raising animals and that those duties are performed in whole, or at least in part, on the farm in question.

It is the Program's position that "employed on a farm" does not generally necessitate employment with the person that owns or runs the farm. In other words, the employee does not have to be the employee of the farmer to be considered to be employed on a farm. However, "employed on a farm" has been interpreted by the Board as meaning "employed on a single farm" – see 976395 Ontario Inc. v Burry, 2001 CanLII 11999 (ON LRB). In that case, where employees were picked up and transported to catch and carry chickens from the barn to the truck at a number of different farms, the Board concluded that the exemption did not apply because the employees were not employed to provide services to a single farm. As a result, the Program's view is that although the employee does not have to be employed by the farmer, the employee's services must be provided to a single farmer for the employee to be considered to be employed on a farm.

2. "Directly Related to the Primary Production" of Specified Commodities

"Directly Related"

As per the Ontario Labour Relations Board decision in Highline Produce Limited v Flieler, 2009 CanLII 40205 (ON LRB), "directly related" refers to "hands on" work with the specified commodity. However, it is Program policy that "hands on" work does not require the employee to actually touch the specified commodity as part of his or her job. “Hands on” in this context means participation in tasks that have a direct impact or direct influence on the primary production of the specified commodity. For example, an employee whose sole responsibility is to ensure the proper temperature and humidity in a greenhouse will be considered to be working “hands on” with the commodity – i.e. will be considered to be in employment that is “directly related” to the primary production - even if this employee does not physically touch the commodity. As another example, an employee who manages or supervises a group of employees whose work is directly related to the primary production of a specified commodity may satisfy the “directly related” requirement on the basis that the manager or supervisor directly influences the primary production of a specified commodity.

In light of the Divisional Court decision in Rouge River Farms Inc. v. Director of Employment Standards and Ontario Labour Relations Board, 2019 ONSC 3498, which held that work that is “directly related to primary production” need not occur at the physical location where the growing occurs and that the exemption applied to industrial buildings used to carry out post-harvest primary production activities that were very distant (in some cases, hundreds of kilometres) from the farmer’s land where the commodity was grown, it is no longer Program policy that there be “immediate” hands on work with the commodity for the employment to be considered to be “directly related” to the primary production. As set out in the paragraph above, the “directly related” criterion will be met if the work has a direct impact or direct influence on the primary production of the specified commodity.

Note, that the "hands on" / “directly related” requirement means that some work that is carried out on a farm is not captured by this exemption, even if the farm produces one of the specified commodities and even if the work supports the farming enterprise. For example, employees who prepare the meals for other farm employees whose work is directly related to primary production will not be captured by this exemption because the connection between their work and primary production is too remote, i.e. it is indirect.

“Primary Production”

"Primary production" means any step in the growing or production of the specified commodity prior to a change in the form or state of the commodity. This includes harvesting, cooling, sorting, trimming, grading, on-farm storage, on-farm packaging in a raw state, as well as transportation to market of agricultural products that have not been changed in form or state (see below).

“Primary production” ends once employees are engaged in transforming the raw specified commodity into a different form or state (e.g., by pureeing, cooking, brining, canning, drying, or, in the case of specified livestock and other live commodities, slaughter). This “transformation” was described by the Board in the Highline Produce decision as follows: "the processing of a raw vegetable into some other state, such as a liquid or cooked solid would not be part of ‘primary production’ nor would the handling of the product in the changed state or form". Highline Produce Limited v. Flieler, 2009 CanLII 40205 (ON LRB).

As such, the relevant question in assessing whether a particular activity falls within “primary production” is to ask whether the activity is a step in the growing or production of the specified commodity occurring prior to the raw commodity being transformed in form or state.

Note that there are a number of decisions in which the word “processing” is used to describe this change in form or state, and that earlier versions of the Policy and Interpretation Manual also used the word “processing” to describe the test. The Program now primarily uses the term “transforming” to describe the point at which primary production ends. This change in language is not a substantive change to the Program’s approach in any way. Rather, the term “transforming” is now being used to avoid potential misunderstandings as to what does and what does not fall within “primary production”; i.e. certain “processes” / activities that are part of primary production may be misinterpreted as “processing” the commodity (for example, the hydro-cooling of corn: because hydro-cooling does not change the form or state of the corn, that process is part of primary production). To avoid confusion, the language of "transforming" in form or state is preferred by the Program.

As transforming specified commodities into a different form or state - and steps subsequent to this transformation (e.g., the transportation of the product post-transformation) - are not "directly related to primary production", employees engaged in such activities do not fall under the exemption in s. 2(2) of O Reg 285/01. See, however, O Reg 285/01, s. 15 which establishes a special overtime threshold for seasonal employees whose employment is directly related to the activities of canning or processing of fresh fruits or vegetables – which constitutes a transformation of the fresh fruit or vegetables. (The special overtime threshold also applies to seasonal employees whose employment is directly related to the non-transforming activities of packing fresh fruit and vegetables, but who are not "employed on a farm".)

Insofar as storage or transportation of the raw or pre-transformed product is concerned, however, it should be noted that the exemption in s. 2(2) would only apply if the farmer was the employer of the employee in question and it is the farmer's own goods (in their pre-transformed form or state) that are being stored or transported. Thus, if the farmer used a trucking company to take its produce to market, the exemption would not apply to the individuals employed by the trucking company.

It should be noted that some employees employed on a farm to harvest the items listed in s. 2(2) also fall within ss. 24 through 27 of O Reg 285/01. These provisions, which apply to fruit, vegetable, and tobacco harvesters override s. 2(2) to the extent of giving the employees in question an entitlement to minimum wage, coverage under the three hour rule and, if they are employed for 13 weeks or more, vacation and public holiday pay. See ss. 24 to 27 in O Reg 285/01 for further information regarding harvest workers.

Specified Commodities

In order for this exemption to apply, an employee must be employed on a farm and his or her employment must be directly related to the primary production of one of the following specified commodities:

- eggs, milk, grain, seeds, fruit, vegetables, maple products, honey, tobacco, herbs, pigs, cattle, sheep, goats, poultry, deer, elk, ratites, bison, rabbits, game birds, wild boar and cultured fish.

Only those employees involved in the primary production of the listed commodities are exempted. For example, employees engaged in the production of the following products are not exempted: gladioli bulbs since they are not "seeds"; flowers – see Butt v Six Employees (April 4, 1973), ESC 118 (McNish), but also see ss. 4(3)(a)(ii), 8(e)(ii) and 9(1)(d)(ii) of O Reg 285/01 regarding exemptions for flower growers from the hours of work and eating periods, overtime pay and public holiday provisions of the Act; and peat moss since it is not a "vegetable" – see Thomas Edward Quinn Enterprises Limited v Employees (April 18, 1973), ESC 126 (Armstrong).

Mushrooms

It should be noted that although from a strictly scientific standpoint a mushroom is not a vegetable (it is, rather, a fungus), mushrooms have been held to be a vegetable for purposes of the primary production exemption. In Re Ontario Mushroom Co. Ltd. et al. and Learie et al., 1977 CanLII 1117 (ON SC), the Divisional Court held that the word "vegetable", as used in a predecessor to the current exemption, should be interpreted in its ordinary, as opposed to technical sense, and that in its ordinary sense the term "vegetable" would include mushrooms. The Court went on to hold that the exemption applied to persons employed in the growing of mushrooms, despite the more specific – and somewhat less extensive – exemptions (now found in ss. 4(3)(a)(i), 8(e)(i) and 9(1)(d)(i) of O Reg 285/01) that applied specifically to such employees.

In 2008, believing that principles of statutory and regulatory interpretation had evolved since the time of the Re Ontario Mushroom Co. Ltd. et al. and Learie et al. decision to the point where the exemptions specific to mushroom growing would be held impliedly to exclude employees whose employment was directly related to the growing of mushrooms from the broader exemption in s. 2(2), the Program changed its policy and took the position that such employees would not fall within that subsection. Subsequently, however, in Highline Produce Limited v Flieler, the Ontario Labour Relations Board found that the employment of an employee engaged in the packing of mushrooms was "directly related to the primary production of . . . vegetables" and, having so found, held that it was unnecessary to go on to consider whether the employee fell within the exemptions that applied to persons whose employment was directly related to mushroom growing. In light of the Highline Produce Limited v Flieler decision, the Program has reverted to its previous policy; persons whose employment is directly related to the growing of mushrooms, including the packing of mushrooms in their raw state, should thus be considered to fall within s. 2(2).

SUMMARY

In order for the exemption in subsection 2(2) to apply, all of the following criteria must be met:

1) The employee must be employed on a farm.
2) The employee must engage directly with the specified commodity through “hands-on” work, meaning participation in tasks that have a direct impact or direct influence on the primary production of the specified commodity.
3) The work must occur at a stage in the growing or production of the specified commodity that precedes a transformation in the form or state of the commodity.
4) The commodity in question must be a specified commodity, meaning it is specifically listed in the section.

O Reg 285/01 Section 2.1 – Exemption for the Crown and Certain Public Bodies

Section 2.1 was added to O Reg 285/01 effective January 1, 2019.

There have been several significant changes to “the Crown” exemptions since January 2018. See the table at the end of this section for details of which provisions applied to “the Crown” at which point in time.

Crown, etc., exemption – s. 2.1(1)

2.1 (1) The Crown, a Crown agency or an authority, board, commission or corporation all of whose members are appointed by the Crown, and any employees of such an employer, are exempt from every provision of the Act except for those listed in subsection (2).

This provision exempts the Crown, a Crown agency or authority, board, commission or corporation all of whose members are appointed by the Crown from all provisions of the ESA 2000 other than those listed in subsection (2).

The term "Crown" refers to the government of Ontario. More precisely, it refers to the executive branch of government, as the term Crown does not include the Legislative Assembly or the judiciary.

The determination of whether an entity is a Crown agency and therefore exempted from every provision of the ESA 2000 except those listed is 2.1(2) is generally made on the basis of the common law, which looks at the nature and degree of control which the Crown, through its Ministers, exercises over the entity. For example, see Westeel-Rosco Ltd. v Board of Governors of South Saskatchewan Hospital Centre, [1977] 2 SCR 238, 1976 CanLII 185 (SCC).

In some cases, a statute will expressly state that an entity is a Crown agency. See, for example, the Liquor Control Act, RSO 1990, c L.18, which specifically states the Liquor Control Board of Ontario is a Crown agency. In such a case, there is no need to consider the common law test.

The Crown Agency Act, RSO 1990, c C.48, defines "Crown agency" as "a board, commission, railway, public utility, university, manufactory, company or agency, owned, controlled or operated by Her Majesty in right of Ontario, or by the Government of Ontario, or under the authority of the Legislature or the Lieutenant Governor in Council". This definition, if read literally, would make even privately-owned business corporations Crown agencies, given that they usually operate under the authority of an Act of the Legislature, such as the Ontario Business Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c B.16. However, Ontario courts have generally continued to use the control test to determine whether an entity is a Crown agency. See P.W. Hogg, P. J. Monahan & W.K Wright, Liability of the Crown, 4th ed., p. 468, n. 27.

Accordingly, it is Program policy that an entity will be considered to be a Crown agency only if it is controlled by the Crown or if a statute states that the entity or that particular type of entity is a Crown agency. An example of the latter is the Ontario Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology Act, 2002, SO 2002, c 8, Sch F, which specifically provides that colleges established under that Act are Crown agencies.

It is important to bear in mind that not all public sector employers are Crown employers for the purposes of enforcing the ESA 2000. In fact, the majority are not. Examples of public sector employers who are not considered Crown employers and are therefore subject to all provisions of the ESA 2000 include:

- Hospitals, municipalities and boards of education: these entities are not or at least generally are not subject to control by the executive branch of government.
- Universities: Despite the inclusion of “university” in the definition of “Crown agency” in s. 1 of the Crown Agency Act, a university is not considered by the Program to be a Crown agency since it is not subject to the control of the executive branch of government.
- The Ombudsman: the Ombudsman is an officer of the Legislature and not part of the executive branch of government.

The reference in s. 2.1(1) to an "authority, board, commission or corporation all of whose members are appointed by the Crown" encompasses entities that would not be considered Crown agencies, but whose members are all government appointees. An example would be the Ontario Labour Relations Board.

Provisions that apply – s. 2.1(2)

2.1(2) Only the following provisions of the Act apply with respect to an employer or employee described in subsection (1):

1. Part I (Definitions).
2. Part III (How This Act Applies), subject to the application of subsection 4 (4.1).
3. Part IV (Continuity of Employment).
4. Section 14.
5. Part VI (Records).
6. Part IX (Minimum Wage).
7. Part XI (Vacation with Pay).

8. Part XII (Equal Pay for Equal Work).

9. Part XIII (Benefit Plans).

10. Part XIV (Leaves of Absence).

11. Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment).

12. Part XVI (Lie Detectors).

13. Part XVIII (Reprisal), except for subclause 74 (1) (a) (vii) and clause 74 (1) (b).

14. Part XIX (Building Services Providers).

15. Part XXI (Who Enforces This Act and What They Can Do).

16. Part XXII (Complaints and Enforcement).

17. Part XXIII (Reviews by the Board).

18. Part XXVI (Miscellaneous Evidentiary Provisions).

19. Part XXVII (Regulations).

20. Part XXVIII (Transition).

Pursuant to s. 2.1(2), only the provisions listed in that subsection apply to the Crown, a Crown agency or authority, board, commission or corporation all of whose members are appointed by the Crown.

If a provision of the ESA 2000 is not listed it does not apply to the Crown, etc. Specifically, these provisions do not apply:

1. Part II – Posting of Information Concerning Rights and Obligations
2. Section 4(2)*
3. Part V – Payment of Wages (other than section 14)
4. Part V.1 – Employee Tips and Other Gratuities
5. Part VII – Hours of Work and Eating Periods
6. Part VII.1 – Three Hour Rule
7. Part VIII – Overtime Pay
8. Part X – Public Holidays
9. Part XVII – Retail Business Establishments
10. Sections 74(1)(a)(vii) and 74(1)(b)
11. Part XVIII.1 – Temporary Help Agencies
12. Part XX - Liability of Directors
13. Part XXIV – Collection
14. Part XXV – Offences and Prosecutions

*Note that the exemption from s. 4(2) of the ESA 2000 arises from s. 4(1) of the ESA 2000, not from the operation of this regulation.

HISTORY OF THE "CROWN" EXEMPTIONS

The following table outlines how the ESA 2000 applied at specific points in time to the Crown, a Crown agency or an authority, board, commission or corporation all of whose members are appointed by the Crown and its employees (referred to collectively as “the Crown” in this table).

Prior to January 1, 2018	The following provisions/Parts applied to the Crown: o Part IV: Continuity of Employment o Section 14: Priority of Claims o Part XII: Equal Pay for Equal Work o Part XIII: Benefit Plans o Part XIV: Leaves of Absence o Part XV: Termination and Severance of Employment o Part XVI: Lie Detectors o Part XVIII: Reprisal, except subclause 74(1)(a)(vii) and clause 74(1)(b)), o Part XIX: Building Services Providers (This was set out in ss. 3(4) of the ESA 2000.)
January 1, 2018	Entire ESA 2000 applied, except s. 4(2) (the “related employer” provision). (This was pursuant to the Fair Workplaces Better Jobs Act, 2017, which repealed ss. 3(4), added s. 3.1 that states the ESA 2000 binds the Crown, and added the exception to the “related employer” provision in ss. 4(4.1).)
October 24, 2018	The Crown is exempt from Part VII (Hours of Work and Eating Periods) and Part VIII (Overtime Pay). (This is pursuant to an amendment to O Reg 285/01) (The exemption from s. 4(2) of the ESA 2000 continues.)
January 1, 2019	The Crown is exempt from every provision of the ESA 2000 except those listed in section 2.1 of O Reg 285/01. Section 2.1 of O Reg 285/01 provides that only the following provisions/Parts apply to the Crown: o Part I: Definitions o Part III: How This Act Applies, subject to subsection 4(4.1) which provides that the “related employer” provision does not apply to the Crown o Part IV: Continuity of Employment o Section 14: Priority of Claims o Part VI: Records o Part IX: Minimum Wage o Part XI: Vacation With Pay o Part XII: Equal Pay for Equal Work o Part XIII: Benefit Plans o Part XIV: Leaves of Absence o Part XV: Termination and Severance of Employment o Part XVI: Lie Detectors o Part XVIII: Reprisal, except subclause 74(1)(a)(vii) and clause 74(1)(b) o Part XIX: Building Services Providers o Part XXI: Who Enforces This Act And What They Can Do o Part XXII: Complaints and Enforcement o Part XXIII: Reviews by the Board o Part XXVI: Miscellaneous Evidentiary Provisions o Part XXVII: Regulations o Part XXVIII: Transition

	(This is pursuant to amendments to O Reg 285/01 that added s. 2.1 and revoked the provisions that had created the October 2018 Hours of Work and Overtime Pay exemptions.)

O Reg 285/01 Section 3 – Special Rules re Certain Leaves

These provisions limit the rights of and create special rules for certain employees with respect to sick leave, family responsibility leave and bereavement leave.

Note that this section was amended effective January 1, 2019. Prior to January 1, 2019, this exemption applied to the below-described classes of professionals in relation to personal emergency leave, which was repealed effective January 1, 2019. As of January 1, 2019, the special rule applies to the same employees in relation to sick leave (s. 50), family responsibility leave (s. 50.0.1) and bereavement leave (s. 50.0.2).

Professional Duty – s. 3

3. Sections 50, 50.0.1 and 50.0.2 of the Act do not apply to any of the following persons in circumstances in which the exercise of the entitlement would constitute an act of professional misconduct or a dereliction of professional duty:

1. A person described in clause 2(1)(a), (c), (d) or (e).

2. A person employed as a registered practitioner of a health profession set out in Schedule 1 to the Regulated Health Professions Act, 1991, including a person described in clause 2(1)(b).

Employees described in s. 3 paragraphs 1 or 2 who, if they exercised the right to sick leave, family responsibility leave or bereavement leave under ESA Part XIV, s. 50. s. 50.0.1 or s. 50.0.2, would in the circumstances be guilty of professional misconduct or dereliction of duty, are exempt from the right to take any of these leaves in those circumstances. For example, a nurse would be precluded from exercising a right to family responsibility leave if by doing so it would constitute professional misconduct or dereliction of duty because she had left a patient unattended.

The employees subject to this limited exemption are: those described in s. 2(1)(a), (b), (c) and (d) and students in training for those professions, and any registered health practitioners of professions set out in Schedule 1 of the Regulated Health Professions Act, 1991, SO 1991, c 18 not already listed in s. 2(1)(b). The latter professions are:

O Reg 285/01 Section 3.0.1 – Construction Employee - REVOKED

Section 3.0.1 of O. Reg. 285/01 was revoked effective January 1, 2019. This provision is therefore no longer in force. However, construction employees who work in the construction industry may still have a complaint relating to personal emergency leave pay that arose during the period of time this provision – which established a special rule relating to the now-repealed personal emergency leave pay provision – was in force: from January 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018. For that reason, the Program's interpretation of this section remains as part of this publication.

Construction Employee – s. 3.0.1

3.0.1 If a construction employee who works in the construction industry receives 0.8 per cent or more of his or her hourly rate or wages for personal emergency pay, the employee,

(a) is not entitled to paid days of leave under section 50 of the Act; and

(b) is entitled to take a total of 10 days of unpaid leave under section 50 of the Act in each calendar year.

This section provides a special rule which may be applicable to construction employees who work in the construction industry: if these employees receive 0.8% or more of the employee's hourly rate or wages for personal emergency pay, the employees will not be entitled to be paid for the first two personal emergency leave days that they take within a calendar year. However, they will be entitled to take up to 10 unpaid personal emergency leave days in a calendar year if they meet the eligibility requirements of ESA Part XIV, s. 50.

Note that employers of construction employees are not required to follow the special rule, and may instead revert to the basic personal emergency leave entitlements under s. 50, including the requirement to pay employees the wages that they would have earned had they worked during the first two days of personal emergency leave taken in the calendar year.

"Construction employee" and "construction industry" are both defined terms: see O Reg 285/01, s. 1 for more information.

For the personal emergency pay special rule, 0.8 per cent represents approximately two days of wages.

O Reg 285/01 Section 3.1 - Fees, s. 28 of Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System Act, 2006

Section 3.1(1)

3.1(1) An employer is exempted from the application of section 13 of the Act if the employer participates in an OMERS pension plan under the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System Act, 2006, but only with respect to fees that a by-law made under section 28 of that Act requires employees to pay. O Reg 444/07, s. 1.

This provision applies only to employers that participate in an Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System ("OMERS") pension plan under the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 2 ("OMERSA"). It makes s. 13 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, which subject to certain exceptions prohibits deductions from wages, inapplicable to such employers insofar as fees that a by-law made under s. 28 of OMERSA requires an employee to pay. As a result, an employer may deduct from an employee's wages the amount that the by-law requires the employee to pay without obtaining the employee's written authorization.

Section 3.1(2)

3.1(2) Subsection (1) applies only if the employer remits the fees in accordance with the by-law. O Reg 444/07, s. 1.

Section 3.1(2) provides that the s. 3.1(1) exemption applies only if the employer remits the fees in accordance with the by-law. Therefore, if the employer fails to remit the fees in accordance with the by-law, the deduction will not be lawful.

O Reg 285/01 Section 4 – Exemptions from Part VII of Act

Exemptions to ss. 17, 18 and 19 of the Act – s. 4(1)

Firefighters – s. 4(1)(a)

4(1) Section 17, 18 and 19 of the Act do not apply to,

(a) a person employed as a firefighter as defined in section 1 of the Fire Protection and Prevention Act, 1997;

Pursuant to s. 4(1)(a), firefighters, as defined in s. 1 of the Fire Protection and Prevention Act, 1997, SO 1997, c 4 ("FPPA") are exempt from:

- the daily and weekly limits on hours of work in ESA Part VII, s. 17, and
- the daily, between shift, weekly and bi-weekly rest provisions in ESA Part VII, s. 18, and
- ESA Part VII, s. 19 which sets out exceptional circumstances in which the employee may be required to work hours in excess of those set out in s. 17 or work during a free period under s. 18.

Section 19 provides for a limited set of circumstances in which an employer can require an employee to work hours in excess of those set out in s. 17 or to work during a free period under s. 18; since ss. 17 and 18 do not apply to firefighters in the first place, it would make no sense if the regulation did not also make section 19 inapplicable.

Note that firefighters are also exempted from:

- the overtime pay provisions in ESA Part VII by O Reg 285/01, s. 8(a);
- the public holiday provisions in ESA Part X by O Reg 285/01, s. 9(1)(a); and

Section 1 of the FPPA defines a firefighter as follows:

"firefighter" means a fire chief and any other person employed in, or appointed to, a fire department and assigned to undertake fire protection services, and includes a volunteer firefighter;

"volunteer firefighter" means a firefighter who provides fire protection services either voluntarily or for a nominal consideration, honorarium, training or activity allowance.

The exemptions will therefore also apply to fire chiefs and volunteer firefighters. In addition, as the definition makes no distinction between fulltime and part-time firefighters, the exemption will apply to both.

Supervisors and Managers – s. 4(1)(b)

4(1) Section 17, 18 and 19 of the Act do not apply to,

(b) a person whose work is supervisory or managerial in character and who may perform non-supervisory or non-managerial tasks on an irregular or exceptional basis;

A supervisor or manager who falls within the definition in O Reg 285/01, s. 4(1)(b) is exempt from:

- the daily and weekly limits on hours of work in ESA Part VII, s. 17
- the daily, between shift, weekly and bi-weekly rest provisions in ESA Part VII, s. 18, and
- ESA Part VII, s. 19 which sets out exceptional circumstances in which the employee may be required to work hours in excess of those set out in s. 17 or work during a free period under s. 18.

The reason that this category of employee is exempted from s. 19 is because s. 19 provides for a limited set of circumstances in which an employer can require an employee to work hours in excess of those set out in s. 17 or to work during a free period under s. 18; since ss. 17 and 18 do not apply to supervisors or manager in the first place, it would make no sense if the regulation did not also make s.19 inapplicable.

Under of O Reg 285/01, s. 8(b), such an employee is also exempted from the overtime pay provisions of the ESA 2000.

Supervisory or Managerial in Character

Work that is "supervisory or managerial in character" generally refers to the supervision of employees rather than the supervision of machines. However, managerial functions can be distinct from supervisory functions. Although supervision of other employees is a primary indication of a managerial employee, this factor is not the only one to be considered. Some employees can be considered managerial even though they do not supervise other employees. Some examples of managerial functions are hiring and firing of employees, responsibility for making substantial purchases, financial control and budgeting, and production planning. Other management functions would include the regular exercise of discretion and independent judgment in management affairs.

Just because a contract of employment or collective agreement states that a person is a manager or supervisor does not mean that the exemption will automatically apply. The actual functions of the person must be assessed. The intention here is that the exemption applies only to the true supervisor who does not regularly or ordinarily perform the same work as the people they supervise. The section therefore exempts employees who perform such managerial or supervisory work exclusively, and also those managers and supervisors who perform non-supervisory or non-managerial tasks either on an irregular or exceptional basis.

Irregular

"Irregular" implies that although the performance of non-supervisory or non-managerial duties is not unusual or unexpected, their performance is unscheduled or sporadic (i.e., does not occur at a regular or set time). For example, if a manager is expected or required to cover staff duties for non-supervisory staff as a result of an unexpected rush of customers, or because a non-supervisory employee has called in sick, these duties may be considered irregular because they are not performed at a scheduled or otherwise regular time. However, if a pattern developed with the result, for example, that a manager was performing staff duties every day during the lunch rush between 11:30 a.m. and 1:00 p.m., the Program's position would be that the performance of those duties was clearly no longer irregular.

The exemption will not apply even though the employer has not assigned the non-supervisory or non-managerial work, but places the employee in such a position that they have no alternative but to regularly perform day-to-day duties of non-supervisory/managerial employees in order to keep the business in operation. An example would be the manager of small shoe store who operates the business by himself or herself on Monday and is provided with part-time help for the rest of the week. This person is performing non-supervisory or non-managerial work on a regular basis. They are, each Monday, required to run the entire operation, including arranging displays, assisting customers, etc., in addition to their managerial duties.

Finally, whether the performance of non-supervisory or non-managerial duties on a daily basis is irregular may also depend not only on whether or not they are "scheduled", but also the frequency with which such duties are performed and the amount of time spent performing them. Therefore, if a manager spends a significant period of time on each shift performing non-supervisory duties, the performance of such duties could not be said to be irregular, despite the fact that there was no set schedule for their performance. For example, if a manager at a fast food restaurant spends an hour or more of each shift assisting at the cash or in food preparation, these non-supervisory or non-managerial duties may be considered a regular part of their duties because they are performed on a "daily basis", even though the hour of non-supervisory work is not scheduled or performed at a set time each day. Similarly, if a manager spent three or four hours of an eight-hour shift performing non-managerial duties once a week, these non-managerial duties may be considered regular duties and the exemption would not apply.

Exceptional

"Exceptional" suggests that non-supervisory or non-managerial duties may be performed so long as they are being performed outside of the ordinary course of the employee's duties. That is, their performance is not in the normal course. For example, if, as a result of a severe snowstorm, the manager were to assist a staff member to clear the snow from the entrance to the employer's establishment (ordinarily the responsibility of the staff member), the performance of this non-supervisory duty could be considered exceptional. Another example is where a manager performs bargaining unit work during a strike or lock-out. Generally, the performance of bargaining unit work due to a strike or lock-out will be seen as an exceptional situation, and the exemption will continue to apply during the strike or lockout. However, there may be situations, such as where the strike or lock-out lasts for more than a few months and the manager is performing non-supervisory and non-managerial duties continually for more than a few months, where the situation is no longer seen as exceptional and the exemption will no longer apply.

Fishing or Hunting Guide – s. 4(1)(c)

4(1) Section 17, 18 and 19 of the Act do not apply to,

(c) a person employed as a fishing or hunting guide;

Pursuant to s. 4(1)(c), a fishing or hunting guide is exempt from:

- the daily and weekly limits on hours of work in ESA Part VII, s. 17;
- the daily, between shift, weekly and bi-weekly rest provisions in ESA Part VII, s. 18; and
- ESA Part VII, s. 19 which sets out exceptional circumstances in which the employee may be required to work hours in excess of those set out in s. 17 or work during a free period under s. 18.

Note that since ss. 17 and 18 do not apply to guides in the first place, it would make no sense if the regulation did not also make s.19 inapplicable.

Note that such employees are also exempted from the overtime pay provisions in ESA Part VIII by O Reg 285/01, s. 8(c) the public holiday provisions in ESA Part X by O Reg 285/01, s. 9(1)(b).

Also note that fishing and hunting guides are subject to a special minimum wage – see O Reg 285/01, s. 5(1) para. 3.

Hunting and fishing guides may be employed by camp or lodge proprietors to provide guide services for their guests or by guide services in their own right.

Construction Employee – s. 4(1)(d)

4(1) Section 17, 18 and 19 of the Act do not apply to,

(d) a construction employee;

Pursuant to s. 4(1)(d), a construction employee as defined in O Reg 285/01, s. 1 is exempt from:

- the daily and weekly limits on hours of work in ESA Part VII, s. 17;
- the daily, between shift weekly and bi-weekly rest provisions in ESA Part VII, s. 18; and

- ESA Part VII, s. 19 which sets out exceptional circumstances in which the employee may be required to work hours in excess of those set out in s. 17 or work during a free period under s. 18.

Since ss. 17 and 18 do not apply to construction employees in the first place, it would make no sense if the regulation did not also make s. 19 inapplicable.

Note that they are also exempted from the public holiday provisions in ESA Part X if the employee receives 7.7 per cent or more of their hourly rate of wages for vacation pay or holiday pay – see O Reg 285/01, s. 9(2).

Superintendent, Janitor or Caretaker – s. 4(1)(e)

4(1) Section 17, 18 and 19 of the Act do not apply to,

(e) a person who is employed as the superintendent, janitor or caretaker of a residential building and resides in the building;

Pursuant to s. 4(1)(e), a person employed as a superintendent, janitor or caretaker of a residential building who resides in the building is exempt from:

- the daily and weekly limits on hours of work in ESA Part VII, s. 17;
- the daily, between shift, weekly and bi-weekly rest provisions in ESA Part VII, s. 18; and
- ESA Part VII, s. 19 which sets out exceptional circumstances in which the employee may be required to work hours in excess of those set out in s. 17 or work during a free period under s. 18.

Since ss. 17 and 18 do not apply to residential building superintendents, janitors and caretakers in the first place, it would not make sense if the regulation did not also make s. 19 inapplicable to these employees.

Note that these employees are also exempted from the application of the three hour rule in ESA Part VII.1, s. 21.2 by O Reg 285/01, s. 4.1(d), the minimum wage provisions in ESA Part IX by O Reg 285/01, s. 7(d), the overtime pay provisions in ESA Part VIII by O Reg 285/01, s. 8(i), and the public holiday provisions in ESA Part X by O Reg 285/01, s.9(1)(h).

The exemption only applies to employees working in residential buildings: apartments, condominiums, etc. Those working in office or manufacturing buildings are not exempted by this provision.

The employee must actually live in the building for which they responsible or in another building in the same complex. If they do not do so, they are not exempt.

The exemption does not apply to a person who performs night-time surveillance duties in a building housing people in specialized treatment programs. See Goyette and Goyette v Residence Sainte Marie Inc. (May 9, 1997), ES 97-56 (Novick).

The ESA 2000 does not deal with the rules regarding the tenancy of superintendents, janitors or caretakers. These are dealt with under the Residential Tenancies Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 17. Employees with concerns regarding their tenancy should be referred to the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing for further information.

Embalmer or Funeral Director – s. 4(1)(f)

4(1) Section 17, 18 and 19 of the Act do not apply to,

(f) a person employed as an embalmer or funeral director.

Pursuant to s. 4(1)(f), a person employed as an embalmer or funeral director is exempt from:

- the daily and weekly limits on hours of work in ESA Part VII, s. 17;
- the daily, between shift, weekly and bi-weekly rest provisions in ESA Part VII, s. 18; and
- ESA Part VII, s. 19 which sets out exceptional circumstances in which the employee may be required to work hours in excess of those set out in s. 17 or work during a free period under s. 18.

Since ss. 17 and 18 do not apply to embalmers and funeral directors, it would not make sense if the regulation did not also make s. 19 inapplicable to these employees.

No person can act as a funeral director or embalmer unless they have been properly licensed as a "funeral director" under the Funeral Directors and Establishments Act, RSO 1990, c F.36. Only licensed individuals who are performing funeral and embalming services are exempt. Other employees in the funeral industry, even if they are employed in a funeral home, are not exempt. For example, secretaries, receptionists, hearse drivers, students in training to be a funeral director, and workers at a crematorium or cemetery are not exempt.

Election Official – s. 4(1)(g)

4(1) Section 17, 18 and 19 of the Act do not apply to,

(g) subject to subsection (1.1), an election official.

(1.1) The exemption in clause (1) (g) only applies during a period that begins with the issue of a writ for a general election or by-election under the Election Act and ends on the day after polling day. O. Reg. 97/18, s. 2 (2).

Clause 4(1)(g) and subsection 4(1.1) came into effect on March 9, 2018.

Pursuant to s. 4(1)(g), an election official is exempt from:

- the daily and weekly limits on hours of work in ESA Part VII, s. 17;
- the daily, between shift weekly and bi-weekly rest provisions in ESA Part VII, s. 18; and
- ESA Part VII, s. 19 which sets out exceptional circumstances in which the employee may be required to work hours in excess of those set out in s. 17 or work during a free period under s. 18.

Since ss. 17 and 18 do not apply to election officials, it would not make sense if the regulation did not also make s. 19 inapplicable to these employees.

Per subsection 4(1.1), the exemption applies only during a period that begins with the issue of a writ for a general election or by-election under the Election Act and ends on the day after polling day.

Note that “election official” is a defined term in s.1 of O Reg 285/01.

Some employees who fall within the “election official” definition may also be considered to be “Crown” employees under section 2.1 of O. Reg. 285/01. Where that is the case, section 2.1 and its longer list of exemptions will apply to those employees.

Exemptions to ss. 17 and 19 of the Act – s. 4(2)

Landscape Gardener – s. 4(2)(a)

4(2) Sections 17 and 19 of the Act do not apply to a person employed,

(a) as a landscape gardener;

Pursuant to s. 4(2)(a), persons employed as landscape gardeners are exempt from:

- the daily and weekly limits on hours of work in ESA Part VII, s. 17, and
- ESA Part VII, s. 19 which sets out exceptional circumstances in which the employee may be required to work hours in excess of those set out in s. 17 or work during a free period under s. 18.

Note that employees in this category are not exempt from the application of ESA Part VII, s. 18, but because they are exempt from the application of s. 19, an employer could not require such an employee to work during a rest period to which the employee was entitled under s. 18, despite the existence of exceptional circumstances such as those described in s. 19.

Note that they are also exempted from the overtime pay provisions in ESA Part VIII by O Reg 285/01, s. 8(i) and the public holiday provisions in ESA Part X by O Reg 285/01, s. 9(1)(h).

The Program's view is that a person employed as a landscape gardener is engaged in work that directly involves the modification or maintenance of land for a purpose that is substantially aesthetic (as contrasted with utilitarian). Generally, the exemption will apply to employees engaged in:

- Landscape maintenance (e.g., raking, watering, weeding);
- Planting or moving plants including hedges, trees or shrubs;
- Preparing the ground for planting;
- Caring for established lawns;
- Trimming, pruning and maintaining plants including hedges, trees, and shrubs;
- Installing rock gardens, ponds, and planters;
- Park gardening;
- Golf course greens-keeping; and
- Installation and maintenance of irrigation systems (including both drip lines and sprinklers) where the irrigation system contributes to sustaining and maintaining plants (including sod, trees, shrubs and flowers). Note: Previously, the Program's position was that these activities were not subject to the exemption. However, the position changed in light of the Ontario Labour Relations Board's decision in AWS Irrigation Management Inc. v Delottinville, 2014 CanLII 75486 (ON LRB).

The Program considers employees engaged in the following activities to fall outside the definition of a person employed as a landscape gardener:

- Persons employed by a landscaping company who do not perform landscaping work (e.g., administrative employees, landscape architects/designers and truck drivers);
- Builders of retaining walls for purely, or substantially, structural purposes;
- Installers of lighting systems; and
- Persons involved in weed spraying of roads and industrial sites – see Albert Andres Enterprises Inc. o/a Andrews Agrichemicals v DeForest and Daye (May 29, 1992), ES 89/92 (Novick).

Mixed Work

Employees in many landscaping businesses multi-task; performing a variety of duties, some of which fall within the exemption for a person employed as a landscape gardener and some that do not.

Overtime Pay

ESA Part VII, s. 22(9) provides that an employee who performs some work that is subject to the 44 hour overtime threshold, and some work that is exempt from the overtime provisions will be entitled to overtime pay after working 44 hours in a week, unless the employee spends the majority of their time in that week engaged in activities that are exempt from overtime.

Consequently, an employee who performs work that is covered by the landscape gardener exemption will be exempt from overtime pay for a particular week only if the landscape gardening work represents more than 50% of the time the employee spent working that week.

Example:

John spent 75% of his work week caring for established lawns while the other 25% of his time was spent installing sprinkler systems. The overtime exemption would apply to John because he spent more than 50% of his time in that work week doing "landscape gardener" work. John is therefore not entitled to overtime pay in respect of that week.

Public Holidays

ESA Part X. s. 25(2) provides that unless the majority of time spent in any week in which a public holiday falls is work that is exempt under the regulations, the public holiday provisions will apply with respect to that particular public holiday.

Consequently, an employee who performs work that is covered by the landscape gardener exemption will be exempt from the public holiday provisions for a particular public holiday only if the landscape gardening work represents more than 50% of the time the employee spent working during the week with that public holiday.

Example:

During the work week in which Labour Day fell, Afet spent 75% of her time caring for established lawns while the other 25% of her time was spent installing sprinkler systems. The public holiday exemption would apply to Afet with respect to Labour Day because she spent more than 50% of her time in that work week doing "landscape gardener" work. Therefore, the public holiday entitlements with respect to Labour Day do not apply to Afet.

Hours of Work

The ESA 2000 does not specify the period of time to be considered when determining whether the hours of work provisions (daily, weekly maximums) apply to employees who do both landscape gardening work and non-landscape gardening work. It is Program policy to consider whether the core, or essential nature of the employee's work is landscape gardening. This may involve application of the majoritarian test; however the period under consideration would generally be considered to be the full period of employment with the employer, provided there has not been a permanent change in the core or essential nature of the employee's job. For example, if an employee has been engaged in a mix of landscape gardening and non-landscape gardening activities over the five year course of their employment, consideration would be given to where the employee spent the majority of their time over those five years.

Where the core, or essential nature of an employee's job changes, work performed prior to a permanent change in the nature of the employee's job will not be relevant when making a determination as to whether or not the employee is currently a person employed as a landscape gardener or not.

Example:

If an employee spent five years employed in the office of a landscaping company performing administrative duties and subsequently accepted a permanent position with that company planting trees and hedges in residential gardens, they would be considered to be a person employed as a landscape gardener immediately upon commencing their new position because there was a permanent change to the core nature of their job. As a result, the hours of work exemptions would apply immediately.

Swimming Pool Installation and Maintenance – s. 4(2)(b)

4(2) Sections 17 and 19 of the Act do not apply to a person employed,

(b) to install and maintain swimming pools.

Pursuant to s. 4(2)(b), a person employed to install and maintain swimming pools is exempt from:

- the daily and weekly limits on hours of work in ESA Part VII, s. 17, and
- ESA Part VII, s. 19 which sets out exceptional circumstances in which the employee may be required to work hours in excess of those set out in s. 17 or work during a free period under s. 18.

Note, however, that because employees in this category are not excluded from ESA Part VII, s. 18, an employer could not require such an employee to work during a rest period to which the employee was entitled under that section, despite the existence of exceptional circumstances such as those described in s. 19.

Note that they are also exempted from the overtime pay provisions in ESA Part VIII by O Reg 285/01, s. 8(i) and the public holiday provisions in ESA Part X by O Reg 285/01, s. 9(1)(h).

It is the Program's position that this exemption does not extend to people employed to install and maintain hot tubs, on the basis that exemptions from the rights and benefits afforded under the legislation must be construed narrowly. In King v RNR Patient Transfer Services Inc., 2008 CanLII 22 (ON LRB) the Ontario Labour Relations Board cited the Supreme Court's decision in Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Limited (Re), [1998] 1 SCR 27 at paragraph 36:

...Since the ESA is a mechanism for providing minimum benefits and standards to protect the interests of employees, it can be characterized as benefits-conferring legislation. As such, according to several decisions of this Court, it ought to be interpreted in a broad and generous manner. Any doubt arising from difficulties of language should be resolved in favour or the claimants.

In applying this principle in the context of exemptions, the Board said: "A liberal and generous interpretation of the Act requires any regulation, like (s. 8 of O Reg 285/01) that limits the application of the ESA 2000 or exempts certain individuals from receiving the benefits conferred by the ESA 2000 to be strictly or narrowly construed."

On a plain reading, the terms "swimming pool" and "hot tub" have different meanings and the Program's position in light of the above is that the exemption does not apply to persons employed to install and maintain hot tubs.

Exemptions to Part VII of the Act – s. 4(3)

4(3) Part VII of the Act does not apply to,

(a) a person whose employment is directly related to,

- i. the growing of mushrooms,
- ii. the growing of flowers for the retail and wholesale trade,
- iii. the growing, transporting and laying of sod,
- iv. the growing of trees and shrubs for the wholesale and retail trade,
- v. the breeding and boarding of horses on a farm, or
- vi. the keeping of furbearing mammals as defined in the Fish and Wildlife Conservation Act, 1997, for propagation or the production of pelts for commercial purposes;

A person whose employment is directly related to the activities described in ss. 4(3)(a) (i)-(vi) is exempt from all of the hours of work and eating periods provisions contained in Part VII of the ESA 2000. This includes the daily and weekly limits on hours of work in s. 17, the daily, weekly and bi-weekly rest provisions in s. 18, the provisions in s. 19, and the right to an unpaid eating period(s) as set out in ss. 20 and 21 of the ESA 2000. Section 19 provides for a limited set of circumstances in which an employer can require an employee to work hours in excess of those set out in s. 17, or to work during a free period under s. 18. Since ss. 17 and 18 do not apply to employees listed in s. 4(3)(a) in the first place, it would make no sense if the regulation did not also make s. 19 inapplicable.

Note that they are also exempted from the overtime pay provisions in ESA Part VIII by O Reg 285/01, s. 8(i) and the public holiday provisions in ESA Part X by O Reg 285/01, s. 9(1)(h).

The use of the word "directly" in ss. 4(3)(a)(i)-(vi) of O Reg 285/01 eliminates, by implication, all persons employed "indirectly" in the employment described in s. 4(1)(a)(i) through (vi) of the regulation. It, therefore, excludes work that merely contributes to making possible or assisting in the ultimate performance of the work described. For example, a person employed on a farm to prepare meals for employees engaged in the breeding and boarding of horses is assisting in the ultimate performance of an element of horse breeding and boarding, but the work of such a person is not directly related to that activity.

Growing of Mushrooms – s. 4(3)(a)(i)

4(3) Part VII of the Act does not apply to,

(a) a person whose employment is directly related to,

- (i) the growing of mushrooms,

As was noted in the discussion of s. 2(2) of O Reg 285/01, in accordance with the Ontario Labour Relations Board's decision in Highline Produce Limited v Flieler, 2009 CanLII 40205 (ON LRB)), an employee whose employment is directly related to the growing of mushrooms is an employee "whose employment is directly related to the primary production vegetables" within the meaning of that subsection, and as a result, such an employee would be excluded from the coverage of Parts VII through XI of the ESA 2000. This is despite the specific exemptions from Parts VII (Hours of Work and Eating Periods), Part VIII (Overtime) and Part X (Public Holidays), set out, respectively, in ss. 4(3)(a)(i), 8(e)(i) and 9(1)(d)(i) of O Reg 285/01. See O Reg 285/01, s. 2(2) for a more detailed discussion regarding the application of the exemption to persons whose employment is directly related to the primary production (or growing) of mushrooms.

Growing of Flowers – s. 4(3)(a)(ii)

4(3) Part VII of the Act does not apply to,

(ii) the growing of flowers for the retail and wholesale trade,

A person employed in the growing of flowers is exempt from Part VII (Hours of Work and Eating Periods) of the ESA 2000.

Note that they are also exempted from the overtime pay provisions in ESA Part VIII by O Reg 285/01, s. 8(e)(ii) and the public holiday provisions in ESA Part X by O Reg 285/01, s. 9(1)(d)(ii).

In Butt v Six Employees (April 4, 1973), ESC 118 (McNish) the referee concluded that the six employees who had been engaged to plant gladioli in the summer and then called back in the fall to cut the flowers and dig up the corms and pack them in boxes were engaged in the growing of flowers for the wholesale and retail trade. The referee also appears to suggest that if other employees had been engaged solely in the packaging, assembling, order preparation and distribution of the flowers and corms that he would have found those employees to be employed in the growing of flowers. However, the referee noted that in so doing, he was giving the phrase "growing of flowers" a "liberal interpretation", which is contrary to the Program's approach to construe exemptions to the standards narrowly. As a result, Referee McNish's comments regarding employees engaged solely in packaging, assembly and distribution of flowers are not followed by the Program. See more on this approach under the discussion of s. 4(2)(b) above.

Growing, Transporting and Laying of Sod – s. 4(3)(a)(iii)

4(3) Part VII of the Act does not apply to,

(iii) the growing, transporting and laying of sod,

A person employed in the growing, transporting and laying of sod is exempt from Part VII (Hours of Work and Eating Periods) of the ESA 2000. They are also exempt from the overtime pay provisions (see s. 8(e)(iii) of O Reg 285/01) and the public holidays provisions (see O Reg 285/01, s. 9(1)(d)(iii)).

Growing of Trees and Shrubs – s. 4(3)(a)(iv)

4(3) Part VII of the Act does not apply to,

(iv) the growing of trees and shrubs for the retail and wholesale trade,

A person employed in the growing of trees and shrubs is exempt from Part VII (Hours of Work and Eating Periods) of the ESA 2000. They are also exempt from the overtime pay provisions (see s. 8(e)(iv) of O Reg 285/01) and the public holidays provisions (see s. 9(1)(d)(iv) of O Reg 285/01).

Breeding and Boarding of Horses – s. 4(3)(a)(v)

4(3) Part VII of the Act does not apply to,

(v) the breeding and boarding of horses on a farm, or

A person employed in the breeding and boarding of horses is exempt from Part VII (Hours of Work and Eating Periods) of the ESA 2000. They are also exempt from the overtime pay provisions (see O Reg 285/01, s. 8(e)(v)) and the public holidays provisions (see O Reg 285/01, s. 9(1)(d)(v)).

In order for this exemption to apply, two preconditions must be met:

1. The employee must be employed in the breeding and boarding of horses; and
2. The employee must be employed on a farm.

Breeding and Boarding of Horses

The referee in Kenneth Nixon c.o.b. Nixon Stables v. Adams (November 20, 1985), ESC 1989 (Brown) noted that the Random House Dictionary Unabridged Edition (1966) defined "breed" as: "1. to produce (offspring); procreate; engender. 2. to procure by mating; propagate sexually; reproduce", and "breeding" as "the act of one who or that which breeds".

Therefore, in order for this precondition to be met, the employee must be involved in the accommodation and feeding of mares and studhorses, or the production of offspring from the mares. For example, employees who monitor expectant mares in foaling season are exempt - see Carment Di Paola o/a Riviera Racing Stable v Davenport and Skinner (October 29, 1990), ESC 2768 (Betcherman). Employees engaged in the production of horse feed, such as those described in Bert Simon Larch Tree Farm v. Woolnough and Kraley (September 3, 1980), ESC 857 (Adamson) or engaged in grooming and racing horses, such as those described in Nixon Stables v. Adams are not.

On a Farm

Unlike the other exemptions in s. 4(3)(a), the horse-breeding and boarding exemption contains a requirement relating to the location of the work. Only those workers employed "on a farm" are exempt. Persons employed in the breeding and boarding of horses at a racetrack or at a riding stable that is not part of a farm do not fall within the exemption. In order to be on a farm, the operation must be on land that can be cultivated or used as pasture to provide a substantial part of its own feed needs. A large garden plot attached to a riding stable would not qualify as the operation of a farm.

Keeping of Fur-Bearing Mammals – s. 4(3)(a)(vi)

4(3) Part VII of the Act does not apply to,

(vi) the keeping of fur-bearing mammals, as defined in the Fish and Wildlife Conservation Act, 1997, for propagation or the production of pelts for commercial purposes;

A person employed in the keeping of fur-bearing animals is exempt from Part VII Hours of Work and Eating Periods. They are also exempt from the overtime pay provisions (see O Reg 285/01, s. 8(e)(vi)) and the public holidays provisions (see O Reg 285/01, s. 9(1)(d)(vi)).

Fur farming is regulated under the Fish and Wildlife Conservation Act, 1997, SO 1997, c 41 ("FWCA"), which contains the following definition of "fur-bearing mammals":

"furbearing mammal" means a member of a species set out in Schedule I or prescribed by the regulations as a species of furbearing mammal;

Schedule 1 of the FWCA lists the following as furbearing mammals: badger, beaver, bobcat, coyote, fisher, gray fox, arctic fox, red fox, lynx, mink, muskrat, marten, opossum, otter, raccoon, striped skunk, red squirrel, least weasel, short-tailed weasel (ermine), long-tailed weasel and wolf.

O Reg 669/98 to the FWCA additionally prescribes polar bears and wolverines as furbearing mammals.

Information Technology Professional – s. 4(3)(b)

4(3) Part VII of the Act does not apply to,

(b) an information technology professional;

A person employed as an information technology professional as defined in s. 1 of O Reg 285/01 is exempt from Part VII Hours of Work and Eating Periods. See O Reg 285, s. 1 for further information regarding the definition of information technology professional. Such an employee is also exempt from the overtime pay provisions of the ESA 2000 – see O Reg 285/01, s.8(l).

Recorded Visual and Audio-Visual Entertainment Protection Industry – s. 4(3)(c)

4(3) Part VII of the Act does not apply to,

(c) a person employed in the recorded visual and audio-visual entertainment production industry.

A person employed in the recorded visual and audio-visual entertainment production industry as defined in s. 1 of O Reg 285/01 is exempt from Part VII Hours of Work and Eating Periods.

See O Reg 285/01, s. 1 for further information regarding the definition of the industry and those persons employed therein.

O Reg 285/01 Section 4.1 – Exemptions from Part VII.1 of the Act

Exemptions from Three Hour Rule – s. 4.1 (a) - (d)

Students – s. 4.1 (a), (b) and (c)

4.1 Section 21.2 of the Act does not apply to,

(a) a person who is employed as a student in a recreational program operated by a charitable organization registered under Part I of the Income Tax Act (Canada) and whose work or duties are directly connected with the recreational program;

(b) a person employed as a student to instruct or supervise children;

(c) a person employed as a student at a camp for children;

Section 4.1 was added to O Reg 285/01 effective January 1, 2019. Pursuant to s. 4.1, the above-described students are exempt from the three hour rule found in Part VII.1, section 21.2 of the ESA 2000.

(Note that these employees were also exempt from the differently worded three hour rule previously found in subsection 5(7) of O Reg 285/01 prior to January 1, 2019.)

Students who fall into these categories are also exempt from the minimum wage provisions – see O Reg 285/01, ss. 7(a) 7(b) and 7(c); the overtime pay provisions – see O Reg 285/01, ss. 8(h), (f) and (g); and the public holiday provisions – see O Reg 285/01, ss. 9(1)(g), (e) and (f). For a full discussion about who falls into these student categories, and about the relevant exemptions, see O Reg 285/01, s. 7 under the heading “Students”.

Superintendent, Janitor or Caretaker – s. 4.1(d)

4.1 Section 21.2 of the Act does not apply to,

….

(d) a person who is employed as the superintendent, janitor or caretaker of a residential building and resides in the building;

Section 4.1 was added to O Reg 285/01 effective January 1, 2019. Pursuant to s. 4.1(d), a person employed as a superintendent, janitor or caretaker of a residential building who resides in the building is exempt from the three hour rule found in Part VII.1, section 21.2 of the ESA 2000.

Please refer to O Reg 285/01 s. 4 for a discussion about employees who fall into these categories and for information regarding additional exemptions for these employees.

O Reg 285/01 Section 5 – Rules Re Minimum Wage

Minimum Wage Rates – pre-January 1, 2018 ss. 5(1) and (3) – REVOKED

5(1) From June 1, 2014, onwards, the minimum wage is as follows:

1. For an employee who is a student under 18 years of age, if the weekly hours of the student are not in excess of 28 hours or if the student is employed during a school holiday, $10.30 an hour.

2. For an employee who, as a regular part of his or her employment, serves liquor directly to customers, guests, members or patrons in premises for which a license or permit has been issued under the Liquor License Act, $9.55 an hour.

3. For the services of a hunting or fishing guide, $55.00 for less than five consecutive hours in a day and $110.00 for five or more hours in a day whether or not the hours are consecutive.

4. For an employee who is a homeworker, $12.10 an hour.

5. For any other employee, $11.00 an hour.

5(2) revoked by O Reg 31/14

5(3) If an employee falls within both paragraphs 1 and 4 of subsection (1), the employer shall pay the employee not less than the minimum wage for a homeworker.

Until January 1, 2018, subsection 5(1) of O Reg 285/01 as amended by O Reg 31/14 had prescribed the minimum wage rates that were required to be paid pursuant to paragraph 1 of ESA Part IX, s. 23(1), effective June 1, 2014.However, from October 1, 2015 onwards, the minimum wage rates were no longer prescribed by regulation. Rather, the minimum wage rates in effect immediately before October 1 in each year were to be adjusted in accordance with the formula set out in ESA Part IX, s. 23.1(4). (The Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014 ("SWSEA"), SO 2014, c 10 added s. 23.1 to the ESA 2000.)

The Fair Workplaces Better Jobs Act, 2017 ("FWBJA") subsequently amended the SWSEA amendment, which directly tied changes in the minimum wage rates from October 1, 2015 on to changes in the Consumer Price Index through a formula in s. 23.1(4). The FWBJA provided for increases to minimum wage rates to the amounts that were set out in s. 23.1(1) effective January 1, 2018 and January 1, 2019. It had also provided that effective October 1, 2019, the minimum wage rates immediately in effect before October 1 each year were to be adjusted annually by the formula set out in s. 23.1(4).

The Making Ontario Open for Business Act, 2018 (MOOBA) then amended s. 23.1(1) to keep the minimum wages at the January 1, 2018 rates and to delay by one year the date that the annual adjustments are to take effect, changing the date from October 1, 2019 to October 1, 2020.

See ESA Part IX, s. 23.1.

Room and Board – s. 5(1)

5(1) If an employer provides room or board to an employee, the following are the amounts that shall be deemed to have been paid as wages for the purposes of determining whether the minimum wage has been paid:

1. For room, $31.70 a week if the room is private and $15.85 a week if the room is not private.

2. For board, $2.55 a meal and not more than $53.55 a week.

3. For both room and board, $85.25 a week if the room is private and $69.40 a week if the room is not private.

Section 5(1) sets the amounts deemed to be paid as wages with respect to meals or rooms (private and non-private).

Note that prior to January 1, 2018 this provision appeared in subsection 5(4). As a consequence of the minimum wage rates being moved from this regulation to the Act itself by the MOOBA, this regulation was amended and the subsections were renumbered.

The amounts deemed to be paid as wages under s. 5(1) are used only for the purpose of ensuring that the applicable minimum wage has been paid where the employer seeks to satisfy its minimum wage obligations in part through the provision of room, board or room and board. See O Reg 285/01, s. 19 for a discussion of the corresponding provisions that relate to domestic workers. See O Reg 285/01, s. 25 for a discussion of the corresponding provisions that relate to fruit, vegetable and tobacco harvesters.

The ordinary meaning of the words "private" and "not private" is applied when determining which value to use. For example, an employee's bedroom is not private if the only access to a laundry room used by the employer is through it – see Flores v Walker and Bassett Walker (July 8, 1998), 2234-97-ES (ON LRB).

Where the employer seeks to satisfy its minimum wage obligations in part through the provision of room, board or room and board, and accordingly pays the employee minimum wage less the amounts deemed to have been paid as wages for room, board or room and board (as the case may be) as set out above, there is no deduction from wages, and hence no written authorization for deduction is required in relation to the room and board amounts.

In some cases, an employer may wish to make a larger deduction in respect of room and board than the amounts set out above, for example where the employee's wages exceed the minimum wage set out in the ESA 2000. However, that would have to be authorized in writing by the employee.

Minimum Standards for Room and Board – s. 5(5)

5(2) The amount provided in subsection (1) in respect of a room shall be deemed to have been paid as wages only if the room is,

(a) reasonably furnished and reasonably fit for human habitation;

(b) supplied with clean bed linen and towels; and

(c) reasonably accessible to proper toilet and wash-basin facilities.

This provision establishes certain minimum standards of quality for the room the employer provides in order for amounts with respect to that room to be deemed to be paid as wages under s. 5(1). See O Reg 285/01, s. 19 for a discussion of the corresponding provisions that relate to domestic workers. See O Reg 285/01, s. 25 for a discussion of the corresponding provisions that relate to fruit, vegetable and tobacco harvesters.

Note that prior to January 1, 2018 this provision appeared in subsection 5(5). As a consequence of the minimum wage rates being moved from this regulation to the ESA 2000 itself by the MOOBA, this regulation was amended and the subsections were renumbered.

First, a room is required to be reasonably furnished. Program policy is that a room is reasonably furnished if it contains a bed, a table, a chair, and a wardrobe or chest of drawers. It must also be reasonably fit for human habitation. The employer must also provide clean bed linen and towels, not necessarily daily, but on a frequent enough basis to maintain the standard of cleanliness. The employee must have reasonable access to toilet and washing facilities. Facilities just across a hall would usually be reasonable; facilities requiring a trip across a field to an outhouse may or may not be, depending, for example, on the location of the place of employment and on the norms in that particular community.

If any of these requirements is not met, the amount set out in s. 5(1) cannot be deemed to be paid as wages in determining whether the minimum wage has been paid.

When Room and Board Deemed Paid – s. 5(3)

5(3) Room or board shall not be deemed to have been paid by the employer to an employee as wages unless the employee has received the meals or occupied the room.

Note that prior to January 1, 2018 this provision appeared in subsection 5(6). As a consequence of the minimum wage rates being moved from this regulation to the ESA 2000 itself by the MOOBA, this regulation was amended and the subsections were renumbered.

Section 5(3) provides that the amounts set out in s. 5(1) with respect to room and board cannot be deemed to have been paid unless the room was occupied and the meals were received by the employee. Where the employee has actually received the meals and room, these amounts can be treated as forming part of the wages paid to the employee for the purposes of determining if the minimum wage standard has been met. A written authorization of the employee is not required since the charges, rather than being deductions from wages, form part of the formula for determining the gross wages paid to the employee. These amounts can be deemed to have been paid even though no record of these amounts were shown on the employee's payroll record. See O Reg 285/01, s. 19 for a discussion of the corresponding provisions that relate to domestic workers. See O Reg 285/01, s. 25 for a discussion of the corresponding provisions that relate to fruit, vegetable and tobacco harvesters.

In Steven Carapiet c.o.b.a. the Fish Tale Lodge v Cayen and Lamothe (February 17, 1986), ESC 2041 (Adamson), Referee Adamson found that amounts could not be deemed to have been paid as wages for the supply of a room for weeks during which the room was not occupied. The parties did not contest the period of occupancy.

There may be some question as to whether meals were in fact provided or a room was in fact occupied. The Program's position is that a room will be considered occupied if the employee lived, slept or stored belongings in the room during the period for which the employer is claiming credit against the minimum wage obligation. For example, although the employee may be away for a specified period (e.g., on vacation), the room will be considered occupied if it is still being used for the storage of the employee's personal belongings while they are absent.

Three Hour Rule – s. 5(7) (REVOKED)

The three hour rule established by subsection 5(7) of O Reg 285/01 was revoked effective January 1, 2019, at the same time that a (revised) three hour rule was introduced into the ESA 2000 under a new Part VII.1 of the ESA 2000 in s. 21.2. (See the discussion under that provision for more information.) Subsection 5(7) is therefore no longer in force. The discussion of s. 5(7) is being maintained for use in situations that arose when it was in effect.

5(7) For the purpose of determining whether an employee other than a student has been paid the minimum wage, the employee shall be deemed to have worked for three hours if he or she,

(a) regularly works more than three hours a day;

(b) is required to present himself or herself for work; and

(c) works less than three hours.

Subsection 5(7) provides for what is commonly referred to as the "three hour rule" which, under certain circumstances, requires three hours' pay at the rate of at least minimum wage, even though the employee has worked less than three hours. Note that employees in the women's coat and suit industry and the women's dress and sportswear industry have special rules that apply instead of s. 5(7) – see O Reg 291/01, s. 3.

The circumstances in which s. 5(7) apply are as follows:

- The employee is not a student
    - Note that “student” in this subsection does not have the same meaning as it has in paragraph 1 of s. 5(1) of this regulation; for the purposes of the three hour rule, “student” means a student of any age, including students over the age of 18 years;
- The employee regularly works more than three hours per day
    - Note that the three hour rule has no application if the employee regularly works three hours a day or regularly works less than three hours a day;
- The employee is required to present themselves for work
    - Note this section will not apply where the employee has reported to work when directed not to do so by the employer, even on a day that is normally a workday; and
- The employee works less than three hours.

It is immaterial whether the hours are worked on a regular work day or on a day on which the employee does not usually work, provided that they were required to present themselves for work that day.

In other words, the three hour rule may also apply when the employee is called in to work on a day that is not a regular workday, if the employee works less than three hours that day.

Note however that if the employee's schedule includes regularly working more than three hours a day and regularly working three hours a day or less, the application of the three hour rule will depend on whether the day is one where the employee would regularly work more than three hours or one where the employee would regularly work three hours or less.

As an example, assume an employer occasionally schedules staff to attend Saturday morning meetings. Assuming that the employees regularly worked 8 hours a day Monday through Friday, the three hour rule would apply to these occasional Saturday staff meetings. However, if the employer was found to regularly schedule the employees for one-hour Saturday morning staff meetings, it would be the Program's position that the three hour rule would not apply to those Saturday shifts/meetings. That is because it is the Program's view that s. 5(7) was not intended to prohibit an employer from having a regular shift schedule that incorporates shifts of less than three hours.

As another example, an employer could establish a shift schedule that has the employee working four-hour shifts on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays and two-hour shifts on Tuesdays and Thursdays. The regularly scheduled Tuesday and Thursday shifts would not trigger the application of the three hour rule because the employee regularly works less than three hours on those days. Note though that if the employee was not provided with at least three hours of work on a Monday, Wednesday or Friday, the rule would apply.

Where the provision does apply, an employee will be entitled to be paid at least three hours at the minimum wage. The provision does not mean the employee must be paid three hours at their regular rate if it is in excess of the minimum wage. In other words, an employee who is called into work but works less than three hours must receive three hours' pay at minimum wage OR their regular wages for the time actually worked, whichever is greater.

Example 1

Employee:

- Is not a student, regularly works more than three hours per day and is required to present themselves for work on July 15, 2018;
- Regular rate is $17.00/hour;
- Works one hour and is then directed by the employer to leave;
- Is paid regular rate of $17.00 for one hour's work;
- Is deemed by virtue of s. 5(7) to have worked three hours for the purpose of determining if minimum wage has been paid.
- Entitlement is the greater of:
    - Three hours x the minimum wage rate of $14.00 = $42.00; OR
    - One hour x $17.00 = $17.00
    - Balance owing to employee is $42.00 - $17.00 (already paid to employee) = $25.00

Example 2

The same facts as in the first example, but the regular rate is $45.00/hour.

- Employee was paid $45.00.
- Entitlement is the greater of:
    - Three hours x $14.00 = $42.00; OR
    - One hour x $45.00 = $45.00
    - Difference of $3.00 ($45.00 - $42.00) to be retained by employee.

When Three Hour Rule Does Not Apply – s. 5(8) (REVOKED)

Subsection 5(8) was revoked effective January 1, 2019 at the same time that a (revised) three hour rule was introduced into the ESA 2000 under a new Part VII.1 of the ESA 2000 in s. 21. (See the discussion under that provision for more information.) This provision is therefore no longer in force. The discussion of s. 5(8) is being maintained for use in situations that arose when it was in effect.

5(8) Subsection (7) does not apply if the employer is unable to provide work for the employee because of fire, lightning, power failure, storms or similar causes beyond the employer's control that result in the stopping of work.

Subsection 5(8) establishes that the three hour rule in s. 5(7) does not apply when certain types of circumstances that are beyond the control of the employer prevent it from providing work to an employee who reports for work.

For this provision to apply, the circumstances described in the section must be responsible for the complete stoppage of an employee's work. If the circumstances only reduce the demand for the employee's services, this provision will not apply and the three hour rule will apply. For example, a severe electrical storm could result in an employer being unable to provide a construction employee with any work and s. 5(8) would therefore apply. The same storm might only reduce the volume of work available for an employee who works in a car wash so that s. 5(8) would therefore not apply.

O Reg 285/01 Section 6 - Minimum Wage for Wilderness Guides

6. (1) Wilderness guides are prescribed as a class of employees for the purposes of subsection 23.1(2) of the Act.

(2) The minimum wage prescribed for the services of a wilderness guide is the following:

1. On or after January 1, 2022 but before October 1, 2022, $75.00 for less than five consecutive hours in a day and $150.05 for five or more hours in a day, whether or not the hours are consecutive.
2. From October 1, 2022 onwards, the amount determined under subsection 23.1 (4) of the Act.

This section was added to O Reg 285/01 effective June 3, 2019. It prescribes wilderness guides as a class of employees for the purposes of ESA Part IX, s. 23.1(2) and prescribes a block rate minimum wage for them (which is the same rate that is set pursuant to s. 23.1(1) for hunting and fishing guides).

Originally, the provision set out a specific rate in subsection (2) that was in place until September 30, 2020. Beginning on October 1, 2020 , the minimum wage applying to this class of employees was adjusted in accordance with ESA Part IX, ss. 23.1(4) – (6).

This provision was amended effective January 1, 2022 to set out specific rates that apply to wilderness guides between January 1, 2022 and September 30, 2022. The rates are $75.00 for less than five consecutive hours in a day, and $150.05 for five or more hour in a day, whether or not the hours are consecutive. From October 1, 2022 onward, the minimum wage rate applying to this class of employee is adjusted in accordance with ESA Part IX, ss. 23.1(4).

For information about the definition of wilderness guide, see O Reg 285/01, s.1.

O Reg 285/01 Section 7 – Exemptions from Part IX of Act

Students – s. 7(a), (b) and (c)

7 Part IX of the Act does not apply to,

(a) a person who is employed as a student in a recreational program operated by a charitable organization registered under Part I of the Income Tax Act (Canada) and whose work or duties are directly connected with the recreational program;

(b) a person employed as a student to instruct or supervise children;

(c) a person employed as a student at a camp for children;

The above-described students are exempt from the minimum wage provisions of the ESA 2000. They are also exempt from the three hour rule – see O Reg 285/01, s. 4.1(a)-(c); the overtime pay provisions – see O Reg 285/01, ss. 8(h), (f) and (g), and the public holidays provisions – see O Reg 285/01, ss. 9(1)(g), (e) and (f).

For example, such students may be employed as:

- Recreational sports officials and instructors; arts and crafts instructors;
- Playground leaders to teach and supervise crafts, songs and sports; wading pool supervisors; sports officials to instruct and supervise sports programs; youth centre leaders to instruct and supervise young teens; swimming instructors; a sitter in a private home (this assumes that the sitter is not working as an independent contractor, as in that case the exemption would be irrelevant, as the ESA 2000 would not even apply to him or her; typically short-term babysitters are independent contractors but in some cases an employment relationship may exist in which case this exemption would apply – see the discussion of the definition of employee at ESA Part I, s. 1 for information on the tests applied in assessing whether there is an employer/employee relationship); and
- Camp counsellors, lifeguards, kitchen staff, and so on at a camp for children.

In order for the exemption in s. 7(a) of the regulation to apply, the employer must be able to show that it is a duly-registered charitable institution by showing its registration number under the federal Income Tax Act, RSC 1985, c 1 (5th Supp). If it is not, the exemption will not apply, even if the employer is operating a recreational program that is virtually identical to one operated by a charitable institution. Also, the student's employment must be directly connected with the recreational program, and not, for example, with another portion of the organization's operation, such as general administration or a social assistance program. Unlike the exemptions under ss. 7(b) and (c), the recreational program in exemption s. 7(a) need not involve children (that is, persons under 18).

Meaning of "employed as a student…"

A "student" is a person who is working full or part-time while in full-time attendance at a primary, secondary or post-secondary institution, or who is working during a holiday period but has the intention of returning to fulltime education at the end of that holiday period.

Note that for the purposes of this exemption (as well as the exemptions from the overtime pay provisions - see O Reg 285/01, ss. 8(h), (f) and (g) – and the public holidays provisions – see O Reg 285/01, ss. 9(1)(g), (e) and (f) – the term "student" is not limited to a person less than 18 years of age. This is in contrast to the use of the word "student" for the purposes of the student minimum wage provisions: the student minimum wage applies to a student (not otherwise exempted from the ESA 2000 pursuant to s. 3(5) of the ESA 2000 and not exempt from the minimum wage provisions under s. 7 of O Reg 285/01) who is under the age of 18 years and 1) does not work more than 28 hours per week while attending school or 2), is employed while on school holiday. For more information on the student minimum wage, please see O Reg 285/01, s. 5.

The onus is on the employer seeking to apply any of the exemption in ss. 7(a), (b) or (c) of O Reg 285/01 to confirm that the employee is either in attendance at an educational institution or on a holiday period from an institution.

In order for the exemptions in ss. 7(a), (b) or (c) to apply, the core of the student's employment must fall within the scope of work set out in the provision, though a part of their functions may fall outside it. For example, if a student spends 60 per cent of their time instructing children and the remaining 40 per cent of her time instructing adults, the exemption in s. 7(b) would apply. The test is where and how the employee spends the majority of their working hours.

Only those employees who are "students", as defined above, are exempt. Other employees, even if performing exactly the same work (e.g., instructing or supervising children, etc.), are not exempt.

Superintendent, Janitor or Caretaker – s. 7(d)

7 Part IX of the Act does not apply to,

(d) a person who is employed as the superintendent, janitor or caretaker of a residential building and resides in the building.

A person employed as superintendent, janitor or caretaker of a residential building who resides in the building is exempt from the minimum wage provisions of the ESA 2000. Please refer to O Reg 285/01, s. 4 for further information regarding additional exemptions for these employees.

O Reg 285/01 Section 8 – Exemptions from Part VIII of Act

Exemptions from Overtime – ss. 8(a) to (j), (l)

Part VIII of the Act does not apply to,

(a) a person employed as a firefighter as defined in section 1 of the Fire Protection and Prevention Act, 1997;

(b) a person whose work is supervisory or managerial in character and who may perform non-supervisory or non-managerial tasks on an irregular or exceptional basis;

(c) a person employed as a fishing or hunting guide;

(d) a person employed,

- i. as a landscape gardener, or
- ii. to install and maintain swimming pools;

(e) a person whose employment is directly related to,

- i. the growing of mushrooms,
- ii. the growing of flowers for the retail and wholesale trade,
- iii. the growing, transporting and laying of sod,
- iv. the growing of trees and shrubs for the retail and wholesale trade,
- v. the breeding and boarding of horses on a farm, or
- vi. the keeping of furbearing mammals, as defined in the Fish and Wildlife Conservation Act, 1997, for propagation or the production of pelts for commercial purposes;

(f) a person employed as a student to instruct or supervise children;

(g) a person employed as a student at a camp for children;

(h) a person who is employed as a student in a recreational program operated by a charitable organization registered under Part I of the Income Tax Act (Canada) and whose work or duties are directly connected with the recreational program;

(i) a person who is employed as the superintendent, janitor or caretaker of a residential building and resides in the building;

(j) a person employed as a taxi cab driver;

(l) an information technology professional.

Ambulance Driver, Ambulance Driver's Helper or First-Aid Attendant – s. 8(k)

8 Part VIII of the Act does not apply to,

(k) a person employed as an ambulance driver, ambulance driver's helper or first-aid attendant on an ambulance;

An ambulance driver, ambulance driver's helper or a first-aid attendant on an ambulance is exempt from the overtime pay provisions of the ESA 2000.

Compliance with the criteria set out in the definition of ambulance under the Ambulance Act, RSO 1990, c A.19 is not determinative of whether a person is an ambulance driver, ambulance driver's helper or first-aid attendant on an ambulance or whether the conveyance used for the transportation of persons is an ambulance for the purposes of the ESA 2000. See Direct Care Patient Transfer Inc. v Clarke, 2000 CanLII 12519 (ON LRB).

When determining if the exemption applies, it must be established whether the nature of the service and the transportation used is either an ambulance service (i.e., for medical emergencies where the exemption would apply) or a non-ambulance medical transfer service (in which case the exemption would not apply). There are several factors that may assist in making this determination. They include:

- Are the people being transported in stable medical condition?
- Are the employees trained and authorized to administer drugs or medical assistance?
- Are the vehicles being used equipped with drugs or medical equipment
- Are the vehicles being used equipped with sirens or emergency lights that are operational? If so, are they allowed to be used?
- Are the employees required to be licensed as level 1 paramedics who can be required to administer certain drugs and operate a defibrillator?
- If there is an emergency during a transfer, are the employees are required to call 911 and wait for an ambulance to deal with the medical emergency?

For further discussion, see the Ontario Labour Relations Board's decision in King v RNR Patient Transfer Services Inc., 2008 CanLII 22 (ON LRB).

O Reg 285/01 Section 9 – Exemptions from Part X of Act

Exemptions to Public Holidays - ss. 9(1)(a) to (i)

9(1) Part X of the Act does not apply to,

(a) a person employed as a firefighter as defined in section 1 of the Fire Protection and Prevention Act, 1997;

(b) a person employed as a fishing or hunting guide;

(c) a person employed,

- i. as a landscape gardener, or
- ii. to install and maintain swimming pools;

(d) a person whose employment is directly related to,

- i. mushroom growing,
- ii. the growing of flowers for the retail and wholesale trade,
- iii. the growing, transporting and laying of sod,
- iv. the growing of trees and shrubs for the retail and wholesale trade,
- v. the breeding and boarding of horses on a farm, or
- vi. the keeping of furbearing mammals, as defined in the Fish and Wildlife Conservation Act, 1997, for propagation or the production of pelts for commercial purposes;

(e) a person employed as a student to instruct or supervise children;

(f) a person employed as a student at a camp for children;

(g) a person who is employed as a student in a recreational program operated by a charitable organization registered under Part I of the Income Tax Act (Canada) and whose work or duties are directly connected with the recreational program;

(h) a person who is employed as the superintendent, janitor or caretaker of a residential building and resides in the building;

(i) a person employed as a taxi cab driver; or

Please refer to the following sections for a discussion of the exemptions from the public holiday provisions of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 set out in O Reg 285/01, s. 9:

- Firefighters – s. 9(1)(a): O Reg 285/01, s. 4(1)(a)
- Hunting and fishing guides – s. 9(b): O Reg 285/01, s. 4(1)(c)
- Landscape gardeners – s. 9(c)(i): O Reg 285/01, s. 4(2)(a)
- Swimming pool installation and maintenance – s. 9(c)(ii): O Reg 285/01, s. 4(2)(b)
- Mushroom growers – s. 9(d)(i): O Reg 285/01, s. 4(3)(a)(i)

- Flower growers – s. 9(d)(ii): O Reg 285/01, s. 4(3)(a)(ii)

Seasonal Employee in Hotel, Motel, Resort, etc. - s. 9(1)(j)

9(1) Part X of the Act does not apply to,

(j) a person who is employed as a seasonal employee in a hotel, motel, tourist resort, restaurant or tavern and is provided with room and board;

A seasonal employee in a hotel, motel, tourist resort, restaurant or tavern who is provided with room and board is exempt from the public holiday provisions of the Act. See O Reg 285/01, s. 1 for a discussion of the definition of "seasonal" as well as "hotel, motel, tourist resort, restaurant or tavern".

Construction Employees - s. 9(2)

9(2) Part X of the Act does not apply to a construction employee who works in the construction industry if,

(a) the employee's period of employment is less than five years and the employee receives 7.7 per cent or more of his or her hourly rate or wages for vacation pay or holiday pay; or

(b) the employee's period of employment is five years or more and the employee receives 9.7 per cent or more of his or her hourly rate or wages for vacation pay or holiday pay.

Construction employees who work in the construction industry are exempt from the public holiday provisions of the Act if their period of employment is less than five years and they receive 7.7 per cent or more of their hourly rate or wages for vacation pay or holiday pay. If their period of employment is equal to or greater than five years, they are exempt if they receive 9.7 per cent or more of their hourly rate or wages for vacation pay or holiday pay. See O Reg 285/01, s. 1 for the definition of "construction employee" and "construction industry".

The percentages are based on the Act's four per cent and six per cent vacation pay entitlements plus a percentage calculated on the basis of nine days of public holiday pay per year for an employee who regularly works five days a week.

O Reg 285/01 Section 9.1 – Exemptions from Part XII of Act

Section 9.1 of O Reg 258/01 was revoked effective January 1, 2019 pursuant to a regulatory amendment. This section is therefore no longer in force.

Section 9.1 set out employees who were exempt from the application of section 42.1 of the ESA 2000 (the “equal pay for equal work: difference in employment status” provision). Section 42.1 of the ESA 2000 was repealed effective January 1, 2019 as a result of the Making Ontario Open for Business Act, 2018.

Since employees may still file a complaint relating to section 42.1 that arose during the period of time when that section was in force – from April 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018 – the Program’s interpretation of section 9.1 (establishing the exemptions that applied to s. 42.1 during the relevant period) remains as part of this publication. The text appears in red to highlight that this section has been repealed.

9.1 Section 42.1 of the Act does not apply to,

(a) a person employed as a firefighter as defined in section 1 of the Fire Protection and Prevention Act, 1997;

(b) an employee who is a student under 18 years of age, if the weekly hours of the student are not in excess of 28 hours or if the student is employed during a school holiday; or

(c) a person employed in the recorded visual and audio-visual entertainment production industry.

This provision sets out the employees who are exempt from ESA Part XII, s. 42.1. Section 42.1 prohibits employers from paying employees different rates of pay on the basis of a difference in employment status.

Firefighters

Pursuant to s. 9.1(a), firefighters, as defined in s. 1 of the Fire Protection and Prevention Act, 1997, SO 1997 are exempt from ESA Part XII, s. 42.1.

Section 1 of the FPPA defines a firefighter as follows:

"firefighter" means a fire chief and any other person employed in, or appointed to, a fire department and assigned to undertake fire protection services, and includes a volunteer firefighter;

"volunteer firefighter" means a firefighter who provides fire protection services either voluntarily or for a nominal consideration, honorarium, training or activity allowance.

The exemptions will therefore also apply to fire chiefs and volunteer firefighters.

Students

Pursuant to s. 9.1(b), students under the age of 18 are exempt from ESA Part XII, s. 42.1 if:

- The student works 28 hours or less per week, or
- The student is employed during a school holiday.

Recorded Visual and Audio-Visual Entertainment Production Industry

Pursuant to s. 9.1(c), employees who work in the recorded visual and audio-visual entertainment production industry are exempt from ESA Part XII, s. 42.1.

Recorded visual and audio-visual entertainment production industry is defined in O Reg 285/01, s. 1 as follows:

"recorded visual and audio-visual entertainment production industry" means the industry of producing visual or audio-visual recorded entertainment that is intended to be replayed in cinemas or on the Internet, as part of a television broadcast, or on a VCR or DVD player or a similar device, but does not include the industry of producing commercials (other than trailers), video games or educational material.

O Reg 285/01 Section 10 – Application of s. 73 of Act

Retail Business Establishment - s. 10(1)

10(1) Despite section 73 of the Act, an employee in a retail business establishment shall not refuse to work on a Sunday if he or she agreed, at the time of being hired, to work on Sundays.

Subsection 10(1) creates an exception to the provisions of s. 73 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. Under s. 73(2), an employee of a retail business establishment may refuse to work on a Sunday. Under the exception established by s. 10(1) of the regulation, an employee who agreed at the time of hire to work on Sundays may not subsequently avail themselves of the right to refuse Sunday work. It is Program policy that this exemption can apply only to employees who were hired on or after September 4, 2001, based on the presumption against retroactive application. Thus, employees hired before September 4, 2001, still have the right to refuse Sunday work and the right not to be punished for refusing. (Also, see discussion of s. 10(2) below.)

Religious Belief or Observance - s. 10(2)

10(2) Subsection (1) does not apply to an employee who declines to work on a Sunday for reasons of religious belief or religious observance.

Subsection 10(2) provides that s. 10(1), which precludes employees of a retail business establishment from refusing Sunday work where they have agreed to it at the time of hire, does not apply where an employee refuses Sunday work for reasons of religious belief or religious observance. Thus, an employee who was hired on or after September 4, 2001 and who had agreed at the time of hiring to work on Sundays would be able to subsequently refuse to work on Sundays for reasons of religious belief or religious observance.

Human Rights Code - s. 10(3)

10(3) The employer shall not make an employee's agreement to work on Sundays a condition of being hired if the condition would be contrary to section 11 of the Human Rights Code.

Section 11 of the Ontario Human Rights Code, RSO 1990, c H.19 (the "Code") deals with constructive discrimination (also known as "adverse effect" discrimination). It reads as follows:

11(1) A right of a person under [the Part of the Code dealing with freedom from discrimination] is infringed where a requirement qualification or factor exists that is not discrimination on a prohibited ground but that results in the exclusion, restriction or preference of a group of persons who are identified by a prohibited ground of discrimination and of whom the person is a member, except where,

(a) the requirement, qualification or factor is reasonable and bona fide in the circumstances; or

(b) it is declared in this Act that to discriminate because of such ground is not an infringement of a right.

11(2) The Commission, the board of inquiry or a court shall not find that a requirement, qualification or factor is reasonable and bona fide in the circumstances unless it is satisfied that the needs of the group of which the person is a member cannot be accommodated without undue hardship on the person responsible for accommodating those needs, considering the cost, outside sources of funding, if any, and health and safety requirements, if any.

11(3) The Commission, the board of inquiry or a court shall consider any standards prescribed by the regulations for assessing what is undue hardship.

Section 11 of the Human Rights Code addresses rules or practices that, although not among the specific, prohibited grounds of discrimination set out in Part I of the Code, result in unequal treatment of a particular person or group against whom the Code prohibits discrimination. This type of unintentional discrimination is known as "constructive" or "adverse effect" discrimination. In other words, the Code prohibits practices that have a discriminatory effect, even if they are not expressly or intentionally discriminatory. Therefore, if an employer's policy is not to hire any person who refuses to work on Sundays and such employer will make no exception for those whose religious beliefs or observance practices prevent them from working on Sundays, this may violate the Code.

Subsection 10(3) prohibits an employer from making an employee's agreement to work on Sunday a condition of employment if by so doing a violation of s. 11 of the Code would occur.

O Reg 285/01 Section 11 – Homemakers

Definition of Homemaker – s. 11(1)

11(1) In this section, "homemaker" means a person who is employed,

(a) to perform homemaking services for a householder or member of a household in the householder's private residence, and

(b) by a person other than the householder.

Section 11 defines the term homemaker. There are three basic elements to the definition, as follows:

Performs homemaking services

There is no definition of "homemaking services" within the Employment Standards Act, 2000. However in a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, Re Service Employees International Union, Local 204 and Community Services to Jewish Elderly o/a Senior Care, an adjudicator considered it appropriate in the circumstances to look at the definition of homemaking services as defined in Reg 634, RRO 1990 made under the Homemakers and Nurses Services Act, RSO 1990, c H.10. This regulation defines homemaking services as meaning housekeeping services including:

- Care of a child or children;
- Meal planning, marketing and preparation of nourishing meals, and the preparation of special diets where required;
- Light, heavy and seasonal cleaning;

- Light laundry, ironing and essential mending of clothing;
- Personal care, including assistance in walking, climbing or descending stairs, getting into or out of bed, eating, dressing, bathing and other matters of personal hygiene;
- Simple bedside care, where required, under the direction of a physician or nurse, but not including nursing services; and
- Training and instruction in household management and the care of children.

It is Program policy that an employee providing such services is providing homemaking services. Services that are not listed in Reg 634 may also be considered to be homemaking services for the purposes of s. 11, such as providing care to an adult or adults.

Note that a homemaker is not a homeworker – see ESA Part I, s. 1 for the definition of homeworker.

Performs these services in the householder's private residence

If the person is performing the services in a non-private institution, the section will not apply. For example, cleaners in retirement homes are not homemakers

Employed by a person other than the householder

This refers to the situation in which a householder contracts with a business to have an employee of that business come into their house to perform homemaking services. In contrast, a domestic worker, while performing similar duties, is employed by the householder directly.

Refer to O Reg 285/01, s.1 for a discussion of domestic workers.

Minimum Wage – s. 11(2)

11(2) Despite section 6, the hours of work in respect of which a homemaker is to be paid at least the minimum wage shall not be more than 12 hours in a day.

Section 6 of O Reg 285/01 establishes when work is deemed to be, or not to be, performed (and so establishes the hours for which an employee must normally be paid at least the minimum wage and overtime pay). When such rules are applied to a homemaker, it may turn out that the homemaker has worked more than 12 hours in a day. However, s. 11(2) of the regulation states that despite the fact that a homemaker works or is deemed to have worked more than 12 hours in a day, they are entitled to be paid the minimum wage for only 12 hours. For example, even if they worked 14 hours in a day, they need only be paid for 12 hours.

In other words, a homemaker is entitled to be paid at least the minimum wage for no more than 12 of the hours they work. There is effectively a cap on what the employer must pay, although the employer is not prohibited from paying more.

Homemakers are not exempted from the application of the minimum wage provisions. If a homemaker works 12 hours or fewer, the homemaker must be paid at least minimum wage calculated with reference to the number of hours worked and if the homemaker works more than 12 hours, the homemaker must be paid at least the minimum wage for 12 hours of work. If the employer pays the homemaker as per the preceding sentence, the homemaker will be considered to be paid in accordance with s. 11(2) and the limits on hours of work will not apply, by virtue of s. 11(3).

Exemption to Parts VII and VIII – s. 11(3)

11(3) Parts VII (Hours of Work and Eating Periods) and VIII (Overtime Pay) and paragraph 4 of subsection 15(1) (record of hours worked) of the Act do not apply to a homemaker who is paid in accordance with subsection (2).

The general rules regarding hours of work and eating periods in ESA Part VII and overtime pay in ESA Part VIII, as well as the requirement in paragraph 4 of ESA Part VI, s. 15(1) to keep a record of daily and weekly hours, do not apply to homemakers if the employer complies with s. 11(2), i.e., if the employer pays the employee at least the minimum wage for all hours worked in a day to a maximum of 12. If s. 11(2) is not complied with, then both Parts VII and VIII and paragraph 4 of s. 15(1) will apply. The homemaker's hours of work will be subject to the limits set out in Part VII, and they will be entitled to rest and eating periods, overtime pay and the daily and weekly hours record-keeping requirements.

O Reg 285/01 Section 12 – Homeworkers

12(1) The employer of a homeworker shall advise the homeworker in writing of the type of work that he or she is being employed to perform and,

- (a) if the homeworker is to be paid according to the number of hours worked, of the amount to be paid for an hour of work in a regular work week;
- (b) if the homeworker is to be paid according to the number of articles or things manufactured, of the amount to be paid for each article or thing manufactured in a regular work week; or
- (c) if the homeworker is to be paid on some other basis, the basis on which he or she is to be paid.

(2) If the employer of a homeworker who is paid according to the number of articles or things manufactured requires the manufacture of a certain number of articles or things to be completed by a certain date or time, the employer shall advise the homeworker of those requirements in writing.

(3) In this section, "manufacture" includes preparation, improvement, repair, alteration, assembly or completion.

This provision is similar in effect to s. 13.1 of Reg 325 under the former Employment Standards Act.

Section 12 requires that the employer notify the homeworker in writing of the type of work that he or she is being employed to perform and the rate of pay, whether the basis for the rate is hourly, piecework or some other method, and of any completion deadlines.

These special rules concerning the employment of homeworkers are in addition to the special record-keeping requirements for employers of home-workers, which are set out in s. 15(2) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. A definition of "homeworker" appears in s. 1 of the Act. Please ESA Part VI and ESA Part I for a discussion of the Act's general record-keeping requirements, and the definition of "homeworker", respectively.

O Reg 285/01 Section 13 – Road Building

Higher Overtime Threshold - ss. 13(1) & (2)

13(1) Despite Part VIII of the Act, in the case of an employee engaged at the site of road building in relation to streets, highways or parking lots,

(a) subject to clause (b), the employer shall pay overtime pay for each hour worked in excess of 55 hours in a work week, at an amount not less than one and one-half times the employee's regular rate; and,

(b) if the employee works less than 55 hours in a work week, the difference between 55 hours and the number of hours actually worked, up to an amount not exceeding 22 hours, may be added to the maximum set out in clause (a) for the purpose of determining the employee's overtime pay for the next work week.

13(2) Despite Part VIII of the Act, in the case of an employee engaged at the site of road building in relation to structures such as bridges, tunnels or retaining walls in connection with streets or highways,

(a) subject to clause (b), the employer shall pay overtime pay for each hour worked in excess of 50 hours in a work week, at an amount not less than one and one-half times the employee's regular rate; and

(b) if the employee works less than 50 hours in a work week, the difference between 50 hours and the number of hours actually worked, up to an amount not exceeding 22 hours, may be added to the maximum set out in clause (a) for the purpose of determining the employee's overtime pay for the next work week.

Section 13 of O Reg 285/01 establishes a higher overtime threshold for employees engaged at the site of road building. Employees engaged at the site of road building in relation to streets, highways or parking lots are entitled to overtime pay for each hour of work in excess of 55 in a "work week". Employees engaged at the site of road building in relation to structures such as bridges, tunnels or retaining walls in connection with streets or highways are entitled to overtime pay for each hour of work in excess of 50 in a "work week".

Mixed Threshold Work

If an employee in a "work week" is engaged at the site of road building in both types of work - work to which the 55-hour threshold applies and work to which the 50 hour threshold applies, consistent with s. 22(9) - it is Program policy that the employee receives overtime pay, in respect of all work performed in a given "work week", in accordance with the lower overtime threshold if he or she performs work that attracts the lower overtime threshold 50% or more of the time in any given "work week".

The Meaning of Road Building - s. 1

The special overtime thresholds in s. 13 apply if the employee is engaged at the site of "road building", whether he or she is engaged in the activity of "road building" or not.

"Road building" is defined in s. 1 of O Reg 285/01 as follows:

Road building means the preparation, construction, reconstruction, repair, alteration, remodelling, renovation, demolition, finishing and maintenance of streets, highways or parking lots, including structures such as bridges, tunnels or retaining walls in connection with streets or highways, and all foundations, installation of equipment, appurtenances and work incidental thereto;

"Road building" includes road maintenance activities, such as snow ploughing and sanding, as well as work that is incidental to road building (if performed at the road building site), such as surveying and the repair or servicing of road building equipment.

"Road building" is considered by the Program to include the construction of secondary roads, e.g., logging roads, as well as streetcar tracks. It is also Program policy that railroad construction falls within the definition of "road building" - see Deckert-Dancy & Associates (Eastern) Ltd. v Ontario Ministry of Labour (July 23, 1973), ESC 38 (Fram).

The following activities have been held not to constitute road building:

- Application of herbicides at roadsides and railroads - see Albert Andrews Enterprises Inc. o/a Andrews Agrichemicals v DeForest and Daye (May 29, 1992), ES 89/92 (Novick);
- Construction of a parking area allowing vehicular access to pits where mock fires were staged for purposes of firefighter training - see Capital Petroleum Services Ltd. v 14 Employees (February 6, 1995), ESC 95-35 (Randall); and
- Paving of residential driveways - see O'Brien Paving Inc. v Hill, 2012 CanLII 39480 (ON LRB).

As indicated above, to be subject to the special overtime thresholds in s. 13, the employee's work must be at the road building site, but it is not necessary that the employee be himself or herself engaged in road building or that the employer be in the road building industry. For example, a flag person employed by a security firm who works at the site of road-building will be subject to the special road building overtime threshold. Note, however, that a flag person is not himself or herself engaged in road building; as a result, the notice of termination and severance pay exemptions that apply to construction employees would not apply to such a flag person.

It should also be noted that the Program takes the position that employees of employers in the crushed stone quarry and sand and gravel industry (other than office workers not employed at the plant site) will be considered to be engaged at the site of road building and subject to the special overtime threshold in s. 13(1) if more than 50% of the output of the employer's plant consists of materials destined for use in road building.

The Program also takes the position that employees of employers in the asphalt paving-mix industry (except office workers not employed at the plant site) will be considered to be engaged at the site of road building and subject to the special overtime threshold in s. 13(1) if the output of the employer's plant is destined for use in the road building industry.

Carry Forward Provisions - s. 13(1)(b) and s. 13(2)(b)

This section of O Reg 285/01 provides that where hours worked are less than the thresholds established in s. 13(1)(a) and s. 13(2)(a), the difference between hours worked in that "work week" and the relevant threshold up to a total of 22 hours, may be added to the threshold in the "work week" immediately following, in order to determine what, if any, overtime pay is payable in the following week.

Example 1: Section 13(1)(b) 55-hour overtime threshold

Assume the employee works the following hours:

- Week 1 = 48 hours
- Week 2 = 65 hours
- Week 3 = 45 hours

If an employee is engaged in road building in relation to streets, highways and parking lots, the 55-hour threshold in s. 13(1)(a) of O Reg 285/01 applies. In the above example, the 48 hours worked during Week 1 are payable at the "regular rate". There is also a carry forward time of seven hours as per s. 13(1)(b) (being the 55-hour threshold less 48 hours actually worked). As a result, in Week 2, overtime will not be triggered until the employee works more than 62 hours (the 55 hours plus the 7 hours carried forward). In Week 2, the 55 hour-threshold plus the 7-hour carry-forward are payable at straight time and only 3 hours are payable at the overtime rate.

The "carry forward" relief provided under s. 13(1)(b) only operates to reduce the overtime pay payable with respect to the following work week, not the previous work week. For example, the 10-hour difference between the 55-hour overtime threshold and the 45 hours worked in Week 3 cannot be "carried back" to Week 2 - they can only be carried forward to Week 4.

Example 2: Section 13(2)(b) - 50-hour overtime threshold

Assume the employee works the following hours:

- Week 1 = 48 hours
- Week 2 = 65 hours
- Week 3 = 45 hours

If an employee is engaged in road building in relation to structures such as bridges, tunnels or retaining walls, the 50-hour threshold in s. 13(2)(a) of O Reg 285/01 applies. In the above example, the 48 hours worked during Week 1 are payable at the "regular rate". There is also a carry forward time of two hours as per s. 13(2)(b) (being the 50-hour threshold less 48 hours actually worked). As a result, in Week 2, overtime will not be triggered until the employee works more than 52 hours (the 50 hours plus the two hours carried forward). In Week 2, the 50-hour threshold plus the 2-hour carry forward are payable at straight time and 13 hours are payable at the overtime rate.

The "carry forward" relief provided under s. 13(2)(b) only operates to reduce the overtime pay payable with respect to the following work week, not the previous work week. For example, the 5-hour difference between the 50hour overtime threshold and the 45 hours worked in Week 3 cannot be "carried back" to Week 2 - they can only be carried forward to Week 4.

Only the maximum permissible carry forward of 22 hours can be brought forward to the immediately following calendar week. This is so notwithstanding that there was a discrepancy of more than 22 hours between the actual hours worked and the overtime threshold of 55.

O Reg 285/01 Section 14 – Hotels, Motels Tourist Resorts, Restaurants and Taverns

14. Despite Part VIII of the Act, the employer shall pay an employee who works for the owner or operator of a hotel, motel, tourist resort, restaurant or tavern for 24 weeks or less in a calendar year and who is provided with room and board overtime pay for each hour worked in excess of 50 hours in a work week, at an amount not less than one and one-half times the employee's regular rate.

Section 14 of Regulation 285/01 provides for a special threshold of 50 hours for an employee who meets all of the following criteria:

1. The employee works for the owner or operator of a hotel, motel, tourist resort, restaurant or tavern.
2. The employee does not work more than 24 weeks in a calendar year for a single employer (note: these weeks need not be consecutive).
3. The employee is provided with room and board.

Each criterion is discussed below.

1. The employee works for the owner or operator of a hotel, motel, tourist resort, restaurant or tavern.

Hotel, motel, tourist resort, restaurant and tavern are defined in s. 1 of O Reg 285/01 as follows:

"hotel, motel, tourist resort, restaurant and tavern" means an establishment that provides accommodation, lodging, meals or beverages for payment, and includes hotels, motels, motor hotels, tourist homes, tourist camps, tourist cabins and cottages, tourist inns, catering establishments and all other establishments of a similar nature.

2. The employee does not work more than 24 weeks in a calendar year for a single employer (note: these weeks need not be consecutive).

Where an employee (who works for the owner or operator of a hotel, motel, etc., and is provided with room and board) is hired with the intention that the employee's employment will not exceed 24 weeks, but in fact the employee does work more than 24 weeks, he or she does not fall under this provision. If he or she had been paid an overtime premium based on this section’s threshold, he or she must in fact be paid retroactively the balance owing, based on the overtime premium due after 44 hours worked in a "work week".

3. The employee is provided with room and board.

For a discussion as to whether an employee is considered to have been provided with room and board, refer to O Reg 285/01, s. 5.

O Reg 285/01 Section 15 – Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Processing

15. Despite Part VIII of the Act, the employer shall pay a seasonal employee whose employment is directly related to the canning, processing and packing of fresh fruits or vegetables or their distribution by the canner, processor or packer overtime pay for each hour worked in excess of 50 hours in a work week, at an amount not less than one and one-half times the employee's regular rate.

Section 15 provides a special overtime threshold of 50 hours for employees who meet the criteria set out in the section. The criteria are:

1. The employee is a seasonal employee; and

2. The employee's employment is directly related to the canning, processing, and packing of fresh fruit or vegetables or the distribution thereof by the canner, processor, or packer.

In addition, note that employees who are employed on a farm and whose employment is directly related to the packing of fresh fruit or vegetables or their distribution by the packer may – depending on the circumstances – be subject to the "primary production" exemptions (including from the overtime pay standard) pursuant to ss. 2(2) of O Reg 285/01 rather than to the special overtime threshold set out in s. 15. See the heading Interplay Between s. 15 and s. 2(2) of O. Reg. 285/01 below for a discussion of this issue.

1. The employee is a seasonal employee.

Seasonal employee is defined in s. 1 of O Reg 285/01 as follows:

In this Regulation, "seasonal employee" means an employee who works not more than sixteen weeks in a calendar year for an employer.

The weeks of employment in the calendar year need not be consecutive for the purposes of this section.

Where an employee (whose employment is directly related to the canning, processing and packing of fresh fruits or vegetables or their distribution by the canner, processor or packer) is hired with the intention that the employment will not exceed 16 weeks in a calendar year, but in fact does work more than 16 weeks, the employee does not fall under this section. If he or she had been paid an overtime premium during the first 16 weeks of employment in a calendar year based on this subsection's threshold, he or she must be paid retroactively the balance owing, based on the overtime premium due after 44 hours worked in a work week.

2. The employee's employment is directly related to the canning, processing, and packing of fresh fruits or vegetables or the distribution thereof by the canner, processor, or packer.

The employee's employment must be directly related to the canning, processing or packing of fresh fruits or vegetables, or their distribution by the canner, processor, or packer.

It is not necessary that the employer be in the industry for the special overtime threshold in s. 15 to apply. Thus, a temporary help agency that provides assignment employees to a processing plant could pay the overtime premium after 50 hours (as opposed to after 44) in a work week, as long as the assignment employees' employment was directly related to the canning, processing, packing or distribution of fresh fruit or vegetables.

Note, however, that when it comes to the "distribution" of the canned, processed or packed fresh fruit or vegetables, the special overtime threshold in s. 15 will not apply to employees of a trucking company that has been engaged by the canner, processor or packer to distribute the product. This is because s. 15 applies if the distribution is "by" the canner, processor, or packer. In this case, the special overtime thresholds for local cartage or highway transport may apply to the employees engaged in the distribution – see ss. 17 and 18 of O. Reg. 285/01 for details.)

The general overtime threshold will be applicable to a re-processing of the fruits or vegetables. For example, where fresh strawberries are frozen and then re-processed to make jam, the special overtime threshold (i.e., 50 hours) applies to the initial processing (freezing) and the general overtime threshold (i.e., 44 hours) will apply to the re-processing (making jam).

Interplay between s. 15 and s. 2(2) of O. Reg. 285/01

Where employees are engaged in the packing of fresh fruits and vegetables and the distribution/transportation of these fresh commodities, questions may arise as to the interplay between this provision and the "primary production" exemption found in subsection 2(2) of O Reg 285. This is because the packing of fresh fruits and vegetables and the transport of these commodities are "pre-transformation" activities, such that the work meets the "primary production" criterion under ss. 2(2).

(Note that this same question does not arise in respect of employees engaged in "canning" and "processing" fresh fruits and vegetables and in the transport of these processed/canned commodities by the canner or processor since these are "post-transformation" activities and, as such, do not meet the "primary production" criterion of ss. 2(2)).

Whether or not an employee engaged in the packing or distribution of fresh fruit or vegetables falls under the ss. 2(2) exemption depends on whether the employee is employed "on a farm". What is "a farm" for the purposes of the ss. 2(2) exemption was established by the Ontario Superior Court in the Rouge River decision (Rouge River Farms Inc. v*. Director of Employment Standards and Ontario Labour Relations Board,* 2019 ONSC 3498); a farm may include, for example, industrial buildings used to carry out post-harvest production activities so long as the tracts of land where the produce was grown and the industrial buildings where the produce is packaged are worked or managed by the same farmer. Please see here for a detailed discussion of the ss. 2(2) exemption.

Where the exemption in ss. 2(2) applies to an employee, the employee is exempt from the overtime standard and therefore s. 15 does not apply. If an employee does not fall within ss. 2(2) (e.g. because the employee is not employed on "a farm") but does fall within s. 15, the employee is subject to the special overtime threshold of 50 hours per week. The following example helps to illustrate this distinction,.

Seasonal employee A works in an industrial facility shucking corn and packing fresh corn cobs onto styrofoam trays. Depending on the circumstances, this activity could fall under ss. 2(2) or under s. 15.

Scenario A:

If the packing facility is a "farm" because it is owned and/or managed by the same farmer on whose land the corn was grown, the exemption in s. 2(2) would apply to seasonal employee A. That is because this employee would meet ss. 2(2) criteria:

1. The employee is employed on a farm,
2. The employee engages directly with the agricultural product through "hands on work",
3. The employee's work occurs at a stage in the growing or production of the commodity that precedes a transformation in its form or state, and
4. The agricultural product in question (corn) is a commodity that is specified in ss. 2(2) (i.e. "vegetable").

As such, this employee would be exempt from the overtime standard (and subject to other exemptions pursuant to ss. 2(2)).

Scenario B:

If the packing facility is not owned and/or managed by the farmer (in other words the facility is not part of an enterprise involved in producing the corn) – e.g. the packing facility is owned by "Veggie Packers Inc."

– then the employee would not be “employed on a farm”. As such, the exemption in ss. 2(2) would not apply. This is the case even if all of the vegetables that “Veggie Packers Inc.” packs are from a single farmer. Given that the employee in this example is a seasonal employee whose work is directly related to the packaging of fresh vegetables, section 15 would apply and this employee would be subject to an overtime threshold of 50 hours.

O Reg 285/01 Section 16 – Sewer and Watermain Construction

16. Despite Part VIII of the Act, the employer shall pay an employee who is employed in laying, altering, repairing or maintaining sewers and water-mains and in work incidental thereto, or in guarding the site during the laying, altering, repairing or maintaining of sewers and watermains, overtime pay for each hour worked in excess of 50 hours in a work week, at an amount not less than one and one-half times the employee's regular rate.

Section 16 of O Reg 285/01 provides for a special overtime threshold of 50 hours for employees involved in:

1. Laying, altering, repairing or maintaining sewers and watermains and work incidental thereto; or
2. Guarding the site during the laying, altering, repairing or maintaining of sewers and watermains.

The critical requirement for this threshold to apply relates to the type of work that the employee is performing. It is not essential that the employer be in the sewer and watermain construction industry. For example, this section would still cover a security guard or driver employed in this work, notwithstanding that his or her employer is a security firm or temporary help agency.

Sewers and watermains are those conduits installed for the movement of sewage or water and are typically found in publicly owned places or in easements. It is Program policy that:

- A lateral from a sewer or watermain to a private dwelling or a commercial building is part of the sewer or watermain system;
- Farm tile drainage is considered to be watermain construction;
- Plumbing work normally performed by a plumber is not subject to this special overtime threshold;
- Sprinkler system installation or repair are not subject to this special overtime threshold; and
- The installation of septic systems is not subject to this special overtime threshold.

On this last point, see 1496161 Ontario Inc. (Todd Grier Excavating) v Ontario (Employment Standards), 2009 CanLII 33900 (ON LRB), where the Ontario Labour Relations Board held that a septic system is not a "sewer" because the defining characteristic of the term "sewer" is that it is a conduit or channel for the movement of waste, while the core of a septic system is the septic tank - a holding tank that is neither a channel nor a conduit for the movement of waste. The Board also noted that "sewers" exist as part of an intricately connected system to move waste from various sources, as contrasted with a septic system’s self-contained, on-site nature. The Board also observed that even if there was ambiguity about whether septic systems are captured by the word "sewers", the Board, in accordance with Machtinger v HOJ Industries Ltd., [1992] 1 SCR 986, 1992 CanLII 102 (SCC) and Re Blais is to construe an exemption’s applicability narrowly, and to prefer an interpretation that extends the protections of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 over an interpretation that does not.

O Reg 285/01 Section 17 – Local Cartage

17(1) Despite Part VIII of the Act, the employer shall pay an employee who is a driver of a vehicle or a driver's helper overtime pay for each hour worked in excess of 50 hours in a work week, at an amount not less than one and one-half times the employee's regular rate.

17(2) Subsection (1) applies to employees who are,

(a) drivers of vehicles used in the business of carrying goods for hire within a municipality or to any point not more than five kilometres beyond the municipality's limits; or

(b) drivers' helpers on such vehicles.

Section 17(1) of O Reg 285/01 creates a special overtime threshold of 50 hours in a work week if the following criteria are met:

1. The employee is the driver or driver's helper of the vehicle;
2. The vehicle is in the business of carrying goods for hire; and
3. The vehicle carries goods within a municipality or to any point not more than five kilometres beyond the municipality's limits.

Each criterion is discussed below.

The employee is the driver or driver's helper of the vehicle.

This threshold only applies to the driver or driver's helper, not to someone simply employed to maintain the vehicle.

If a person was employed to drive the vehicle, but also did some maintenance work as part of their duties, s. 17 would still be operative as long as that work was merely incidental to their employment as a driver. However, if they spent the majority of their working hours maintaining one or more vehicles, s. 22(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 and the 44-hour threshold would then apply.

The vehicle is used in the business of carrying goods for hire.

If the vehicle is carrying the employer's own goods, the general threshold of 44 hours, as opposed to the local cartage threshold of 50 hours, will apply.

The carrying of goods for hire includes waste cartage and disposal, septic tank contents cartage and disposal, and courier services (including bicycle and other vehicle courier services).

Within a municipality or to any point not more than 5 kilometres beyond the municipality's limits.

The vehicle must not carry goods for hire further than five kilometers beyond the municipality’s limit.

If a vehicle is at any time carrying goods for hire more than five kilometres beyond the municipality, it would have been required to be licensed under the former Truck Transportation Act, RSO 1990, c T.22 (TTA) and would consequently be subject to the special overtime threshold set out in s. 18 of O Reg 285/01.

It is Program policy that the smallest area of municipal organization will constitute the “municipality” for the purposes of section 17. This is relevant in situations where, for example, there is an “upper tier” municipality (for example, the Regional Municipality of Peel) and a “lower tier” municipality within the “upper tier” municipality (for example, the City of Brampton). In this example, the City of Brampton would be treated as the municipality for the purposes of section 17. (Note this interpretation is consistent with interpretation of “local municipality” that was applied in practice under the former TTA and that consequently informs the special rule set out in s. 18 of this regulation.)

O Reg 285/01 Section 18 – Highway Transport

Overtime Threshold – s. 18(1)

18(1) Despite Part VIII of the Act, the employer shall pay an employee to whom this subsection applies overtime pay for each hour worked in excess of 60 hours in a work week, at an amount not less than one and one-half times the employee's regular rate.

Section 18(1) creates a special overtime threshold of 60 hours for employees described in s. 18(2). Generally, the 60-hour threshold applies with respect to truck drivers who are engaged in hauling goods on a "for-hire" basis. Such employees must be paid at least one and one-half times their regular rate of pay for all hours in excess of 60 per week.

Prior to January 1, 2006, the 60-hour threshold in s. 18 generally applied to employees who were drivers of public trucks operated by holders of operating licenses issued under the former Truck Transportation Act, RSO 1990, c T.22 ("TTA"), which was repealed effective January 1, 2006. Section 18 of O Reg 285/01 was therefore replaced with a new s. 18 (filed February 6, 2006) that reflected the repeal of the TTA, but the scope of the new s. 18 is intended as much as possible to be the same as the scope of its predecessor.

Note that pursuant to subsection 18(5), s. 18(1) does not apply to an employee to whom s. 17 of O Reg 285/01 applies.

Application of Subsection (1) – s. 18(2)

18(2) Subsection (1) applies to an employee who is the driver of any of the following:

1. A truck whose operator held an operating licence under the former Act on December 31, 2005.

2. A truck whose operator held a certificate of intercorporate exemption under the former Act on December 31, 2005, if after that date the truck is operated to carry, for compensation, goods of another person who is not an affiliated corporation under the former Act, such that the operator would be required to hold an operating licence under the former Act if it were still in force.

3. A truck that is operated to carry the goods of another person for compensation, if the operator,

- i. did not hold an operating licence or a certificate of intercorporate exemption under the former Act on December 31, 2005, and
- ii. would be required to hold an operating licence under the former Act if it were still in force.

Under s. 18(2), the 60-hour threshold applies to an employee who is a driver of any of the three following categories of trucks:

Operator held an operating license under the former Act on December 31, 2005… – s. 18(2) para. 1

The 60-hour threshold in s. 18(1) will apply if the operator held an operating license under the former TTA on December 31, 2005.

Operator held a certificate of intercorporate exemption… – s. 18(2) para. 2.

This paragraph provides that, subject to s. 18(3), if an operator held a certificate of intercorporate exemption (CIE)* under the TTA on December 31, 2005, the 60-hour threshold applies if, after that date, the operator carried goods for compensation for a person other than an affiliated corporation, such that the operator would be required to hold an operating license if the former TTA were still in force. In other words, if the operator now hauls goods on behalf of anyone other than its corporate affiliates and "would have been required to hold an operating license" under the former TTA the 60-hour threshold will apply, subject to s. 18(3) – see the discussion below.

A truck that is operated to carry the goods of another person for compensation, if the operator,

i. Did not hold an operating license or a certificate of intercorporate exemption under the former Act on December 31, 2005, and

ii. Would be required to hold an operating license under the former Act if it were still in force – s. 18(2) para. 3

Subject to s. 18(4), if the operator held neither an operating license nor a certificate of intercorporate exemption on December 31, 2005, the 60-hour threshold applies if the operator would be required to hold an operating license under the former TTA, if it were still in force. See the discussion of s. 18(4) below.

Exemptions to Licensing Under the Former TTA – s. 18(2) para. 2 and subpara. 3(ii)

18(2) Subsection (1) applies to an employee who is the driver of any of the following:

2. A truck whose operator held a certificate of intercorporate exemption under the former Act on December 31, 2005, if after that date the truck is operated to carry, for compensation, goods of another person who is not an affiliated corporation under the former Act, such that the operator would be required to hold an operating licence under the former Act if it were still in force.

3. A truck that is operated to carry the goods of another person for compensation, if the operator,

i. did not hold an operating licence or a certificate of intercorporate exemption under the former Act on December 31, 2005, and

ii. would be required to hold an operating licence under the former Act if it were still in force.

These provisions set out exemptions to licensing under the former TTA that apply in considering whether an operator would be required to hold an operating license under the former TTA if it were still in force.

When determining whether an operator "would be required to hold an operating license" under the former TTA, if it were still in force, as required under para. 2 of s. 18(2) and subpara. 3 ii of s. 18(2), consideration must be given to the classes of goods being hauled.

Although the former TTA required an "operating license" in most cases where goods were carried on a "for-hire" basis, a license was not required if, for example, the operator was hauling the following classes of goods (see s. 3(4) of the former TTA):

- Fresh fruit and vegetables grown in the continental United States or Mexico;
- Certain primary agricultural products, provided the truck is a three-axel vehicle (or smaller) with no trailer (see STCC number 01 1 – field crops, 01 2 – fresh fruits or tree nuts, 01 3 - fresh vegetables, 01 91 - horticultural specialties, 01 99 - farm products, not elsewhere classified in the STCC, 01 41 – livestock and 01 92 – animal specialties);
- Fresh, unprocessed milk (see STCC number 01 421 10) and bulk fluid milk, skim milk or cream (see STCC number 20 261) carried on behalf of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board;
- Wheat, where the vehicle operator is an agent for the Ontario Wheat Producers' Marketing Board;
- Ready mixed concrete;
- Certain primary forest or raw wood materials (see STCC number 24 1); and
- Goods that are carried as part of the operator's primary business where the primary business is not carrying goods "for-hire" (e.g., a carpentry business moves materials between a hardware store and the building site in addition to performing carpentry work; the carpentry company moves the goods on behalf of the owner of the building project, but its main business is carpentry, not carrying goods "for-hire").

Section 18 does not apply to an operator described in paragraphs 2 or 3 of s. 18(2) if the operator exclusively hauls any or all of the goods listed above. However, if the operator also hauls non-excluded classes of goods, the 60-hour overtime threshold will apply.

* Certificates of Inter-corporate exemption – Under s. 3(5) of the former TTA, a trucking operation that only hauled goods on behalf of its corporate affiliates (the former TTA included a test to determine what is an affiliate), could obtain a CIE instead of an "operating license" under the TTA. The CIE was not an "operating license" under the TTA, and for this reason, the 60-hour threshold established by the former section 18 did not apply.

 Under s. 3(4) of the former TTA the description of certain goods incorporates a cross-reference to the STCC (Standard Transportation Commodity Code Tariff). Reference must therefore be made to both s. 3(4) of the TTA and to the STCC to determine whether an operator was exempted from the requirement to hold an operating license because it was transporting goods listed in s. 3(4) of the former TTA.

Application of s. 3(6) of the Former TTA – s. 18(3)

18(3) For the purposes of paragraph 2 of subsection (2), subsection 3(6) of the former Act does not apply.

Subsection 18(3) provides that for the purposes of para 2. of ss. 18(2), 3(6) of the former TTA does not apply. Under that section, operators holding a trip permit* were not required to hold an operating license under the former TTA. As a result, when determining whether the operator would be required to hold an operating license under the former TTA in accordance with para. 2 of s. 18(2), the fact that the operator may or may not have been eligible for a trip permit under the former TTA is not a relevant consideration.

* Trip permits were authorizations to carry goods “for-hire” on a trip-by-trip basis. Because the holder of a trip permit would not have an operating license, the driver of a truck operated by the holder of a trip permit would not have been covered by the 60-hour overtime threshold established by the former s. 18 of O. Reg. 285/01.

Application of s. 3(5) & (6) of the Former TTA – s. 18(4)

18(4) For the purposes of subparagraph 3 ii of subsection (2), subsections 3 (5) and (6) of the former Act do not apply.

Subsection 18(4) provides that for the purposes of determining whether subparagraph 3 ii of s. 18(2) applies, neither s. 3(5) nor s. 3(6) of the former TTA apply. In other words, whether or not the operator would have otherwise been eligible to hold a certificate of intercorporate exemption or a trip permit is irrelevant to the determination of whether the operator would be required to hold an operating license under the former TTA, if it were still in force, and consequently, whether the 60-hour threshold applies.

Exemption for Employees to Whom s. 17 Applies – s. 18(5)

18(5) Subsection (1) does not apply to an employee to whom section 17 applies.

Subsection 18(5) provides that s. 18(1) does not apply to an employee to whom s. 17 of O Reg 285/01 applies. Section 17 establishes a special overtime threshold of 50 hours for certain employees engaged in "local cartage".

Calculating Number of Hours Worked – s. 18(6)

18(6) For the purposes of this section, in computing the number of hours worked by an employee in a week, only the hours during which he or she is directly responsible for the truck shall be included.

Subsection 18(6) provides that in computing the total number of hours worked for the purpose of the overtime provisions only those hours during which the employee is directly responsible for the vehicle shall be included. The driver is not considered directly responsible for the vehicle during times when they are free to leave the vehicle (regardless of whether they actually leave it or not), such as meal periods, sleeping periods, and during extended waits for the loading or unloading of the vehicle, if it can be parked and left in the interim.

By contrast, there are times during which the driver must remain with the vehicle, for example, to move it up in a loading or unloading line, a truck inspection line, at a customs or ferry line, or to supervise or observe loading or unloading of the vehicle. In these situations, the driver is considered to be directly responsible for the vehicle and those hours will be included in the calculations for entitlement to overtime pay.

Definitions – s. 18(7)

18(7) In this section,

"commercial motor vehicle" has the same meaning as in the former Act;

"former Act" means the Truck Transportation Act;

"operate" has the same meaning as in the former Act and "operator" has a corresponding meaning;

"truck" means a commercial motor vehicle or the combination of a commercial motor vehicle and trailer or trailers drawn by it.

Commercial Motor Vehicle

Subsection 18(7) states that "commercial motor vehicle" has the same meaning as it did under the former TTA, which was as follows:

"commercial motor vehicle" means a motor vehicle with a permanently attached truck or delivery body and includes a truck tractor used for hauling purposes, but does not include an ambulance, hearse, casket wagon, fire apparatus, bus or motor vehicle commonly known as a tow truck when the tow truck is being used as a tow truck.

Former Act

Subsection 18(7) states that "former Act" means the TTA (repealed).

Operate

Subsection 18(7) states that "operate" has the same meaning as it had under the former TTA and that operator has a corresponding meaning.

The former TTA defined "operate" as follows:

"operate" means to cause to be driven on a highway and "operated has the same meaning."

"Operate" does not refer to the driving of a vehicle, but to the ultimate control of the vehicle. The operator will often be the employer, but this will not necessarily be the case in every instance.

Truck

Subsection (7) defines "truck" as follows:

"truck" means a commercial motor vehicle or the combination of a commercial motor vehicle and trailer or trailers drawn by it.

O Reg 285/01 Section 19 – Domestic Workers

Written Particulars - s. 19(1)

19(1) A householder shall provide the domestic worker with written particulars of employment respecting,

(a) the regular hours of work, including the starting and finishing times, and

(b) the hourly rate of pay.

The wage statement requirements set out in s. 12 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply to domestic workers. However, s. 19(1) of the regulation requires that an employer of a domestic worker also provide the employee with information respecting the regular hours of work, including starting and finishing times, and the hourly rate of pay. This information must be provided in writing. For a discussion of the definition of "domestic worker", please see O Reg 285/01, s.1.

Room and Board Rates - s. 19(2)

19(2) If the householder provides room or board to the domestic worker, then the following are the amounts that shall be deemed to have been paid as wages for the purposes of determining whether the minimum wage has been paid:

1. For a private room	$31.70 a week.
2. For a non-private room	$0.00
3. For board	$2.55 a meal and not more than $53.55 a week.
4. For both room and board	$85.25 a week if the room is private and $53.55 a week if the room is not private.

This subsection sets the amounts that are deemed to have been paid as wages where meals or a room are provided to the domestic worker for purposes of determining whether the minimum wage has been paid.

With respect to the provision of a room, the ordinary meaning of the words "private" and "not private" is to be applied when determining which amount to use. For example, a domestic worker's bedroom is not private if the only access to a laundry room used by the employer is through it - see Flores v Walker and Bassett Walker (July 8, 1998), 2234-97-ES (ON LRB).

Where the employer seeks to satisfy its minimum wage obligations in part through the provision of room and/or board, and accordingly pays the domestic worker minimum wage less the amounts deemed to have been paid as wages for room and/or board (as the case may be) as set out above, there is no deduction from wages, and hence no written authorization for deduction is required in relation to the room and board amounts.

In some cases, an employer may wish to make a larger deduction in respect of room and board than the amounts set out above (for example, where the domestic worker's wages exceed the minimum wage set out in the Act). However, that would have to be authorized in writing by the domestic worker.

Amounts Deemed to Wages - s. 19(3)

19(3) The amount provided in subsection (2) in respect of a room shall be deemed to have been paid as wages only if the room is,

(a) reasonably furnished and reasonably fit for human habitation;

(b) supplied with clean bed linen and towels; and

(c) reasonably accessible to proper toilet and wash-basin facilities.

This subsection mirrors ss. 5(5) (which applies generally to employees) and 25(8) (which applies to fruit, vegetable and tobacco harvesters) of O Reg 285/01.

Room and Board Not Deemed Paid - s. 19(4)

19(4) Room or board shall not be deemed to have been paid by the householder to the domestic worker as wages unless the employee has received the meals or occupied the room.

Subsection 19(4) provides that an amount for room or board shall not be deemed to have been paid to a domestic worker unless he or she has occupied the room and received the meals. This subsection mirrors ss. 5(6) (which applies generally to employees) and 25(9) (which applies to fruit, vegetable and tobacco harvesters) of O Reg 285/01.

O Reg 285/01 Section 20 – Residential Care Workers

Day - s. 20(1)

20(1) In this section,

"day" means the 24 hour period between 12:00 midnight on a day and 12:00 midnight on the next day.

This section defines "day" for the purposes of s. 20: the 24-hour period from 12 midnight to 12 midnight. An employer may use some other period for its own purposes, such as scheduling (for example, 8:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m., 10:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m., etc.). However, the employer's definition of day does not, for purposes of s. 20 of the regulation, override the definition set out in s. 20.

Payment to Care Workers - s. 20(2)

20(2) Despite section 6 and subject to subsection (3), the employer shall pay to a residential care worker for each day of work wages in a minimum amount, not less than the amount calculated by multiplying 12 hours by the worker's regular rate, which shall not be less than the minimum wage.

This section sets out the basic rule for paying residential care workers. Despite s. 6 (which stipulates when work is deemed to be performed), and subject to s. 20(3), an employer must pay a residential care worker for each day an amount equal to the worker's regular rate multiplied by 12 hours. This regular rate cannot be less than the general minimum wage. Even if the employee has worked more than 12 hours in that day, this section would not require the employer to pay the employee for more than twelve hours. But see the discussion of s. 20(4) of O Reg 285/01 below.

Payment for Actual Hours Worked - s. 20(3)

20(3) If a residential care worker, by arrangement with the employer, is free from the performance of normal and regular duties in a day and as a result works less than 12 hours, the worker shall be paid wages not less than an amount calculated by multiplying the number of hours actually worked by the worker's regular rate as mentioned in subsection (2).

This provision is similar in effect to s. 3(2) under Reg 326 to the former Employment Standards Act.

An employee may be allowed by his or her employer to be free from duties in the facility for part of the day even though during that time he or she is still required to be in the facility. As a result, he or she may end up working fewer than 12 hours in a day. If that is the case, he or she need only be paid at his or her regular rate for the actual hours worked.

Reading ss. 20(2) and (3) together, therefore, for each day, a residential care worker is entitled to be paid for the actual hours worked or for 12 hours, whichever is less. In determining what are hours of work, reference should be made to s. 22 of the regulation.

Payment for Additional Hours - s. 20(4)

20(4) In addition to the wage payable under subsection (2), the employer shall pay to a residential care worker not less than the worker's regular rate for not more than three additional hours worked in excess of 12 hours of work in a day if the worker,

(a) makes and keeps an accurate daily record of the number of hours worked in the day; and

(b) provides the record to the employer on or before the first pay day after the pay day for the pay period in which the work is performed.

This provision is similar in effect to s. 4 of O Reg 326 under the former Employment Standards Act.

Sections 20(2) and (3) establish the basic rule that the most a residential care worker is entitled to be paid at his or her regular rate is for the actual hours worked, or for 12 hours, whichever is less. However, s. 20(4) creates an exception to this basic rule: if the residential care worker works more than twelve hours in a day, he or she must be paid for those additional hours, but only up to a maximum of three hours, and only if he or she keeps an accurate daily record of hours worked and provides the record to the employer on or before the pay day following the pay day for the pay period in which the extra hours were worked. If the employee fails to provide the record to the employer within the prescribed time limits, the employer could refuse to pay for the extra hours, even if the worker has maintained accurate records on a daily basis.

Examples regarding ss. 20(3) and (4):

1. Employee works 10 hours.
    - Employee is paid for 10 hours.
2. Employee works 13 hours, and does not maintain a record of hours worked.
    - Employee is paid for 12 hours.
3. Employee works 13 hours and does maintain record of hours worked and does submit the record to the employer within the prescribed time limit.
    - Employee is paid for 13 hours.
4. Employee works 17 hours and does not maintain a record of hours worked.
    - Employee is paid for 12 hours.
5. Employee works 17 hours and does maintain record of hours worked and does submit the record to the employer within the prescribed time limit.

- Employee is paid for 15 hours (the maximum 12 hours + the maximum three extra hours).

O Reg 285/01 Section 21 – Free Time

Hours Free from Work - s. 21(1)

21(1) Despite section 18 of the Act, every employer shall give to a residential care worker not less than 36 hours in each work week, either consecutive or as may be arranged with the consent of the worker, free from the performance of any duties for the employer.

This provision is similar in effect to s. 6(1) of Reg 326 under the former Employment Standards Act.

A residential care worker is entitled to at least 36 hours off in each "work week", which is defined in s. 1 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. The worker must be completely free from any requirement to perform any duties during this time. The 36 hours can be given in one consecutive period or, if arranged with the worker, they can be divided into any number of periods of any length so long as they total 36 hours. If the worker does not consent to such an arrangement, the 36 hours must be consecutive. Note that the requirement in s. 1(3) of the Act that "agreements" be in writing does not apply to this section, since this section uses the words "arrangement" and "consent".

Request to Perform Duties During Time Off - s. 21(2)

21(2) If the residential care worker consents, at the employer's request, to do work during a free hour mentioned in subsection (1),

(a) that hour shall be added to one of the next eight 36-hour periods of free time; or

(b) the employer shall pay the residential care worker at least one and one-half times the worker's regular rate for the time spent doing work during a free hour.

This provision is similar in effect to ss. 6(2) and (3) under Reg 326 to the former Employment Standards Act.

An employer may request a worker to perform duties during one of the 36-hour periods of time-off mentioned in s. 21(1). A worker is not obliged to comply with this request. However, if the worker does consent to work, he or she does not lose the free time: under subclause (a), it is added to any one of the 36-hour free periods in the next eight work weeks. The decision as to which of those eight periods will be extended is made by the employer. In the alternative, under subclause (b), the employee may be paid a premium rate of at least one and one-half times his or her regular rate, for the time spent working during a free hour. Note that the requirement in s. 1(3) of the Act that "agreements" be in writing does not apply to this section, since this section uses the word "consents".

O Reg 285/01 Section 22 – When Work Deemed not to be Performed

22. Despite section 6, work shall be deemed not to be performed during any time that satisfies the following conditions:

1. The residential care worker spends the time at the dwelling or cottage,

i. attending to private affairs or pursuits, or

ii. resting, sleeping or eating.

2. The time is, by agreement with the employer, free from the performance of any duties.

This provision is similar in effect to s. 7 under Reg 326 to the former Employment Standards Act.

As a residential care worker actually resides at his or her place of employment, it may be unclear when he or she is working. This section defines when work is not deemed to be performed in the specific context of residential care workers, and provides that these rules apply despite s. 6 of this regulation, which set out general rules for when work is not deemed to be performed.

First, when the worker is resting, sleeping or eating, or attending to private affairs or pursuits, he or she is not deemed to be at work even if he or she is "on call" and can be called away at any time to perform duties. (There is no requirement that time falling into this category be the subject of a written agreement.)

Secondly, if the worker is on a break period free from any duties at the facility by agreement with the employer, he or she is not deemed to be at work, even if he or she remains at the facility. There must be written agreement between the worker and his or her employer as to when such break periods are to be taken – see ESA Part I, s. 1(3) and s. 1(3.1) for more information on written agreements.

O Reg 285/01 Section 23 – Exemptions

23. Parts VII (Hours of Work and Eating Periods) and VIII (Overtime Pay) and paragraph 4 of subsection 15(1) (record of hours worked) of the Act do not apply to or in respect of a residential care worker.

This provision is similar in effect to s. 8 under Reg 326 to the former Employment Standards Act.

This section provides that the hours of work and eating periods and overtime pay provisions of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 do not apply to residential care workers. Also, the requirement in paragraph 4 of s. 15(1) of the Act for an employer to keep a record of the number of hours worked by an employee in each day and week does not apply to a residential care worker. However, the employer is still required to maintain the other information about the worker set out in s. 15(1) of the Act.

O Reg 285/01 Section 24 – Application

24 Sections 25, 25.1, 26 and 27 apply to an employee who is employed on a farm to harvest fruit, vegetables or tobacco for marketing or storage.

The effect of s. 24 is to bring the employees described in this section back in for entitlements to minimum wage, the three hour rule, vacation or vacation pay and public holiday pay, even though they may fall under the “primary production” exemptions from those standards set out in s 2(2).

This provision was amended effective January 1, 2019 to include a reference to section 25.1, which provides for coverage under Part VII.1 of the ESA 2000 – the three hour rule.

Section 24 only applies to those employees who meet all the requirements of this section:

They must be employed on a farm.

The normal, ordinary meaning of "farm" is a tract of land under cultivation or used as pasture for the growing of agricultural products and for the raising of animals. However, the term can also cover other types of facilities used in the growing or raising of agricultural products, e.g. greenhouses or the insulated buildings containing frame beds for the growing of mushrooms. In order that a person be "employed on a farm" within the meaning of section 24, it is necessary that their employment duties relate to the activities surrounding and flowing out of the main enterprise of growing agricultural products and that those duties are performed in whole or at least in part on the farm in question.

They must harvest fruit, vegetables or tobacco.

Only harvesters are covered by ss. 25 through 27, and only certain harvesters, that is, those who pick fruit, vegetables or tobacco leaves. This section of the regulation does not apply to other farm workers (although other provisions in the regulation may apply; see ss. 8(e), 9(d) and 15 of O Reg 285/01).

They must be harvesting for marketing or storage.

The provisions of ss. 25 through 27 will apply if the farm is sending its products for wholesale or retail sale, or selling the products directly to the public itself. They will also apply if the products are not sold immediately, but are kept in storage (either on or off the farm). If the products are not being sold "whole", but are being sold to be processed (into jams, fruit juices, etc.) or to be canned or frozen, or (in the case of tobacco) to be made into cigarettes, these provisions will still apply, as the farm is "marketing" its products to such manufacturers.

It is possible that an employee may perform work that is covered by these sections, work that is covered by the farming exemptions in ss. 8(e) or 9(d) of O Reg 285/01, and work that is not exempt at all: for example, harvesting fruit, pruning trees and working in a store, respectively.

In such a case, ss. 25 to 27 will apply to the employee in a given week if the majority of their time in that week is spent harvesting.

O Reg 285/01 Section 25 – Minimum Wage

Rate of Pay – s. 25(1)

25(1) For each pay period, the employer shall pay to each employee an amount that is at least equal to the amount the employee would have earned at the minimum wage.

This section provides that fruit, vegetable and tobacco harvesters are entitled to be paid at least the minimum wage. In this regard, careful note should be made of the special provisions relating to minimum wage and piece work rates that apply to harvesters as set out in s. 25(2).

Piece Work Rate – ss. 25(2), (3) & (4)

25(2) The employer shall be deemed to comply with subsection (1) if employees are paid a piece work rate that is customarily and generally recognized in the area as having been set so that an employee exercising reasonable effort would, if paid such a rate, earn at least the minimum wage.

25(3) Subsection (2) does not apply in respect of an employee described in subparagraph 1 i of subsection 23.1(1) of the Act.

25(4) For the purposes of this section, "piece work rate" means a rate of pay calculated on the basis of a unit of work performed.

These sections will apply where the employer does not calculate the wages based on hours worked, but rather pays a piece rate as defined in s. 25(4), that is, a certain amount of money for each unit of work performed (for example, $X for each basket of apples picked).

The rate must be one that is generally recognized in the area in which the farm is located. There is no hard and fast rule defining what is meant by "area". An employment standards officer should consider the area generally considered by the industry as the local farming community.

The rate must be set so that an employee using reasonable effort, if paid such a rate, would earn at least the general minimum wage for the actual hours worked. Thus, a poor or less diligent worker might end up earning less than the minimum wage for hours worked; however, as long as the piece work rate is appropriate, in the sense that an employee using reasonable effort could have earned at least the minimum wage at that rate, the employer will have complied with the ESA 2000. In order to determine whether the rate is appropriate, an officer should consult with local industry representatives and neighbouring farmers, and if need be, observe a number of harvesters performing the same work under similar conditions. The proper comparison is "an employee exercising reasonable effort". The hypothetical employee exercising reasonable effort is an ordinary or typical employee, as opposed to a highly experienced or unusually productive employee.

It is important to note that, by virtue of s. 25(3), this provision only applies to workers who are entitled to receive the general minimum wage. It does not apply to a student under 18 years of age who works not more than 28 hours/week or who works during a school holiday. This does not mean that such a student cannot be paid a piece work rate. However, if the student is paid a piece work rate, the total wages received must equal at least the student minimum wage for the total hours worked, regardless of whether an employee using reasonable effort paid at the same piece work rate could have earned at least the student minimum wage. If there is a shortfall, the employer must make up the difference.

Room and Board Amounts – s. 25(5)

25(5) If an employer provides room or board to an employee, the following are the amounts which shall be deemed to have been paid by the employer to the employee as wages for the purposes of determining whether the minimum wage has been paid:

1. For serviced housing accommodation	$99.35 a week.
2. For housing accommodation	$73.30 a week.
3. For room	$31.70 if the room is private and $15.85 a week if the room is not private.
4. For board	$2.55 a meal and not more than $53.55 a week.

5. For both room and board	$85.25 a week if the room is private and $69.40 a week if the room is not private

This section sets the amount deemed to have been paid as wages where room or board is provided for the purposes of determining whether the applicable minimum wage has been paid. The employer must pay in monetary form the applicable minimum wage less the value of the above-noted maximum allowances.

Room and Board Deemed Paid – s. 25(6)

25(6) The amount provided in subsection (5) in respect of housing accommodation shall be deemed to have been paid as wages only if the accommodation,

(a) is reasonably fit for human habitation;

(b) includes a kitchen with cooking facilities;

(c) includes at least two bedrooms or a bedroom and a living room; and

(d) has its own private toilet and washing facilities.

The requirements of this definition are fairly self-evident: either a dwelling with a kitchen, private bathroom and at least two bedrooms, or one with a kitchen, private bathroom, and at least one bedroom and a living room. It must be "reasonably fit for human habitation". No hard and fast rules can be established to define this concept; an officer should determine what a reasonable person would consider fit considering factors such as the location of the farm. If the s. 25(6) requirements are not met, an employer who provides unserviced housing accommodation will not be deemed to have paid the amount set out in paragraph 2 of s. 25(5) for purposes of determining whether the employee has been paid at least the minimum wage.

Serviced Housing Deemed Paid as Wages – s. 25(7)

25(7) The amount provided in subsection (5) in respect of serviced housing accommodation shall be deemed to have been paid as wages only if,

(a) the accommodation complies with clauses 6(a) to (d); and

(b) light, heat, fuel, water, gas, or electricity are provided at the employer's expense.

This subsection sets out two requirements that must be met if an employer wishes to be deemed to have paid the amount for "serviced housing accommodation" (i.e., the amount set out in paragraph 1 of s. 25(5)) for minimum wage purposes. In accordance with s. 25(7)(a), the employer must provide accommodation that meets the requirements for "housing accommodation" as set out in s. 25(6). In addition, the employer must comply with s. 25(7)(b) by paying for the provision of any one or more of the following: light, heat, fuel, water, gas or electricity. Note: As long as the employer pays for at least one of these services, the requirement under s. 25(7)(b) will be met, even if the employee is required to pay for the remaining services.

Room Deemed Paid as Wages – s. 25(8)

25(8) The amount provided in subsection (5) in respect of a room shall be deemed to have been paid as wages only if the room is,

(a) reasonably furnished and reasonably fit for human habitation;

(b) supplied with clean bed linen and towels; and

(c) reasonably accessible to proper toilet and wash-basin facilities.

This provision mirrors s. 5(2) of O Reg 285/01 which applies to employees generally and s. 19(3) of O Reg 285/01 which applies to domestic workers; it places conditions which must be met if the employer who provides a room wishes to be deemed to have paid the amount indicated in s. 25(5) for a room for minimum wage purposes.

First, the room must be reasonably furnished; in the view of the Program, that means it must contain at least a bed, a table, a chair, and a wardrobe or chest of drawers. It must also be reasonably fit for human habitation. Further, the employer must provide clean bed linen and towels (not necessarily daily, but on a frequent enough basis to maintain cleanliness), and the employee must have reasonable access to toilet and washing facilities. Again, an officer should determine what a reasonable person would consider reasonable. Facilities just across a hall would usually be reasonable; facilities requiring a trip across a field to an outhouse may or may not, depending, for example, on the location of the farm and the norms in that particular community.

Room or Board Not Deemed Paid as Wages – s. 25(9)

25(9) Room or board shall not be deemed to have been paid by the employer to an employee as wages unless the employee has received the meals or occupied the room.

Section 25(9) provides that amounts in respect of room and board are not deemed to have been paid unless the employee has received the meals or occupied the room. This section mirrors s. 5(3) of O Reg 285/01 (which applies generally) and s. 19(4) of O Reg 285/01 (which applies to domestic workers). For purposes of s. 25(9), "room" includes housing accommodation that is not a room (at least in the ordinary sense), e.g., a barracks.

O Reg 285/01 Section 25.1 – Three Hour Rule

Special Rules Re Fruit, Vegetable and Tobacco Harvesters

25.1 Part VII.1 of the Act applies to an employee described in section 24 of this Regulation.

Section 25.1 was added to O Reg 285/01 effective January 1, 2019. This section, read in conjunction with section 24, provides that the three hour rule set out in Part VII.1, section 21.2 of the ESA 2000 applies to employees who are employed on a farm to harvest fruit, vegetables or tobacco for marketing or storage.

For more information, please see the discussion at O Reg 285/01 Section 24 and ESA Part VII.1, section 21.2.

O Reg 285/01 Section 26 – Vacation or Vacation Pay

26(1) If an employee has been employed by the employer for 13 weeks or more, the employer shall, in accordance with Part XI of the Act,

(a) give the employee a vacation with pay; or

(b) pay the employee vacation pay.

26(2) An employee entitled to vacation pay under subsection (1) earns vacation pay from the commencement of his or her employment.

26(3) Section 41 of the Act does not apply to the employee.

A harvester is only entitled to a vacation with pay after he or she has been employed for 13 weeks or more as a harvester, by the same employer. The weeks of employment need not be consecutive, but they must have been for a single employer. Once this condition is met, the employer must comply with Part XI of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 (Vacation With Pay) and either provide a vacation with pay or, where appropriate, four per cent vacation pay. If the harvester works for an employer for less than 13 weeks in a year, he or she is not entitled to vacation pay.

Vacation pay need only be paid on the wages earned while harvesting or on other non-exempt wages. For example, if an employee spends most of her time harvesting fruit, but occasionally works in the office and sometimes works in the cultivation of the plants, vacation pay would only be payable on the wages earned while harvesting and while in the office, but not on the wages earned while cultivating, as non-harvester employees working on a farm in primary production are exempted from the vacation pay provisions by s. 2(2) of this regulation.

Section 41 of the Act, under which the Director of Employment Standards may approve an agreement for an employee to forego taking vacation to which he or she is entitled, does not apply to harvesters.

O Reg 285/01 Section 27 – Public Holidays

27(1) Part X of the Act applies to an employee who has been employed by an employer for a period of 13 weeks or more.

27(2) For the purposes of this section, an employee shall be deemed to be employed in a continuous operation.

27(3) (former exemption for elect to work employees) Revoked: O. Reg. 443/08, s. 2.

Part X of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 (Public Holidays) applies to a person employed for at least 13 weeks as a harvester. In other words, unlike regular employees to whom Part X applies, harvesters are entitled to public holiday entitlements only once their employment (as a harvester) reaches 13 weeks or more. Because the words used in this section are "a period of 13 weeks or more", the 13 weeks must be consecutive. This is unlike s. 26, where the 13 weeks do not need to be consecutive - see O Reg 285/01, s. 26 for more information.

Once it is determined under s. 27(1) that the public holiday provisions apply to a harvester, the employee is deemed to be employed in a "continuous operation". The public holiday entitlements for employees in continuous operations are different than they are for other employees. See ESA Part X (Public Holidays) for further discussion.

O Reg 285/01 Section 28 – Commission Automobile Sales Sector

Application - s. 28(1)

28(1) This section applies with respect to employees who sell automobiles partially or exclusively on a commission basis.

Section 28 sets out special rules for the commission automobile sales sector.

Section 28(1) states that s. 28 applies to all employees who sell automobiles on a commission basis, whether their remuneration is entirely or only partially paid by commission.

Many car salespeople are paid on a pure commission basis. In order to ensure that employees have some income during periods of slow sales, many of these employees receive a regular draw, or advance, against commissions. Section 28 operates in this context and is intended to ensure that the minimum wage requirement of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 is met.

Pay Periods - ss. 28(2), (3)

28(2) For each pay period, the employer shall pay to each employee an amount that is at least equal to the amount the employee would have earned at the minimum wage.

28(3) A pay period shall not exceed one month.

Sections 28(2) and (3) use the term "pay period" for purposes of these special provisions respecting commission automobile sales employees. These sections require employers to pay each employee an amount at least equal to the minimum wage for each pay period, and stipulate that a pay period shall not exceed a period of one month in length.

Reconciliation Periods - ss. 28(4),(5),(6),(7)

28(4) Payments made to an employee shall be reconciled with wages earned by the employee for each reconciliation period.

28(5) No balance shall be carried forward past any reconciliation period.

28(6) The reconciliation of payments made to an employee and wages earned by an employee shall not result in any employee receiving less than the minimum wage for any pay period.

28(7) For each year, the reconciliation periods shall be:

1. January 1 - March 31.

2. April 1 - June 30.

3. July 1 - September 30.

4. October 1 - December 31.

These provisions introduce the term "reconciliation period" (as distinct from "pay period"), and prescribe the dates of four reconciliation periods a year. Where a commission automobile sales employee receives wages in the form of a draw or advance against commissions earned, the employer is required to reconcile at the end of each reconciliation period the amount advanced with the amount of commissions that the employee earned. The reconciliation cannot result in the employee being paid less than minimum wage for each pay period. Further, the balance at the end of each reconciliation period cannot be carried forward into the next reconciliation period. An employee's account must start fresh, with a balance of zero, at the beginning of each reconciliation period.

Under this reconciliation process, if the employee earns more in commissions than he or she received in draws during a particular reconciliation period, the surplus is to be paid to the employee. The surplus may not be carried forward past the end of the reconciliation period in order to offset any deficit that may accrue on the employee's account during later reconciliation periods.

Similarly, if the employee earns less in commissions than he or she received in draws during a particular reconciliation period, the "deficit" may not be carried forward past the end of the reconciliation period in order to offset commissions earned in later reconciliation periods. (Note, however, that the employer may be able to recoup the amount of the deficit - so long as it does not result in the employee earning less than minimum wage for each pay period - by making deductions from wages earned in the next reconciliation period if the employee provides written authorization to do so.)

Reconciliation and Termination - s. 28(8)

28(8) If an employee's employment terminates before the end of a reconciliation period, payments made to the employee shall be reconciled with wages earned by him or her, and subsection (6) applies.

This section requires that reconciliation take place at the end of an employee's employment (whether the employee quit or the employer terminated the employee). Because this section states that s. 28(6) applies, the reconciliation must not result in the employee receiving less than minimum wage for each pay period.

O Reg 285/01 Section 32 – Certain Approved Agreements Irrevocable

32(1) Despite subsection 17(6) of the Act, an agreement under subsection 17(2) of the Act that was made at the time of the employee's hiring and that has been approved by the Director is irrevocable unless both the employer and the employee agree to its revocation.

32(2) The Director may impose conditions in granting an approval.

Subsections 32(1) and (2) of O Reg 285/01 must be read in conjunction with subsections 141(9) and (10) of the ESA 2000. Those provisions state:

> 141(9) An employer may not require an employee who has made an agreement approved by the Director under a regulation made under paragraph 9 of subsection (1) to work more than 10 hours in a day, except in the circumstances described in section 19.
> 141(10) If an employee has agreed to work hours in excess of those referred to in clause 17(1)(a) and hours in excess of those referred to in clause 17(1)(b), the fact that the Director has approved the agreement in accordance with a regulation made under paragraph 9 of subsection (1) does not prevent the employee from revoking, in accordance with subsection 17(6), that part of the agreement dealing with the hours in excess of those referred to in clause 17(1)(b).

Together these sections provide that despite s. 17(6) of the ESA 2000 (which provides that an employee can revoke an excess daily hours of work agreement with two weeks' written notice), employees who were hired on or after September 4, 2001, and who agreed in writing at the time of hiring to work hours in excess of the daily maximum cannot unilaterally withdraw from the agreement (even with two weeks' notice), if the Director of Employment Standards approved the agreement. The agreement can be revoked only if the employer and employee both agree, in writing, to revoke it.

Note that this exception to the revocability of agreements applies only to agreements to work excess daily hours (and only if the agreement was approved by the Director of Employment Standards). These employees retain the right under s. 17(6) to revoke, with two weeks' written notice, agreements to work excess weekly hours.

Note also that pursuant to s. 141(9) employees who are party to these approved agreements to work excess daily hours cannot be required to work more than 10 hours a day except in s. 19 exceptional circumstances.

O Reg 285/01 Section 32.1 – Existing Arrangements for Long Shifts

32.1(1) Clause 17(1)(a) of the Act does not apply with respect to the class of employees each of whom,

(a) has an arrangement described in subsection (2) with an employer to whom a permit was issued under section 18 of the Employment Standards Act; and

(b) is not required by the employer to work more than 10 hours a day.

32.1(2) The arrangement,

(a) provides that the employee is willing to work, at the employer's request, more hours per day than the number of hours in his or her regular work day;

(b) was made at or before the time of the employee's hiring and before September 4,2001; and

(c) has not been revoked by the mutual consent of the employer and employee.

32.1(3) The terms of the arrangement need not be reduced to writing.

See ESA Part VII (Hours of Work and Eating Periods) for a discussion of these provisions.

Ontario Regulation 286/01 – Benefit Plans

O Reg 286/01 provides various exemptions from the prohibition in s. 44(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 against age, sex and marital status and discrimination in benefit plans; certain limited types of age, sex and marital status discrimination are specifically allowed by O Reg 286/01.

References to spouse and marital status must be read to include same-sex spouses as well as opposite-sex spouses (whether married or common-law) and same-sex marital status as well as opposite-sex marital status (whether married or common-law).

O Reg 286/01 Section 1 – Definitions

Section 1 of O Reg 286/01 provides definitions of various terms for purposes of Part XIII and the regulation only.

Each of the above terms are individually discussed below:

Actuarial Basis

"actuarial basis" means the assumptions and methods generally accepted and used by fellows of the Canadian Institute of Actuaries to establish, in relation to the contingencies of human life such as death, accident, sickness and disease, the costs of pension benefits, life insurance, disability insurance, health insurance or any other similar benefits, including their actuarial equivalents;

This term is used in O Reg 286/01 in the context of allowing certain differentiations that are "determined on an actuarial basis." It is defined as meaning the assumptions generally accepted and used by a Fellow of the Canadian Institute of Actuaries to establish the costs of benefits including the actuarial equivalents of such benefits, which costs depend upon certain contingencies such as rates of death, accident, sickness and disease, as well as interest rates, early retirement rates, salary scales and termination rates.

The policy of the Employment Standards Program is that a differentiation in a benefit plan is not "determined on an actuarial basis" merely because actuaries have "costed out" the benefits and contributions in the plan using generally accepted actuarial principles. Rather the Program holds that a differentiation is "determined on an actuarial basis" if the benefits or contributions involved are actuarially equivalent. For example, actuaries may determine that benefits in a pension plan are actuarially equivalent based on the relative remaining life expectancies of two employees retiring at different ages (e.g., an employee retiring at age 60 receives $800 a month and an otherwise similar employee retiring at age 65 receives $1,000 a month). Actuaries would determine that the total pay-outs to the two employees would be equivalent once life expectancy and other factors such as interest rates are considered.

Note: These examples are provided for illustration only. They are not necessarily actuarially sound.

Age

"age" means any age of eighteen years or more and less than 65 years;

Age is defined as any age of 18 or more, but less than 65. Therefore, an employer may, for example, exclude employees from a plan on the basis that they are less than 18 or that they are 65 or older. The prohibition in s. 44 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 regarding age differentiations applies only to employees and not to differentiations based on the age of the employees' dependants, spouses or survivors.

Benefits

"benefits" includes,

(a) an aggregate, annual, monthly or other periodic amount or the accrual of such an amount to which an employee, or the employee's beneficiaries, survivors or dependants is, are or will become entitled under a benefit plan provided on superannuation, retirement, disability, accident or sickness,

(b) any medical, hospital, nursing, drug or dental expenses or other similar amounts or expenses paid under a benefit plan, and

(c) any amounts under a benefit plan to which an employee is entitled upon termination of employment or to which any person is entitled upon the death of an employee;

This term is defined very broadly and includes both lump sum and periodic benefits. Furthermore, it includes benefits that are or will be received by the employee, his or her beneficiaries, survivors or dependants. Therefore, a violation may occur where a plan contains provisions discriminatory on the basis of age, sex or marital status of the employees, regardless of whether any action has been taken pursuant to those provisions. (But see discussion of the definition of "employer" above.) Generally, the definition in the regulation includes amounts accrued or payments to which the employee is entitled under a pension plan, retirement plan or life, health, dental or disability insurance plan.

Dependant

"dependant" means a dependant as defined in the relevant benefit plan, and "dependent child" and "dependent spouse" have corresponding meanings;

Dependant is defined by reference to the definition contained in the relevant benefit plan. But the creators of the plan do not have a carte blanche to define the term in absolutely any way they choose; the purposes of the Act and in particular the purposes of the prohibition in s. 44 limit the freedom to define. Thus, the definition cannot make a distinction on the basis of age, sex or marital status of the employees. (In other words, dependent children of married employees must be treated the same as dependent children of single employees.) Further, the definition cannot purport to give the term "dependent" a meaning that is in conflict with its ordinary or commonly understood sense.

Disability Benefit Plan

"disability benefit plan" means a benefit plan, that provides benefits to an employee for loss of income because of sickness, accident or disability;

This provision defines a disability plan and includes both short-term disability plans (payable for less than 52 weeks) and long-term disability plans. Some pension plans will contain a benefit called a "disability pension". It is important to determine whether such a plan is a pension or a disability plan within the meaning of O Reg 286/01, since different exemptions apply to the two types of plans. In order for a "disability pension" to be considered a pension plan, it must be evident that the disability benefit is part of or ancillary to a pension plan, and that the disability benefit is payable on the employee's retirement or termination of employment.

Former Act

"former Act" means the Employment Standards Act, RSO 1990, c E.14;

References in this Regulation to "former Act" are defined to mean the former Employment Standards Act, RSO 1990, c E.14.

Health Benefit Plan

"health benefit plan" means a benefit plan that provides benefits to an employee, a spouse or a dependant of an employee or deceased employee for medical, hospital, nursing, drug or dental expenses or other similar expenses;

This definition includes benefits such as dental plans and plans that pay some or all of the costs associated with such things as prescription medications, massage, physiotherapy or chiropractic treatments, hearing aids, prosthetic limbs, etc.

Life Insurance Plan

"life insurance plan" means a benefit plan that, on the employee's death, provides a lump sum or periodic payments to the employee's beneficiary, survivor or dependant, and includes accidental death and dismemberment insurance;

This definition states that a life insurance plan is one that provides a death benefit, whether payable periodically or as a lump sum, to the employee's beneficiary, survivor or dependant, and includes dismemberment insurance, which is payable for loss of limbs.

Long-Term Disability Benefit Plan

"long-term disability benefit plan" means a disability benefit plan under which the payments or benefits to an employee are payable for a period of not less than 52 weeks or until recovery, retirement or death, whichever period is shorter;

This term is defined to include any disability benefit plan under which benefits may be paid for a period of not less than 52 weeks, or until recovery, retirement or death, whichever is the lesser.

Marital Status

"marital status" includes,

(a) the condition of being an unmarried person who is supporting, in whole or in part, a dependent child or children, and

(b) common law status as defined in the relevant benefit plan;

This term would apply to persons who are legally married (whether to a person of the same or opposite sex) but is also defined to include single, unmarried parents who are supporting dependent children and persons in a common law relationship as that relationship is defined in the benefit plan. However, the creators of the plan do not have a carte blanche to define the term in absolutely any way they choose; the purposes of the Act and in particular the purposes of the prohibition in s. 44 and the reference to common law relationships in the "marital status" definition itself impose some limit on the freedom to define. Since one of those purposes was to prevent discrimination against employees in common law spousal relationships in employer-provided benefit plans, a plan definition cannot purport to define "common law status" in such a way as to effectively exclude persons in what would ordinarily be understood to be in a common law spousal relationship from the protection of the prohibition.

Since the Ontario Court of Appeal decision in Halpern v Canada (Attorney General), 2003 CanLII 26403 (ON CA), in which the Court ruled that the exclusion of same sex couples from marriage was inconsistent with the equality guarantees in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, was not saved by s. 1 ("reasonable limits") and was, therefore, unconstitutional, "common law status as defined in the relevant benefit plan" must include same-sex as well as opposite-sex common law couples.

Based on the common elements of definitions of "spouse" which appear in many Ontario statutes, the Employment Standards Program has adopted a policy under which persons are considered to be common law spouses if they are not legally married to each other and have been living together in a conjugal relationship continuously for a period of not less than three years, or living together in a conjugal relationship of some permanence if they are the natural or adoptive parents of a child. The employer may, of course, adopt a more liberal definition of common law spouse than the one set out in this interpretation.

Any exemptions from Part XIII for employees on the basis of marital status must be applied to legally married employees whether married to someone of the same or opposite sex, to employees in common law marriages (with reference to the above-noted definition and whether in a relationship with a person of the same or opposite sex) and to single, unmarried employees supporting a dependent child or children. Alternatively, if a benefit plan is provided to married employees (which includes legal and common law marriages), it must also be provided to single, unmarried employees supporting dependent children.

Normal Pensionable Date

"normal pensionable date" means the date specified in a pension plan at which an employee can retire from his or her employment and receive the regular pension benefit provided by the pension plan, whether the date is the day upon which the employee attains a given age or upon which he or she has completed a given period of employment;

This is defined as the date on which an employee can retire and receive a regular (i.e., full) pension as provided in the plan. The normal pensionable age can be determined with reference to age or to years of service.

Pension Plan

"pension plan" means a benefit plan that provides benefits to a participating employee or to his or her spouse or dependant, on the employee's retirement or termination of employment, out of contributions made by the employer or the employee or both and the investment income, gains, losses and expenses on or from those contributions, and includes,

(a) a unit-benefit pension plan, under which the benefits are determined with reference to a percentage of salary or wages and length of employment or a specified period of employment,

(b) a defined benefit pension plan, under which the benefits are determined as a fixed amount and with reference to length of employment or a specified period of employment,

(c) a money purchase pension plan, under which the benefits are determined with reference to the accumulated amount of the contributions paid by or for the credit of an employee, and the investment income, gains, losses and expenses on or from those contributions,

(d) a profit sharing pension plan, under which payments or contributions by an employer are determined by reference to profits or out of profits from the employer's business, and the benefits are determined with reference to the accumulated amount of contributions paid by or for the credit of an employee and the investment income, gains, losses and expenses on or from those contributions, and

(e) a composite pension plan, which is any combination of the pension plans described in clauses (a) to (d);

A pension plan is defined very broadly to include a plan that provides benefits upon retirement (e.g., a superannuation plan) or termination to an employee or his or her spouse or dependant. The definition continues to specifically include various types of pension plans, such as:

1. Unit benefit plan: an example of this would be a plan that would provide a pension of 60 per cent of the average of the employee's final five years of earnings;
2. Defined benefit pension plan: for example, a plan that provides $1,000 a month in benefits after 25 years of service;
3. Money purchase pension plan: where the employer and/or the employee agree to contribute a specified amount to the plan and the benefits are determined with reference to the assets in the plan; this is also known as a defined contribution plan;
4. Profit sharing plan: a form of defined contribution plan where the employer contributes to the plan amounts that are calculated in accordance with the profits of the business; the benefits are determined with reference to the assets in the plan; and
5. Composite pension plan: a combination of any or all of the above types of pension plans.

It should be noted that some types of pension plans are included in the O Reg 286/01 definition but are not pensions for purposes of the Pension Benefits Act, RSO 1990, c P.8. These types of pensions are:

1. A profit sharing plan;
2. A group RRSP;
3. An "employee pay all" plan where the employer makes no contributions; and
4. A retiring allowance as defined in the Income Tax Act, RSC 1985, c 1 (5th Supp).

Sex

"sex" includes,

(a) a distinction between employees that excludes an employee from a benefit under a benefit plan or gives an employee a preference to a benefit under a benefit plan because the employee is or is not a head of household, principal or primary wage earner or other similar condition, and

(b) a distinction between employees in a benefit plan because of the pregnancy of a female employee;

As noted in the discussion of s. 44 of the Act, sex is defined as including a distinction based on pregnancy and distinctions based on whether an employee is the head of a household or a primary wage earner.

Short-Term Disability Benefit Plan

"short-term disability benefit plan" means a disability benefit plan other than a long-term disability benefit plan;

This term is defined to include any disability benefit plan that does not meet the criteria set out in the regulation for a "long-term disability benefit plan" (i.e., a plan under which benefits are payable for a period of at least 52 weeks or until recovery, retirement or death, whichever period is shorter. (See the definition of "long-term disability plan" above.)

Spouse

"spouse" means a spouse as defined in the relevant benefit plan;

This term is defined with reference to the definition of "spouse" contained in a relevant benefit plan. However, the creators of the plan do not have a carte blanche to define the term in absolutely any way they choose; the purposes of the Act and in particular the purposes of the prohibition in s. 44 and the reference to common law relationships in the "marital status" definition impose some limit on the freedom to define. Since one of those purposes was to prevent discrimination against employees in common law spousal relationships in employer-provided benefit plans, a plan definition cannot purport to define "spouse" in such a way as effectively to exclude persons in what would ordinarily be understood to be a common law spousal relationship from the protection of the prohibition.

Since the Halpern v Canada (Attorney General) decision, "spouse as defined in the relevant benefit plan" must include persons in same-sex as well as opposite-sex relationships.

Based on the common elements of definitions of "spouse" which appear in many Ontario statutes, the Employment Standards Program has adopted a policy under which persons are considered to be common law spouses if they are not legally married to each other and living together in a conjugal relationship continuously for a period of not less than three years, or living together in a conjugal relationship of some permanence if they are the natural or adoptive parents of a child. The employer may, of course, adopt a more liberal definition of common law spouse than the one set out in this interpretation.

Voluntary Additional Contribution

"voluntary additional contribution" means an additional contribution by an employee under a pension plan, except a contribution whose payment, under the terms of the plan, obliges the employer to make a concurrent additional contribution.

This is a voluntary contribution that an employee may make to his or her pension plan without obliging the employer to make a corresponding contribution.

O Reg 286/01 Section 2 – Pension Plans, Permitted Differences Re Employee’s Sex

Pension Plans, Permitted Differentiation Re Employee's Sex - s. 2(1)

2(1) The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply in respect of a differentiation in the rates of contribution by an employer to a pension plan if the differentiation is made on an actuarial basis because of an employee's sex and in order to provide equal benefits under the plan.

Section 2(1) of O Reg 286/01 allows employers to differentiate on the basis of sex in contributions to a pension plan if two requirements are met:

1. The differentiation is made on an actuarial basis; and
2. The differentiation is made in order to provide equal benefits.

Actuarial tables indicate that women, as a group, tend to live longer than men; because of this, if male and female employees are to be provided by the employer with equal monthly (or other periodic) pension benefits, the employer will have to make greater contributions to the pension plan in respect of female employees than it will have to make in respect of male employees. The exemption allows this to the extent that actuaries have determined that it is necessary to do in order to equalize pension benefits as between male and female employees.

Application of s. 44(1), Employment Prior to 1987 - s. 2(2)

2(2) The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply in respect of a differentiation made under a pension plan if,

(a) the Pension Benefits Act applies to the pension plan; and

(b) the differentiation is made,

i. because of an employee's sex, and

ii. in respect of employment before January 1, 1987, other than employment that is described in clause 52(3)(b) or (c) of the Pension Benefits Act.

This is a transitional provision designed to prevent the retroactive application of the current exemptions contained in s. 2 of O Reg 286/01 to Pension Benefits Act, RSO 1990, c P.8 ("PBA") plans, insofar as pre-1987 employment is concerned. It must be read in conjunction with s. 2(4), which effectively defines "differentiation" for purposes of s. 2(2) [and also s. 2(3)] as a differentiation that was permitted under the version of the Employment Standards Act that existed in the 1980s by the benefits regulation RRO 1980, Reg 282 prior to the amendment of that regulation in 1988.

The effect of s. 2(2) is that the exemptions from the prohibition against discrimination on the basis of sex previously set out in s. 2 of the former RRO 1980, Reg 282, prior to its amendment by O Reg 443/88, continue to apply to pension plans governed by the PBA insofar as pre-1987 employment is concerned, except where such employment was covered by the PBA's own sex discrimination provisions, contained in ss. 52(3)(b) and (c) of the PBA. The PBA's sex discrimination provisions cover post-1986 employment, but also cover pre-1987 employment if it is dealt with in pension plans established after 1986 or in plan amendments made after 1986.

Application of s. 44(1), Employment Before July 12, 1988 - s. 2(3)

2(3) The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply in respect of a differentiation made under a pension plan if,

(a) the Pension Benefits Act does not apply to the pension plan; and

(b) the differentiation is made,

(i) because of an employee's sex, and

(ii) in respect of employment before July 12, 1988.

This is a transitional provision designed to prevent the retroactive application of the current exemptions contained in s. 2 of O Reg 286/01 to plans to which the PBA does not apply, insofar as employment before July 12, 1988, is concerned. Plans not covered by the PBA include profit sharing plans, group registered retirement savings plans, "employee pay all" plans and "retiring allowances" as defined in the Income Tax Act, RSC 1985, c 1 (5th Supp). Like s. 2(2), s. 2(3) must be read in conjunction with s. 2(4), which effectively defines "differentiation" for the purposes of s. 2(2) [and also s. 2(3)] as a differentiation that was permitted under the version of the Employment Standards Act, RSO 1980, c 137 that existed in the 1980s by the benefits regulation RRO 1980, Reg 282 prior to the amendment of that regulation in 1988.

This means that exemptions from the prohibition against discrimination in pension plans on the basis of sex set out in s. 2 of the former RRO 1980, Reg 282 (prior to its amendment by O Reg 443/88) continue to apply to pension plans not governed by the PBA in regards to differentiation in those plans on the basis of sex insofar as pre-July 12, 1988, employment is concerned. Note that even though an employer makes a contribution or pays a benefit on or after July 12, 1988, it will be subject to the old rules regarding sex discrimination to the extent that it relates to employment prior to July 12, 1988.

Differentiation - s. 2(4)

2(4) In subsections (2) and (3),

"differentiation" means a type of differentiation to which the prohibition in the predecessor of subsection 33(2) of the former Act did not apply on December 31, 1987.

This section defines "differentiation" for purposes of ss. 2(2) and 2(3) of O Reg 286/01 only. "Differentiation" then means the types of differentiations on the basis of sex, in pension plans, permitted by the predecessor to s. 2 of RRO 1980, Reg 282 under the former Employment Standards Act, RSO 1980, c 137. That predecessor provision read as follows:

2. The prohibition in subsection 34(2) of the Act does not apply to,

(a) monthly or other periodic amounts provided under a money purchase, profit sharing or composite pension plan where such amounts differentiate between employees because of sex and such differentiation is determined upon an actuarial basis;

(b) benefits provided under additional voluntary employee-pay-all pension plans or voluntary additional contribution features of pension plans where the benefits differentiate between employees because of sex and such differentiation is determined upon an actuarial basis;

(c) the conversion of normal pension benefits under an option contained in a pension plan where the adjustment of benefits differentiate between employees because of sex and such differentiation is determined upon an actuarial basis;

(d) the conversion of normal pension benefits because of the retirement of an employee before or after his normal retirement date where the adjustment of the benefits differentiate between employees because of sex and such differentiation is determined upon an actuarial basis; and

(e) a differentiation in the rates of contribution of an employer to a pension plan where such differentiation is made on an actuarial basis because of the sex of the employee and in order to provide equal benefits under the plan.

Subsection 34(2) of the version of the Employment Standards Act, RSO 1980, c 137 is a predecessor provision to s. 33(2) of the Employment Standards Act, RSO 1990, c E.14 and to s. 44 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

O Reg 286/01 Section 3 — Pension Plans, Permitted Differentiation Re Marital Status

Pension Plans, Permitted Differentiation Re Marital Status - s. 3(1)

3(1) The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply to,

(a) an increase in benefits payable to an employee under a pension plan that provides for the increased benefits because the employee has a dependent spouse;

(b) a differentiation under a pension plan because of marital status, if the differentiation is made for the purpose of providing benefits that are payable periodically during the joint lives of an employee who is entitled to the pension and the employee's spouse, and thereafter during the life of the survivor of them, as provided in the pension plan; and

(c) a differentiation in the rates of contribution of an employer to a defined benefit or a unit-benefit pension plan that provides an increase in benefits to an employee because of marital status, if the rates of contribution of the employer differentiate between employees because of marital status.

O Reg 286/01 permits three types of differentiation on the basis of marital status in pension plans:

1. Increased benefits payable to employees with dependent spouses.
2. The payment of joint and survivor pensions to employees and their spouses. A "joint and survivor pension" is a pension that is payable as long as either of the two spouses is alive. This type of pension is now required by the Pension Benefits Act, RSO 1990, c P.8 ("PBA") under the circumstances described in s. 3(3) of O Reg 286/01. This exemption is not applicable if the plan contravenes the PBA's provisions regarding joint and survivor pensions.
3. Employer contributions to a defined benefit or unit benefit pension plan that differentiate because of marital status where the differentiation is made in order to provide increased benefits to employees because of their "marital status", because they have a spouse or, are unmarried but supporting in whole or part a dependent child or children.
    - See the discussion of the definition of "marital status", which includes the condition of being an unmarried person who is supporting in whole or part a dependent child or children, at s. 1(j) of O Reg 286/01. This exemption is not applicable to increased employer contributions to a money purchase or profit sharing pension plan.

Commuted Benefits - s. 3(2)

3(2) For the purposes of clause (1)(b), benefits are deemed to be payable periodically despite the fact that they are commuted, if the amount of the annual benefit payable to the employee at the normal pensionable date is not more than 2 per cent of the Year's Maximum Pensionable Earnings, as defined in the Canada Pension Plan in the year that the employee terminated the employment.

The exemption in s. 3(1)(b) for joint and survivor pensions only applies if the pension benefit is payable periodically, that is, in regular instalments rather than in a lump sum. However, s. 3(2) is a "de minimis" provision which states that the exemption in s. 3(1)(b) will still apply if the amount is "commuted", that is, converted to one lump sum in a situation where the periodic payments would otherwise be very small. The benchmark figure used for commutation is that the annual benefit, before commutation, must be not more than two per cent of the Year's Maximum Pensionable Earnings ("YMPE"), as defined in the Canada Pension Plan, in the year that the employee terminated his or her employment. The YMPE is raised each year according to the cost of living.

When Prohibition Does Not Apply - s. 3(3)

3(3) Clause (1)(b) does not apply if the Pension Benefits Act applies to the pension plan and the plan contravenes the provisions of that Act respecting joint and survivor pensions.

This section provides that the exemption in s. 3(1)(b) of O Reg 286/01 from the prohibition against marital status discrimination in s. 44(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 does not apply if the pension plan contravenes the provision of the PBA regarding joint and survivor pensions. Section 44 of the PBA provides, subject to certain limited exceptions, that if the employee has a spouse on the date the first instalment of the pension becomes due, and is not living separate and apart from that spouse, the pension must be a joint and survivor pension, payable as long as either spouse is alive. The value of the pension payable to the surviving spouse must not be less than 60 per cent of the pension paid to the employee.

Spouse is defined in the PBA as two persons who:

- Are legally married to each other or who are not married to each other but who either have been living together in a conjugal relationship continuously for not less than three years; or
- Have been living together in a conjugal relationship of some permanence, if they are the natural or adoptive parents of a child.

O Reg 286/01 Section 4 – Pension Plans, Permitted Differentiation Re Employee's Age

Pension Plans, Permitted Differentiation Re Employee's Age - s. 4(1)

4(1) The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply in respect of a differentiation that is made on an actuarial basis because of an employee's age and that relates to,

(a) the rates of voluntary additional contributions to a pension plan;

(b) the rates of contributions that an employee is required to make to a money purchase or profit sharing pension plan;

(c) the rates of contributions by an employer to a unit-benefit or defined benefit pension plan, unless the Pension Benefits Act applies to the plan and the plan contravenes the provisions of that Act respecting age differentiation;

(d) the rates of contributions by an employer to a money purchase or profit sharing pension plan,

i. when the employer transfers the assets from a unit-benefit or defined benefit pension plan to the money purchase or profit sharing pension plan, and

ii. if the differentiation is made in order to protect employees' pension benefits from being adversely affected by the transfer; or

(e) benefits payable to employees, if the Pension Benefits Act,

i. permits the differentiation, or

ii. does not apply to the pension plan.

Sections 4(1)(a)-(e) allows certain age differentiations in pension plans if those differentiations are determined on an actuarial basis. The term "actuarial basis" is defined in s. 1 of O Reg 286/01 as the assumptions used by actuaries to establish the costs of various benefits, including the actuarial equivalents of those benefits, with reference to contingencies such as death, accident, sickness or disease. See the discussion of the definition of the term "actuarial basis" at s. 1(a) of O Reg 286/01 for further information.

It is the policy of the Program that a differentiation in a pension plan is determined on an actuarial basis if the differentiation in contributions to, or benefits paid, under the plan are actuarially equivalent. Assumptions generally used by actuaries with respect to pension plans are set out in the Survey of Actuarial Assumptions and Funded Status, as follows:

- Interest;
- Salary scale;
- Yearly Maximum Pensionable Earnings increase (this is an annual figure determined under the Canada Pension Plan);
- Retirement age;
- Disability rate;
- Termination rate; and
- Mortality rate.

Section 4(1)(a)-(e), therefore, allows five types of age differentiations in a pension plan if these differentiations are "determined on an actuarial basis":

1. Differentiations in the rate of voluntary additional contributions of an employee to a pension plan.

"Voluntary additional contribution" is defined in s. 1 of O Reg 286/01 as a voluntary contribution that an employee may make to a pension plan without obligating the employer to make a corresponding contribution.

2. Differentiations in the rates of mandatory employee contributions to a money purchase or profit sharing pension plan.

The exemption refers to contributions that are mandatory once the employee is enrolled in the plan. It does not refer to "required" contributions in the sense that enrolment in the plan is compulsory.

3. Differentiations in employer contributions to a unit benefit or defined benefit pension plan unless the plan is governed by the Pension Benefits Act, RSO 1990, c P.8 ("PBA") and the plan contravenes the provisions of that Act regarding age differentiation.

This exemption is therefore conditional on the plan complying with the PBA's provisions regarding age differentiation. The major provisions of the PBA in this regard are:

- Section 31 - membership in a plan is available after two years' continuous employment (age no longer a factor);
- Section 35(1) - the normal retirement age shall not be more than 66;
- Section 35(4) - an employee who continues to work past the normal retirement date may, subject to certain "age-neutral" caps, continue to accrue benefits until actual retirement (age is no longer a factor);
- Section 37 - a deferred pension entitlement is created after two years' membership in the plan (age is no longer a factor, except with respect to benefits accrued prior to 1987).

4. Differentiations in employer contributions to a money purchase or profit sharing pension plan when the employer is switching from a unit-benefit or defined benefit plan, if the differentiations are to protect employees' pension benefits from being adversely affected by the transfer.

There is an increasing trend to defined contribution plans, in which the employer agrees to a certain level of contributions rather than to paying a certain level of benefits. When switching from a unit-benefit or defined benefit to a defined contribution plan, it may be necessary for the employer to make a one-time, lump sum "top-up" to the credit of older employees, to prevent their pensions from being adversely affected by the transition. The exemption allows this differentiation provided that the "top-up" has been actuarially calculated.

5. Differentiations in pension benefits, provided that if the PBA applies to the plan, the differentiations are permitted by the PBA.

This exemption allows age differentiations in non-PBA pension plans if they are determined on an actuarial basis, and age differentiations in PBA plans if they are determined on an actuarial basis and not in contravention of the PBA's provisions regarding age differentiation. The major provisions of the PBA regarding age differentiation are set out above, in the discussion of s. 4(1)(c).

Transitional Provision - s. 4(2)

4(2) Despite subsection (1), the requirement that a differentiation be determined on an actuarial basis does not apply to a differentiation described in clause (1)(a), (b) or (e) that is made in respect of the employment of a person before July 12, 1988.

This is a transitional provision designed to ensure that the requirement that age differentiations in pension plans be determined on an actuarial basis (which came into effect on July 12, 1988) does not have retroactive effect. Therefore, age differentiations set out in s. 4(1)(a), (b) and (e) need not be determined on an actuarial basis if they relate to that portion of the employee's employment that occurred before July 12, 1988. The provision that corresponded to s. 4(1)(c) in the benefits regulation in force prior to July 12, 1988, already required that particular differentiation to be on an actuarial basis, so it was not necessary to include this section in the transitional provision. Section 4(1)(d) is not included in the transitional provision because it did not introduce any new constraint, but simply assisted the employer in preserving the "status quo" when switching from one type of plan to another.

Application of s. 44(1) - s. 4(3)

4(3) The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply with respect to a provision in a pension plan that makes a differentiation because of age in establishing a normal pensionable date for voluntary retirees or an early voluntary retirement date or age, unless

(a) the Pension Benefits Act applies to the plan; and

(b) the plan contravenes the provisions of that Act respecting normal retirement dates and early retirement pensions.

This exemption to the general prohibition against age differentiations in pension plans under s. 44(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, unlike the exemptions created in s. 4(1) of O Reg 286/01, is not based on actuarial equivalents. Section 4(3) allows a differentiation based on age in a pension plan if the plan allows for voluntary retirement before the age of 65. Without this section, a pension plan in which contributions or benefits varied in accordance with an early (voluntary) retirement age of 60, for example, would not be permissible unless the differentiation was determined "on an actuarial basis". It is important to note that this exception only applies to voluntary retirement, not to mandatory retirement. Furthermore, in the case of PBA plans, the exception only applies if the plan does not contravene the provisions of the PBA regarding normal retirement dates and early retirement pensions. The PBA provisions regarding normal retirement dates are found in s. 35 of the PBA, which provides that the normal retirement date shall not be later than the date on which the employee reaches age 66, and that an employee who works past the normal retirement date may be entitled to continue to accrue benefits until actual retirement, subject to any limits on service credits or benefit amounts set out in the plan. The PBA provisions regarding early retirement are found in s. 41 of the PBA, which provides that an employee who is within 10 years of attaining the normal retirement date and terminates employment after 1987, and has been a member of the plan for at least two years, is entitled to elect to receive an early retirement pension.

O Reg 286/01 Section 5 – Life Insurance Plans, Permitted Differentiation Re Employee's Sex

Section 5 of O Reg 286/01 provides that s. 44(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 does not apply to two types of differentiation made on the basis of sex in a life insurance plan.

Differentiations in Employee Contributions - s. 5(a)

5. The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply to,

(a) differentiation in the contributions of an employee to a voluntary employee-pay-all life insurance plan that is made on an actuarial basis because of sex;

Section 5(a) allows a differentiation in respect of employee contributions to a voluntary employee-pay-all life insurance plan, where the differentiation is determined on an actuarial basis. According to current actuarial tables, women tend to live longer than men. Therefore, life insurance premiums are higher for men than for women of the same age (because men are likely to die earlier and, therefore, with a fewer number of premiums having been paid on their behalf). The exemption in s. 5(a) allows for actuarially-based differentiations in life insurance plans in which participation by the employee is voluntary and in which the employee pays all of the premiums. Therefore, such plans may have greater contribution rates for male employees than for female employees, if the difference is determined according to the actuarial tables.

Differentiations in Employer Contributions - s. 5(b)

5. The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply to,

(b) a differentiation in the contributions of an employer to a life insurance plan that is made on an actuarial basis because of an employee's sex and in order to provide equal benefits under the plan.

Section 5(b) allows differentiations in respect of employer contributions to a life insurance plan where the differentiation is based on sex if it is made on an actuarial basis and in order to provide equivalent benefits. This type of differentiation might be made where the employer wishes to ensure that male and female employees receive the same life insurance benefits.

O Reg 286/01 Section 6 – Life Insurance Plans, Permitted Differentiation Re Marital Status

Life Insurance Plans, Permitted Differentiation Re Marital Status - s. 6(1)

Section 6(1) provides that the prohibition against differentiation in s. 44(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 does not apply to three types of differentiations made on the basis of marital status in a life insurance plan.

Benefits Payable to Surviving Spouse - s. 6(1)(a)

6(1) The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply to,

(a) benefits under a life insurance plan that are payable periodically to the surviving spouse of a deceased employee for the life of the surviving spouse or until the surviving spouse becomes a spouse of another person

Section 6(1)(a) states that benefits under a life insurance plan that are payable periodically to the surviving spouse of a deceased employee are exempt from the prohibition against differentiations on the basis of marital status in s. 44(1) of the Act. This exemption applies where the benefits are to the deceased employee's surviving spouse for his or her life, or until he or she becomes the spouse of another person. Also see s. 6(2) of O Reg 286/01, discussed below, which provides that this provision also applies to benefits of less than $25/month that have been commuted to a lump sum benefit.

Benefits Payable to Employee on Death of Spouse - s. 6(1)(b)

6(1) The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply to,

(b) a benefit under a life insurance plan that is payable to an employee on the death of his or her spouse;

Section 6(1)(b) provides that a life insurance plan may differentiate on the basis of marital status where the plan provides for benefits payable to an employee upon the death of his or her spouse. The purpose of the exemption is to allow an employee to insure his or her spouse's life through the employer's plan.

Differentiations in Employer or Employee Contributions - s. 6(1)(c)

6(1) The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply to,

(c) a differentiation in the contributions of an employee or an employer to a life insurance plan, if,

(i) the differentiation is made because of marital status, and

(ii) the life insurance plan provides benefits that are payable periodically to an employee's surviving spouse.

Section 6(1)(c) permits a life insurance plan to differentiate on the basis of marital status with respect to employer or employee contributions where the plan provides periodic benefits to the surviving spouse of the employee. This means that a plan may have higher employer or employee contributions in order to provide periodic survivor benefits to a deceased employee's spouse.

This exemption has no "life-time or until the person becomes a spouse" condition, and it does not have a commutation exclusion for small amounts - see s. 6(2) of O Reg 286/01, below. This exemption could apply in respect of contributions to any plan that provided for a periodic life insurance benefit payment, of any duration, to the employee's surviving spouse.

Differentiations Not Allowed Under s. 6(1)

The following are examples of provisions that would not be permissible in a life insurance plan, because they discriminate on the basis of marital status and are not exempted by s. 6(1):

- A provision stating that a medical examination is not necessary if optional insurance is elected within 60 days of marriage;
- A plan that provides for single employees' lump sum life insurance equal to two times salary, but for employees with a spouse one times salary plus a periodic survivor insurance income benefit. The survivor income benefit would be permissible under s. 61(a), but the differentiation in lump sum benefits on the basis of marital status would not be permissible.

Commuted Benefits - s. 6(2)

6(2) Clause (1)(a) also applies to benefits of less than $25 a month that have been commuted to a lump sum payment.

Section 6(2) states that the benefits under an insurance plan described in s. 6(1)(a) will be deemed to be payable periodically, notwithstanding that they have been commuted to a lump sum and would have been less than $25 a month if they had not been commuted. Commutation involves the transformation of periodic benefits into one lump sum benefit. It is done by determining the current "lump sum" value of the periodic payments, using actuarial assumptions respecting such matters as life expectancy and interest rates.

O Reg 286/01 Section 7 – Life Insurance Plans, Permitted Differentiation Re Age

Differentiations in Benefits or Employee Contributions (Voluntary Employee-Pay-All Plans Only) - s. 7(a)

7. The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply to,

(a) a differentiation, made on an actuarial basis, because of an employee's age, in benefits or contributions under a voluntary employee-pay-all life insurance plan;

Section 7(a) provides that a voluntary, employee-pay-all life insurance plan (i.e., a plan where the employees may choose to participate but to which the employer does not make any contributions) may differentiate between employees on the basis of age on an actuarial basis with respect to both benefits and contributions. In other words, such a plan may provide benefits or require contributions that vary on an actuarial basis according to age. For example, the employee may contribute $100 a year toward his or her life insurance and receive benefits that vary on an actuarial basis according to his or her age. Alternatively, such a plan could provide $50,000 in insurance for each employee and the employees' contributions would vary on an actuarial basis according to their age.

Differentiations in Employer Contributions - s. 7(b)

7. The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply to,

(b) a differentiation, made on an actuarial basis because of an employee's age and in order to provide equal benefits under the plan, in the employer's contributions to a life insurance plan.

Section 7(b) provides that employer contributions to a life insurance plan may differentiate with respect to an employee's age if the differentiation is made on an actuarial basis in order to provide equal benefits under the plan. As a result, an employer may make increased contributions for older employees, provided these increases are based on actuarial tables, in order to provide an actuarially equivalent life insurance benefit under the plan to all employees.

Example of Differentiation not Allowed Under s. 7

An example of a provision that would not be permissible in a life insurance plan, because it differentiates on the basis of age and is not exempted by s. 7 would be a provision in an employer-funded plan that provides a lump sum survivor benefit that varies in amount according to the number of years left to normal retirement age at the time of the employee's death.

O Reg 286/01 Section 8 – Disability Benefit Plans, Permitted Differentiation Re Age, Sex or Leave of Absence

Section 8 allows two types of differentiations in disability insurance plans.

Differentiation in Employee Contributions in Voluntary Employee-Pay-All Plans - s. 8(a)

8. The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply to,

(a) a differentiation, made on an actuarial basis because of an employee's age or sex, in the rate of contributions of an employee to a voluntary employee-pay-all short or long-term disability benefit plan;

Section 8(a) allows a disability plan that is a voluntary, employee-pay-all plan, to differentiate in employee contributions on the basis of age or sex, on an actuarial basis. The purpose of the exemption is to permit this kind of plan to provide for increased contributions by employees in age or sex categories associated with higher disability insurance premiums. It is important to note that the exemption in s. 8(a) does not allow for a differentiation in benefits in such a plan, unlike the corresponding exemption for voluntary employee-pay-all life insurance plans in s. 7(a) of O Reg 286/01.

Differentiation in Employer Contributions - s. 8(b)

8. The prohibition in subsection 44(1) of the Act does not apply to,

(b) a differentiation, made on an actuarial basis because of an employee's age or sex and in order to provide equal benefits under the plan, in the rate of contributions of an employer to a short or long-term disability benefit plan.

Section 8(b) allows a disability plan to differentiate in the rate of employer contributions to the plan on the basis of age or sex, on an actuarial basis, in order to provide equal benefits under the plan. (This exemption is similar to the corresponding exemption created in s. 7(b) with respect to life insurance plans.) In other words, where the employer provides a disability plan for which the employer makes contributions, the employer may make increased contributions for employees of a certain age or sex, provided that it results in the employees receiving actuarially equivalent benefits under the plan.

Former Exemption Respecting Female Employees on Leave

Section 8(c) of RRO 1990, Reg 321 under the former Employment Standards Act contained the following provision:

8. The prohibition in subsection 33(2) of the Act does not apply to,

(c) the exclusion from benefits under a short or long term disability insurance plan of a female employee during the period of leave-of-absence to which she s entitled under part XI of the Act, or any greater period of leave-of-absence that she has applied for under any term of a contract of employment, oral or written, express or implied, that prevails over Part XI of the Act.

This provision explicitly permitted a benefit plan to deny disability benefits to a female employee on pregnancy or parental leave or on a leave that constituted a "greater benefit" than a leave under Part XI of the former Employment Standards Act.

The provision thus provided an exception to the prohibition against discrimination in the provision of benefits plans on the basis of sex, by allowing disability plans to deny short-or long-term benefits to female employees on pregnancy and parental leave.

In Brooks v Canada Safeway Ltd., [1989] 1 SCR 1219, 1989 CanLII 96 (SCC), a 1989 case decided under Manitoba human rights legislation, the Supreme Court of Canada held that because discrimination on the basis of pregnancy is discrimination on the basis of sex, it is discriminatory to deny women short-term or long-term disability benefits during that portion of a leave that they are unable to work for reasons related to pregnancy and childbirth, as these constituted valid health-related reasons for absence from work. As a result, it would constitute discrimination on the basis of sex to deny a female employee disability benefits for that part of the leave.

As s. 8(c) of the former RRO 1990, Reg 321 may have been perceived as inconsistent with the Supreme Court of Canada's reasoning in Brooks v Canada Safeway Ltd., no corresponding provision was incorporated into O Reg 286/01.

The position of the Employment Practices Branch is that where a disability benefit plan is provided by or through the employer, the reasoning in Brooks v Canada Safeway Ltd. will apply so as to give a female employee who is on pregnancy or parental leave a right to short-term or long-term disability benefits during that portion of her leave in which she is unable to work for reasons of health related to pregnancy or childbirth. (Note, however, that where an employer provides disability benefits to employees on leaves other than Part XIV leaves, s. 10 of O Reg 286/01 will apply to require that such benefits be provided to both female and male employees on a Part XIV leave and for the entire period of the leave.)

For other court decisions respecting the right to disability benefits for female employees during the "health-related" portion of a pregnancy leave, see Alberta Hospital Association v Parcels, 1992 CanLII 6106 (AB QB) and O.S.S.T.F., District 34 v Barton (1996), 91 OAC 253 (ON SC).

O Reg 286/01 Section 9 – Health Benefit Plans, Permitted Differentiation Re Sex or Marital Status

Differentiation in Employee Contributions on the Basis of Sex (Voluntary Employee-Pay-All Plans Only) - s. 9(a)

9. The prohibition in subsection 44 (1) of the Act does not apply to,

(a) a differentiation, made on an actuarial basis because of sex, in the rate of contributions of an employee to a voluntary employee-pay-all health benefit plan;

Section 9(a) allows a health benefit plan in which participation is voluntary and to which the employer does not contribute to set employee contribution rates that vary on an actuarial basis because of sex. Note that the exemption does not allow the benefits to vary according to sex.

Differentiation in Employer Contributions on the Basis of Sex - s. 9(b)

9. The prohibition in subsection 44 (1) of the Act does not apply to,

(b) a differentiation, made on an actuarial basis because of an employee's sex and in order to provide equal benefits under the plan, in the rate of contributions of an employer to a health benefit plan;

Section 9(b) allows a health benefit plan to set employer contribution rates that vary on the basis of employees' sex if such differentiations are made on an actuarial basis in order to provide equal benefits. In other words, this exemption allows an employer's (but not an employee's) contribution rates to vary on the basis of sex if the contribution rates are calculated according to actuarial tables.

Differentiation in Benefits and Employee Contributions on the Basis of Marital Status - s. 9(c)

9. The prohibition in subsection 44 (1) of the Act does not apply to,

(c) a differentiation in an employee's benefits or contributions under a health benefit plan because of marital status, if the differentiation is made in order to provide benefits for the employee's spouse or dependent child;

Section 9(c) allows employers to provide a health benefit plan that differentiates in benefits or employee contributions on the basis of marital status, in order to provide benefits to the employee's spouse or dependent child. However, it would be a violation of Part XIII if the plan made a distinction between employees with marital status. For example, this exemption does not allow an employer to provide a health benefit plan that pays benefits for the health expenses of the children of employees with a spouse but not the children of single employees (who are defined as having marital status under O Reg 286/01).

Differentiation in Employer Contributions on the Basis of Marital Status - s. 9(d)

9. The prohibition in subsection 44 (1) of the Act does not apply to,

(d) a differentiation in the rate of contributions of an employer to a health benefit plan, where there are specified premium rates and where that differentiation for employees having marital status and for employees without marital status is on the same proportional basis.

Section 9(d) allows a differentiation in a health benefit plan with respect to employer contributions where there are specified premium rates for employees having marital status and different premium rates for employees without marital status, and the differentiation in the employer contributions is on the same proportional basis.

An example of this type of agreement would be an extended health plan where single employee coverage costs $X a month, but family coverage costs $Y a month, a higher amount. Provided that the employer's subsidy is proportionally the same, i.e., 50 per cent of X and 50 per cent of Y, it will not be in violation of

s. 44 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 despite the fact that the employer is contributing more in terms of dollars and cents on behalf of the employees who have marital status.

Examples of Differentiations Not Allowed Under s. 9

A health benefit plan may not discriminate on the basis of age, sex or marital status, except as provided in s. 9 of O Reg 286/01. Some examples of discrimination in a health benefit plan that would not be permitted are:

- A provision excluding reimbursement for the cost of birth control pills for female employees. However, if a male birth control pill were available, it would not be a violation of Part XIII if neither male nor female employees were covered for birth control pills;
- A provision discriminating between employees on the basis of age in benefits or contributions; and
- A provision denying extended health benefits to female employees with spouses but not to male employees with spouses (on the theory, say, that many female employees have husbands who work and who could obtain family coverage under their employer's plans).

O Reg 286/01 Section 10 – Participation in Benefit Plan During Leave of Absence

10(1) A benefit plan to which Part XIII of the Act applies shall not disentitle an employee who is on a leave of absence described in subsection (2) from continuing to participate in the benefit plan during the leave of absence, if the benefit plan entitles an employee who is on a leave of absence other than the one described in subsection (2) to continue to participate.

(2) This section applies to,

(a) a leave of absence under Part XIV of the Act; and

(b) any longer leave of absence that the employee has applied for under a provision in the contract of employment that prevails under subsection 5(2) of the Act.

Section 10 provides that if employees on a leave other than a leave under ESA Part XIV, e.g., educational leave, are entitled to participate in a benefit plan, then employees on a leave under Part XIV (i.e., pregnancy, parental, sick, bereavement, family responsibility, family medical, family caregiver, organ donor, critical illness, personal emergency , child death, crime-related child disappearance, domestic or sexual violence, emergency or reservist leave), or on any longer leave of absence that constitutes a greater benefit under ESA Part III, s. 5(2) must be entitled to participate in the plan.

Under ESA Part XIV, ss. 51(1), (2) and (3), an employee on any type of Part XIV leave, except reservist leave (i.e. pregnancy, parental, sick, bereavement, family responsibility, family medical, family caregiver, organ donor, personal emergency, domestic or sexual violence, critical illness, child death, crime-related child disappearance or emergency leave) already has the statutory right to continue to participate in pension plans, life insurance plans, accidental death plans, extended health plans and dental plans during the leave. Section 10 therefore is redundant to these types of plans with respect to employees on pregnancy, parental, sick, bereavement, family responsibility, family medical, family caregiver, domestic or sexual violence, critical illness, organ donor, personal emergency, child death, crime-related child disappearance or emergency leave because employees on such leaves have a right under the ESA 2000 to participate in them even if employees on other types of leave do not.

However, the rules are different with respect to reservist leave. An employee on reservist leave does not have the “automatic” right under the ESA 2000 to participate in pension plans, life insurance plans, accidental death plans, extended health plans and dental plans during their leave. However, where an employer provides other types of benefit plans other than the plans enumerated in ESA Part XIV, s. 51(2), to employees on a leave other than a leave under Part XIV (e.g., education leave), then s. 10 would operate to entitle employees on a reservist leave to participate in those other plans.

Undoubtedly, the most important type of benefit plan not mentioned in ESA Part XIV, s. 51 is a disability benefit plan. Note that s. 51 also refers to "prescribed" types of benefit plans prescribed by the regulations but no other types of benefit plans have been prescribed. However, it should be noted that the Employment Practices Branch takes the position, based on the Supreme Court of Canada decision in Brooks v Canada Safeway Ltd., [1989] 1 SCR 1219, 1989 CanLII 96 (SCC), that where a disability benefit plan is provided by or through the employer, a female employee who is on pregnancy or parental leave will have a right to short-term or long-term disability benefits during that portion of their leave in which they are unable to work for reasons of health related to pregnancy or childbirth.

O Reg 286/01 Section 11 – Former Exclusion From Certain Benefit Plans

11. If an employee was excluded from participating in a benefit plan or in a benefit under a benefit plan before November 1, 1975, and ceased to be so excluded on that date, the employee is entitled to participate as of that date.

This section applies to an employee who was excluded from participation in a benefit plan by reason of a provision in the plan that became impermissible on November 1, 1975, the date when Part X of the Employment Standards Act, 1974, SO 1974, c 112, the original predecessor to Part XIII, came into force. Under s. 11, such an employee is entitled to participate in the plan from the time that the predecessor began to apply to the plan.

O Reg 286/01 Section 12 — Compliance Not to Be Achieved by Reductions

12. No employer shall reduce the employer’s contributions to or the benefits under a health benefit plan in causing the plan to comply with Part XIII of the Act and this Regulation, or with Part X of the former Act or a predecessor of that Part and the related regulations.

Section 12 states that no employer may reduce either its contributions to or employee benefits under a plan in order to comply with Part XIII and O Reg 286/01 or Part X of the former Employment Standards Act and its related regulations or its predecessors. This is similar to the provision in s. 42(3) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, which prohibits an employer from reducing the pay of an employee in order to comply with the equal pay provisions of the Act. An example of a reduction prohibited by s. 12 of O Reg 286/01 would be where the employer reduced the benefits of male employees under a health insurance plan to those received by females, instead of increasing the benefits paid to females, in order to provide equal benefits to male and female employees.

O Reg 286/01 Section 13 – Change to Normal Pensionable Date Under Certain Plans

13. Despite the application of Part X of the former Act or a predecessor of that Part to a pension plan that was in existence on November 1, 1975, if the normal pensionable date of a class of employees was increased in order to have the plan comply with that Part, an employee who is a member of that class is entitled to pension benefits on the normal pensionable date as provided by the pension plan before it was increased.

This section states that where an employee has his or her normal pensionable rate increased in order to comply with the original predecessor to Part XIII of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, the employee shall be entitled to his or her pension benefits on the normal pensionable date as it was before it was increased. An example of the type of situation that this provision was meant to address would be a pension plan that, prior to November 1, 1975, had a normal pensionable date of the day on which the employee reached age 60 for females and a normal pensionable date of the day on which the employee reached age 65 for males. In order to comply with the predecessor to Part XIII when it first became law, the plan might have been amended to provide a normal pensionable date of the day on which the employee reached age 65 for both males and females. However, according to s. 13, the females in such a plan would retain the option to retire at age 60 with a full pension. Section 13 must, however, be read as subject to the Pension Benefits Act, RSO 1990, c P.8, which prevails over other legislation in the event of a conflict and which, subject to certain exceptions, prohibits differentiation on the basis of sex in a pension plan.

Ontario Regulation 287/01 – Building Services Providers

This regulation supplements the building services providers provisions in the Employment Standards Act, 2000 by identifying prescribed services for a building and prescribed employees of building services providers. The regulation also sets out what information building services providers must give about their employees for the purposes of ESA Part XIX, s. 77(1).

O Reg 287/01 Section 1 – Prescribed Services for a Building

Parking Garages and Parking Lots - s. 1 subpara. 1(i)

1. The following are prescribed as services for a building for the purposes of the definition of "building services" in subsection 1 (1) of the Act:

1. Services that are intended to relate only to the building and its occupants and visitors with respect to,

i. a parking garage or parking lot,

Section 1 of O Reg 287/01 prescribes "services that are intended to relate only to the building and its occupants and visitors with respect to a parking garage or parking lot" as "building services". This would include, for example, an underground parking garage that is part of an office tower or a shopping centre parking lot.

Concession Stands - s. 1 subpara. 1(ii)

1. The following are prescribed as services for a building for the purposes of the definition of "building services" in subsection 1 (1) of the Act:

1. Services that are intended to relate only to the building and its occupants and visitors with respect to,

ii. a concession stand.

Section 1 of O Reg 287/01 prescribes "services that are intended to relate only to the building and its occupants and visitors with respect to concession stands" as "building services". A concession stand is typically a variety, food or souvenir stand located inside premises such as a stadium, a museum, an arena or a public transportation facility. Persons using the premises may have to pay to enter and use the premises, such as in a stadium, a museum, a public transportation facility (e.g., the Toronto Transit Commission), or they may be able to enter and use the premises without paying admission, such as in the case of an airport. In contrast to food courts, virtually all of the persons using the concession stand services will be persons who are utilizing the building as a whole (rather than for the food services provided there) and as a result, such services will typically "relate only to the building and its occupants and visitors". For the most part, no one would pay to enter the Rogers Centre (formerly the Sky Dome) for example, for the sole purpose of purchasing a hot dog at one of the concession stands within the Rogers Centre. Similarly, the concession stand in a TTC subway station is intended for the use of persons using the subway facilities. Virtually no one would take an escalator down into a TTC subway station for the sole reason of buying a chocolate bar, regardless of whether the stand was located outside or inside the point at which one has to pay a fare to enter. Thus, the concession stand services are utilized by persons who invariably are also using the building as a whole, whereas a food court restaurant is typically used by member of the public at large, even though they have no other business to conduct in the building.

Property Management Services - s. 1 para. 2

1. The following are prescribed as services for a building for the purposes of the definition of "building services" in subsection 1 (1) of the Act:

2. Property management services that are intended to relate only to the building.

Section 1 of O Reg 287/01 has prescribed "property management services that are intended to relate only to the building" as "building services". Property management companies are typically contracted by the owner of a building such as a condominium or apartment building to provide cleaning and security services, etc. The property management company will then often enter into sub-contracts with cleaning and security companies, whose employees will perform the necessary services. Pursuant to s. 1 of O Reg 287/01, although such services are provided indirectly by the property management company, they are included in the definition of "building services". This is consistent with the definition of "building services provider" in s. 1(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, which includes any person who provides building services for a premises, including the owner or manager of the premises.

It is the Program's view that under O Reg 287/01, "property management services that are intended to relate only to the building" must refer to managing the property rather than "working" it. As a result, "property management services" would not extend to the direct performance of manual services. More particularly, it would not extend to the direct performance of manual services such as maintenance (which services, in and of themselves, would not be considered "building services") although it would include supervising and paying for the provision of maintenance services.

On the other hand, the administrative services (e.g., payroll services, accounts payable) performed by the employees of the property management company may be considered to be "property management services" on the basis that they are integral to the provision of the property management services. However, as per O Reg 287/01, such services must "relate only to the building". This means that they must pertain only to the employer's management of the building in question and not to other aspects of the employer's operation (e.g., another building). For example, if a payroll clerk processed payroll only for those employees working at the building, they would be captured as employees providing property management services "that relate only to the building" whereas such an employee who also provided payroll services in respect of the employer's employees working at other premises as well, would not.

O Reg 287/01 Section 2 – Prescribed Employees

Exemptions from Part XV - s. 2(1)

Section 2(1) sets out the exemptions in which a new provider is not required to comply with the termination and severance provisions in ESA Part XV.

Employees Actively Working Before Changeover Date - s. 2(1) para. 1

2(1) The following are prescribed for the purposes of clause 75(4) (b) of the Act as employees with respect to whom a new provider is not required to comply with Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) of the Act:

1. An employee whose work, before the changeover date, included providing building services at the premises, but who did not perform his or her job duties primarily at those premises during the 13 weeks before the changeover date.

This category of employees consists of those employees who actively worked for the replaced provider by providing building services at the premises prior to the changeover date but whose job duties were not performed primarily at the building premises affected by the change-over of providers during the 13-week period prior to the changeover date. This includes employees who were on lay-off, if they continued to perform job duties at the premises even though their hours and/or pay were reduced. In other words, this exemption will apply if the building premises affected by the change in providers is not the employee's principal place of work with the replaced provider during the 13-week period prior to the changeover date.

It is important to note that the issue of whether the employee works for employers other than the replaced provider (either on a part-time or a full-time basis) is irrelevant in determining whether the employee's job duties are performed primarily at the premises. In determining whether or not the site affected by the change in provider is the place where the employee's job duties are primarily performed, the officer should look at the breakdown of the hours that the employee spends at each location working for the replaced provider.

It is not necessary that the majority of the hours spent working for the provider be at the premises in question in order for the "performed primarily at the premises" test to be met. What is necessary is that the premises be the main place of work with that provider in that the employee has a significant attachment to the premises in question in terms of the number of hours spent there every week (i.e., the employee spends significantly more time at that site than working at other sites for the replaced provider).

It should be noted that if the exemption applies, the employee may still be entitled to termination and severance pay from the replaced provider.

Example 1

In determining whether or not the site affected by the change is the place where the employee's job duties were primarily performed for the replaced provider, the employment standards officer should look at the breakdown of the hours that the employee spent at each location working for that provider.

An employee who works for an office cleaning company has the following weekly schedule:

- Building A: 24 hours
- Building B: 10 hours
- Building C: 10 hours

It is evident that Building A was the employee's principal place of work with the replaced provider. The employee spent the majority (55 per cent) of their time at Building A. The exemption in O Reg 287/01, s. 2(1) paragraph 1 would therefore only apply if there were a change in contract at either Building B or Building C, as the employee did not perform their job duties primarily at those premises.

Example 2

An employee who works at a number of buildings for the same provider but does not spend the majority of their time working at any one of these buildings has the following weekly schedule:

- Building A: 10 hours
- Building B: 4 hours

- Building C: 20 hours
- Building D: 10 hours

In this case, the employee spent most of their time at Building C, but not the majority (i.e., less than 50 per cent) of their time there. However, Building C will be considered the employee's primary place of work because the employee had a significant attachment to the site in question in terms of the number of hours spent there every week (i.e., they spent significantly more hours working there for the replaced provider than working at other sites for that provider). The exemption in O Reg 287/01, s. 2(1) paragraph 1 would therefore apply only if there were a change in contract at Building A, B or D as the employee did not perform their job duties primarily at those premises.

Example 3

Some employees may not have any premises as their principal place of work.

An employee has the following weekly schedule:

- Building A: 10 hours
- Building B: 8 hours
- Building C: 10 hours
- Building D: 6 hours
- Building E: 10 hours

In this example, the employee does not work the majority of hours at any one building site (i.e., less than 50 per cent) and does not have any significant attachment to any one building site in particular (i.e., theydid not spend significantly more hours working at any one building for the provider than other buildings). Therefore, the exemption in O Reg 287/01, s. 2(1) paragraph 1 would apply if there were a change in contract at any of Buildings A, B, C, D or E as the employee did not perform their job duties primarily at any of those premises.

However, the exemption would not apply if, for example, Buildings A, B, and C were all part of one premises (e.g., an office complex consisting of three towers) and there was a change in contract with respect to the provision of building services at any of those three towers. In that case, the employee would be working 64 per cent of their hours at the premises and would be considered to perform their job duties primarily at the premises consisting of Buildings A, B and C.

Employees Not Actively at Work Before Changeover Date - s. 2(1) para. 2

2(1) The following are prescribed for the purposes of clause 75(4) (b) of the Act as employees with respect to whom a new provider is not required to comply with Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) of the Act:

2. An employee whose work included providing building services at the premises, but who,

i. was not actively at work immediately before the changeover date, and

ii. did not perform his or her job duties primarily at the premises during the most recent 13 weeks of active employment.

This category is essentially an extension of category 1 to exempt those employees providing building services at the premises who were not actively at work with the replaced provider immediately before the changeover date, and whose job duties were not performed primarily at the site during their most recent 13 weeks of active employment.

Example

- January 1, 2015, to March 30, 2015 - employee performed some job duties at premises A, but duties for the replaced provider were primarily performed at other premises
- April 1, 2015, to June 1, 2015 - employee put on full lay-off (employee works 0 hours per week)
- June 1, 2015 - changeover date for contract at Premises A (employee not hired by new provider)

The employee was not actively at work immediately before the changeover date of June 1, 2015. In addition, the employee had not been primarily providing services at premises A in their most recent 13 weeks of active employment from January 1 to March 30, 20015. As a result, the new provider is exempt under O Reg 287/01, s. 2(1) paragraph 2 from the requirement to comply with the termination and severance provisions of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 with respect to such employees.

As with category 1, if the exemption applies, the employee may still be entitled to termination and severance pay from the replaced provider.

Employees Not Working For at Least 13 Weeks - s. 2(1) para. 3

2(1) The following are prescribed for the purposes of clause 75(4) (b) of the Act as employees with respect to whom a new provider is not required to comply with Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) of the Act:

3. An employee who did not perform his or her job duties at the premises for at least 13 weeks during the 26-week period before the changeover date.

This is the third category of employees in regards to whom the new provider is exempt from the obligations set out in ESA Part XIX, s. 75(2). The exemption applies to those employees who have not worked at the premises for at least 13 weeks in the 26 weeks preceding the changeover date - the day on which the new provider begins to provide services at the premises.

One of the purposes of this category is to prevent replaced providers from transferring their less desirable and sometimes senior employees to the site in question upon learning that their contract will not be renewed. This may happen where the replaced provider is attempting to off-load responsibility for their termination and severance pay onto the new provider.

However, O Reg 287/01, s. 2(1) paragraph 3must be read with reference to ss. 2(3) and (4) which state as follows:

2(3) The 26-week period referred to in paragraph 3 of subsection (1) shall be calculated without including any period during which the provision of building services at the premises was temporarily discontinued.

2(4) With respect to an employee's services at the premises, the 26-week period referred to in paragraph 3 of subsection (1) shall be calculated without including any period during which the employee was on a leave of absence under Part XIV of the Act.

Section 2(3) states that in determining the employee's services at the premises, the 26-week period in O Reg 287/01, s. 2(1) paragraph 3 shall be calculated without including any period during which the provision of building services at the premises was temporarily discontinued.

For example, where a university cafeteria service closes for the summer, the 26-week period prior to the changeover date may be extended by the number of weeks during which the cafeteria was closed.

Example 1

- September 1, 2015 - Company A awarded contract for food services at cafeteria
- June 1, 2016 - Cafeteria closed for 12 weeks (June 1 - September 1, 2015)
- September 1, 2016 - Company B wins contract for food services (changeover date)

The 26-week period in O Reg 287/01, s. 2(1) paragraph 3 will begin 26 weeks prior to May 31, 2016, because it will not include the 12 weeks that the cafeteria was closed. The exemption in O Reg 287/01, s. 2(1) paragraph 3 would therefore apply to any of Company A's employees who did not work at the university cafeteria for at least 13 weeks during the 26-week period prior to May 31.

Section 2(4) states that in determining the employee's services at the premises, the 26-week period in O Reg 287/01, s. 2(1) paragraph 301 shall be calculated without including any period during which the employee was on leave of absence under ESA Part XIV. Thus the 26-week period for such an employee may be extended by the time spent on leave.

Example 2

- January 1, 2015 - employee commences employment with replaced provider
- January 1, 2016 - employee commences 52-week combined pregnancy and parental leave (note that a combined pregnancy and parental leave may be longer than 52 weeks, up to a maximum entitlement of 78 weeks)
- December 31, 2016 - employee returns to work
- March 1, 2016 - changeover date to new provider (employee not hired)

The employee had technically worked only eight weeks in the 26 weeks prior to the changeover date. However, because the 52 weeks of leave are not included in the calculation of the 26-week period, it would be extended to 78 weeks prior to the changeover date (i.e., 18 weeks prior to the commencement of the employee's leave under ESA Part XIV). Consequently, the exemption in O Reg 287/01, s. 2(1) paragraph 3 would apply if the employee had not worked at the premises for at least five of the 18 weeks prior to commencing her leave.

Despite the fact that ESA Part XIV, s. 53 provides that an employee who takes a leave under ESA Part XIV is entitled to be reinstated after the leave, the new provider is not the employer referred to in s. 53 if an employee was on leave as of the changeover date, unless the new provider hires that employee within 13 weeks of that date. It is the new provider's choice whether it wishes to hire such an employee and, if so, what terms it wishes to offer. If the new provider does not hire the employee, the new provider must comply with the employee’s termination and severance entitlements under ESA Part XIX, s. 75(2)

As with the exemptions in O Reg 287/01, s. 2(1) paragraphs 1 and 2, if the exemption applies, the employee may still be entitled to termination and severance pay from the replaced provider.

Employee Who Refuses Reasonable Offer - s. 2(1) para. 4

2(1) The following are prescribed for the purposes of clause 75(4) (b) of the Act as employees with respect to whom a new provider is not required to comply with Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) of the Act:

4. An employee who refuses an offer of employment with the new provider that is reasonable in the circumstances.

This paragraph creates an exemption with respect to those employees of the replaced provider that refuse a reasonable offer of employment with the new provider. It must be read in conjunction with s. 2(2), discussed below.

What Constitutes Reasonable Offer - s. 2(2)

2(2) For the purposes of paragraph 4 of subsection (1), if the new provider requested information under subsection 77 (1) of the Act, the terms and conditions of the employee's employment with the replaced provider on the date of the request are one of the circumstances that shall be taken into account in determining whether the offer is reasonable.

This category consists of employees who refuse an offer of employment with the new provider that is reasonable in the circumstances. In accordance with s. 2(2), the terms and conditions of the employee's employment with the replaced provider on the date of the request for information under ESA Part XIX, s. 77(1) are taken into consideration in determining whether the offer is reasonable. A comparison may therefore be made to such terms and conditions of the employment offered by the new provider to the remuneration, benefits, hours and schedule of work degree of responsibility, etc., with the replaced provider. See also O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) para. 5 for a discussion of what constitutes reasonable alternate employment in the context of exemptions from the notice of termination provisions.

However, the terms and conditions of employment with the replaced provider as of the date the information is requested under ESA Part XIX, s. 77(1) are not the only circumstances to be considered in determining whether the offer is reasonable. For example, it may be appropriate to consider wage increases scheduled to take effect after the request date. On the other hand, the terms and conditions of employment of other employees of the new provider or the new provider's ability to pay would clearly not be relevant in determining whether the offer was reasonable.

One question that may arise is whether the exemption regarding the refusal of a reasonable offer of employment applies if the new provider makes the offer some time after it begins to provide services at the premises. It is the Program's view that the exemption will apply if a reasonable offer (having regard to the terms and conditions the employee had with the previous employer) is made within the 13 weeks after the changeover date (i.e. the day on which the new provider began servicing the premises) and is refused.

As with the exemptions in s. 2(1) paragraphs 1, 2 and 3, if the exemption in paragraph 4 applies, the employee is still entitled to termination and severance pay from the replaced provider.

26 Week Period - ss. 2(3), (4)

2(3) The 26-week period referred to in paragraph 3 of subsection (1) shall be calculated without including any period during which the provision of building services at the premises was temporarily discontinued.

2(4) With respect to an employee's services at the premises, the 26-week period referred to in paragraph 3 of subsection (1) shall be calculated without including any period during which the employee was on a leave of absence under Part XIV of the Act.

Sections 2(3) and (4) are discussed in detail above in s. 2(1).

Changeover Date - s. 2(5)

2(5) In this section,

"changeover date" means the day the new provider begins to provide services at the premises.

The changeover date is accordingly not the date the new provider is advised that they are the successful bidder, unless the new provider also begins to provide services at the premises on that same date.

The changeover date is relevant to the exemptions in O Reg 287/01, s. 2 from a new provider's obligations in ESA Part XIX, s. 75 to comply with the termination and severance provisions in ESA Part XV. The exemptions are discussed in further detail in s. 2(1) above.

O Reg 287/01 Section 3 – Information About Employees

Information Request by Possible New Provider - s. 3(1)

3(1) The following is the information about each employee that the owner or manager of premises shall give for the purposes of subsection 77(1) of the Act:

1. The employee's job classification or job description.

2. The wage rate actually paid to the employee.

3. A description of any benefits provided to the employee, including the cost of each benefit and the benefit period to which the cost relates.

4. The number of hours that the employee works in a regular work day and in a regular work week.

5. The date on which the provider hired the employee.

6. Any period of employment attributed to the provider under section 10 of the Act.

7. The number of weeks that the employee worked at the premises during the 26 weeks before the request date.

8. A statement indicating whether either of the following subparagraphs applies to the employee:

i. The employee's work, before the request date, included providing building services at the premises, but the employee did not perform his or her job duties primarily at those premises during the 13 weeks before the request date.

ii. The employee's work included providing building services at the premises, but the employee was not actively at work immediately before the request date, and did not perform his or her job duties primarily at the premises during the most recent 13 weeks of active employment.

The above information requirements are reasonably straightforward.

1. Job classification or job description

Job duties as well as indication of the person to whom the employee reports.

2. Wage rates actually paid to the employee

This is the employee's "regular rate" as defined in s. 1(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. The words "actually paid to the employee" are intended to prevent the replaced provider from attempting to intimidate potential bidders by inflating the amount of the potential Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) liability through such devices as a retroactive pay increase, which the employees did not receive prior to the information request.

3. Benefits

This information is required because Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) of the Act requires that the employer continue the employer's share of the benefit plan contributions during the period of notice set out in s. 57 in accordance with s. 60(1)(c). If notice is not given, then the amount of the benefit plan contributions that would have been paid by the employer during the notice period is included in the pay in lieu of notice owing to the employee in accordance with s. 61(1)(b).

4. Hours worked in a "regular work day" and a "regular work week" as defined in s. 1(1) of the Act

See ESA Part I, s. 1 for a discussion of these terms.

As termination pay and severance pay are calculated based on the employee's wages in a regular non-overtime work week, the information on hours worked in a "regular work day" and "regular work week" provides a potential new provider or the new provider with the necessary information to estimate the extent of the potential liability and subsequently, to determine the actual amount of the Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) entitlements for employees of the replaced provider. The daily hours information could also assist the new provider in determining whether contemplated offers of work would be considered reasonable (e.g., where the new provider will be establishing a different shift schedule).

Paragraph 4 of s. 3(1) of O Reg 287/01 must be read in conjunction with s. 3(3) of the regulation which states that paragraph 4 does not apply if the employee's hours of work vary from week to week:

3(3) If the employee's hours of work vary from week to week, paragraph 4 of subsection (1) does not apply and the owner or manager shall, instead, provide the number of the employee's non-overtime hours for each week that the employee worked during the 13 weeks before the request date.

See the discussion of s. 3(3) below.

5. Date on which the previous provider hired the employee

This information will also assist a potential and actual new provider to determine the amount of termination and severance pay liability. (Note that this information will have to be read in conjunction with the information required under paragraph 6 regarding previous periods of employment attributed to the replaced provider.)

6. Any period of employment attributed to the replaced provider under s. 10 of the Act

This provides that information must be given concerning the periods of employment attributed to the replaced provider under s. 10 of the Act and the provisions of the former Employment Standards Act dealing with continuity of employment and building services providers. See ESA Part IV, s. 9(4) for more detailed information.

It is important to note, however, that this requirement is limited to information regarding those periods of employment attributed to the replaced provider by the s. 10 continuity of employment provisions in the Act and predecessors to that section. This provision does not require the building owner or manager to provide information regarding separate periods of employment with a replaced provider which are treated as one period of employment in accordance with s. 8 of O Reg 288/01 for the purposes of notice of termination/termination pay or information or information regarding separate periods of employment with the replaced provider which are added together for the purposes of calculating entitlements to severance pay. As a result, this information may not accurately reflect the employee's "actual" period of employment with the replaced provider for the purposes of either notice of termination or severance obligations. In addition, the information required does not specify whether the employee falls into any of the exemptions from notice or severance set out in O Reg 288/01. Thus, to some extent, the entity bidding on the contract will have to estimate the extent of the potential termination and severance pay liability.

7. The number of weeks the employee worked at the premises with the previous provider during the 26 weeks before the "request date"

The "request date" is the date on which information is requested under s. 77(1) or (2) of the Act. This information is required so that the potential new provider may determine whether the successful new provider would be exempt from s. 75(1) of the Act by virtue of paragraph 3 of s. 2(1) of O Reg 287/01. See O Reg 287/01, s. 2 for further discussion of this exemption.

Paragraph 7 of s. 3(1) of O Reg 287/01 must be read in conjunction with ss. 3(4) and 3(5) of the regulation which state:

3(4) The 26-week period referred to in paragraph 7 of subsection (1) shall be calculated without including any period during which the provision of building services at the premises was temporarily discontinued.

3(5) The 26-week period referred to in paragraph 7 of subsection (1) shall be calculated without including any period during which the employee was on a leave of absence under Part XIV of the Act.

8. Statement regarding employees

The final piece of information required under paragraph 8 of ss. 3(1) of O Reg 287/01 is very similar to that which describes those categories of employees in respect of whom the new provider is not required to comply with Part XV of the Act. However, the information requirement in paragraph 8 of s. 3(1) concerns the work done by the employees in the 13 weeks prior to the request date whereas the exemptions in paragraphs 1 and 2 of s. 2(1) concern the work done by the employees in the 13 weeks preceding the changeover date. Therefore, the information provided under s. 3(1) may assist the bidder to identify employees in respect of whom it would have no termination and severance obligations, but it would not definitively identify those to whom the exemption would apply.

Information Request by New Provider - s. 3(2)

3(2) The following is the information about each employee that the owner or manager of the premises shall give for the purposes of subsection 77 (2) of the Act:

1. The information listed in paragraphs 1 to 8 of subsection (1).

2. The employee's name, residential address and telephone number.

The new provider of services is consequently entitled to request additional and updated information regarding employees of the previous provider who are performing work at the premises. All information, including the information listed in paragraphs 1 to 8 of s. 3(1) which may have been provided at the time the new provider was bidding on the contract, must be accurate as of the date of the subsequent request under s. 77(2).

Paragraph 2 of s. 3(2) of O Reg 287/01 also allows the new provider to request the names, addresses and telephone numbers of the employees engaged in providing services at the premises on the date the request for information is made.

During the period from the time the new provider is awarded the contract to the "changeover date" of the contract, when the new provider begins to provide services at the building premises, the employees' names, residential addresses and telephone numbers can be used to:

- Contact employees to make job offers; or
- Arrange payment of termination pay and/or severance pay if applicable directly to the employees in question if they are terminated at the time of the "changeover date".

This subsection ensures that the new provider has access to the necessary information to determine the actual Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) entitlements for employees of the replaced provider. If an owner or manager of the premises fails to provide the required information, an employment standards officer could issue a compliance order under s. 108 and/or a notice of contravention under s. 113. There is no authority however for issuing a compensation order under s. 104 in favour of a new building services provider where the new provider suffers damages as a result of a failure on the part of the owner or manager to provide information under s. 77(2).

Non-Overtime Hours - s. 3(3)

3(3) If the employee's hours of work vary from week to week, paragraph 4 of subsection (1) does not apply and the owner or manager shall, instead, provide the number of the employee's non-overtime hours for each week that the employee worked during the 13 weeks before the request date.

Section 3(3) provides that if the employee's hours of work vary from week to week, the owner or manager shall provide the employee's non-overtime hours for each week worked in the 13 weeks before the "request date".

This requirement provides a potential new provider or the new provider with the necessary information to estimate the extent of the potential liability for Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) entitlements of replaced provider employees who do not have a regular work week, by averaging out each employee's earnings over the 13 weeks prior to the request date.

Note that if such employees were not hired by the new provider, the new provider would subsequently be required to average the employee's regular wages earned per week over the weeks worked in the twelve-week period prior to the changeover date in order to calculate the actual Part XV (Termination and Severance of Employment) entitlements pursuant to s. 61(1.1) and ss. 65(4) and (6) of the Act, if applicable

26-Week Period - s. 3(4)

3(4) The 26-week period referred to in paragraph 7 of subsection (1) shall be calculated without including any period during which the provision of building services at the premises was temporarily discontinued.

Section 3(4) establishes what weeks are excluded in the 26-week period referred to in paragraph 7 of s. 3(1). For a further discussion of paragraph 7, see subsection (1) above.

26-Week Period - s. 3(5)

3(5) The 26-week period referred to in paragraph 7 of subsection (1) shall be calculated without including any period during which the employee was on a leave of absence under Part XIV of the Act.

Section 3(5) establishes what weeks are excluded in the 26-week period referred to in paragraph 7 of s. 3(1). For a further discussion of paragraph 7, see subsection (1) above.

Request Date - s. 3(6)

3(6) In this section,

"request date" means the date on which information is requested under subsection 77 (1) or (2) of the Act, as the case may be.

The information required to be given by the building owner or manager is set out in s. 3(1) and s. 3(3) to s. 3(5) of O Reg 287/01.

Ontario Regulation 288/01 — Termination and Severance of Employment

O Reg 288/01 sets out exemptions from the termination and severance provisions. It also deals with several matters relating to notice of termination/termination pay, including “mass termination” notice requirements, the method of giving notice, the calculation of “period of employment” and the provision of temporary work after the termination date set out in a notice has arrived.

O Reg 288/01 Section 1 - Definitions

Construction Employee

1. In this Regulation,

"construction employee" has the same meaning as in Ontario Regulation 285/01 (Exemptions, Special Rules and Establishment of Minimum Wage);

The term "construction employee" in O Reg 288/01 is defined to have the same meaning as it has in O Reg 285/01. Section 1 of that regulation defines "construction employee" as follows:

"construction employee" means,

(a) an employee employed at the site in any of the activities described in the definition of "construction industry", or

(b) an employee who is engaged in off-site work, in whole or in part, but is commonly associated in work or collective bargaining with an employee described in clause (a);

Construction Industry

"Construction industry" is then defined in s. 1 of O Reg 285/01 as follows:

"construction industry" means the businesses that are engaged in constructing, altering, decorating, repairing or demolishing buildings, structures, roads, sewers, water or gas mains, pipe lines, tunnels, bridges, canals or other works at the site;

The definitions of "construction industry" and "construction employee" are substantially the same in scope as the "construction industry" definition in s. 1(1) of the Labour Relations Act, 1995, SO 1995, c 1, Sch A, and the "employee" definition in the Construction Industry part of that Act.

The definition of "construction employee" in O Reg 285/01 produces a significantly different result than that achieved under the former Employment Standards Act, in that it now includes employees who work off-site (either in whole or in part), if the off-site employees are "commonly associated in work or collective bargaining" with a "construction employee" who is employed in a "construction industry" activity at the work site. In considering the application of the construction exemption from notice of termination, the Board concluded that an off-site employee who spent about half of her time performing office manager duties and the rest in "limited" contact with on-site staff (for the purposes of scheduling them, managing their invoices and ensuring communications with the employer's managers) was not "commonly associated in work" with on-site construction employees and so was entitled to termination pay. The Board noted that its decision was consistent with the conclusions of the Board in other cases that considered what it meant to be "commonly associated in work" with on-site construction employees under both the Labour Relations Act, 1995 and the Employment Standards Act, 2000. See 1703171 Ontario Inc. o/a The Construction Group and Bath Solutions v Russo-Janzen, 2016 CanLII 8145 (ON LRB).

Related Definitions

Repair vs. Maintenance

The definition of "construction employee" includes repair work but generally excludes maintenance work.

Maintenance involves the preserving of the functioning of a system, whereas repair involves restoration of a system to a functional state. However, the dividing line between maintenance and repair is not always clear, particularly since some maintenance activity may involve procedures that bear a close resemblance to repair (e.g., replacing worn or broken components). In determining whether an employee should be considered to be engaged in repair or in maintenance, one should look to the activity in which the employee spends the majority of his or her working hours. See Stearns Catalytic Ltd. v Everingham (September 3, 1986), ESC 2166 (Kerr), Beaver Engineering Limited v Lightfoot and Woods (April 26, 1985), ESC 1840 (Franks) and Warren v Rexway Sheet Metal (January 10, 1995), ESC 95-06 (Palumbo).

Road Maintenance

Road Maintenance Employees Generally Fall Within "Construction Employee" Exemptions

Although maintenance work is generally not considered to constitute repair work or some other subcategory of construction, road maintenance employees are nevertheless considered to fall within the definition of "construction employee" in O Reg 285/01 because of the reference in the definition of "construction industry" to the "constructing [of] ... roads" . There is no conceptual distinction between the "constructing of roads" and "road building", and the term "road building" is defined in s. 1 of O Reg 285/01 to include the maintenance of roads. Thus, as a general rule, an employee engaged in the maintenance of roads is exempt from any employment standard from which a "construction employee" is exempt, such as the standard limiting hours of work (s. 17 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000).

Exception: Road Maintenance Employees Entitled to Termination Notice/Pay

There is an exception to this general rule, however, in the case of notice of termination.

While "construction employees" are not entitled to notice of termination/termination pay by virtue of paragraph 9 of s. 2(1) of O Reg 288/01 (which exempts "construction employee[s]"), the Program takes the position that employees engaged in the maintenance of roads are entitled to termination notice/pay.

The basis for this position lies in the principle of statutory interpretation that a specific provision overrides a more general provision. The severance pay exemptions in s. 9(1) of O Reg 288/01 refer not only to a "construction employee" (in paragraph 7) but also to an "employee engaged in the on-site maintenance of . . . roads" (in paragraph 8). It follows from this that for purposes of O Reg 288/01, the maintenance of roads is to be regarded as an activity distinct from the construction of roads (as otherwise there would be no need for paragraph 8). And if that is the case, then since s. 2(1) of O Reg 288/01 exempts a "construction employee" from entitlements to notice but says nothing about an employee engaged in maintenance, an employee engaged in road maintenance is entitled to notice.

Sewer and Watermain

Sewer and Watermain: Laying, Altering or Repairing

The definition of "construction industry" in O Reg 285/01 explicitly refers to sewers and watermains; therefore, employees engaged in laying, altering or repairing sewers and are exempt from those standards to which the "construction employee" exemption applies:

- Hours of Work (daily and weekly limits on hours of work, daily rest period rules, time off between shifts rule, and weekly/biweekly rest period rules) - see O Reg 285/01, s. 4(1)(d);
- Public Holidays, if they receive 7.7% or more of their hourly wages for vacation and holiday pay - see O Reg 285/01, s. 9(2);
- Notice of termination/termination pay - see O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1), para. 9;
- Severance pay - see O Reg 288/01, s. 9(1), para. 7;

They are also subject to the special overtime pay threshold of 50 hours - see O Reg 285/01, s. 9(2).

Sewer and Watermain: Maintenance

Employees who are engaged in sewer and watermain maintenance do not fall within the "construction employee" definition, as maintenance does not generally fall within the scope of activities referred to in the "construction industry" definition (maintenance of roads being the sole exception, because of the "road building" definition).

Accordingly, employees who maintain sewers and watermains are not subject to the "construction employee" exemptions.

However:

- They are exempt from the severance pay provisions pursuant to paragraph 8 of s. 9(1) of O Reg 288/01, because that paragraph explicitly applies to an "employee engaged in the on-site maintenance of . . . sewers, pipelines, mains". See O Reg 288/01, s. 9(1) para. 8 for a discussion of this exemption.
- They are subject to the special overtime threshold of 50 hours pursuant to s. 16 of O Reg 285/01, because that provision explicitly includes the activity of "maintaining" sewers and watermains.

O Reg 288/01 Section 2 – Employees Not Entitled to Notice of Termination or Termination Pay

Employees Not Entitled to Notice of Termination or Termination Pay – s. 2(1)

2(1) The following employees are prescribed for the purposes of section 55 of the Act as employees who are not entitled to notice of termination or termination pay under Part XV of the Act:

1. Subject to subsection (2), an employee who is hired on the basis that his or her employment is to terminate on the expiry of a definite term or the completion of a specific task.

2. An employee on a temporary lay-off.

3. An employee who has been guilty of wilful misconduct, disobedience or wilful neglect of duty that is not trivial and has not been condoned by the employer.

4. An employee whose contract of employment has become impossible to perform or has been frustrated by a fortuitous or unforeseeable event or circumstance.

5. An employee whose employment is terminated after refusing an offer of reasonable alternative employment with the employer.

6. An employee whose employment is terminated after refusing alternative employment made available through a seniority system.

7. An employee who is on a temporary lay-off and does not return to work within a reasonable time after having been requested by his or her employer to do so.

8. An employee whose employment is terminated during or as a result of a strike or lock-out at the place of employment.

9. A construction employee.

10. REVOKED

11. An employee whose employment is terminated when he or she reaches the age of retirement in accordance with the employer's established practice, but only if the termination would not contravene the Human Rights Code.

12. An employee,

i. whose employer is engaged in the building, alteration or repair of a ship or vessel with a gross tonnage of over ten tons designed for or used in commercial navigation,

ii. to whom a legitimate supplementary unemployment benefit plan agreed on by the employee or his or her agent applies, and

iii. who agrees or whose agent agrees to the application of this exemption.

This section sets out the exemptions from the termination of employment provisions in ESA Part XV. Subject to s. 2(2) and s. 2(3), the employees listed in this section are not entitled to notice of termination or termination pay under Part XV. A discussion of each exemption appears below.

Definite term or specific task employees

Section 2(1) paragraph 1 relieves employers from the obligation to provide notice of termination or termination pay to employees who were employed for a definite term or specific task. This exemption is in recognition of the fact that employees who are hired for a definite term or to complete a specific task are, at the time of hiring, aware of when their employment will end and therefore they have already received the equivalent of notice.

Note, however, that if the assignment of an assignment employee performing work for a client of a temporary help agency was estimated to be three months or more and the assignment is terminated prior to the end of that estimated term, the temporary help agency may have an obligation to provide one week's notice of the termination of the assignment or pay in lieu of notice pursuant to s. 74.10.1. This is not notice of termination of the employment relationship with the temporary help agency but rather notice of termination of an assignment to perform work.

For the exemption in paragraph 1 of s. 2(1) to apply, the employee must be hired on the basis that their employment is to terminate either,

1. On the expiry of a definite term; or
2. On the completion of a specific task.

For the definite term part of this exemption to apply, the employee must have an agreement, either orally or in writing, which specifies the exact date the employee's contract of employment is to end.

For the specific task part of this exemption to apply, the employer and the employee must have an agreement, either orally or in writing, that describes the task with enough specificity that the employee is able to determine when the task will be completed. For example, an employee who is hired to make 100 widgets will know when the task will be completed.

An employer cannot put an employee who is not a term or task employee on a term or task arrangement as a means of terminating the employee without providing termination notice or pay, since to do so would be to undermine the purpose of Part XV and this exemption. This is so even if the employee agrees to such an arrangement, since ESA Part III, s. 5 prohibits an employee from waiving their rights under the ESA 2000. For example, if a ten-year employee agrees to go on a four-week definite term contract and the employer terminates the employment of the employee at the end of the four-week period, the exemption will not apply. The employee will be entitled to eight weeks' notice or pay in lieu thereof. Note though that if the definite term arrangement was reduced to writing and a copy given to the employee, the employer may receive credit for the four weeks' actual written notice the employee received.

Where definite term or specific task exemption does not apply

The exemption in paragraph 1 must be read in conjunction with s. 2(2), which states:

2(2) Paragraph 1 of subsection (1) does not apply if,

(a) the employment terminates before the expiry of the term or the completion of the task;

(b) the term expires or the task is not yet completed more than 12 months after the employment commences; or

(c) the employment continues for three months or more after the expiry of the term or the completion of the task.

This section provides that the term or task exemption in paragraph 1 of s. 2(1) will not apply to term or task employees if any of the following circumstances are present:

Employment terminates before the expiry of the term or the completion of the task

Pursuant to s. 2(2)(a), the term or task exemption will not apply if the employment terminates before the expiry of the term or completion of the task and the employee will be entitled to one week of notice of termination or pay in lieu. This clause will apply where, for example, an employee is employed for a six-month term but the employer decides to terminate the employee's employment after the fourth month.

The exemption can only apply where the employee is employed for the duration of the term or until the completion of the task. This is consistent with the rationale for the term or task exemption. If the employer terminates the employee's employment before the end of the agreed upon term or the completion of the task, the basis for the exemption - the employee knowing at the outset when their employment will end - is lost.

Term expires or the task is not yet completed more than 12 months after the employment commences

Section 2(2)(b) means that the term or task exemption in paragraph 1 of s. 2(1) will not apply if:

- The term of the contract is for a period that is longer than 12 months; or
- The task is not yet completed 12 months after the employment began.

Where the employee is employed for more than one definite term and the terms are "back to back", i.e., continuous, it is Program policy that the terms should be added together when determining whether the 12-month limit in 2(2)(b) has been exceeded.

Where, however, the terms are not back to back, the terms will not be added together when determining whether the 12-month limit in clause (b) has been exceeded. This is so even if the terms are separated by less than 13 weeks. In this regard, see Metropolitan Toronto Board of Commissioners of Police v Ministry of Labour (October 17, 1994), ESC 94-178 (Muir). It should be noted that although the court did not provide much reasoning in its decision on this particular point, it upheld the referee's decision as correct and therefore it constitutes a precedent that the Program follows.

It should be emphasized that despite Program policy not to add terms that are not "back to back" together for the purpose of determining whether the 12-month limit has been exceeded, the terms will be added together for the purpose of determining the period of employment in ESA Part XV, s. 57 if they are separated by less than 13 weeks – see O Reg 288/01, s. 8(2). This would be relevant, for example, if the employee's employment was terminated before the end of the subsequent term, in which case the term or task exemption would not apply and the employee would be entitled to termination notice or pay based on his or her period of employment.

Employment continues for three months or more after expiry of the term or completion of the task

Section 2(2)(c) stipulates that the term or task exemption in paragraph 1 of s. 2(1) will not apply if the employee continues to be employed for three months or more after the definite term or the specified task for which the employee was hired has either expired or is completed.

For example, an employee is employed for a six-month term and is employed on an open-ended arrangement for an additional four months before having their employment terminated. The term or task exemption will not apply to this employee, and they will be entitled to one week of termination notice or pay.

The question arises as to whether s. 2(2)(c) applies to a situation where, instead of being employed on an open-ended arrangement after the end of the original definite term, the employee is put on a second definite term contract that lasts more than three months past the end of the first contract. It is Program policy that s. 2(2)(c) applies in this situation. This policy prevents an employer from employing an employee for a series of very short, e.g., one-month contracts for a period of less than 12 months and then terminating them without notice or pay in lieu. In that situation, the employee loses the certainty of knowing when their employment will end and should therefore be entitled to the benefit of the notice of termination or pay in lieu provisions.

Employee on temporary lay-off

Pursuant to s. 2(1) paragraph 2, an employee who is on a temporary lay-off is not entitled to notice of termination or termination pay in lieu. Temporary lay-off is defined in ESA Part XV, s. 56(2).

Employee who is guilty of wilful misconduct, disobedience or wilful neglect of duty

Pursuant to s. 2(1) paragraph 3, an employee who has been guilty of wilful misconduct, disobedience or wilful neglect of duty that is not trivial and that has not been condoned by the employer is not entitled to notice of termination or pay in lieu.

The rationale for this exemption is the view that an employer who terminates an employee because the employee was guilty of wilful misconduct, disobedience or neglect of duty should not be obliged to provide that employee with either notice of termination or pay in lieu of notice. See Sacco v MMCC Solutions Canada Company (Teleperformance Canada), 2015 CanLII 82037 (ON LRB) for a discussion of the standard that must be met in order for this exemption to apply.

This exemption will apply only if all of the following criteria are met:

5. The employee's conduct is wilful
6. The employee is guilty of:
    - misconduct, or
    - disobedience, or
    - neglect of duty
7. The employee's conduct is not trivial
8. The employee's conduct has not been condoned by the employer

Each criterion is discussed in more detail below.

For information on the application of the wilful disobedience exemption where an employee is not vaccinated against, or tested for, COVID-19 in accordance with the employer's policy, see "ESA Termination and Severance Liabilities Where an Employee is Not Vaccinated Against or Tested For COVID-19".

As with any exemption from a minimum standard, the onus is on the employer to demonstrate on a balance of probabilities that the exemption applies. As the following discussion demonstrates, this exemption is narrower than the just cause concept applied in the common law and in collective agreement disputes. In other words, an arbitrator or a judge may find that there was just cause to dismiss an employee, but this does not necessarily mean that the exemption in paragraph 3 of s. 2(1) applies.

Employee's conduct is wilful

The key element to this exemption is that the actions or omissions must be wilful on the part of the employee. Although the word "wilful" does not appear before the word "disobedience", it is clear that disobedience involves an element of wilfulness. See, for example, Superior Propane Inc. v Cunningham (August 13, 1988), ESC 2364 (Haefling). Thus the employer must demonstrate that there was wilfulness on the part of the employee, whether it is alleging misconduct, disobedience or neglect of duty.

Ordinarily, wilful means that the employee intended the result that came to pass. Thus, poor work or conduct that is accidental or involuntary will generally not be considered to be wilful. However, an employee who is reckless in their conduct may be guilty of wilful misconduct if that employee knew or ought to have known that their conduct would cause the result that came to pass.

Employee is guilty of wilful misconduct

The following are some examples of conduct that have been found to be wilful misconduct. The list is illustrative only and is not meant to be exhaustive.

Fraud or Theft

- Theft of cash or property of the employer – see Burger King Canada Inc. v Ministry of Labour (December 15, 1992), ES 223/92 (Alter);
- Where the employee falsified time sheets – see Brookdale Treeland Nurseries Limited v Klinowski (December 1, 1988), ESC 2422 (Joyce).

Alcohol or Drug Use

- An employee being under the influence of alcohol during working hours – see Harisoma Investments Ltd. operating as the Sherway Inn v Berlot (September 24, 1981), ESC 1073 (Egan).

If the employee's drinking is due to alcoholism, then the employee's behaviour is due to a recognized handicap and may not be wilful. However, if the employee has been prescribed medicine (e.g., Antabuse) to prevent alcoholism, but does not take it, the employee may be guilty of wilful misconduct since the failure to take the medicine may be in itself wilful. In this regard, see Facelle Company Limited v Hoar and Odo (March 31, 1989) ESC 2492 (Gorsky).

Failure to Follow Company Policy

- Where the employee fails to follow a company policy - see Talbot Inn Limited v Graham (April 15, 1982), ESC 1198 (Black), Jonathan Place Ltd., c.o.b. Harry's Restauran v Estabrooks and Lettner (April 4, 1984), ESC 1608 (Betcherman), Grieve c.o.b.a. Glen Erin Animal Hospital v Honig (March 30, 1987), ESC 2228 (Baum) and 607588 Ontario Inc. o/a Provincial Cartage Systems v Ministry of Labour (October 5, 1993), ES 93-211 (Levinson).

Where the employer seeks to rely on a failure to follow company policy as grounds for wilful misconduct, the Program's policy position is that the following criteria (most of which were also referenced in the above-noted cases) should be satisfied:

- The rule that has been violated must have been clear and unequivocal;
- The rule must have a substantial bearing on the employment relationship (except perhaps in cases of repeated, deliberate infractions of less substantive rules, assuming there is no condonation by the employer - see the discussion of condonation below);
- The rule must have been communicated to the employee;
- The employee must know (or ought to know) in advance that the conduct could result in their termination; and
- The rule must not require the employee to do anything illegal or unsafe.

Recklessness

- Where the employee's behaviour was so reckless as to amount to wilful misconduct. For example, wilful misconduct was found where the employee, by failing to put pads on a hoist, caused a car to fall from the hoist - see Northwest Motors Limited v Rodrigues (April 4, 1984), ESC 1606 (Ison). In this case, the employee knew or ought to have known that his actions would cause the accident.

Conflict of Interest, Breach of Trust, Off-Duty Misconduct

- Where the employee is guilty of behaviour that seriously affects a position of trust that they hold with the employer and/or the employer's clientele, or where the employee puts themselves into a serious conflict of interest with the employer, such as, for example, actively engaging in a competitor's business or disclosing confidential information to a competitor - see Polaris Computer Systems Ltd. v Carwana (January 3, 1986), ESC 2013 (Betcherman).

Note, however, that there won't be wilful misconduct if an employee who is not in a position of trust has a passing economic relationship with a competitor in an area entirely outside of the employee and employer's normal line of work, in which no trade secrets or confidential information is disclosed. See for example Van Noort v 566355 Ontario Ltd o/a K.J. Marketing Services (February 26, 1998), 2677-96-ES (Goodfellow) where the employer and its competitor were in the electrical equipment sales business and the employee built a washroom for the competitor at a time when he was not required by his employer to be at work. Note also that merely intending to join a competitor (for example, the employee has accepted a job offer with a competitor, but has not yet begun working for the competitor, and provided notice of resignation to the employer) does not amount to wilful misconduct. If, on the other hand, the employee begins to disclose confidential information to the competitor, that will be wilful misconduct. Likewise, it is the Program's position that so long as confidential information is not being disclosed to the employee's spouse, there is no conflict of interest if the employee has a spouse who works for a competitor.

- Where the employee engaged in wilful misconduct or neglect of duties by enticing fellow employees into another business venture to be conducted on the employer's time and premises - see Canadian Aesthetic Academy Inc. v Golan, 2008 CanLII 34124 (ON LRB).
- Where an employee prevents themselves from performing their job duties. This can include off-duty conduct where such conduct prevents the employee from carrying on their duties. For example, where an employee is convicted and incarcerated for dealing in drugs in off-duty hours, this may be wilful misconduct since the employee, by embarking on such a course of conduct, should have known that it could lead to incarceration that would prevent them from performing their job duties - see Stelco Inc. o/a Stelpipe v Addario (November 4, 1991), ESC 2935 (Cumming). It is also possible that this may constitute frustration of contract. See s. 2(1) para. 4 below.

Employee is guilty of wilful disobedience

As mentioned above, although the word wilful does not appear before the term disobedience in the regulation, disobedience necessarily involves an element of wilfulness.

In order for there to be disobedience within the meaning of the exemption, the Program's position is that the following criteria should be satisfied:

- The order or rule must have been clear and unequivocal;
- The order or rule must not be minor (except perhaps in cases of repeated, uncondoned infractions);
- The order or rule must have been communicated to the employee;
- The employee must know (or ought to know) in advance that the disobedience could lead to their termination; and
- The order or rule must not require the employee to do anything illegal or unsafe.

Note that these are the same factors that apply when determining whether there is wilful misconduct due to a breach of company policy.

For information on the application of the wilful disobedience exemption where an employee is not vaccinated against, or tested for, COVID-19 in accordance with the employer's policy, see "ESA Termination and Severance Liabilities Where an Employee is Not Vaccinated Against or Tested For COVID-19".

Employee is guilty of wilful neglect of duty

Similar considerations apply with respect to neglect of duty as those that apply with respect to misconduct (see the discussion of wilful misconduct, above), except that the former concept focuses on the failure to do something, rather than the doing of something. Typically, cases in which wilful neglect of duty is found to be present are ones where the employee refused to report for work, often after being refused permission to take a holiday or after being required to work overtime. See for example Perly's Maps Limited v Lincoln (July 17, 1980), ESC 816 (Bigelow). Other instances in which wilful neglect of duty has been found to have been present include non-innocent absenteeism and tardiness - see for example Hunter v Ertel Manufacturing Corporation of Canada Ltd. (January 31, 1995), ESC 95-39 (Faubert). However, as mentioned above, the exemption is narrower than the just cause concept applied in the common law and in collective agreement disputes. While an arbitrator or judge may find that there was just cause to dismiss an employee, that does not necessarily mean that the exemption in paragraph 3 of s. 2(1) applies.

For example, see K & R Advertising Limited v Wojick (January 12, 1981) ESC 934 (Bigelow) where the referee found that the employee "was lazy; she was slovenly; she was inconsistent; she was unreliable; she was irresponsible; she was just about everything that a competent secretary should not be. She was unquestionably discharged for just cause. But I cannot go so far as to say that she was guilty of wilful neglect of duty."

Employee's conduct is not trivial

In order for the exemption to apply, the wilful misconduct, neglect of duty or disobedience must not be trivial, i.e., unimportant or insignificant. Trivial acts of wilful misconduct, neglect of duty or disobedience will not serve to disentitle an employee from notice of termination or termination pay.

Employee's conduct has not been condoned by the employer

In order for the exemption to apply, the employee's behaviour must not have been condoned by the employer. In this discussion, the reference to behaviour means wilful misconduct, wilful neglect of duty or wilful disobedience that is not trivial.

Condonation exists in situations where the employer knows about the employee's behaviour but does not act on it, thereby giving the employee the impression that the behaviour is not serious enough to warrant termination. If such condoned behaviour is repeated by the employee, the employer is generally prevented from relying on that recurrence in order to terminate the employee without notice or pay in lieu. The employer can avoid the inference of condonation by warning the employee that such behaviour is unacceptable and that a repeat of it will result in termination. If the behaviour concerning which the employee was previously warned reoccurs, this reoccurrence may be relied on as a "culminating incident" for which the employee may be terminated without notice or pay in lieu. The uncondoned culminating incident also allows the employer to bring into consideration other behaviour of the employee that was previously condoned by the employer. See Cool and Cool c.o.b.a. Timmons Auto Wreckers & Salvage v Duncan (July 29, 1981), ESC 1048 (Sheppard).

Immediate action (e.g., a warning or other disciplinary action) by the employer in response to the employee's conduct is not always necessary to avoid condonation. For example, condonation will not be found where the supervisor responsible for such action is not available until some time has elapsed after the incident, where the employer waits to act until after the work day is over in order to avoid a disruption of operations, or where the employer takes a reasonable amount of time to conduct an investigation of an employee who is suspected of misconduct. In this regard, see Montgary Food Enterprises Inc. o/a Kipling's Restaurant (March 5, 1992), ESC 2996 (Novick) and CCL Custom Manufacturing v Barrett, 2000

CanLII 13149 (ON LRB). However, where there was no reason for the failure to take immediate action, there will generally be condonation. See for example Lighthouse Inn Operations v Mosey (November 24, 1997), 1369-15-ES (ON LRB).

"After-acquired" Information

After-acquired information can be used in determining whether the exemption in paragraph 3 of s. 2(1) applies. The fact that the employer discovered the employee's behaviour after the termination is irrelevant, since grounds for terminating the employee without notice or pay in lieu would have existed at the time of the termination. In this regard, see Lake Ontario Portland Cement Co. Ltd. v Groner, [1961] SCR 553, 1961 CanLII 1 (SCC).

Employment contract impossible to perform or frustrated

Section 2(1) paragraph 4 provides that, except where the impossibility or frustration is the result of the employee's illness or injury, an employee whose contract has become impossible to perform or is frustrated by a fortuitous or unforeseeable event or circumstance is not entitled to notice of termination or pay in lieu.

This section must be read in conjunction with s. 2(3), which reads:

2(3) Paragraph 4 of subsection (1) does not apply if the impossibility or frustration is the result of an illness or injury suffered by the employee.

The effect of the exemption is to relieve the employer from the obligation to give notice of termination or termination pay where there is a supervening unforeseeable event that strikes at the very root of the contract that is not the fault of the employer and that is not provided for in the contract itself.

The rationale for this exemption is the recognition that employers cannot give advance notice of termination where the termination is caused by events that the employer cannot reasonably be expected to anticipate or foresee. It is also consistent with the common law view that frustration of contract brings the contract to an end automatically by operation of law. Where frustration of the employment contract occurs, the common law does not regard the employer as having terminated the contract.

It should be noted, however, that the exemption will only apply in rare circumstances and, generally speaking, employers' arguments that the contract of employment was frustrated or had become impossible to perform have been met with some considerable skepticism by tribunals.

As with any exemption from a minimum standard, the onus is on the employer to establish on a balance of probabilities that the exemption applies.

Frustration and Impossibility in Disability Situations

Prior to the amendments made by O Reg 549/05, which, among other things, brought in s. 2(3), the exemption in paragraph 4 of s. 2 (and that in s. 9 regarding severance entitlements) of O Reg 288/01 purportedly provided that, subject to the Human Rights Code, RSO 1990, c H.19 (the "Code"), an employer could terminate (or sever) the employment of an employee whose employment contract was "frustrated" due to illness or injury without being required to provide notice of termination or severance pay. In other words, the exemptions purportedly applied in situations in which the contract of employment had become impossible to perform or had been frustrated as a result of injury or illness on the part of the employee, provided that the employer had complied with the duty of reasonable accommodation under the Code.

However, on May 4, 2005, in Ontario Nurses' Association v Mount Sinai Hospital, 2005 CanLII 14437 (ON CA) the Ontario Court of Appeal struck down the severance pay exemption under the former Employment Standards Act. The Court found that the exemption was unconstitutional as it violated s. 15 of the Charter of Rights, in that it was discriminatory on the ground of disability, and could not be saved as a reasonable limit under s. 1 of the Charter. Although the wording of the notice and severance pay frustration exemptions under the ESA 2000 is different from that of the severance pay exemption in the old Act, in substance the exemptions are to the same effect. While the severance pay exemption in the former Employment Standards Act was not expressly made subject to the Code, it was nonetheless considered to be so subject by virtue of the provision in the Code that gives it primacy over other legislation in the event of a conflict.

Accordingly, to reflect the ruling in the Ontario Nurses' Association v Mount Sinai decision, O Reg 288/01 was amended by O Reg 549/05 to indicate that the exemptions for impossibility of performance or frustration do not apply where the impossibility or frustration is the result of employee injury or illness. See subsection (3) below and O Reg 288/01, s. 9(1) para. 2.

It should be noted that it is now irrelevant so far as the ESA 2000 is concerned whether a contract of employment has been frustrated as a result of disability; the crucial point is whether the employer has terminated or severed the employee's employment. Because the frustration exemption is no longer available to the employer in cases where the contract was allegedly frustrated by the employee's disability, there is no need for an officer to attempt to determine whether frustration occurred; the only thing that the officer needs to determine is whether the employer terminated or severed the employee's employment, unless, of course, some other exemption might apply.

Terminating and/or severing the employment relationship does not necessarily mean that the employer must purport to end the employment relationship expressly. The employer may terminate and/or sever the relationship with either a statement or an action that indicates the employer regards the employment relationship as having ended. For example, in Barrette v Rainbow Concrete Industries Ltd., 2006 CanLII 11057 the Ontario Labour Relations Board the employer was found to have terminated the employment relationship when it sent the employee a pension form with several references to termination in it and which was intended to remove the applicant as a pension plan member when the only way to do so was by termination of employment or resignation. In this case the employer was fully aware that the employee had no intention of resigning.

In Fleetwood Canada Ltd. v Burchall, 2006 CanLII 34100 (ON LRB) the Board found that the employer terminated the employment of an employee with a letter that was not worded as a dismissal but which referred to the fact that its obligation to re-employ him under the Workplace Safety and Insurance Act, 1997, SO 1997, c 16, had expired, and that he had therefore ceased to be an employee. However, there must be a termination or severance by the employer in order for there to be an entitlement; the mere fact that it appears to be extremely unlikely or even certain that the employee will not be returning to work is not sufficient if the employer takes no step, whether expressly or by implication, to indicate that it is ending the employment relationship. Note that some court and arbitrator decisions on this point are contrary to the Program's position and should not be followed (for example St. Joseph's General Hospital v Ontario Nurses' Association, 2006 CanLII 35191 (ON LA), Hoekstra v Rehability Occupational Therapy Inc., 2019 ONSC 562 (CanLII), and Estate of Cristian Drimba v Dick Engineering Inc., 2015 ONSC 2843 (CanLII).)

The OLRB has consistently interpreted the termination and severance pay provisions of the ESA as requiring an actual terminating event on the initiative of the employer prior to a finding that an employment contract has been terminated due to frustration. The OLRB interpretation is consistent with a plain reading of the relevant provisions of the ESA. (See for example: Ardies v 1650691 Ontario Inc. (Chip N' Charlie's Bar & Eatery), 2015 CanLII 49514 (ON LRB); Barrette v. Rainbow Concrete Industries Ltd., 2006 CanLII 11057 (ON LRB); Fleetwood Canada v. Burchall OLRB [2006] 2006 CanLII 34100 (ON LRB); Nour Trading House Inc. v. Lam, 2006 CanLII 41447 (ON LRB); MacDonald v. Zellers Inc., 2005 CanLII 4315 (ON LRB); Velovski v. Woods Industries (Canada) Inc., 2005 CanLII 8257; Chandoo v. Sobeys Ontario Division, 2002 CanLII 35376 (ON LRB); and Glick v. Burke, 2000 CanLII 12787 (ON LRB).

Because O Reg 549/05 was filed on October 28, 2005, and was published in the November 12th, 2005 issue of the Ontario Gazette, an issue arose as to whether the frustration exemptions as they stood prior to the amendments should still be applied in cases where the employee's employment was terminated or severed prior to November 12, 2005 (or October 28, 2005, if the employer knew about the amendments).

The position of the program is that the amendments to the frustration exemptions did not change the law. The amendments simply reflected the Court of Appeal's decision in Ontario Nurses' Association v Mount Sinai - in other words, the amendments brought the text of the regulation into line with what was already the law, as stated by the Court. For this reason, where an employment contract was frustrated as a result of injury or illness, the Program proceeds on the basis that the frustration exemptions cannot be applied - even if the termination or severance occurred before the amendments to the exemptions were filed or published.

Frustration and Impossibility in Non-Disability Situations

In determining the applicability of the frustration and impossibility exemption in non-disability situations, it is important to bear in mind three general principles.

1. The event that allegedly caused the employment contract to be frustrated must be something that strikes at the very basis of the contract; it is not enough that the event has made the contract a more difficult or expensive proposition for the employer.
2. The event must not have been caused through fault of the employer.
3. The employment contract must not have addressed the possibility that the event might occur and have provided for its consequences.

As well, where the allegedly frustrating event was something personal to the employee, it is Program policy that factors such as the employee's length of employment, whether or not they were a "key" employee, the length of the employee's absence from work or inability to work, and whether the employment would have been expected to continue indefinitely had it not been for the occurrence of the allegedly frustrating event should all be taken into account. If the employee had been employed for a lengthy period and their employment would have expected to continue had the allegedly frustrating event not occurred, that tends to argue against a finding of frustration. On the other hand, if the employee is a key person in the employer's operation and the absence is extremely lengthy, these factors tend to argue in favour of a finding of frustration. Also relevant is what has the employer's past practice been in response to similar situations; if the employer did not treat the contract as having been frustrated in similar cases in the past, that makes a finding of frustration less likely.

The question may arise as to whether an employment contract would be frustrated or rendered impossible to perform where the employee has been on a series of Part XIV statutory leaves for a period of some years. Given that the employee is exercising a statutory right, it is Program policy that the contract would not be frustrated or rendered impossible to perform in these circumstances.

Set out below are some situations where there could be a possibility that the contract of employment should be regarded as having been frustrated or become impossible to perform. These are provided as examples; the list is not intended to be exhaustive.

Note that where the employee entitlement in issue is severance pay, rather than notice of termination or termination pay, the employer cannot rely on the exemption if the frustration or impossibility is the result of a permanent discontinuance of all or part of the employer's business because of a fortuitous or unforeseen event. See O Reg 288/01, s. 9(2)(a)(i).

Supervening Change in the Law

Where an employer is forced to restrict its activities or discontinue its business because of a change in the law, the contract of employment may be frustrated or impossible to perform. For frustration to be found on the basis of a change in the law, generally the new law:

1. must have been unforeseen,
2. must not be temporary in nature when viewed in the context of the employment contract as a whole, and
3. must make the performance of the employment contract impossible or something radically different from what the employer and employee agreed to in the contract. (See for example, Cowie v. Great Blue Heron Charity Casino, 2011 ONSC 6357, Klewchuk v. Switzer, 2003 ABCA 187 (CanLII), par. 24.)

A question arose during the COVID-19 pandemic as to whether the frustration exemption applied on the basis of a change in the law where a business was forced to temporarily close or temporarily restrict its activities due to an order under the Emergency Management and Civil Protection Act (EMCPA) or Reopening Ontario (A Flexible Response to COVID-19) Act, 2020 (ROA). At the time of writing, the requirements of the EMCPA and ROA were all temporary. As such, at the time of writing, the second criterion to establish frustration of contract on the basis of a change in the law is not met due to the EMCPA or ROA orders and it is therefore Program policy that frustration of contact on the basis of the EMCPA or ROA orders is not established.* (Where it is determined that one of the criteria set out above is not met, it is not necessary to determine whether the other two criteria would have been met in the circumstances).

*Although the specifics of individual employment contracts on matters such as whether the contract was for a definite or indefinite term and the timing of the change in the law vis-à-vis the start of the employment contract are part of the context when determining whether the change in the law is temporary, the Program considers those factors not to be pertinent in the scenario of EMCPA/ROA orders and the ESA context where an employee must be continuously employed for three months in order to have termination entitlements, and where an exemption from termination entitlements applies to employees who are employed for a definite term or to complete a specific task.

Note that where the employee entitlement in issue is severance pay, rather than notice of termination or termination pay, the employer cannot rely on frustration because of a supervening change in the law that results in the permanent discontinuance of its business; see O Reg 288/01, s. 9(2)(a)(i).

Destruction of the Employer's Business/"Act of God"

Where the employer's business premises are destroyed by "an act of God", or by other means such as terrorism, war or arson so that the employer is unable to carry on business, there will generally be frustration since such events are generally considered to be unforeseeable (even if the employer has insured itself against these losses). Other factors mentioned earlier might, however, prevent frustration from being found in these circumstances, for example, if the employer commits arson on its own premises, the allegedly frustrating event would have occurred as a result of fault of the employer, and the employer could not therefore rely on the exemption.

A question arose during the COVID-19 pandemic as to whether the pandemic constituted an "act of God" such that it would trigger the frustration exemption. Although some might argue that the pandemic itself may be an unforeseeable event, it is Program policy that the focus of the inquiry for frustration purposes is on the consequences flowing from the pandemic that were responsible for the terminations (e.g. economic downturn) and whether those consequences amount to frustration of contract, rather than the focus being on the pandemic itself. To that end, the discussion under the "Business Failure" heading below equally applies here: in light of the situation at the time of writing, it is Program policy that frustration is not established on the basis of business failure or economic conditions created by the pandemic.

Note that where the employee entitlement in issue is severance pay, rather than notice of termination or termination pay, the employer cannot rely on frustration because its business is permanently discontinued because of the destruction of its business; see O Reg 288/01, s. 9(2)(a)(i).

Loss of an Essential Licence

Where the employer loses a business licence and is thereby unable to continue operating, this may lead to frustration unless the employer knew or ought to have known of the risk that the licence would be lost or not renewed. For example, in Lakeshore Pubs Ltd. o/a Kelly's Keg'n Jester v Reardin (March 16, 1990), ESC 2650 (Baum) an employer had a concession agreement at Ontario Place that was not renewed. The employer subsequently terminated the employment of the employees at that location, as it was no longer able to carry on a business at the site. In this instance, it was determined that the employer could not rely on frustration of contract because it was found that the employer was fully aware of the possibility that the concession agreement might not be renewed. The employer was found to have known of the risk that staff would not be needed if its application for concession renewal failed and therefore could not resort to the argument of frustration of contract to avoid its obligations under the former Employment Standards Act. In addition, the employer may be prevented from relying on frustration in this circumstance if the loss of the licence was due to its own fault.

Frustration may also occur where the employee loses a licence (such as a driving licence or a professional licence) that is necessary for them to carry out the duties of the job. In that situation, the employer may rely on frustration, so long as the loss of the licence was not the employer's fault.

Note that where the employee entitlement in issue is severance pay, rather than notice of termination or termination pay, the employer cannot rely on the frustration exemption if the loss of an essential licence causes it to cease to carry on business; although the loss would be considered to frustrate the employment contract, it also represents the permanent discontinuance of all or part of its business and so the exemption is inapplicable by virtue of s. 9(2)(a)(i) of O Reg 288/01.

Intention to Join a Competitor

There are a number of decisions under the former Employment Standards Act that determined that an employee who gives notice of resignation and indicates that they intend to work for a competitor of the employer (or set up a business in competition with the employer) gives rise to a frustration of the employment contract – see Avco Financial Services v Morabita (June 12, 1973), ESC 187 (Learie) and Yurman v J&M Tire Sales Inc. (December 14, 1995), ESC 95-236 (Wacyk). However, the Program's policy is that these decisions should not be followed. These situations do not result in the contract being frustrated. Rather, the consideration should be whether the employee has engaged in willful misconduct. See Nidd v Cartier Supply & Rentals Ltd., 2000 CanLII 12058 (ON LRB) and MTC Leasing Inc. and the discussion at s. 2(1) para. 3 above.

Incarceration

Referees have found that in some cases where an employee was imprisoned for a criminal offence, the contract of employment was frustrated or impossible to perform because the imprisonment rendered the employee unable to perform their job duties: see for example Caland Ore Company Limited v Connors (January 8, 1980), ESC 684 (Aggarwal), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act. However, the determination of whether the employment contract is frustrated will depend on a number of factors such as the length of the incarceration, the employee's period of service prior to the incarceration, and whether the employee was a key person.

Death of Sole Proprietor

Where the sole proprietor of a business dies, the contract will generally be considered as frustrated, except where an executor (or where the individual dies intestate, personal representative) of the sole proprietor's estate carries on the business. See Estate of Brinklow formerly o/a Brinklow's Body Shop v Anderson et al (January 16, 1988), ESC 235 (Haefling) and Robitaille v J.B. Truck Repair Service & Sale (November 14, 1994), ESC 94-203 (McKellar). Note, however, that the death of an employer will not trigger a similar exemption to severance pay – see the discussion of O Reg 288/01, s. 9(2)(a)(ii).

Note that where the employee entitlement in issue is severance pay, rather than notice of termination or termination pay, the employer's estate cannot rely on the frustration exemption because of the employer's death – see O Reg 288/01, s. 9(2)(a)(ii).

Strike/Lock-out

The possibility that strikes or lock-outs might occur and disrupt the employer's business is not unforeseeable and therefore these events will not generally lead to a finding of frustration or impossibility. Note, however, that if an employee's employment is terminated during or as a result of a strike or lock-out at the place of employment, the exemption in paragraph 8 of s. 2(1) of O Reg 288/01 will apply – see the discussion of s. 2(1) para. 8 below. Also see O Reg 288/01, s. 9 para. 1 for a somewhat similar exemption from the severance pay requirements.

Business Failure

The failure of a business due to such reasons as an economic downturn, reduced revenues or an inability to obtain financing will generally not support frustration or impossibility since these events are not unforeseeable circumstances. The inability to obtain financing, or poor or uncertain economic conditions, including those that lead to a bankruptcy, have historically not been considered to constitute frustration, since economic downturns are generally seen as reasonably foreseeable future events when entering into employment contracts. See for example Iroquois Hotel (London) Limited v Diorio et al (September 25, 1975), ESC 290 (Murphy).

Similarly, an employer's voluntary decision to discontinue a business for economic reasons or to file for bankruptcy have historically not been considered to constitute frustration of employment contracts, since those are financial decisions and employment contracts are not frustrated simply because the employer is unprofitable or is insolvent.

A question arose during the COVID-19 pandemic as to whether the frustration exemption applied where the business failed because of economic conditions created by the pandemic. Depending on the length of the pandemic and its eventual impact on the economy, a distinction may be drawn in the future between an economic downturn that is normally foreseeable and that does not trigger the frustration exemptions, and an unforeseeable global emergency that creates an economic disaster and that could trigger the exemption. In light of the situation at the time of writing, however, it is Program policy that frustration is not established on the basis of business failure caused by the economic conditions created by the pandemic.

Death of the Employee

The death of the employee will frustrate the employment contract. This means that the employee's estate will have no entitlement to termination pay where the employment relationship ended with the employee's death. Thus, for example, the estate will not be entitled to termination pay even if the employee had received notice and died before the notice took effect, nor will the estate be entitled where the employee was part of a group of employees whose employment the employer was about to terminate if the employee's death intervenes.

Note that where the employee entitlement in issue is severance pay, rather than notice of termination or termination pay, the employer cannot rely on the frustration exemption if the employee died after receiving a notice of termination – see O Reg 288/01, s. 9(2)(a)(ii).

Employee refuses offer of reasonable alternative employment

Pursuant to s. 2(1) paragraph 5, an employee whose employment is terminated after they refuse an employer's offer of reasonable alternative employment is not entitled to notice of termination or pay in lieu.

The effect of this exemption is to relieve the employer from the obligation to give notice of termination or termination pay where the employee refuses continued employment with the employer when the employer is offering reasonable alternative employment. As with all exemptions from minimum standards, the onus is on the employer to establish on a balance of probabilities that the exemption applies.

The rationale for this exemption is that the ESA 2000 of refusing an offer of reasonable alternative employment is tantamount to resigning.

In determining whether an employee has refused reasonable alternative employment, consideration should be given to the following five points:

Offer must be made

In order for there to be a refusal, the employer must first make a clear and unequivocal offer of reasonable alternative employment to the employee. See Lauderdale Car Cleaners (1965) Limited v Metauro (March 5, 1992), ES 24/92 (Randall), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act.

Offer must be for work with the employee's employer

The exemption uses the phrase "with the employer". The use of this phrase requires that the offer be for reasonable alternative work with the employer. An offer of reasonable alternative employment with a separate employer is not sufficient, even if that separate employer is a purchaser of the employer's business. However, an offer of employment from a "related employer" as defined in ESA Part III, s. 4 would satisfy this criterion.

Offer must be made before the employee's employment is terminated

The exemption applies only if the employee's employment is terminated "after" the employee has refused a reasonable alternative offer of employment. Accordingly, the employer must make the offer of reasonable alternative employment before the termination of the employment relationship in order for this exemption to apply.

Employee must be able to perform the work that is offered and refuse the offer

In order for there to be a refusal, the employee must be able to perform the work that is offered. There is a distinction between a refusal to do something, on the one hand, and an inability to do something, on the other hand. An employee who is unable to do something (for example, through lack of necessary credentials or disability) cannot be said to have refused to do it. Refusal involves declining to do something that one is able to do. Black's Law Dictionary states: ""Fail" is distinguished from "refuse" in that "refuse" involves an act of the will, while "fail" may be an act of inevitable necessity."

Alternative employment offered by the employer must be reasonable

In determining whether the alternative employment offered by the employer was reasonable, consideration must first be given to whether or not there was an actual or implied term of the contract that allowed the employer to make changes to the terms of employment. In that case, an employee cannot argue that such changes are unreasonable. See also the discussion of constructive dismissal at ESA Part XV, s. 56.

Barring a situation where the changes to the terms of employment are made in accordance with actual or implied terms in the contract, the primary factor in determining whether the alternative work offered to the employee is reasonable will be the rate of pay. However, other factors may be relevant as well, including benefits, location, hours and schedule of work, "perks", quality of working environment, degree of responsibility, job security and possibility of advancement. The question to be asked is would a reasonable employee in the circumstances of the employee in question consider the offer to be reasonable.

Remuneration

This is the most important of all the factors to be examined in considering whether or not the offer was reasonable. Generally speaking, offers of employment that entail pay cuts of less than 10 per cent will probably be considered as reasonable, although each case must be examined on its own merits, and the pay cut needs to be viewed in the context of any other changes to the employee's employment, e.g., duties, location etc. One decision from the Office of Adjudication indicated that a pay cut of 12.6 per cent was reasonable – see Eng v Trigraph Inc. (March 12, 1993), ES 93-47 (Blair), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act. However, this case was unique on its facts in that most of the other employees accepted a much larger cut of 20 per cent. The referee noted this in determining that the pay cut was reasonable. The test of whether the cut is reasonable is what a reasonable employee in the circumstances would think of it, and the inference in the above-noted case was that the claimant was acting in an unreasonable manner in refusing to go along with the new arrangement.

When assessing whether or not the offer is reasonable, it is appropriate to consider the overtime possibilities available to the employee. See for example Rowlands v Custom Design Installation Ltd. (April 5, 2000), 4073-98-ES (ON LRB), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act, where the Board held that the employer's offer of a job that had little possibility of overtime was not reasonable when the employee had previously performed overtime on a regular basis.

Benefits

Benefits are to be included when calculating the amount of the pay cut. Some benefit packages are worth 15 per cent to 25 per cent of the employee's total remuneration. If the offer does not include such a package, then the offer may not be reasonable even though the basic wage or salary would remain the same.

Location

In determining whether the offer was unreasonable, the officer should look at how the change will be viewed by a reasonable employee in the circumstances. For example, if the offer involves a change of location from Toronto to Brampton, the offer may be a reasonable one for an employee who has a car and a driver's license, but may not be reasonable for another employee who is forced to rely on public transportation. The location of the employee's residence should also be considered.

Hours and Schedule of Work

For example, an offer that involves a change from the day shift to the night or "graveyard" shift may not be reasonable. Again, the question to ask is what a reasonable employee in the same circumstances as the employee in question would consider to be reasonable. A single mother, for example, who was on the day shift and is offered alternative employment on the night shift may validly consider such an offer to be unreasonable.

Perks

Such items as whether the employee is entitled to an expense account, to travel to business conferences, etc. may be relevant in determining whether an offer was reasonable.

Quality of Working Environment

For example, if an employee who has a job with a private office in an office tower is offered a position that comes with a clerical station located on the plant floor, this may be considered an adverse change in the attractiveness of the employee's working environment and militate against a finding that the offer was reasonable.

Degree of Responsibility

If the employee was in a managerial position and the employer proposes to place them in a non-managerial position, or if the employee was in a position where they could make significant decisions but is offered a job in which they could not, this will militate against a finding that the offer was reasonable.

Job Security

If an employee was in a position where there was a good chance of continuing employment for the foreseeable future and is offered a position where continuing employment is unlikely, this will militate against a finding that the offer was reasonable.

Possibility of Advancement

If the employee was in a job that was on the "fast track" and is offered one that is "dead end", this will militate against a finding that the offer was reasonable.

Decisions Regarding this Exemption

The following are some decisions regarding this exemption. While these decisions were issued under the former Employment Standards Act, they continue to be relevant:

- Mid North Iron & Metal Limited o/a Northland Iron & Metal v Malott (May 2, 1979), ESC 619 (Springate)
- W&W Cartage Limited c.o.b.a. Standard Truck Leasing v Holland (August 5, 1981), ESC 1047 (Betcherman)
- Century Store Fixtures Limited v Toma (October 9, 1987), ESC 2272 (Houston)
- Evans Bakeries Ltd. v Ontario Ministry of Labour (April 4, 1995) ESC 95-69 (Novick)
- Duley v Intertec Security & Investigation Ltd., 2000 CanLII 12958 (ON LRB)

Employee refuses reasonable offer of alternative employment through seniority system

Pursuant to s. 2(1) paragraph 6, an employee whose employment is terminated after they refuse alternative employment that is made available through a seniority system is not entitled to notice of termination or pay in lieu.

The effect of the exemption is to relieve the employer from the obligation to give notice of termination or termination pay where the employee refuses alternate work that was made available through a seniority system.

Note that, unlike the exemption in paragraph 5 of s. 2(1), the word "reasonable" does not appear. Therefore, where an employee has refused alternative employment made available through a seniority system, the exemption will apply and the employee will be disentitled to termination notice or pay in lieu regardless of whether or not that alternative employment was reasonable.

The seniority system does not need to be established pursuant to a collective agreement in order for this exemption to apply. However, where the seniority system is not established pursuant to a collective agreement, the employer will have the onus of demonstrating that the seniority system was formalized and was not merely of an ad hoc nature. In this regard, see Re Great Northern Apparel Inc., a decision under the former Employment Standards Act.

In order for there to be a refusal, the employee must be able to perform the work that is made available. There is a distinction between a refusal to do something, on the one hand, and an inability to do something, on the other hand. An employee who is unable to do something (for example, through lack of necessary credentials or disability) cannot be said to have refused to do it. Refusal involves declining to do something that one is able to do. Black's Law Dictionary states: ""Fail" is distinguished from "refuse" in that "refuse" involves an act of the will, while "fail" may be an act of inevitable necessity."

The exemption applies only when the employee's employment is terminated "after" they have refused alternative employment. Accordingly, the refusal must be made before the termination of the employment relationship and the position must be made available prior to the termination. Further, the exemption will apply only if there is a causal connection between the employee's refusal and the subsequent termination of the employee. In other words, if the termination of the employee had nothing to do with the refusal to accept alternative employment, the exemption will not apply, because it is only the employee's refusal to accept the alternative employment that relieves the employer from its obligation to give notice of termination or pay in lieu.

Employee on temporary lay-off and does not return to work in reasonable time

Pursuant to s. 2(1) paragraph 7, an employee who is on a temporary lay-off and does not return to work within a reasonable time after being requested to do so by the employer is not entitled to notice of termination or pay in lieu.

As with other exemptions from minimum standards, the employer has the onus of showing that the exemption applies. In this case, the employer must show that the offer of recall was made to the employee and that the employee clearly understood its terms. From the point of view of proof, the employer will satisfy the onus if it can show that a written notice of recall was received by the employee and that the employee could read and understand it. If the employer alleges that it orally recalled the employee and the employee denies it, it will, of course, be much more difficult for the employer to demonstrate that the employee was recalled. If the employee wilfully structures their affairs so that it is impossible for the employer, using its best efforts, to contact the employee for recall purposes, an employer who uses its best efforts to recall the employee but fails to reach them will be relieved its obligations to provide termination notice or pay in lieu.

The exemption only applies if the employee did not show up for work within a reasonable time after being recalled. This prevents the employer from recalling the employee with extremely short notice and then relying on the exemption when the employee is unable to respond so quickly. What is a reasonable time depends on the circumstances of each case, and will include factors such as where the employee was geographically when they received the recall.

If the employer recalls the employee for a very brief period of time, such as a few hours, it may be that the offer was not bona fide in that the employer made it for the sole purpose of attempting to disentitle the employee to termination notice or pay in lieu. In such a case, the employee who refuses such an offer may not be disentitled to notice or pay. See Highland Cove Marina v Van Velden and Babcock (December 22, 1983), ESC 1531 (Sheppard), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act.

The exemption only applies where the employee is on a temporary layoff. Since, pursuant to ESA Part XV, s. 56, a temporary lay-off does not include a week in which the employee was not able to work or was unavailable for work, the exemption will not apply where the employee is recalled to work during a sick leave or a pregnancy leave, for example.

Employment terminated because of strike or lock-out

Pursuant to s. 2(1) paragraph 8, an employee whose employment is terminated during a strike or lockout at the place of employment, or as a result of a strike or lock-out at the place of employment is not entitled to notice of termination or pay in lieu.

With respect to lock-outs, the exemption will apply only if the lock-out is a legal one under the Labour Relations Act, 1995, SO 1995, c 1, Sch A.

The exemption applies only if the strike or lock-out was at the employee's place of employment. The term "the place of employment" is not defined in the ESA 2000, and it is not the same as establishment as defined in ESA Part I, s. 1. When the employer has plants across the province, does a strike at a plant in Thunder Bay, for example, constitute a strike at "the place of employment" of an employee who works at the employer's Mississauga plant? The answer is no. The place of employment means the actual plant or office where the employee works.

The exemption applies when the employee's employment is terminated during a strike or lock-out, or as a result of a strike or lock-out. The meaning of "during" a strike or lock-out is self-evident. An employee terminated during a strike or lock-out, for whatever reason, would not be entitled to notice of termination or pay in lieu. Further, if an employee was given notice of termination prior to a strike or lock-out but was terminated (for example) during a subsequent strike and before the notice period had ended, this exemption would relieve the employer of any obligation with respect to the balance of the notice period or pay in lieu of notice. There is no requirement that the employee be a member of the striking or lock-out bargaining unit.

More difficult is the concept of "as a result of" a strike or lock-out. Can the employer rely on the exemption in a situation where the result of the strike is beneficial to the employer? For example, if the strike enables the employer to find a more efficient and profitable way of doing business without some of the employees, the employer might argue that the employees were terminated as a result of the strike in that their employment would have continued "but for" the strike. However, it is Program policy that in order to take advantage of the exemption, the employer must show that the strike had adverse consequences to its business and therefore necessitated the termination of the employees. In this regard, see Hayes Danc Inc. operating as Spicer Reman Centre v 15 Employees (December 29, 1989), ESC 2609 (Solomatenko), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act.

Furthermore, if the strike was little more than a catalyst, precipitating a closure that would have likely happened anyway, even without the strike, then the terminations will not be "as a result of" the strike within the meaning of the exemption. The strike must be the major cause of the terminations in order for the exemption to apply. If the major cause is instead, for example, lower demand, increased competition, or aging equipment and processes, and the strike is merely "the straw that broke the camel's back", then the exemption will not apply. See Robson Lang Leathers Limited v Legacy et al (January 19, 1979), ESC 574 (Picher), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act.

Construction employees

Pursuant to s. 2(1) paragraph 9, an employee who is a construction employee is not entitled to notice of termination or termination pay in lieu of notice. For purposes of this regulation, of O Reg 288/01, s. 1 provides that construction employee has the same meaning as in O Reg 285/01.

Note, however, there is an exception to this in the case of employees engaged in the maintenance of roads, based on principles of statutory interpretation. O Reg 288/01, s. 9(1) sets out exemptions from the right to severance pay; paragraph 7 of s. 9(1) exempts construction employees, while paragraph 8 exempts employees engaged in the on-site maintenance of, among other things, roads. This clearly indicates an intention on the part of the maker of the regulation that an employee employed in the maintenance of roads would not be considered to be a construction employee for purposes of O Reg 288/01, even though such an employee would be considered to be engaged in road building and thus be a construction employee for purposes of O Reg 285/01. It follows that because O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1), which sets out exemptions from the right to notice of termination or termination pay in lieu, contains no provision corresponding to paragraph 8 of O Reg 288/01, s. 9(1), an employee employed in the maintenance of roads is entitled to notice or termination pay.

See O Reg 288/01, s. 9 for a discussion of the severance pay exemption for road maintenance employees.

Employment terminated when employee reaches age of retirement

On December 12, 2006, O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) paragraph 11 was amended so that it applies only if the termination does not contravene the Human Rights Code, RSO 1990, c H.19 (as amended by the Ending Mandatory Retirement Statute Law Amendment Act, 2005, SO 2005, c 29). Formerly, the exemption applied where an employee's employment was terminated in accordance with the employer's established practice regarding retirement.

The amendment reflects changes to the Ontario Human Rights Code made under the Ending Mandatory Retirement Statute Law Amendment Act, 2005, SO 2005, c 29 which came into force on December 12, 2006.

On that date, 65 was removed as the cap in the definition of "age" for the purpose of the prohibition against discrimination under the Human Rights Code. As a result, all employees aged 18 or over, including those aged 65 or more, are protected against discrimination on the basis of how old they are, and among other things, generally cannot be forced to retire merely because they are 65 years old or older. Note however that under the Human Rights Code, mandatory retirement polices that can be upheld on bona fide occupational requirement grounds are still lawful.

For example, a fire department's policy that requires firefighter employees to retire at a specific age (e.g., 60 years) would not contravene the Human Rights Code if being younger than that age constituted a bona fide occupational requirement for firefighters. In that case, the notice of termination exemption in O Reg 288/01 would apply to a firefighter whose employment was terminated at age 60 in accordance with that policy.

The rationale for this exemption is that where the employer has an established retirement policy that does not contravene the Human Rights Code, the employee has advance knowledge that their employment will end at a certain time, and there is therefore no need to receive notice of termination or pay in lieu. If the employer has a mandatory retirement policy that contravenes the Human Rights Code, the employer cannot lawfully terminate an employee's employment on the basis of that policy; therefore, the rationale is not applicable in such situations.

On the other hand, if an employer has a voluntary early retirement plan, and the employee chooses to take advantage of it, the employee will not be entitled to notice of termination or pay in lieu. This is not because the exemption applies but because the employee has resigned, rather than having their employment terminated by the employer. In determining whether such an early retirement plan was truly voluntary, one consideration would be what the employee was told would happen if they did not accept early retirement. If the employee was told that they would be fired if the early retirement package were not accepted, then the employee may be considered to have been forced to resign, which is equivalent to a termination and would trigger a right to termination notice or pay in lieu.

Finally, note that even where a termination is effected pursuant to an alleged retirement practice that does not contravene the Human Rights Code, the employer must show that the practice is established for the exemption to apply. The Program's position is that this means it must have been in place for a reasonable period of time and must be known to the employees, especially the employee in question, for a reasonable period of time. If the employer, for example, institutes what is determined to be a bona fide retirement policy at age 60 a few days or weeks prior to the employee turning 60, the policy will not have been in place long enough to be established within the meaning of the exemption. This would be so even if the policy were a bona fide one.

Ship building and repair employees

Pursuant to s. 2(1) paragraph 12, an employee who meets the following conditions is exempted from termination pay or notice of termination:

- The employee's employer is engaged in the business of building, altering or repairing ships or vessels that have a gross tonnage of over ten tons and that are designed for or used in commercial navigation.
- The employee has access to a legitimate supplementary unemployment benefit plan that the employee (or their agent) agreed to. Pursuant to ESA Part 1, s. 1(3) the agreement must be in writing. Note that ESA Part 1, s. 1(3.1) addresses agreements in electronic form.
- The employee (or their agent) has agreed to have this exemption apply. Pursuant to ESA Part 1, s. 1(3) the agreement must be in writing. Note that ESA Part 1, s. 1(3.1) addresses agreements in electronic form.

Employees Not Entitled to Notice of Termination or Termination Pay – s. 2(2)

2(2) Paragraph 1 of subsection (1) does not apply if,

(a) the employment terminates before the expiry of the term or the completion of the task;

(b) the term expires or the task is not yet completed more than 12 months after the employment commences; or

(c) the employment continues for three months or more after the expiry of the term or the completion of the task.

This provision sets out exceptions to the application of the term or task exemption in paragraph 1 of s. 2(1). For a discussion of this provision refer to s. 2(1) para. 1 above.

Employees Not Entitled to Notice of Termination or Termination Pay – s. 2(3)

2(3) Paragraph 1 of subsection (1) does not apply if the impossibility or frustration is the result of an illness or injury suffered by the employee.

This provision sets out an exception to the application of the impossibility of performance or frustration of contract exemption in paragraph 4 of s. 2(1) of O Reg 288/01. It provides that the exemption does not apply where the impossibility of performance or frustration of contract is the consequence of an illness or injury suffered by the employee. It was added to O Reg 288/01 by O Reg 549/05, which was filed on October 28, 2005. Refer to s. 2(1) para. 4 above for a discussion of this provision.

O Reg 288/01 Section 3 - Notice, 50 or More Employees

Notice, 50 or More Employees - s. 3(1)

3(1) The following periods are prescribed for the purposes of subsection 58 (1) of the Act:

1. Notice shall be given at least eight weeks before termination if the number of employees whose employment is terminated is 50 or more but fewer than 200.

2. Notice shall be given at least 12 weeks before termination if the number of employees whose employment is terminated is 200 or more but fewer than 500.

3. Notice shall be given at least 16 weeks before termination, if the number of employees whose employment is terminated is 500 or more.

This section sets out the amount of notice employees are entitled to when there is a "mass" termination under s. 58(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. These entitlements are the same as they were under the former Employment Standards Act.

In a mass termination, the amount of notice an employee is entitled to receive is determined by the number of employees whose employment is terminated, rather than by the employee's period of employment. It should be noted that in the Employment Standards Act, 2000, the application of the mass notice provisions depend upon the number of employees actually terminated in a four-week period rather than the number of terminations initiated in a four-week period as was the case under the former Employment Standards Act. See the discussion of mass notice under s. 58(1) at ESA Part XV, s. 58(1).

Notice, 50 or More Employees - s. 3(2)

3(2) The following information is prescribed as the information to be provided to the Director under clause 58 (2) (a) of the Act and to be posted under clause 58 (2) (b) of the Act:

1. The employer's name and mailing address.

2. The location or locations where the employees whose employment is being terminated work.

3. The number of employees working at each location who are paid,

- i. on an hourly basis,
- ii. on a salaried basis, and
- iii. on some other basis.

4. The number of employees whose employment is being terminated at each location who are paid,

i. on an hourly basis,

ii. on a salaried basis, and

iii. on some other basis.

5. The date or dates on which it is anticipated that the employment of the employees referred to in paragraph 4 will be terminated.

6. The name of any trade union local representing any of the employees whose employment is being terminated.

7. The economic circumstances surrounding the terminations.

8. The name, title and telephone number of the individual who completed the form on behalf of the employer.

This section sets out the information that is required to be provided to the Director of Employment Standards and posted in the employer's establishment under ss. 58(2)(a) and (b) of the Act. Please refer to ESA Part XV, s. 58 for a discussion of the requirements to provide and post this information.

Section 3(3) of O Reg 288/01 sets out the manner in which this information is to be provided to the Director.

Notice, 50 or More Employees - s. 3(3)

3(3) The employer shall provide the information referred to in subsection (2) to the Director by setting it out in the form approved by the Director under clause 58(2)(a) of the Act and delivering the form to the Employment Practices Branch of the Ministry of Labour between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. on any day other than a Saturday, Sunday or other day on which the offices of the Branch are closed.

This section sets out the manner in which the information referred to in s. 3(2) of O Reg 288/01 is to be provided to the Director of Employment Standards. This section should also be read together with s. 58(4) of the Act, which provides that mass notice is deemed not to have been given until the information referred to in s. 3(2) of O Reg 288/01 has been received by the Director of Employment Standards. See the discussion of s. 58(4) of the Act at ESA Part XV, s. 58.

The prescribed information must be provided to the Director on the form approved by the Director. The form approved for this purpose is entitled "Form 1". The Form 1 may be downloaded from the Ministry of Labour's website at or may obtained from a Service Ontario Information Centre.

The Form 1 is to be delivered during the hours and on the days specified in s. 3(3) to:

Director of Employment Standards

Employment Practices Branch

Ministry of Labour

400 University Avenue, 9th Floor

Toronto, ON M7A 1T7

The Form 1 may be delivered by facsimile transmission to: (416) 326-7061.

Notice, 50 or More Employees - s. 3(4)

3(4) Section 58 of the Act does not apply to the employer and employees if,

(a) the number of employees whose employment is terminated at the establishment is not more than 10 per cent of the number of employees who have been employed there for at least three months; and

(b) the terminations were not caused by the permanent discontinuance of part of the employer's business at the establishment.

This section is similar to the corresponding provision (s. 5(1) of O Reg 327) under the former Employment Standards Act.

This section provides an exception to the application of the mass termination rules. Generally, the mass termination rules apply where the employment of 50 or more employees at an establishment is being terminated in the same four-week period. This section provides that those rules will not apply if the following two criteria are met:

1. The number of employees whose employment is being terminated represents not more than 10 per cent of the employees who have been employed for at least three months at the establishment; and
2. None of the terminations are caused by the permanent discontinuance of all or part of the employer's business at the establishment.

Both criteria must be met in order for this exception to apply. For example, in a situation where the employment of less than 10 per cent of the employees at an establishment is terminated, the mass terminations rules will apply if any of the terminations are caused by a permanent discontinuance of all or part of the business at the establishment.

If the exception in s. 3(4) applies, the individual notice provisions will apply instead of the mass termination rules.

Each criterion is discussed in more detail below.

The number of employees whose employment is being terminated is not more than 10 per cent of the employees who have been employed for at least three months at the establishment.

This is commonly referred to as the "10 per cent rule". This criterion will be met if the number of employees to be terminated represents 10 per cent or less of the number of employees who have been employed for at least three months at the establishment.

To determine whether this criterion applies, the first step is to determine the number of employees who have had their employment terminated (the numerator in the equation). All employees who are terminated, whether they are entitled to notice of termination or not under the Act, are included in counting the number of employees being terminated, including employees with less than three months of employment. A plain reading of the regulation suggests that these employees are excluded only when counting the number of employees employed at the establishment; they are not excluded when counting the number of employees whose employment is terminated.

The second step is to determine how many employees who have been employed for at least three months were employed at the employer's establishment (the denominator in the equation). The time at which this count is done is the day before the first day of the four-week period in question.

Consider the following example:

Number of employees whose employment is terminated:

- Less than three months - 10
- Three months or more - 95

TOTAL - 105

Number of employees at establishment:

- Less than three months - 150
- Three months or more - 950

The calculation to be performed to see if the 10 per cent criterion applies is as follows:

- The numerator (Number of employees to be terminated, including those that have been employed less than three months) - 105
- The denominator (Number of employees employed three months or more) - 950

105 divided 950 = 11.05%

Because this calculation results in a number greater than 10 per cent, the exception in s. 3(4) will not apply, and, consequently, the mass termination rules in s. 58 will apply.

None of the terminations are caused by the permanent discontinuance of part of the employer's business at the establishment.

This criterion will be met only if none of the terminations are caused by the permanent discontinuance of part or all of the employer's business at the establishment. If any of the terminations are caused by the permanent discontinuance of the employer's business at the establishment, the mass termination rules will apply.

Again, both this criterion and the 10 per cent criterion must be met in order for the exception to the application of the mass termination rules in s. 3(4) to apply.

The corresponding provision under the former Employment Standards Act (s. 5(1) of O Reg 327) referred to "all or part" of the employer's business. Section 3(4) of O Reg 288 has the same meaning even though it refers only to "part" of the employer's business. This is because, logically, where there is a discontinuance of all of the business there will necessarily be a discontinuance of part of the business.

The phrase "part of the employer's business" is not defined in the Act, and was the subject of some controversy under the former Employment Standards Act. There is not a body of case law from referees or adjudicators on the meaning of this phrase. However, there have been quite a few decisions from the Ontario Labour Relations Board on the issue of what constitutes "part of a business" within the meaning of the Labour Relations Act, 1995, SO 1995, c 1, Sch 1 ("LRA 1995") successorship provisions. Although these decisions have been decided in a context different from the ESA 2000 provisions, they may be helpful.

Generally, the LRA 1995 cases suggest that what is meant by "part of the business" is a coherent and severable part of the employer's economic organization, managerial or employee skills, plant, equipment, "know how" or goodwill. Thus, the closing of one of several stores in a chain, or the closing of one of several plants will amount to the discontinuance of part of the employer"s business at an establishment, provided, of course, that the stores or plants in question were all in the same "establishment" as that term is defined in s. 1 of the Act. See the discussion of this term in the mass termination context in ESA Part XV, s. 58. Also, where the employer conducts several types of operations at one location, e.g., it manufactures several types or brands of products at that location, and the employer discontinues one of those operations, there will be a discontinuance of part of the employer's business. However, where the employer is merely reducing its workforce by downsizing and continues to perform the same operations or functions as before, but on a smaller scale, there will not be a discontinuance of part of the business.

Some of the relevant LRA 1995 cases on what is "part of a business" are as follows:

- United Food & Commercial Workers' International Union, Local 633 v Vaunclair Meats Limited, 1981 CanLII 1020 (ON LRB)
- Re Canac Shock Absorbers Ltd.
- Retail Clerks Union, Local 206 v Loblaws Groceries Co.
- Re The Borden Co.
- Re Automatic Fuels Ltd.
- Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen of North America v Beef Terminal (1979) Limited, 1980 CanLII 763 (ON LRB)

A discontinuance that is temporary in nature will not be permanent for the purposes of s. 3(4)(b), even if the discontinuance goes beyond 13 weeks. For example, where one of the employer's witnesses testified that the closure of a mine could last as long as three years, but that it intended to re-activate the mines at some future unknown date, it was held that the discontinuance was not a permanent one - see Re Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd. and Simmons et al., 1978 CanLII 1696 (ON SC), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act.

O Reg 288/01 Section 4 – Manner of Giving Notice

Manner of Giving Notice - s. 4(1)

4(1) Subject to section 5, a notice of termination shall be,

(a) given in writing;

(b) addressed to the employee whose employment is to be terminated; and

(c) served on the employee in accordance with section 95 of the Act.

This provision sets out the manner in which notice of termination required by ss. 57 or 58 must be provided. This section is subject to s. 5 of O Reg 288/01, which addresses the issue of providing notice where "bumping rights" apply. See O Reg 288/01, s. 5. It is substantially the same as the corresponding provision (s. 8(1) of O Reg 327) under the former Employment Standards Act.

In writing - s. 4(1)(a)

Notice of termination of employment must be in writing. It is Program policy that the notice must specify when the employment is to be terminated, even if the employee is made aware of the impending termination through other means. See for example Estimations Trimac Appraisals Inc. v Cholette (October 31, 2000), 2806-99-ES (ON LRB), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act in which an employee was aware of and actively involved in the employer's closure plans, including writing a letter to the landlord indicating the premises would be vacant on a particular date.

Although this provision requires notice in writing, it is Program policy that oral notice may be sufficient if the oral notice is clear and unequivocal and is greater in length than the notice required under ss. 57 or 58 and the minimum requirements concerning continuation of wages and benefits are met. The basis of this policy is that a greater right or benefit under s. 5(2) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 has been provided. This is supported by Fanaken v Bell, Temple, 1984 CanLII 1856 (ON SC), a court case decided under the former Employment Standards Act.

Where the employer is alleging that it gave oral notice greater in length than the required minimum written notice, the onus is on the employer to show that the employee received and understood the oral notice, and that the notice was specific as to the date of termination.

Addressed to the employee - s. 4(1)(b)

The notice of termination is to be addressed to the employee whose employment is to be terminated. Obviously, notice cannot be effective if it is not clear whose employment is to be terminated.

Served on the employee in accordance with section 95 - s. 4(1)(c)

This clause was amended by O Reg 397/09 to delete specific references to personal service. The amendment reflects the fact that the expanded methods of service listed in s. 95 (as amended by the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009, SO 2009, c 9, in force on November 6, 2009) include personal service.

The written notice of termination must be served in accordance with s. 95 of the Act. For a discussion of the methods of service listed in s. 95(1), see ESA Part XXI.

Service of a written notice of termination by a method listed in s. 95(1) is effective in accordance with ss. 95(2), (3) or (4) depending on the method of service used.

Manner of Giving Notice - s. 4(2)

4(2) If an employer bound by a collective agreement is or will be laying off an employee for a period that will or may be longer than a temporary lay-off and the employer would be or might be in breach of the collective agreement if the employer advised the employee that his or her employment was to be terminated, the employer may provide the employee with a written notice of indefinite lay-off and the employer shall be deemed as of the date on which that notice was given to have provided the employee with a notice of termination.

This section applies in situations where an employer intends to lay off an employee for a period longer than a temporary lay-off but would be in breach of a collective agreement if it gave notice of termination of employment. (This situation arises, for example, where the collective agreement permits indefinite lay-offs but permits "terminations" only where there is just cause.) In this case only, the employer may give written notice of indefinite lay-off and be deemed to have provided the employee with notice of termination.

Subsection 56(4) of the Act states that an employer who lays an employee off without specifying a recall date shall not be considered to terminate the employment of the employee unless the lay-off is longer than a temporary lay-off - see ESA Part XV, s. 56. Accordingly, while the notice of indefinite lay-off is from the outset deemed to be a notice of termination, there is no termination of employment per se unless the lay-off goes on longer than a temporary lay-off.

If an employer gives working notice of indefinite layoff that is of sufficient length, there would be no termination pay liability in the event that the period of the lay-off ends up exceeding the period of a temporary lay-off, because the employer is deemed under s. 4(2) of O Reg 288/01 to have provided the employee with notice of termination. In such cases, the termination date is deemed under s. 56(5) to have been the first day of the lay-off. Because of s. 56(4) there will be a termination pay entitlement only if the layoff goes on longer than a temporary lay-off and the notice of indefinite layoff given under s. 4(2) was in some way deficient (e.g., notice not in writing, or notice to take effect immediately or prior to the expiry of the notice period that would otherwise have been applicable under s. 57).

Conversely, where notice of indefinite lay-off is given but the lay-off turns out not to exceed the period of a temporary lay-off, there would be no termination of employment and therefore no termination pay entitlement.

It should be noted, however, that an employer may run the risk that some employees may resign during the notice of indefinite layoff period in accordance with the condition described in s. 63(1)(e) of the Act and become entitled to severance pay. Clause 63(1)(e) of the Act provides that where an employee is given a notice of termination by the employer and resigns with at least two weeks' notice to take effect during the statutory notice period, his or her employment is severed. Since a notice of indefinite lay-off is deemed to be a notice of termination under s. 4(2), this means that the employee who receives a notice of indefinite lay-off and who responds with a notice of resignation meets all the specified conditions in order to be entitled to severance. The employment is deemed to have been severed on the termination date specified in the employer's notice, and the employer would have to pay the severance pay on the later of seven days after that date and the date that would have been the next pay for the employee. See ESA Part XV, s. 63.

O Reg 288/01 Section 5 – Notice of Termination Where Seniority Rights Apply

Notice of Termination Where Seniority Rights Apply - ss. 5(1), (2)

5(1) This section applies with respect to employees whose employment contracts provide seniority rights by which an employee who is to be laid off or whose employment is to be terminated may displace another employee.

5(2) If an employer who proposes to terminate the employment of an employee described in subsection (1) posts a notice in a conspicuous part of the workplace setting out the name, seniority, job classification and proposed lay-off or termination date of the employee, the notice shall constitute notice of termination as of the day of posting to any employee whom the employee named in the notice displaces.

These provisions are substantially the same as the corresponding provision (s. 7 of Reg 327) under the former Employment Standards Act.

This section applies where employees who are to be terminated have the right to "bump" another employee with less seniority out of their job and take that job.

Where an employee has the right to "bump" a more junior employee, the employer is deemed to have provided written notice of termination to the more junior employee who is ultimately terminated by posting a notice in a conspicuous part of the workplace indicating the seniority, job classification and proposed lay-off or termination date of the employee named in the notice (the "bumper"). The principle is that the employee who will be bumped out can determine his or her fate from the posted notice and the seniority list. Note, however, that if the employee originally identified in the posted notice does not "bump" a more junior employee, the employer will be required to comply with the notice requirements in s. 4(1) of O Reg 288/01 with respect to the employee named in the posted notice.

Finally, it should be noted that if read literally, this provision would appear to limit the application of s. 5 such that it would provide effective notice only to the first employee bumped by the employee named in the posted notice. If that were the case, the employer would have to comply with s. 4(1) with respect to the employee ultimately bumped (e.g., a second or third, etc. "bumpee"). However, it is the Program's policy (based on the principle of statutory interpretation that a literal interpretation should not be taken where the result would lead to an absurdity) that the section must be read broadly as if it were of the same purport as the corresponding provision (s. 7) in O Reg 327 under the former Employment Standards Act. As a result, it is the Program's policy that s. 5 will apply to provide effective notice to the employee ultimately displaced through the "bumping" process, even though he or she is not in fact displaced by the person named in the notice.

Notice of Termination Where Seniority Rights Apply - s. 5(3)

5(3) Clause 60(1)(a) of the Act does not apply to an employee who displaces another employee in the circumstances described in this section.

This section provides that s. 60(1)(a) of the Employment Standards Act does not apply to an employee who bumps another employee as described in ss. 5(1) and (2). Section 60(1)(a) provides that an employer shall not reduce the employee's wage rate or change a term or condition of employment during the statutory notice period. See ESA Part XV, s. 60.

Under this provision, an employee whose position is being terminated and who exercises his or her seniority rights to "bump" into a position of a more junior employee, may be paid the wage rate and be subject to the terms and conditions of employment of that new position during the statutory notice period.

O Reg 288/01 Section 6 – Temporary Work, 13-week Period

6(1) An employer who has given an employee notice of termination in accordance with the Act and the regulations may provide temporary work to the employee without providing a further notice of termination in respect of the day on which the employee's employment is finally terminated if that day occurs not later than 13 weeks after the termination date specified in the original notice.

6(2) The provision of temporary work to an employee in the circumstances described in subsection (1) does not affect the termination date as specified in the notice or the employee's period of employment.

This section provides that an employer who has given an employee notice of termination in accordance with the Employment Standards Act, 2000 may provide the employee with temporary work during the 13-week period following the date the employee's employment was to end without affecting the employee's termination date or period of employment and without being required to provide any further notice when the employee's employment finally does end. In that regard, see Di Tomaso v Crown Metal Packaging Canada LP, 2011 ONCA 469 (CanLII), where the Court of Appeal held that s. 6 of O Reg 288/01 contemplates temporary work not exceeding 13 weeks in duration from the originally-specified termination date and that if the temporary work exceeds that duration, new notice is required. The employer was unsuccessful in arguing that s. 6 allowed successive periods of temporary work of 13 weeks or less without imposing an obligation on the employer to give new notice in respect of the date on which employment is finally ended. The court held that to interpret the section in that way would be inconsistent with the status of employment standards legislation as remedial, benefit-conferring legislation as characterized by the Supreme Court of Canada in Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Limited (Re), [1998] 1 SCR 27.

O Reg 288/01 Section 7 – Inclusion of Vacation Time in Notice Period

7 The period of a notice of termination given to an employee shall not include any vacation time unless the employee, after receiving the notice, agrees to the inclusion of the vacation time in the notice period of the notice.

This section is substantially the same as the corresponding provision (s. 10 of O Reg 327) under the former Employment Standards Act.

This section states that the period of notice of termination given to an employee shall not include any vacation time unless the employee agrees to include the vacation time in the notice period. Under s. 1(3) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, any such agreement must be in writing.

Note that if an employee had been scheduled to take a vacation before he or she was given notice of termination, and that vacation would now fall within the statutory notice period, this provision would require the employer to obtain the employee's agreement to take that previously scheduled vacation during the notice period.

O Reg 288/01 Section 8 – Period of Employment

Period of Employment – s. 8(1)

8(1) For the purposes of this Regulation and sections 54 to 62 of the Act, an employee's period of employment is the period beginning on the day he or she most recently commenced employment and ending on,

(a) if notice of termination is given in accordance with Part XV of the Act, the day it is given; and

(b) if notice of termination is not given in accordance with Part XV of the Act, the day the employee's employment is terminated.

This section is substantially the same as the corresponding provision (s. 14(1) of O Reg 327) of the former Employment Standards Act.

This section establishes the length of an employee's period of employment for the purpose of calculating the amount of notice of termination or termination pay owing to that employee. The period of employment is the period beginning on the date the employee most recently commenced employment with the employer, and ending:

- On the day notice of termination was given, if it was given in accordance with Part XV of the Employment Standards Act, 2000; or

- On the day the employment was terminated, if notice of termination was not given in accordance with Part XV of the Act.

This section must be read in conjunction with s. 8(2) of O Reg 288/01, which sets out circumstances in which two periods of employment are to be considered as one period of employment (see the discussion of subsection (2) below).

The period of employment will only include employment in Ontario or work that is a continuation of work in Ontario. For example, if an employee worked for ABC Inc. for five years in England, then was transferred to Ontario and worked in Ontario for two years before being terminated, his or her period of employment for the purposes of s. 54 to s. 62 of the Act and O Reg 288/01 would be two years.

This section should also be read in conjunction with s. 59 of the Act, which sets out time that is to be included and excluded from an employee's period of employment – see ESA Part XV, s. 59.

Note that this provision applies only for the purposes of ss. 54 to 62 of the Act (Termination of Employment). That is, it applies only for the purpose of calculating the amount of notice of termination or termination pay owing. It does not apply for the purpose of determining eligibility for notice of termination or for determining severance pay entitlements.

Eligibility for notice of termination is triggered by three months of continuous employment rather than the employee's "period of employment".

As a result, time on lay-off after the deemed termination date will be excluded in determining the "period of employment" under s. 59 of the Act but will be included when determining whether the employee had three months of continuous employment and was or was not eligible for notice of termination. See the discussion of eligibility for notice under s. 54 of the Act at ESA Part XV, s. 54.

Period of Employment – s. 8(2)

8(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), two successive periods of employment that are not more than 13 weeks apart shall be added together and treated as one period of employment.

Section 8(2) of O Reg 288/01 requires that successive periods of employment that are separated by 13 weeks or less be added together for the purpose of determining the period of employment under s. 8(1), which is used for calculating the amount of notice of termination or termination pay to which an employee is entitled. Bear in mind, however, s. 59 of the Act, under which inactive employment counts in determining an employee's period of employment, except for any part of a lay-off that falls after the deemed termination date. Where the periods of employment are more than 13 weeks apart, only the last period of employment will be counted for these purposes.

The application of s. 8(2) can be illustrated with the following example: an employee was employed by Company A from January 1, 2008, until December 31, 2013 (5 years), and from February 1, 2014, to April 30, 2015 (1.25 years). This employee will have a period of employment of 6.25 years for notice of termination and termination pay purposes. The first 5-year period of employment is added to the second 1.25 year period of employment since the two periods are not separated by more than 13 weeks.

Note that s. 8(2) will apply to add more than two periods of employment together if the periods are not separated by more than 13 weeks. For example, if an employee was employed by Company B from January 1, 2010 to December 31, 2010 (one year), then again from February 1, 2011 to October 31, 2011 (0.75 of a year) and then yet again from December 1, 2011 until February 28, 2014 (2.25 years), all the periods of employment will be added together since the intervals between the first and second periods and between the second and third periods do not exceed 13 weeks. Thus, the employee's period of employment will be four years.

This provision will apply to tie together successive periods of employment that are separated by no more than 13 weeks regardless of the reason for the earlier period coming to an end, i.e., it is irrelevant that the earlier period ended because the employee quit or was fired (regardless of the reason for the firing). See for example Filter Dynamics v Couling (September 9, 1981), ESC 1061 (Davis).

Note that eligibility for notice of termination is triggered by three months of continuous employment (and not a period of employment of three months). See the discussion of eligibility for notice under s. 54 of the Act at ESA Part XV, s. 54.

Note also that this provision applies only for the purposes of calculating the notice of termination or termination pay entitlement. It does not apply for the purpose of determining severance pay entitlements.

O Reg 288/01 Section 9 – Severance of Employment

Employees Not Entitled to Severance Pay - s. 9(1)

This section sets out the exemptions from the severance provisions of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. The employees listed in this section are not entitled to severance pay. A discussion of each exemption appears below.

Permanent Discontinuance Caused by Strike - s. 9(1) para. 1

9(1) The following employees are prescribed for the purposes of subsection 64(3) of the Act as employees who are not entitled to severance pay under section 64 of the Act:

1. An employee whose employment is severed as a result of a permanent discontinuance of all or part of the employer's business that the employer establishes was caused by the economic consequences of a strike.

This provision has substantially the same effect as s. 58(5)(b) of the former Employment Standards Act

The effect of this exemption is to relieve an employer of its obligation to provide severance pay under s. 64 if an employee's employment is severed as a result of a permanent discontinuance of all or part of the employer's business that the employer establishes was caused by the economic consequences of a strike. Note that the exemption can apply only in the context of a strike, not a lock-out.

With respect to the phrase "permanent discontinuance of all or part of the employer's business", see the discussion of s. 3(4)(b) of O Reg 288/01. Although s. 3(4)(b) refers to a permanent discontinuance of only part of the employer's business rather than all or part, it is the Program's view that the two phrases have the same meaning. This is because, logically, where there is a discontinuance of all of the business, there will necessarily be a discontinuance of part of the business.

The test to be applied in determining whether the permanent discontinuance was caused by the economic consequences of the strike is whether or not the closure would have happened even if the strike had not occurred. If the answer is yes, then this exemption will not apply.

In determining whether the closure would have happened even in the absence of the strike, an employment standards officer considers whether the business would have continued to operate for a significant period of time beyond the closure if it were not for the strike. If, without the strike, the business would have closed soon after it actually did, then the employer cannot escape severance pay liability by showing that the strike simply hastened a closure that would have happened in any event. If the seeds of a business demise are "planted and take root" before a strike, it cannot be said that the strike caused the closure within the meaning of the exemption. See Courtaulds Films Canada, division of International Paints (Canada) Limited v Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers' Union, Locals 1332 and 1675 (December 10, 1991), ESC 2949 (Bendel), a decision under the former Employment Standards Act. In applying the test noted above, consideration should also be given to whether the employer actually took into account the economic consequences of the strike in deciding to close its business. If the employer did not take those consequences into account, then it cannot later on, after the closure, look back in retrospect and say that the closure was actually caused by the strike for purposes of the exemption.

Other cases that dealt with s. 58(5)(b) of the former Employment Standards Act include:

- Hart and Cooley Manufacturing Co. of Canada v Lea (June 27, 1986), ESC 2135 (Brown)
- Re Dominion Forge Co. Ltd.

Contract Impossible to Perform or Frustrated - s. 9(1) para. 2

9(1) The following employees are prescribed for the purposes of subsection 64(3) of the Act as employees who are not entitled to severance pay under section 64 of the Act:

2. Subject to subsection (2), an employee whose contract of employment has become impossible to perform or has been frustrated.

The effect of this exemption is to relieve an employer of its obligation to provide severance pay under s. 64 in some situations where an employee's contract of employment has become impossible to perform or has been frustrated (see O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) para. 4 for a discussion of the meaning of these terms). However, there are exceptions to the application of this exemption set out in s. 9(2) of O Reg 288/01, discussed below.

Employee Retires After Being Severed and Receives Actuarially Unreduced Pension - s. 9(1) para. 3

9(1) The following employees are prescribed for the purposes of subsection 64(3) of the Act as employees who are not entitled to severance pay under section 64 of the Act:

3. An employee who, on having his or her employment severed, retires and receives an actuarially unreduced pension benefit that reflects any service credits which the employee, had the employment not been severed, would have been expected to have earned in the normal course of events for purposes of the pension plan.

The effect of this exemption is to relieve an employer of its obligation to provide severance pay under s. 64 in some situations where an employee retires upon having his or her employment severed. The exemption will apply only if the employee receives an actuarially unreduced pension benefit that reflects any service credits the employee would have earned for the purposes of the pension plan had the employment not been severed. This exemption is substantially similar to the corresponding provisions (ss. 58(5)(g) and 58(6)(d)) under the former Employment Standards Act, as those provisions were interpreted in the case law.

In order for this pension exemption to apply, the pension must be provided by the employer that is severing the employee. Pensions from the Canada Pension Plan or from prior employers are not to be taken into consideration.

This exemption will not apply if the pension benefit is reduced (whether actuarially or otherwise) to an amount less than what the employee would have received had the employee been given the opportunity to stay until the normal retirement date.

It should be noted that although the term pension plan is defined very broadly in O Reg 286/01 (and encompasses such plans as deferred profit sharing plans, group RRSPs or retiring allowances) for the purposes of prohibiting differentiation in the provision of such plans (s. 44 of the Act and O Reg 286/01), they are not in fact true pension plans.

The Program's position is that it is appropriate in the context of prohibiting differentiation in the provision of benefits to construe the term "pension plan" broadly, but in the context of creating an exemption from an entitlement to severance under the Act that the term should be construed narrowly to include only plans that are registered under the Pension Benefits Act, RSO 1990, c P.8 and the federal Income Tax Act, RSC 1985, c 1 (5th Supp) as pension plans. The two main types of registered plans are defined benefit pension plans and defined contribution pension plans.

Further, of these two types of plans, the exemption in s. 9(1) paragraph 3 will apply only where the employee has a defined benefit pension plan. A defined benefit plan is one where the benefit is predetermined and the payout is dependent upon the accrual of service credits. It is the Program's view that the exemption can have no application where the employee has a defined contribution plan because such plans have a payout that is not dependent on years of service (i.e., the payouts are dependent on the total amount of contributions and investment income that has been earned).

The following are examples of a defined benefit pension plan:

The pension plan provides for a normal retirement date of age 65.

The monthly pension amount is calculated as $100 multiplied by the number of years of service; it also provides for a reduction in that amount of 5 per cent for each year between the actual retirement date and the normal retirement date. The employee was forced to retire at age 62 after fifteen years of employment.

Here the exemption cannot apply for two reasons. First, the penalty, typically imposed to reflect the fact that employees who retire before normal retirement age will collect their pensions for a longer time than those who do not retire until normal retirement age, means that the pension is not "actuarially unreduced". Second, because in the normal course of events the employee would not have retired until age 65, by which time he would have had eighteen years of employment, the pension does not reflect all the service credits that the employee, had his employment not been severed, would have been expected to have earned in the normal course of events.

The pension plan provides for a normal retirement date of age 65

The monthly pension is calculated as one-twelfth of the product of an employee's years of service multiplied by 2 per cent multiplied by the average of the employee's five highest years of salary. The employee was forced to retire at age 61 after 22 years of service. However, her pension was not subject to any penalty for early retirement because the plan provides that there will be no such penalty if the employee is at least 60 years of age and has at least 20 years of service credits.

Here, although the pension is actuarially unreduced, the exemption still cannot apply. This is because in the normal course of events she would not have retired until age 65 and would have been expected to have had 26 years of service credits rather than 22.

It is important to remember that there must be a severance of the employee's employment in order for the severance pay provisions to apply at all. An employee who voluntarily takes early retirement and receives a reduced pension has resigned and will not be entitled to severance pay. In determining whether or not the employee's decision to take early retirement was truly voluntary, the circumstances behind the decision must be considered. If the employer informed the employee that the only alternative to accepting the early retirement package would be dismissal or a change in the job that would amount to a constructive dismissal, then the employee's resulting acceptance of the early retirement package would not be considered to be truly voluntary. Where the employee retires at normal retirement age pursuant to a mandatory retirement provision in the contract of employment, the employment will be considered to have been severed, even if the employee does not expressly ask to be allowed to stay on past that age. Where, however, the employee is asked to stay on past the normal retirement age and refuses, the employee will either be considered to have resigned or to have refused reasonable alternative work and will therefore be disentitled to severance pay.

It should be noted that this exemption has no application where an employee whose employment is severed, retires with no pension provided by the employer. In such cases, the employee will be entitled to severance pay unless he or she is otherwise exempted. In this regard, see the following cases which were decided under the former Employment Standards Act: Re Alexanian & Sons Ltd.; Ascona Spinning Ltd. v Avery (March 21, 1990), ESC 2659 (Bendel); and D.H. Howden, Division of Sodisco-Howden Buying Group Inc. v Lines, 2000 CanLII 13255 (ON LRB).

Employee Refuses Reasonably Alternative Employment - s. 9(1) para. 4

9(1) The following employees are prescribed for the purposes of subsection 64 (3) of the Act as employees who are not entitled to severance pay under section 64 of the Act:

4. An employee whose employment is severed after refusing an offer of reasonable alternative employment with the employer.

The effect of this exemption is to relieve an employer of its obligation to provide severance pay under s. 64 where it severs the employment of an employee who has refused an offer of reasonable alternative employment with the employer. This exemption is substantially similar to the corresponding provision (s. 58(6)(a)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

This exemption is identical in wording and meaning to the corresponding termination notice/pay exemption in paragraph 5 of s. 2(1) of O Reg 288/01 - see the discussion in O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1), para. 5.

Employee Refuses Reasonable Alternative Employment Made Available Through Seniority System - s. 9(1) para. 5

9(1) The following employees are prescribed for the purposes of subsection 64 (3) of the Act as employees who are not entitled to severance pay under section 64 of the Act:

5. An employee whose employment is severed after refusing reasonable alternative employment made available through a seniority system.

The effect of this exemption is to relieve an employer of its obligation to provide severance pay under s. 64 where it severs the employment of an employee who has refused reasonable alternative employment that is made available through a seniority system. This exemption is substantially similar to the corresponding provision (s. 58(6)(b)) of the former Employment Standards Act.

With one important difference, this exemption is the same as the corresponding termination notice/pay exemption (paragraph 6 of s. 2(1) of O Reg 288/01). The only difference is that this exemption only applies if the alternative work offered is reasonable. With respect to the issue of whether an employee has refused alternative work made available through a seniority system, please refer to section O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) para. 6. With respect to the issue of whether the alternative work was reasonable, please refer to O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) para. 5.

Employee Guilty of Wilful Misconduct, etc. - s. 9(1) para. 6

9(1) The following employees are prescribed for the purposes of subsection 64(3) of the Act as employees who are not entitled to severance pay under section 64 of the Act:

6. An employee who has been guilty of wilful misconduct, disobedience or wilful neglect of duty that is not trivial and has not been condoned by the employer.

An employee who has been guilty of wilful misconduct, disobedience or wilful neglect of duty that is not trivial and that has not been condoned by the employer is not entitled to severance pay. This exemption is substantially the same as the corresponding provision (s. 58(6)(c)) of the former Employment Standards Act and the Program policy under that provision. The only difference between the wording of this exemption and its predecessor is the addition of the words "that is not trivial". This change codifies Program policy that applied under the former Act.

This exemption is identical in wording and meaning to the corresponding exemption for termination notice/pay in paragraph 3 of s. 2(1) of O Reg 288/01. Please refer to the discussion of that provision in O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) para. 3.

For information on the application of the wilful disobedience exemption where an employee is not vaccinated against, or tested for, COVID-19 in accordance with the employer's policy, see "ESA Termination and Severance Liabilities Where an Employee is Not Vaccinated Against or Tested For COVID-19".

Construction Employee - s. 9(1) para. 7

9(1) The following employees are prescribed for the purposes of subsection 64(3) of the Act as employees who are not entitled to severance pay under section 64 of the Act:

7. A construction employee.

An employee who is a "Construction employee" is not entitled to severance pay. For purposes of O Reg 288/01, section 1 of the regulation provides that the term "construction employee" has the same meaning as in O Reg 285/01.

Note, however, there is an exception to this in the case of employees engaged in the maintenance of roads, based on principles of statutory interpretation. Employees who are engaged in road maintenance, although considered "construction employees" for the purposes of O Reg 285/01, are not treated as construction employees for the purposes of O Reg 288/01. See O Reg 288/01, s. 1 for a detailed explanation. Accordingly, employees who are engaged in road maintenance are not covered by the "construction employee" exemption from severance pay in paragraph 7 of s. 9(1). Nonetheless, they are not entitled to severance pay; this is because of paragraph 8 of s. 9(1), which exempts employees engaged in the on-site maintenance of, among other things, roads. See paragraph 9 below for detailed discussion of paragraph 9 of s. 9(1).

Employee Engaged in On-site Maintenance - s. 9(1) para. 8

9(1) The following employees are prescribed for the purposes of subsection 64(3) of the Act as employees who are not entitled to severance pay under section 64 of the Act:

8. An employee engaged in the on-site maintenance of buildings, structures, roads, sewers, pipelines, mains, tunnels or other works.

Employees who are engaged in the on-site maintenance of buildings, structures, roads, sewers, pipelines, mains, tunnels or other works are not entitled to receive severance pay.

Although employees who are engaged in the maintenance of roads are exempt from severance pay entitlements by virtue of this paragraph, they are entitled to the termination pay/notice provisions. See O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1), para. 9. Note that a decision under the former Employment Standards Act rejected the argument that office cleaners should be regarded as being engaged in on-site maintenance of buildings. The referee in Federated Building Maintenance Co. Ltd. v 195 Employees (September 23, 1988), ESC 2377 (Franks) held that cleaning was of a cosmetic and hygienic nature, whereas maintenance was an activity primarily aimed at preventing systems from falling into disrepair.

Exceptions to Employees Not Entitled to Severance Pay - s. 9(2)

9(2) Paragraph 2 of subsection (1) does not apply if,

(a) the impossibility or frustration is the result of,

- i. a permanent discontinuance of all or part of the employer's business because of a fortuitous or unforeseen event,
- ii. the employer's death, or
- iii. the employee's death, if the employee received a notice of termination before his or her death; or

(b) the impossibility or frustration is the result of an illness or injury suffered by the employee.

Section 9(1) para. 2 relieves an employer of its obligation to provide severance pay under s. 64 in some situations where an employee's contract of employment has become impossible to perform or has been frustrated. Section 9(2) sets out the exceptions to s. 9(1) para. 2. These two provisions mean that an employee whose employment has been severed (and who meets all the qualifying criteria for severance pay) will be entitled to severance pay even if the contract has become impossible to perform or frustrated, if the reason for the frustration or impossibility was because of:

1. A permanent discontinuance of all or part of the employer's business because of a fortuitous or unforeseen event;
2. The death of the employer;
3. The death of the employee and the employee received notice of termination before his or her death; or
4. The employee's illness or injury.

Each of these situations is described in more detail below.

The contract has become impossible to perform or frustrated because of a permanent discontinuance of all or part of the employer's business because of a fortuitous or unforeseen event.

An employee whose employment contract has become impossible to perform or frustrated because of a permanent discontinuance of all or part of the employer's business because of a fortuitous or unforeseen event will be entitled to severance pay (assuming the qualifying criteria for severance pay are met).

With respect to the phrase "permanent discontinuance of all or part of the employer's business", see the discussion of s. 3(4)(b) of O Reg 288/01.

The phrase "because of a fortuitous or unforeseen event" could include events such as the destruction of the employer's business (for example, by fire, tornado or flood), a supervening change in the law (for example, where a company manufactures cigarettes and it becomes illegal to manufacture tobacco products in Canada), or the loss by the employer of a licence that it must have in order to operate.

It should be noted that where a contract is frustrated or has become impossible of performance as a result of a permanent discontinuance of all or part of the business because of a fortuitous or unforeseen event, the employee is entitled to severance pay because of the application of s. 9(2)(a)(i), but he or she would not be entitled to notice of termination/termination pay under the Act (paragraph 4 of s. 2(1) of O Reg 288/01) because there is no corresponding exception to the "impossibility of performance/frustration of contract" exemption from notice of termination/termination pay.

The contract has become impossible to perform or frustrated because of the death of the employer.

An employee whose employment contract has become impossible to perform or frustrated because of the death of the employer will be entitled to severance pay (assuming the qualifying criteria for severance pay are met). Thus, where a business that had been carried on by a sole proprietor ceases to operate because of the employer's death and the employee's employment is severed as a result, the employee will (assuming that he or she otherwise qualifies) be entitled to severance pay, notwithstanding that the employer's death would have frustrated the employment contract as a matter of law.

Note the different results with respect to an employee's entitlement to termination pay/notice and their entitlement to severance pay where the contract has become impossible to perform or frustrated because of the employer's death. Whereas the death of the employer may, in some situations, disentitle an employee from notice of termination/termination pay as a fortuitous or unforeseeable event that frustrates the contract of employment or makes it impossible to perform - see the discussion of paragraph 4 of s. 2(1) of O Reg 288/01 - it will not disentitle an employee from severance pay.

The contract has become impossible to perform or frustrated because of the death of the employee and the employee received notice of termination before his or her death.

An employee whose employment contract has become impossible to perform or frustrated because of the employee's death will be entitled to severance pay (assuming the qualifying criteria for severance pay are met), so long as the employee received notice of the termination of his or her employment before his or her death.

For example, if an employee is given eight weeks' notice of termination and dies after six weeks of that notice have elapsed, the employee will be entitled to severance pay even though the employee's employment was not actually severed by the employer, in that the employee's death, having occurred during the notice period and before the notice took effect, ended the employment contract before severance by the employer could take place.

The contract has become impossible to perform or frustrated because of the employee's illness or injury.

The frustration exemption does not apply where the frustration of the employment contract is a result of employee injury or illness. An employee whose employment has been severed and whose employment contract has become impossible to perform or frustrated because of the employee's illness or injury will be entitled to severance pay (assuming the qualifying criteria for severance pay are met).

This exception to the exemption from severance entitlements was amended by O Reg 549/05. Prior to the amendment, the exception applied only if the employer was also prohibited from severing the employee's employment under the Human Rights Code, RSO 1990, c H.19. See the discussion of frustration and impossibility in disability situations in O Reg 288/01, s. 2(1) para. 4.

COVID Vaccines and Tests

ESA Termination and Severance Liabilities Where an Employee is Not Vaccinated Against or Tested For COVID-19

This section of the Policy and Interpretation Manual sets out the Employment Standards Program's policies about ESA termination and severance liabilities where an employee is not vaccinated against COVID-19 or tested for COVID-19 in accordance with the employer's policy.

Note:

- Issues regarding whether an employer can mandate vaccinations and/or testing and the limitations of such policies fall outside of the scope of the ESA. This includes:

- whether an employer can make the vaccination and/or testing mandatory for its employees
- what, if any, accommodations are necessary for employees who are unable or unwilling to be vaccinated for medical or other reasons; and
- whether the employer can ask an employee if they are vaccinated or to provide proof of vaccination.

- Other laws that the ES Program does not administer - such as the Human Rights Code and/or the Occupational Health and Safety Act - may also be relevant to the issues addressed in this document.

- In addition, employees may have greater rights than what the ESA provides under an individual employment contract or collective agreement, other laws, and/or pursuant to the common law.

Summary

The ESA does not prohibit employers from terminating employees for failing to get vaccinated against and/or tested for COVID-19. With respect to the ESA's termination notice/pay and/or severance pay requirements, if an employer terminates an employee for this reason, it is Program policy that:

a. written notice from the employer stating that the employee will be terminated on a particular day if the employee is not vaccinated can, if done correctly, count towards the ESA's required notice period.

b. the wilful disobedience exemption to the termination and severance pay obligations may apply where an employee does not comply with the employer's vaccination and/or testing policy.

c. whether or not the imposition of a policy requiring vaccination and/or testing constitutes constructive dismissal under the ESA will depend on the circumstances.

- The ESA does not prohibit employers from suspending employees who are not vaccinated against and/or tested for COVID-19 out of concern that the employee might expose others in the workplace to COVID-19. Such employees may have rights to paid or unpaid infectious disease emergency leave (IDEL) during their suspension. See the discussion of IDEL for information.

VACCINATION / TESTING ISSUES

ISSUE 1: TERMINATION / SEVERANCE OF EMPLOYMENT

An employer is not prohibited from terminating an employee under the ESA because the employee isn't vaccinated, refuses to be vaccinated, and/or refuses to be tested

- The ESA does not prohibit an employer from terminating an employee because the employee is not vaccinated, because the employee refuses to be vaccinated, or because the employee refuses to be tested. This is because not being vaccinated and refusing to be vaccinated or tested are not protected activities listed in s. 74 (the main anti-reprisal provision) of the ESA.

Employees cannot take unpaid infectious disease emergency leave (IDEL) and go on leave indefinitely for refusing to comply with the employer's vaccine or testing policy

- The ESA does not prohibit an employer from terminating an employee because the employee is not vaccinated, because the employee refuses to be vaccinated, or because the employee refuses to be tested. This is the case even if the employee is on IDEL or on any other leave at the time of the termination.

    - Note that if, for example, instead of terminating the employee, the employer initially chose to direct the employee to not come into work until the employee is vaccinated (or tested), out of a concern that the employee may expose others in the workplace to COVID-19, the employee would be entitled to unpaid IDEL (and paid IDEL if the other eligibility criteria were met).

      The ESA does not prohibit the employer from subsequently terminating the employee for being unvaccinated, even if the employee is on unpaid or paid IDEL for this reason (or for a different reason). The employer terminating the employee for being unvaccinated does not constitute a reprisal because the reason for the termination is not because the employee is on a leave, but rather is because the employee is not vaccinated, which is not protected by s. 74 of the Act.

Employees who are terminated because they are not vaccinated and/or not tested may or may not be entitled to termination and/or severance pay under the ESA – it depends on the circumstances

- Whether an individual employee is entitled to termination and/or severance pay under the ESA is determined on a case-by-case basis.

- The Program policy on how the ESA applies in three scenarios that have arisen is as follows:

Scenario 1: An employer gave an employee a written ultimatum providing that the employee had until a specified date to get vaccinated and stating that the employee would be terminated if not vaccinated by that date. The employee was not vaccinated by the specified date and was terminated. The employee files a claim for termination pay.

Question: Does written notice from the employer that the employee will be terminated on a particular day if the employee is not vaccinated count towards the ESA's required notice period?

Answer: Yes, so long as:

- the employer provides notice in writing clearly indicating that the employee must be vaccinated by a particular date and it is clear that if the employee does not do so the employment relationship will end, and
- the employer satisfies the ESA's s. 60 requirements during the statutory notice period.

Analysis

As set out in the discussion of s. 56 of the ESA, it is Program policy, as per the Wronko decision of the Court of Appeal, that written notice that is conditional on the employee's acceptance of a change of a term and condition of employment can constitute notice for the purposes of the ESA, so long as it clear that a refusal to accept the change on that date will end the employment relationship. (This is to be distinguished from written notice that is conditional on an event occurring – which does not constitute notice for the purposes of the ESA. An example of this is where the employer tells an employee that the employee's employment will be terminated if the employer does not win a contract. For further information, please refer to the discussion under ss. 56(1) of the P&I Manual.

As such, if an employer provides clear written notice that employees who refuse to accept the terms of a vaccination policy by getting vaccinated by a specified date will be terminated (and satisfies the s. 60 requirements that apply during the notice period), the notice counts towards the employer's ESA notice of termination obligations. (Severance pay may still be owing to eligible employees. However, see Scenario 2.)

Scenario 2: An employee was terminated because the employee did not comply with the employer's vaccination or testing policy. The employee files a claim for termination and/or severance pay.

Question: Does the wilful disobedience exemption to the termination and severance pay obligations apply?

Answer: Consistent with the Program's policy regarding the application of the wilful disobedience exemption, the exemption may apply.

Note: the answer below applies equally to the situation where the employee was terminated because the employee did not comply with the employer's policy that required the employee to get tested for COVID-19. This is the case whether the policy requires the employee to either be vaccinated or get tested, both vaccinated and tested, or only get tested.

Analysis

The criteria that the Program applies when determining whether the wilful disobedience exemption in O. Reg. 288/01, ss. 2(1), para. 3 and ss. 9(1), para. 6, apply are set out in the discussion of O. Reg. 288/01, ss. 2(1), para. 3.

The criteria, and their applicability to the scenario of termination because of non-compliance with an employer's requirement to be vaccinated, are:

a. The order or rule must have been clear and unequivocal.

- This is a factual determination.

b. The order or rule must not be minor (except perhaps in cases of repeated, uncondoned infractions)

- It is Program policy that a policy requiring vaccination against COVID-19 is not a minor rule, because of the significance of the pandemic including the very serious health implications of COVID-19, the importance of employers' ability to establish rules it considers appropriate for the management of COVID-19 and the potential for significant impact on a employer's business if an employee spreads COVID-19 in the workplace or to the employer's clients. (Even if the rule was considered to be minor, it is Program policy that a continuation of the employee's failure to be vaccinated or tested constitutes repeated infractions.)
- As such, it is Program policy that this criterion will be met in every case.

c. The order or rule must have been communicated to the employee.

- This is a factual determination.
- There is no requirement that the communication be in any particular form - it can be orally or in writing (including electronically).

d. The employee must know (or ought to know) in advance that the disobedience could lead to his or her termination

- This is a factual determination.

e. The order or rule must not require the employee to do anything illegal or unsafe.

- Because any policy requiring vaccination is made for safety reasons, and in light of the scientific evidence about the safety of COVID-19 vaccines, it is Program policy that this criterion will be satisfied in every case except where the employee has a medical reason, supported by evidence from a physician, for not getting the vaccine.

- This criterion will be met with respect to employees who are not vaccinated because they object to the vaccine for religious or other non-medical reasons. The act of getting vaccinated is not illegal or unsafe even if the employee has religious or other non-medical objections against receiving it.

  Although an employee who objects to being vaccinated for religious reasons may believe that the employer is contravening the Human Rights Code when requiring the employee to be vaccinated, the ES Program does not take Human Rights Code reasons into account when assessing under this criterion. Whether the employer's rule or its application (e.g., whether the employer met its duty under the Code to accommodate) contravenes the Code is not a matter for the ES Program. An employee who is terminated and who objects to the vaccine for religious reasons may have a remedy through the Human Rights Code.

f. The employee's conduct is not trivial

- For the same reasons set out under the "rule must not be minor" heading, it is Program policy that the employee's failure to get a vaccine as required by the employer is not trivial and that this criterion will be satisfied in every case.

g. The EE's conduct has not been condoned by the ER

- This is a factual determination.

"Wilful"

- A key element to this exemption is that the actions or omissions must be wilful on the part of the employee.

- As set out in the discussion of this exemption under O. Reg. 288/01, s. 2, para. 3, "ordinarily, 'wilful' means that the employee intended the result that came to pass. Thus, poor work or conduct that is accidental or involuntary will generally not be considered to be wilful. However, an employee who is reckless in his or her conduct may be [found to have engaged in wilful disobedience] if that employee knew or ought to have know that his or her conduct would cause the result that came to pass."

- Whether or not an unvaccinated employee's failure to be vaccinated is wilful is a factual determination, although in the circumstances of a vaccination requirement this criterion is likely to be met in most cases.

    - It would not be met only in circumstances such as where the employee was sick or similarly unable to leave home to get the vaccination, the employee could attend the vaccination site but was unable to get vaccinated for reasons out of their control (e.g. if there was a shortage of vaccines and the employee was unable to get one), or the employer did not provide enough advance notice of the requirement to get vaccinated for the employee to make the necessary arrangements.

    - The wilful criterion will be met where an employee did not get the vaccine because of religious reasons. An employee who does not get a vaccine for religious reasons and is terminated for non-compliance with a vaccination policy may have a remedy through the Human Rights Tribunal.

Note:

- In the context of collective agreements, a rule unilaterally introduced by the employer (and not subsequently agreed to by the union) needs to pass a test of "reasonableness". The reasonableness standard does not apply in the context of this ESA exemption in the non-unionized context. In the non-unionized context, the relevant ESA criterion is that the rule or policy cannot require the employee to do anything illegal or unsafe. The reasonableness of the rule is not at issue. As such, context-driven questions that arbitrators may take into account when assessing whether an employer's vaccination policy is reasonable - such as the whether the employee works with vulnerable groups, the extent of local community spread, the vaccination rate in the workplace, the availability of other options to mitigate the risk of COVID-19 such as working from home, physical barriers or distancing, the frequency of contact an employee has with others, or whether the employee works from home - are not relevant here.

- Depending on the circumstances, the frustration of contract exemptions may also apply, as the situation may be akin to the Loss of Essential Licence scenario addressed in the discussion of this exemption in Reg. 288/01, s. 2, paragraph 4 of the Manual. Note, however, that one of the conditions that must be met in order for a contract to be frustrated is that the event or circumstance was caused through no fault of the parties and as such, there will not be frustration if the employer decides on its own accord – without being required to by law or, for example, by a client of the employer - to implement a mandatory vaccination policy. ES Program staff are asked to contact the Employment Practices Branch for assistance if the argument that the contract has been frustrated is made in a claim investigation.

Whether the employer's imposition of a vaccination policy constitutes constructive dismissal under the ESA depends on the circumstances

Scenario: An employer imposed any of these vaccination policies:

- unvaccinated employees will be terminated
- unvaccinated employees will be placed on leave (either paid, unpaid, or a combination of paid and unpaid)
- unvaccinated employees will be required to work from home
- unvaccinated employees will be required to undergo regular COVID-19 testing (either at their own expense, or at their employer's expense, and on their own time or on paid time).

The employee resigned in response to the policy within a reasonable period. The employee files an ESA claim for termination and/or severance pay, asserting that the policy constituted a constructive dismissal.

Question: Does the imposition of any of those vaccine policies constitute a constructive dismissal?

Answer: It will depend on the facts.

Note also that – as described earlier in Scenario 1 above – the employer may satisfy its ESA notice of termination obligations, rendering the constructive dismissal issue moot, if it provides notice in writing clearly indicating that it will be changing the employment contract at a future specified date by adopting this type of policy and it is clear that the employment relationship will end if the employee does not adhere to the policy - and satisfies the s. 60 requirements during the statutory notice period. In this case the employer is considered by the Program to have effectively provided notice of termination with an offer of re-employment on new terms and conditions.

Analysis

The following criteria must be met to establish a constructive dismissal as a result of a change to the employment contract:

1. the change is made unilaterally by the employer, i.e. without the employee's agreement.
2. the change is to a fundamental term or condition of the employee's employment.
3. the change is substantial and to the employee's disadvantage.

With respect to the first criterion, terms and conditions of employment may be implicit or explicit.

If the employment contract contains an explicit right for the employer to implement the policy at issue, the first criterion will not be met and as such the implementation of a mandatory COVID-19 vaccine / testing policy would not be done "unilaterally" so as to form the foundation for a constructive dismissal claim.

As the vast majority of employment contracts do not contain an express provision granting the employer the right to impose such a policy, the key issue will be whether there is an implied term.

The Occupational Health and Safety Act requires an employer to take every precaution reasonable in the circumstances to protect a worker (s. 25(2)(h)). This includes not only the employee but other employees with whom they come in contact.

Whether this general duty creates an implied right to impose a vaccination / testing policy will be determined on a case-by-case basis. For example, in a workplace where there has been a history of outbreaks, where employees have to work in close proximity, or the consequences of an outbreak are high (e.g. a long-term care home), it may be that there is an implied right to impose a vaccination / testing policy. Conversely, in a workplace where there have been no COVID cases and employees can be socially distanced or work outside, it may be that there is no implied right to impose a vaccination / testing policy.

ES Program staff are asked to contact the Employment Practices Branch for assistance when investigating claims from employees who claim constructive dismissal on the basis of a vaccination / testing policy.

ISSUE 2: SUSPENSION OF EMPLOYEES

Under the ESA, an employer is not prohibited from suspending an employee because the employee is not vaccinated, telling an employee not to come to work until vaccinated, or not scheduling that employee to work until vaccinated out of a concern that the unvaccinated employee may expose others in the workplace to COVID-19

- The ESA does not prevent an employer from temporarily reducing or temporarily eliminating an employee's hours of work because the employee has not been vaccinated. This is the case whether or not the reduction/elimination is in the form of a disciplinary suspension.

- Where an employer directs an employee not to perform their duties until the employee has been vaccinated, out of a concern that the unvaccinated employee may expose others in the workplace to COVID-19, the employee is entitled to IDEL: up to 3 days of Paid IDEL (if the other qualifying criteria are met, and during the period that Paid IDEL is available) and an unlimited number of days of Unpaid IDEL. (Note that "regular" Unpaid/Paid IDEL is the default in this circumstance versus "deemed" Unpaid IDEL. See ss. 50.1(1.7) of the ESA for more information). Employers may apply to the WSIB for reimbursement for payments made pursuant to the Paid IDEL provisions – see s. 50.1.1 of the ESA for more information.

Temporary layoff and Constructive Dismissal

- An employee who is on a temporary layoff (as defined in the ESA) that exceeds the maximum length set out in the ESA (a period of either 13 weeks in 20 or 35 weeks in 52, depending on the circumstances) is terminated and/or severed under the ESA.

- However, the temporary layoff rules have been modified by O. Reg. 228/20 for non-unionized employees in certain COVID-19 related situations.

- Per O. Reg. 228/20, during the defined "COVID-19 period", a non-unionized employee whose employer has temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated their hours of work for reasons related to COVID-19 (which includes the employee not being vaccinated against COVID-19):
    - is not considered to be laid off under the ESA, and
    - is not considered to be constructively dismissed under the ESA

  (Note: Although the rules that apply during the COVID-19 period also provide that non-unionized employees whose hours are temporarily reduced or temporarily eliminated for reasons related to COVID-19 are deemed to be on unpaid IDEL, it is ES Program policy that the employee is entitled to "regular" paid and unpaid IDEL if the reason for the reduction/elimination is the employer's concern that the employee may expose others in the workplace to COVID-19. Note, however, that in this situation the rules in Reg. 228/20 about ESA layoffs and constructive dismissal still apply even if the employee is on "regular" IDEL rather than "deemed" IDEL.)

- Note that the ESA does not address issues about health and safety in the workplace nor does it address employers' authority to exclude employees from the workplace. As such, the question of whether it would be appropriate, or lawful under other laws, for an employer to exclude an employee from the workplace for not being vaccinated against COVID-19 is not a matter for the ES Program.

Ontario Regulation 289/01 – Enforcement

This regulation sets out which penalties are prescribed for notices of contravention as per ESA Part XXII, s. 113. It also sets out which provinces are reciprocating states for reciprocal enforcement of orders as per ESA Part XXIV, s. 130.

O Reg 289/01 Section 1 – Prescribed Penalties Re Notices of Contravention

1. The following penalties are prescribed for the purposes of subsection 113 (1) of the ESA 2000:

Item	Column 1 Contravention	Column 2 Penalty, in dollars
1.	If the notice relates to a contravention of section 2, 15, 15.1 or 16 of the Act	$250
2.	If the notice relates to the second contravention of section 2, 15, 15.1 or 16 of the Act in a three-year period	$500
3.	If the notice relates to the third or subsequent contravention of section 2, 15, 15.1 or 16 of the Act in a three-year period	$1000
4.	If the notice relates to a contravention of a provision of the Act other than section 2, 15, 15.1 or 16	$250
5.	If the notice relates to the second contravention of a provision of the Act other than section 2, 15, 15.1 or 16 in a three-year period	$500
6.	If the notice relates to the third or subsequent contravention of a provision of the Act other than section 2, 15, 15.1 or 16 in a three-year period	$1000
7.	If the notice relates to a contravention of a provision of the Act other than section 2, 15, 15.1 or 16 and the contravention affects more than one employee	$250, multiplied by the number of employees affected
8.	If the notice relates to the second contravention of a provision of the Act other than section 2, 15, 15.1 or 16 in a three-year period and the contravention affects more than one employee	$500, multiplied by the number of employees affected
9.	If the notice relates to the third or subsequent contravention of a provision of the Act other than section 2, 15, 15.1 or 16 in a three-year period and the contravention affects more than one employee	$1000, multiplied by the number of employees affected

ESA Part XXII, s. 113 permits an employment standards officer to issue a notice requiring payment of a prescribed penalty as set out in O Reg 289/01 to a person that the officer believes has contravened the ESA 2000. The officer's power to issue a notice of contravention is discretionary, like the ability to issue other orders. However, if a notice of contravention is issued, the penalty amounts must be applied as set out within O Reg 289/01.

Note the penalties set out in O Reg 289/01 were higher from January 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018. During that period of time, the penalty amounts were $350/$700/$1500 instead of $250/$500/$1000. Pursuant to subsection 52(5) of the *Legislation Act, the higher amounts apply only if the contravention relating to the Notice of Contravention occurred during the 2018 calendar year AND the Notice of Contravention was issued during the 2018 calendar year. Otherwise, the lower amounts set out in the current O Reg 289/01 apply.

Subsection 52(5) of the Legislation Act provides that if an amendment lowers the amount of a penalty, that lower amount applies when a sanction is imposed (i.e. when the notice is issued) even if it is in respect of a contravention that happened before the amendment.*

Penalties for a contravention of ESA 2000 section 2, 15, 15.1 or 16:

Per items 1 to 3 in the chart above, the penalties for a contravention of one of these sections are as follows:

- $250
- $500 for a second contravention of the same provision within a three-year period, and
- $1000 for a third or subsequent contravention of the same provision in a three-year period.

Note that when determining the penalty for a contravention of section 2, 15, 15.1 or 16, the number of employees affected by the contravention is not relevant; the officer does not multiply the penalty by the number of employees affected.

Penalties for a contravention of any provision other than section 2, 15, 15.1 or 16 affecting only one employee:

Per items 4 to 6 of the chart above, the penalties in this context are as follows:

- $250
- $500 for a second contravention of the same provision within a three-year period, and
- $1000 for a third or subsequent contravention of the same provision in a three-year period.

Penalties for a contravention of any provision other than section 2, 15, 15.1 or 16 affecting more than one employee:

Per items 7 to 9 in the chart above, the penalties in this context are as follows:

- $250 multiplied by the number of affected employees
- $500 multiplied by the number of affected employees for a second contravention of the same provision within a three-year period, and
- $1000 multiplied by the number of affected employees for a third or subsequent contravention of the same provision in a three-year period.

When Penalty Amounts Escalate – "Second, Third or Subsequent Contravention"

Note that in order for the penalty amount to escalate (i.e. from $250 to $500, or from $500 to $1000), the same provision of the ESA 2000 must have been contravened for a second or third time within a three-year period. This means that one or more NOCs must have previously been issued and have resulted in a deemed contravention under subsection 113(5) of the ESA 2000 in the previous three-year period.

Per ss. 113(5), a notice of contravention is deemed to have been contravened where the person against whom it was issued fails to make an application for a review of the notice within 30 days of the date of service, or, where a review was sought, the Ontario Labour Relations Board finds that the person contravened the provision set out in the notice.

When determining whether there is a prior deemed contravention that will cause the penalty amount to escalate, it is the three year period prior to the date of the current contravention for which an NOC is being issued that is reviewed, rather than the three year period prior to the date the current NOC is being issued.

"Person"

An officer may issue a notice of contravention to any person the officer believes has contravened the ESA 2000. "Person" is defined in ESA Part I, s. 1 to include a trade union. The word "person" indicates that the notice may be issued against persons other than an employer. For example, a notice of contravention could be issued against someone who is not the employer but who has custody of records or documents relevant to an investigation and who refuses to make them available for inspection contrary to ESA Part XXI, s. 91(8).

O Reg 289/01 Section 2 – Reciprocal Enforcement of Orders

2(1) Each state listed in Column 1 of the Table to this section is prescribed as a reciprocating state for the purposes of section 130 of the Act.

(2) Each authority listed in Column 2 of the Table to this section is prescribed as the designated authority for the state listed opposite it in Column 1.

Ontario Regulation 291/01 – Terms and Conditions of Employment in Defined Industries – Women's Coat and Suit Industry and Women's Dress and Sportswear Industry _ REVOKED

Effective, October 30, 2019, O Reg 291/01 - Terms and Conditions of Employment in Defined Industries - Women's Coat and Suit Industry and Women's Dress and Sportswear Industry is REVOKED. The special rules and terms and conditions for employees working in the women's coat and suit industry and the women's dress and sportswear industry no longer apply. Those employees previously captured by the Regulation will now be subject to the regular provisions of the Employment Standards Act.

This regulation sets out special rules and terms and conditions for employees working in the women's coat and suit industry and the women's dress and sportswear industry. In particular, the regulation addresses issues related to hours of work, including minimum pay for short periods of work, normal work day, normal work week, work schedule requirements, breaks relating to special rate work and vacation, etc.

O Reg 291/01 Section 1 – Definitions

1. In this Regulation,

"defined industries" means the women's coat and suit industry and the women's dress and sportswear industry;

"fur industry" means all work done in the manufacture, repair or remodelling, in whole or in part, of coats, jackets, similar garments, neck-pieces, cuffs and other pieces made of fur (not including imitation or simulated fur), except work done on the employer's premises by only one person;

"industry holiday" means,

(a) New Year's Day,

(a1) Family Day, being the third Monday in February,

(b) Good Friday,

(c) Victoria Day,

(d) Canada Day,

(e) Labour Day,

(f) Thanksgiving Day,

(g) Christmas Day, and

(h) Boxing Day, being December 26 or the Monday next following when Christmas falls on a Saturday;

"piece-work basis", in relation to how an employee is paid, means payment based on the number of articles or things that are manufactured, prepared, improved, repaired, altered, assembled or completed;

"special rate work" means,

(a) in relation to an employee who is not a homeworker, work described in clause 11 (1) (a), and

(b) in relation to a homeworker, work described in clause 11 (1) (b);

"women's coat and suit industry" means all work done in the manufacture anywhere in Ontario, in whole or in part, of cloaks, coats, suits, wraps, wind-breakers, skirts manufactured for use as part of a suit, jackets or blazers, manufactured from any material including suede, leather, simulated, synthetic, pile and fur fabrics, of any description, for female persons of all ages, but does not include work done in,

(a) the manufacture of,

i. ski-suits or skating suits, in whole or in part,

ii. athletic uniforms, in whole or in part,

iii. riding-coats, or

iv. lounging-robes, bathrobes, kimonos, pyjamas or beach wraps,

(b) the making of cloaks, coats, suits, wraps, wind-breakers, skirts manufactured for use as part of a suit, jackets or blazers, manufactured from any material including suede, leather, simulated, synthetic, pile and fur fabrics, of any description, for female persons of all ages by a custom tailor, who,

i. makes cloaks, coats, suits, wraps, wind-breakers, skirts manufactured for use as part of a suit, jackets or blazers individually for a retail customer, according to the measurements and specifications of the retail customer, and

ii. does not employ more than four persons in making cloaks, coats, suits, wraps, wind-breakers, skirts manufactured for use as part of a suit, jackets or blazers, or

(c) the receiving, warehousing, shipping or distributing of raw materials or manufactured products or in sales, design or administrative operations;

"women's dress and sportswear industry" means all work done in the manufacture in whole or in part of all types, kinds and styles of garments worn by female persons and includes, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, garments commonly known as dresses, gowns, sportswear, play clothes, skirts, trousers, pants, slacks, blouses, tops, vestees, at-home wear, pantsuits and jumpsuits, but does not include work done in a separate manufacturing area in,

(a) the manufacture of garments for female persons not over 14 years of age or of a size up to and including girls' Canada Standard Size 14,

(b) the making of such garments by a custom dressmaker or custom manufacturer who,

i. makes such garments individually for retail customers with whom the dressmaker or manufacturer deals directly according to the measurements and specifications of the retail customers, and

ii. does not employ more than four persons in making such garments,

(c) the manufacture of garments in the women's coat and suit industry,

(d) the manufacture of garments in the fur industry,

(e) the manufacture of undergarments and lingerie, namely, brassieres, slips, half-slips, panties, girdles and corsets,

(f) the manufacture of sleepwear, namely, garments intended to be and worn as sleeping garments, including peignoir sets consisting of an undergarment worn as a sleeping garment and an overgarment made of lightweight fabric,

(g) the manufacture of utility garments, namely, bathrobes, kimonos, housecoats, brunchcoats and terry cloth gowns, for utilitarian purposes and of a design, colour and pattern distinct from and not worn in conjunction with any other garment made by the manufacturer doing work within the designation or made by or for another manufacturer doing work within the designation or with whom such manufacturer is associated directly or indirectly in any manner whatsoever,

(h) the manufacture of cloth and fabric, including the spinning of yarn and knitting of fabric,

(i) the manufacture of such garments made from knitted material by a knitwear manufacturer who,

i. makes available to the Director on request, during reasonable business hours, all of the records pertaining to garments and material produced, purchased and sold by the manufacturer,

ii. manufactures such garments and the knitted material on the same premises, and

iii. does not manufacture such garments for another manufacturer doing work within the designation or with whom such manufacturer is associated directly or indirectly in any manner whatsoever,

(j) the manufacture of blouses, defined as a woman's tailored garment of a maximum length of 26 inches measured from the middle of the collar and of design, colour and pattern distinct from and not intended to be worn in conjunction with any other garments made by or for the manufacturer or made by or for a manufacturer with whom the manufacturer is associated directly or indirectly,

(k) the manufacture of bathing suits, knitted sweaters or any style of apron, or

(l) the receiving, warehousing, shipping or distributing of raw materials or manufactured products or in sales, design or administrative operations.

O Reg 291/01 Section 2 – Terms and Conditions of Employment

2(1) This Regulation sets out the terms and conditions of employment that apply to employees and employers in the defined industries.

2(2) Except as modified by this Regulation, the Act applies to employers and employees in the defined industries.

Section 2 states that O Reg 291/01 provides for terms and conditions of employment that apply to employers and employees in the defined industries; however, it also states that except as is otherwise indicated by the regulation, the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies to them.

O Reg 291/01 Section 3 – Minimum Pay for Short Periods of Work

3(1) Despite section 21.2 of the Act, if an employee is required to work for a period of less than four hours or is required to report to work but does not work any hours, the employee shall be deemed to have worked four hours and the employer shall pay the employee accordingly.

3(2) This section does not apply to homeworkers.

This provision was amended effective January 1, 2019 to reflect a change made to the "general" three-hour rule; the three-hour rule was previously found in section 5 of O Reg 285/01; however, effective January 1, 2019, the three-hour rule was revoked from s. 5 of O Reg 285/01 and a modified three-hour rule was introduced to section 21.2 of the ESA 2000.

Section 3(1) of O Reg 291/01 states that despite the three-hour rule as set out in section 21.2 of the ESA 2000, an employee in one of the defined industries who is required to work for a period of less than four hours or is required to report for work but does not work any hours, is deemed to have worked four hours, and is to be paid accordingly.

For a discussion on the three-hour rule, see ESA Part VII.1, section 21.2.

Subsection 3(2) states that the four-hour rule in O Reg 291/01, s. 3(1) does not apply to homeworkers.

O Reg 291/01 Section 4 – Non-Application of ss. 18 to 21 of Act

4 Sections 18 to 21 of the Act do not apply with respect to employees in the defined industries.

Section 4 of O Reg 291/01 states that ss. 18 to 21 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 do not apply to employees in the defined industries. Those sections deals with time free from work, exceptional circumstances in which the limits on hours of work and the free time provisions do not apply and the rules concerning eating periods.

O Reg 291/01 Section 5 – When an Employee May not be Required to Work

5(1) An employer shall not require or allow an employee to perform work,

(a) on an industry holiday; or

(b) between midnight and 6:00 a.m.

5(1) Subsection (1) applies despite any agreement under subsection 17 (2) of the Act.

Section 5(1) of O Reg 291/01 sets out times when an employer cannot require an employee to perform work:

- On an industry holiday as defined in s. 1 of O Reg 291/01; and
- Between midnight and 6:00 a.m.

Section 5(2) states that s. 5(1) applies despite any agreements made under s. 17(2) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 to exceed the daily limit of eight hours in a day, or a regular work day of more than eight hours, as established by the employer. When O Reg 291/01 was made, s. 17(2) referred to both agreements to work in excess of the daily limit and agreements to work in excess of the weekly limit. Agreements to work in excess of the weekly limit are now dealt with in subsection 17(3) of the Act; however, by virtue of s. 59 of Part VI of the Legislation Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 21, Sch F, the reference in s. 5(2) of the regulation should be read as if it referred to both ss. 17(2) and 17(3) of the Act.

Under s. 1 of the regulation, an “industry holiday” is defined as meaning:

a) New Year’s Day
b) Good Friday
c) Victoria day
d) Canada Day
e) Labour Day
f) Thanksgiving Day
g) Christmas Day, and
h) Boxing Day, being December 26 or the Monday next following when Christmas falls on a Saturday.

O Reg 291/01 Section 6 – Normal Work Day and Normal Work Week

6(1) An employee’s normal work day shall not exceed 8 hours, including paid breaks but not including eating periods.

6(2) A normal work day shall not be on a Saturday or Sunday.

6(3) An employee's normal work week shall not exceed 40 hours, including paid breaks but not including eating periods.

6(4) A normal work week is determined on the basis of the period from midnight on Saturday to midnight on the following Saturday.

Section 6 of O Reg 291/01 establishes the normal work day and work week for employees in the defined industries. A normal work day is a day between Monday and Friday that does not exceed eight hours, including paid breaks but not including eating periods.

An employee's normal work week cannot be more than 40 hours, including paid breaks but not including eating periods, from a work week based on the period from midnight on Saturday to midnight on the following Saturday.

O Reg 291/01 Section 7 – Normal Work Day Under Work Schedule

7(1) If an employer establishes a work schedule in accordance with sections 8 and 9 and satisfies the requirements in those sections, an employee's normal work day is determined under the work schedule and not under section 10.

7(2) This section does not apply to homeworkers.

O Reg 291/01 Section 8 – Work Schedule

8 The following apply with respect to an employer's work schedule:

1. The work schedule shall set out the starting time of the normal work day for all employees.
2. If the work schedule provides for a single shift, a normal work day shall not begin after 9:30 a.m.
3. A normal work day shall not be scheduled on a Saturday or Sunday.
4. Each employee shall have a half-hour eating period midway through the employee's normal work day.
5. The employer shall file the work schedule with the Director at least seven days before it becomes effective.
6. The employer shall post the work schedule at least seven days before it becomes effective, and shall keep it posted while the work schedule is in effect. The work schedule shall be posted in a conspicuous place or places in the workplace where it is most likely to come to the attention of the employees to whom it relates.

O Reg 291/01 Section 9 – Work Schedule Requirements, Two Shifts

9 The employer's work schedule may provide for two shifts subject to the following:

1. The employer shall file the work schedule with the Director at least 15 days before it becomes effective instead of as paragraph 5 of section 8 requires.

2. An employee shall be scheduled to work only the earlier shift or the later shift and shall not be required to change shifts unless the employee or the employee's agent agrees.

3. An employee who works on the later shift shall be paid at least 5 per cent more than the employee would be paid if the employee worked the earlier shift.

4. If immediately before the work schedule becomes effective the employer only had one shift,

   i. the work schedule shall not result in an employee who was working in that single shift working less than a normal work day or working fewer normal work days, and

   ii. an employee who was employed immediately before the work schedule became effective shall not be scheduled to work the later shift unless the employee or the employee's bargaining agent agrees.

O Reg 291/01 Section 10 – Normal Work Day if No Work Schedule

10(1) If section 7 does not apply, the normal work day for an employee begins at 8:00 a.m. on each of Monday to Friday, with an unpaid half-hour eating period midway through the working day and two paid 10-minute breaks, one before and one after the eating period.

(2) This section does not apply with respect to employees who are homeworkers.

Section 10(1) of O Reg 291/01 provides that where the employer has not established a work schedule in accordance with ss. 8 and 9, s. 10 applies to establish a "normal work day" for employees in the defined industries.

In that case, the normal work day commences at 8:00 a.m. Monday through Friday with one unpaid half-hour eating period midway through the work day and a paid 10-minute break both before and after the eating period (that is, one before and one after the eating period).

Section 10(2) states that s. 10(1) does not apply with respect to employees who are homeworkers.

O Reg 291/01 Section 11 – Special Rate Work

11(1) An employer shall not require or allow an employee who is not a home-worker to perform work,

(a) in excess of 8 hours, including paid breaks but not including eating periods, on any of Monday to Friday; or

(b) on Saturday or Sunday.

11(2) An employer shall not require or allow an employee who is a homeworker to perform work in excess of 40 hours in a week, determined on the basis of the period from midnight on Saturday to midnight on the following Saturday.

11(3) Subsections (1) and (2) apply instead of subsection 17 (1) of the Act.

11(4) Subsection 17 (2) of the Act applies, but shall be read as if the words "in excess of an amount set out in subsection (1)" were struck out and "in excess of an amount set out in subsection 11 (1) or (2) of Ontario Regulation 291/01 (Terms and Conditions of Employment in Defined Industries)" substituted.

O Reg 291/01 Section 12 – Breaks Relating to Special Rate Work After Normal Work Day

12(1) Despite section 20 of the Act, before an employee performs more than two hours of special rate work after the end of a normal work day, the employer shall give the employee a paid 15-minute break.

12(2) The break under subsection (1) shall be paid at the special rate determined under section 14.

12(3) If an employee performs more than five hours of special rate work on a Saturday or Sunday, the employer shall permit the employee a half-hour eating period so that the employee does not work more than five consecutive hours without an eating period.

12(4) This section does not apply with respect to employees who are homeworkers.

O Reg 291/01 Section 13 – Pay for Special Rate Work

13 Despite Part VIII of the Act, the employer shall pay an employee the special rate determined under section 14 for all special rate work.

Section 13 of O Reg 291/01 states that despite Part VIII of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 dealing with overtime, the employer shall pay an employee the special rate determined under s. 14 for all special rate work.

O Reg 291/01 Section 14 – Special Rate

14(1) The special rate is an hourly rate for all employees, even for those employees who are not normally paid on an hourly basis.

14(2) The special rate is one and one-half times the following:

1. For an employee who is not paid on a piece-work basis, the hourly average of the wages paid to him or her during the most recent pay period in which the employee worked normal work days before the pay period in which he or she performed special rate work.
2. For an employee who is paid on a piece-work basis, the hourly average of the wages paid to him or her,
    i. during the months from July to December in the previous year, in the case of special rate work performed during the months from January to June, and
    ii. during the months from January to June in the same year, in the case of special rate work performed during the months from July to December.
3. The special rate for an employee who is a homeworker shall be determined under paragraph 2 of subsection (2) whether or not the employee is paid on a piece-work basis.
4. The following shall not be considered in determining an employee's special rate under subsection (1):
    1. Pay at the special rate.

2. Vacation pay and year-end vacation payments.
3. Industry holiday pay under subsection 18 (3).
4. Termination pay and severance pay.
5. Entitlements under a provision of the employment contract that, under subsection 5 (2) of the Act, prevails over Part VIII, X, XI or XV of the Act.

O Reg 291/01 Section 15 – Vacation

15(1) Despite Part XI of the Act, the employer shall give a vacation of two weeks to an employee upon the completion of each 12-month period of employment, whether or not the employment was active employment.

15(2) The employer shall determine the period when an employee may take the vacation to which he or she is entitled under subsection (1), which may be a two-week period or two periods of one week each, but in any case the employee shall be given the vacation not later than 10 months after the end of the 12-month period for which it is given.

15(3) A week of vacation is calculated on the basis of the period from midnight on Saturday to midnight on the following Saturday.

O Reg 291/01 Section 16 – Vacation Pay

16(1) Despite Part XI of the Act, the employer shall pay an employee vacation pay for the employee's vacation.

16(2) An employee's vacation pay shall be equal to 4 per cent of all wages, not including vacation pay or any year-end vacation payment, earned by the employee during the period for which the vacation is given.

O Reg 291/07 Section 17 – Year-end Vacation Payment

17(1) Despite Part XI of the Act, the employer shall pay an employee, in addition to vacation pay under section 16, a year-end vacation payment in accordance with this section.

17(2) An employee who has been employed by an employer for at least three continuous months is entitled to a year-end vacation payment equal to 2 per cent of all wages, excluding vacation pay, earned during the year to which the year-end vacation payment applies.

17(3) For the purpose of this section, the year to which a year-end vacation payment applies shall be,

(a) the 12-month period established for the purpose by the practice of the employer; or

(b) if the employer has not established such a year, the 12-month period beginning on December 1 in a year and ending on November 30 in the following year.

17(4) Subject to subsection (5), the employer shall pay the year-end vacation payment no later than six weeks after the end of the year to which it applies.

17(5) If the employment of the employee is terminated in a year, the employer shall pay the year-end vacation payment for that year no later than seven days after the termination.

O Reg 291/01 Section 18 – Industry Holiday Pay

18(1) Despite Part X of the Act, the employer shall pay an employee for each industry holiday, unless,

- (a) the employee has been employed by the employer for less than three months; or
- (b) the employee was scheduled to work on the first normal work day either before or after the industry holiday and the employee failed to work that day as scheduled.

18(2) The amount the employer shall pay an employee for an industry holiday is,

- (a) if the employee is not paid on a piece-work basis, the average of the wages paid for the days the employee works during the two-month period before the industry holiday; and
- (b) if the employee is paid on a piece-work basis, the hourly average of the wages paid,
  - (i) for the days the employee works during the months from July to December in the previous year, in the case of an industry holiday that falls in the months from January to June, and
  - (ii) for the days the employee works during the months from January to June in the same year, in the case of an industry holiday that falls in the months from July to December.

18(3) The industry holiday pay for an employee who is a homeworker shall be determined under clause (2) (b) whether or not the employee is paid on a piece-work basis.

18(4) The following shall not be considered in determining the amount of an employee's industry holiday pay:

1. Pay at the special rate.
2. Vacation pay and year-end vacation payments.
3. Industry holiday pay under subsection (3).
4. Termination pay and severance pay.
5. Entitlements under a provision of the employment contract that, under subsection 5 (2) of the Act, prevails over Part VIII, X, XI or XV of the Act.

O Reg 291/01 Section 19 – Special Rules for Victoria Day and Canada Day

19(1) Despite Part X of the Act and section 5, an employer may require an employee to work a normal work day on Victoria Day or Canada Day if the employee or the employee's agent agrees and the holiday does not fall on a Saturday or Sunday.

19(2) The normal work day that the employer may require an employee to work under subsection (1) is the normal work day that would have applied if the day were not Victoria Day or Canada Day.

19(3) Subject to subsection (4), if an employee works a normal work day on Victoria Day or Canada Day, the following apply:

1. The employer shall pay the employee industry holiday pay under section 18 if the employee is entitled to industry holiday pay.
2. The employer shall pay the employee the special rate determined under section 14 for the work on the holiday.

19(4) If an employee works a normal work day on Victoria Day or Canada Day, the employer may, if the employee or the employee's agent agrees, substitute a normal work day for the industry holiday and the following apply:

1. The industry holiday shall be deemed to be a normal work day.
2. The substituted normal work day shall be deemed to be the industry holiday.
3. The substituted normal work day shall be before the employee's next paid vacation day.

19(5) If an employee is required to work a normal work day on Victoria Day or Canada Day but fails, without reasonable cause, to report for work, the employee is not entitled to industry holiday pay under section 18.

O Reg 291/01 Section 20 – Industry Review Committee

20(1) The Minister may establish a committee to advise the Minister on matters related to employment standards within the Ontario garment manufacturing industry.

20(2) The committee shall be composed of a chair, and as many members equal in number representative of employers and employees respectively as the Minister considers proper, all of whom shall be appointed by the Minister.

20(3) The members of the committee shall be appointed for a term not exceeding one year and are eligible for reappointment.

20(4) The Minister may fill a vacancy in the membership of the committee by appointing a person to fill the unexpired term.

Ontario Regulation 390/05 – Terms and Conditions of Employment in Defined Industries – Public Transit Services

This regulation sets out special rules regarding the terms and conditions of employment for employees employed in public transit services. Currently, the regulation's scope is limited to hours free from work and eating periods.

O Reg 390/05 Section 1 – Definitions

O Reg 390/05 came into effect on June 24, 2005.

Defined Industry

1 In this Regulation,

"defined industry" means the industry of providing public transit services;

Section 1(1) defines the industry to which O Reg 390/05 applies to mean the industry of providing public transit services.

Public Transit Services

1 In this Regulation,

"public transit service" means any service for which a fare is charged for transporting the public by vehicles operated by or on behalf of a municipality or a local board, or under an agreement with a municipality or a local board;

"Public transit services" is defined to mean any fare-charging service for transporting the public by vehicles that are operated by or on behalf of a municipality or a local board, or under an agreement with a municipality or a local board.

Vehicle

1 In this Regulation,

"vehicle" includes transportation facilities for the physically disabled, but does not include,

(a) vehicles and marine vessels used for sightseeing tours;

(b) buses used to transport pupils, including buses owned and operated by, or operated under a contract with, a school board, private school or charitable organization;

(c) buses owned and operated by a corporation or organization solely for its own purposes without compensation for transportation;

(d) taxicabs;

(e) railway systems of railway companies incorporated under federal or provincial statutes;

(f) ferries;

(g) aviation systems; or

(h) ambulances.

The term "vehicle", which might be operated by the public transit service, is defined to include transportation facilities for the physically disabled, but not to include: vehicles and marine vessels for sightseeing tours, school buses, buses owned and operated by a corporation or organization solely for its own purposes without compensation for transportation, taxicabs, railway systems (whether incorporated under federal or provincial statutes), ferries, aviation systems or ambulances.

It should be noted that, in addition to listing these exceptions, the definition of "vehicle" is inclusive rather than exhaustive. Other kinds of vehicles (e.g., subway trains and street cars) might qualify as a vehicle operated by a public transit service even though they are not listed in this s. 1 definition, if they are not specifically excluded.

O Reg 390/05 Section 2 – Scope

2 This Regulation is restricted in its application to,

(a) employees in the defined industry who operate public transit vehicles or who work as collectors; and

(b) employers of the employees described in clause (a).

Section 2 narrows the scope of O Reg 390/05, by restricting it in its application to employees in the defined industry who operate public transit vehicles or who work as collectors and to their employers.

The terms “defined industry” and “vehicle” are both defined in s. 1 of O Reg 390/05.

O Reg 390/05 Section 3 – Terms and Conditions of Employment

3 This Regulation sets out terms and conditions of employment that apply to employees and employers described in section 2.

Section 3 simply states that O Reg 390/05 sets out terms and conditions of employment that apply to employers and employees in the defined industry of providing public transit services.

O Reg 390/05 Section 4 – Hours Free from Work

Hours Free From Work – ss. 4(1) & (2)

4(1) If the employer and employee agree, subsection (2) applies instead of subsection 18 (1) of the Act.

4(2) An employer shall give an employee a period of at least eight consecutive hours free from performing work in each day.

Section 4(1) of O Reg 390/05 provides that, where the employer and employee in the defined industry agree, s. 4(2) applies instead of s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000. Section 18(1) reads as follows:

18(1) An employer shall give an employee a period of at least 11 consecutive hours free from performing work in each day.

Under s. 4(2) of O Reg 390/05, the period of at least 11 consecutive hours free from performing work in each day (in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000) is replaced by a period of at least eight consecutive hours free from performing work in each day. See ESA Part VII, s. 18(1) for a discussion of the meaning of "day".

There can be no substitution of s. 4(2) for s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000 unless the employer and employee (or union) agree. Agreements to substitute s. 4(2) for s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000 must be in writing in order to be valid. See ESA Part I, s. 1(3) and s. 1(3.1) for a full discussion of the requirements regarding written agreements.

Like s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000 which it replaces, the provision for daily rest in s. 4(2) of O Reg 390/05 is an employment standard as defined in s. 1(1) of the ESA 2000 and cannot be contracted out of or waived (s. 5(1)). The employer and employee could not, for example, agree to a daily rest period of six hours.

For a discussion of how the 11-hour daily rest operates, see ESA Part VII, s. 18(1). Substitute "8 hours" for "11 hours" each time it appears in order to understand the operation of the eight-hour daily rest period under s. 4(2) of O Reg 390/05.

Interaction With Other Hours of Work Provisions

The requirement in s. 4(2) for at least eight consecutive hours off work in each day operates together with the hours of work provisions in Part VII of the ESA 2000 and s. 5 of O Reg 390/05, as follows:

On-Call Exception

Section 18(2) of the ESA 2000 sets out an "on-call exception" to s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000. This exception also applies if the daily rest period is eight consecutive hours as per s. 4(2) of O Reg 390/05, when it replaces the 11-hour daily rest requirement in s. 18(1) in the defined industry.

Under s. 18(2), the requirement that an employee have at least 11 hours free from performing work in each day (in accordance with s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000) or at least eight hours free from performing work in each day (in accordance with s. 4(2) of O Reg 390/05) does not apply to an employee who is on call and is called in during a period they would not otherwise have been expected to work. The on-call exception is an exception only to the requirement to provide 11 or eight consecutive hours free from work each day as per s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000 or s. 4(2) of O Reg 390/05. It does not operate as an exception to any other hours of work provisions.

For a discussion of the on-call exception, see ESA Part VII, s. 18(2). Substitute s. 4(2) of O Reg 390/05 for s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000, and substitute eight hours for 11 hours, wherever the references appear.

Maximum Daily Hours

Section 17(1) of the ESA 2000 provides for maximum daily hours of work of eight hours per day or, if there is an established workday that is longer than eight hours, the number of hours in that work day. However, under s. 17(2) of the ESA 2000, employers and employees can agree, in writing, that the employee will work up to a specified number of hours in excess of the daily limit. For such an agreement to be valid, s. 17(5) requires that non-unionized employees first be provided with a copy of the Ministry of Labour's information sheet on hours of work and overtime and that the agreement contains a statement by the employee acknowledging such receipt.

For further details about the maximum daily hours of work, agreements to vary from the maximum daily hours and the requirement to provide the Ministry's information sheet, see ESA Part VII, s. 17.

Maximum Weekly Hours

Section 17(1) of the ESA 2000 provides for maximum weekly hours of work of 48 hours. However, under s. 17(3) of the ESA 2000, employers and employees can agree, in writing, that the employee will work up to a specified number of hours in excess of the weekly limit. For such an agreement to be valid, s. 17(5) requires that non-unionized employees first be provided with a copy of the Ministry of Labour's information sheet on hours of work and overtime and that the agreement contains a statement by the employee acknowledging such receipt.

For further details about the maximum weekly hours, agreements to vary from the maximum weekly hours and the requirement to provide the Ministry's information sheet, see ESA Part VII, s. 17.

Free From Work Between Shifts

Section 18(3) of the ESA 2000 requires employers to provide employees with a minimum period free from work of eight hours between successive shifts, with two exceptions. First, an employee may work successive shifts without the eight-hour free period if the total number of hours worked on the successive shifts is 13 or less. Second, the employer and employee can agree, in writing, to forego the eight-hour period entirely or to reduce its length. For a discussion of the interaction of s. 18(3) with the required daily rest in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000, see ESA Part VII, s. 18(3).

Per s. 4 of O Reg 390/05, an employee and employer in the defined industry could agree in writing to a minimum daily rest of eight hours (instead of the 11 hours in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000). That employee could then agree in writing to work an eight and a 10-hour shift back to back, without any break between them. The agreement in writing would comply with s. 18(3) of the ESA 2000, but if it resulted in the employee receiving a daily rest of less than eight consecutive hours (per the agreement under s. 4 of the Regulation), the schedule would be in violation of the Regulation and, therefore, would not be permitted. In other words, an employee in the defined industry cannot agree to work hours under s. 18(3) of the ESA 2000 that would result in the employee getting less than the eight consecutive hours free from work each day stipulated in s. 4(2) of O Reg 390/05.

Weekly/Bi-weekly Rest Periods

Section 18(4) of the ESA 2000 establishes weekly or bi-weekly free time requirements for employees. The free time periods must be at least either 24 consecutive hours in every "work week" or 48 consecutive hours in every two consecutive "work weeks".

See ESA Part VII, s. 18(4) for a discussion of the weekly/bi-weekly rest period provisions.

Exceptional Circumstances

Section 19 of the ESA 2000 allows employers to require employees to work more daily or weekly hours than are permitted under s. 17 of the ESA 2000, or to work during a free period (daily, in between shifts and weekly or biweekly) as required by s. 18 of the ESA 2000 (and s. 4(2) of O Reg 390/05) in any of the specified circumstances, but only so far as is necessary to avoid serious interference with the ordinary working of the employer's establishment or operations.

For a discussion of the exceptional circumstances, see ESA Part VII, s. 19.

Eating Periods

Under s. 20 of the ESA 2000, an employer is required to provide an eating period of at least 30 minutes, timed so that no employee works longer than five consecutive hours without receiving an eating period, or, if the employer and employee agree (not necessarily in writing), two eating periods that together total at least 30 minutes within the same period of five consecutive hours.

For further details about eating periods, see ESA Part VII, s. 20.

However, under s. 5 of O Reg 390/05, there are circumstances in which the eating periods provision of the ESA 2000 do not apply.

O Reg 390/05 Section 5 – Eating Periods

5 Section 20 of the Act does not apply to an employee who,

(a) is working a straight shift, and has chosen to work that shift;

(b) is working a split shift for which no meal break that complies with section 20 of the Act is provided, and has chosen to work that shift; or

(c) is working a straight shift, or a split shift for which no meal break that complies with section 20 of the Act is provided, and has chosen to work whatever shift the employer assigns.

Section 5 of O Reg 390/05 provides that s. 20 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 does not apply in certain circumstances.

Section 20 of the ESA 2000 states:

20(1) An employer shall give an employee an eating period of at least 30 minutes at intervals that will result in the employee working no more than five consecutive hours without an eating period.

Under s. 20, an employer is required to provide an eating period of at least 30 minutes, timed so that no employee works longer than five consecutive hours without receiving an eating period, or, if the employer and employee agree (not necessarily in writing), two eating periods that together total at least 30 minutes within the same period of five consecutive hours.

Under s. 5 of O Reg 390/05, s. 20 of the Act does not apply to an employee who:

1. Is working a straight shift, and who has chosen to work that shift;
2. Is working a split shift that does not have a meal break that complies with s. 20, and who has chosen to work that shift; and
3. Has chosen to work whatever shift the employer assigns and is working either a straight shift or split shift for which no meal break that complies with s. 20 of the Act is provided.

If an employee working a straight shift or a split shift did not either choose to work that shift or choose to work whatever shift the employer assigned, s. 20 would still apply and he or she would be entitled to a meal break in accordance with that section.

Note that, unlike the operation of s. 4 of O Reg 390/05, there is no requirement under s. 5 that the employer and employee (or union) agree that s. 5 of O Reg 390/05 will apply instead of s. 20 of the ESA 2000.

Ontario Regulation 398/09 – Terms and Conditions of Employment in Defined Industries – Temporary Help Agency Industry

O Reg 398/09 sets out transitional rules for the application of the termination and severance provisions to assignment employees under Part XVIII.1 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. While most of the regulation is now of historical interest only, it is important to note that the regulation provides that time on lay-off prior to November 6, 2009 is excluded for the purposes of determining when a termination/severance occurs under Part XV but clarifies that time employed prior to November 6, 2009 is included when determining entitlements under Part XV.

O Reg 398/09 Section 1 – Definition

1 In this Regulation,

"defined industry" means the temporary help agency industry.

O Reg 398/09 is a defined industry regulation for the temporary help agency industry.

O Reg 398/09 Section 2 – Scope

2 This Regulation is restricted in its application to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees.

Section 2 provides that the scope of the regulation is limited to temporary help agencies and their assignment employees. The terms "temporary help agency" and "assignment employee" are defined in ESA Part I, s. 1(1).

O Reg 398/09 Section 3 – Transitional Terms and Conditions of Employment

3 This Regulation sets out transitional terms and conditions of employment that apply to employers and employees described in section 2 following the coming into force of the Employment Standards Amendment Act (Temporary Help Agencies), 2009.

Section 3 states that the regulation sets out transitional terms and conditions for applying Part XVIII.1 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

O Reg 398/09 Section 4 – Determination of Temporary Lay-off

4 For the purposes of subsection 56 (2) of the Act, the following rules apply:

1. Only a period of 20 consecutive weeks or 52 consecutive weeks, as the case may be, that begins after November 5, 2009 shall be taken into account.

2. In the case of a lay-off that begins on or before November 5, 2009, only the part of the lay-off, if any, that occurs after November 5, 2009, shall be taken into account.

Section 4 provides that for the purposes of defining a temporary lay-off in s. 56(2), only a lay-off or part of a lay-off that occurs after November 5, 2009 is to be taken into account. As a result, only weeks of lay-off that commence on or after November 6, 2009 are counted for the purposes of determining whether a lay-off exceeds a period of temporary lay-off, thereby triggering a termination under s. 56(1)(c).

Similarly, for the purposes of the 20-consecutive week period or 52-consecutive week period within which more than 13 or 35 weeks or more of lay-off respectively must fall, only those weeks that begin on or after November 6, 2009 are taken into account.

O Reg 398/09 Section 5 – Deemed Termination Date

5 For the purposes of subsection 56 (5) of the Act, if part of a lay-off is taken into account under paragraph 2 of section 4, the employment is deemed to be terminated on November 6, 2009.

Section 5 clarifies that for the purposes of s. 56(5), in cases where a layoff commenced prior to November 6, 2009, the deemed termination date will be November 6, 2009.

Section 56(5) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 provides that where a termination is triggered because of a lay-off that exceeds a period of temporary lay-off, the employment is deemed to have been terminated on the first day of the lay-off.

As a result, if a lay-off commenced prior to November 6, 2009 and the number of weeks of lay-off that occurred on or after November 6, 2009 are sufficient to trigger a termination in accordance with s. 56(1)(c) (i.e., more than 13 weeks in a period of 20 consecutive weeks or 35 weeks in a period 52 consecutive weeks) the deemed termination date will be November 6, 2009 rather than the first day of the lay-off.

O Reg 398/09 Section 6 – Mass Termination Provisions, Notice

6 For the purposes of the provisions of the Act that require an employer to provide notice otherwise than in accordance with section 57 of the Act if the employment of 50 or more employees is terminated in the same four-week period, only four-week periods that end before November 6, 2009 or begin after November 5, 2009 shall be taken into account.

Section 6 provides that with respect to applying the mass notice provisions to assignment employees, the four-week periods within which the 50 or more terminations must occur in order to trigger mass notice entitlements must end before November 6, 2009 or begin on or after November 6, 2009.

As a result of this section and paragraphs 4.1 through 4.3 of s. 74.11, s. 58(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 and s. 3(1) of O Reg. 288/01 would apply to determine the mass notice entitlements of assignment employees if they were one of at least 50 employees terminated in a four-week period ending before November 6, 2009, assuming they were not exempt from notice because they were an "elect to work" employee. Paragraphs 4.2 and 4.3 of s. 74.11 would apply to determine the mass notice entitlements of assignment employees if they were terminated in a four-week period beginning on or after November 6, 2009. For a discussion of how mass notice entitlements are triggered pursuant to s. 58(1) of the Act see ESA Part XV, s. 58. For a discussion of how mass notice entitlements are triggered pursuant to paragraphs 4.2 and 4.3 of s. 74.11, see ESA Part XVIII.1, s. 74.11.

O Reg 398/09 Section 7 – Severance

Severance - s. 7(1)

7(1) For the purposes of clause 63 (1) (c) of the Act, the following rules apply:

1. Only a period of 52 consecutive weeks that begins after November 5, 2009 shall be taken into account.

2. In the case of a lay-off that begins on or before November 5, 2009, only the part of the lay-off, if any, that occurs after November 5, 2009, shall be taken into account.

Subsection 7(1) provides that for the purposes of determining whether a severance of employment has been triggered in accordance with s. 63(1)(c), only a lay-off or part of a lay-off that occurs after November 5, 2009 is to be taken into account. Section 63(1)(c) defines a severance as occurring when an employer lays an employee off for 35 weeks or more in any period of 52 consecutive weeks. Similarly, for the purposes of the 52-consecutive week period within which the 35 weeks of lay-off must fall, only those weeks that begin on or after November 6, 2009 are taken into account.

Section 7(2)

7(2) For the purposes of clause 63 (1) (d) of the Act, only a lay-off of an employee that begins after November 5, 2009 because of a permanent discontinuance of all of a temporary help agency's business at an establishment of the agency after that date results in a severance of the employee's employment.

Subsection 7(2) provides that for the purposes of determining whether a severance has been triggered in accordance with s. 63(1)(d), only a lay-off that occurs after November 5, 2009 is to be taken into account. Section 63(1)(d) defines a severance as occurring when an employee lays an employee off because of a permanent discontinuance of all of the employer's business at an establishment.

Section 7(3)

7(3) For the purposes of clause 63 (1) (e) of the Act, only a notice of termination given after November 5, 2009 shall be taken into account.

Finally, s. 7(3) provides that where a severance is triggered under s. 63(1)(e), only a notice of termination given after November 5, 2009 is to be taken into account. Section 63(1)(e) defines a severance as occurring when an employer gives an employee notice of termination as required under s. 57 or s. 58 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 and the employee resigns, giving the employer at least two weeks' written notice of the resignation, with such notice to take effect during the statutory notice period.

O Reg 398/09 Section 8 – Length of Employment

Length of Employment - s. 8(1)

8(1) Where the entitlement of an assignment employee under a provision of Part XV of the Act is dependent on or varies with how long he or she has been employed by a temporary help agency, nothing in this Regulation shall be construed to exclude time spent in the employ of the agency before November 6, 2009.

Subsection 8(1) clarifies that nothing in this regulation can be construed to exclude time spent with an agency prior to November 6, 2009 for the purposes of determining entitlements under Part XV that vary with or are dependent on how long an assignment employee has been employed by a temporary help agency.

Section 8(2)

8(2) Subsection (1) applies in respect of any provision of Part XV of the Act or the regulations that makes reference to length of employment, however expressed, and, without restricting the generality of the foregoing, applies in respect of,

(a) a reference to a period of employment;

(b) a reference to continuous employment;

(c) a reference to employment whether or not continuous and whether or not active; and

(d) a reference to a number of years or months of employment.

Subsection 8(2) states that as a result, references to "period of employment", "continuous employment" or "employment, whether or not continuous and whether or not active" and references to "number of years or months of employment" in Part XV will include employment with an agency prior to November 6, 2009.

Ontario Regulation 476/06 – Family Medical Leave – Prescribed Individuals - REVOKED

Ontario Regulation 477/18 – Non-Application of Act

This regulation came into effect on November 15, 2018.

Pursuant to this regulation, the ESA 2000 does not apply to a “player on a major junior ice hockey team”, if the conditions set out in subsection (2) are met.

1(1) A player on a major junior ice hockey team is prescribed for the purposes of paragraph 12 of subsection 3 (5) of the Act if the conditions described in subsection (2) are met.

The regulation applies only to the major junior ice hockey team’s hockey players. It does not apply to any other individual on a major junior ice hockey team (e.g. equipment managers, trainers, coaches).

The Program is aware of major junior ice hockey teams in the Ontario Hockey League, although there may be others. However, in order for the ESA 2000 to not apply pursuant to this regulation, the condition in subsection (2) must be met.

Scholarship Condition – s. 1(2)

(2) Subsection (1) applies if there is an agreement between the player and the team, or the league of which the team is a member, that provides that the player is entitled to receive a scholarship for a post-secondary educational program for each hockey season the player plays, which may be conditional on the player meeting any eligibility criteria set out in the agreement.

The ESA 2000 will not apply only if the player on a major junior ice hockey team and the team – or the league in which the team is a member – have entered into an agreement (which pursuant to s. 1(3) of the ESA 2000 must be in writing) that provides that the player is entitled to receive a scholarship for a post-secondary educational program.

The agreement must provide a scholarship for each season the player plays on the team for the condition to be met.

The condition can be met even if the agreement contains eligibility criteria that the player must meet in order to qualify for the scholarship. The regulation does not establish any restrictions on the eligibility criteria that can be included in the agreement and does not establish any minimum amount of money that must be paid in order to qualify as a scholarship.

The condition will be met so long as there is a written agreement in place that contains provisions that provide for the scholarship; it does not matter whether the player ultimately meets the criteria and receives a scholarship.

There may be a period of time where an individual is a player on a major junior ice hockey team but has not entered into a written agreement that meets the condition set out in subsection (2). If there is an employment relationship during that period of time, the ESA 2000 will apply during that period.

Ontario Regulation 491/06 – Terms and Conditions of Employment in Defined Industries – Ambulance Services

This regulation sets out special rules regarding the terms and conditions of employment for employees employed in in the provision of land ambulance services or air ambulance services as defined in the Ambulance Act, RSO 1990, c A.19. Currently, the regulation's scope is limited to hours free from work and eating periods.

O Reg 491/06 Section 1 – Definitions

O Reg 491/06 came into effect on October 20, 2006.

Defined Industry

1 In this Regulation,

"defined industry" means the industry of providing land ambulance services or air ambulance services, as defined in the Ambulance Act;

Section 1 defines the industry to which O Reg 491/06 applies to mean the industry of providing land or air ambulance services as defined in the Ambulance Act, RSO 1990, c A.19.

"Land ambulance services" and "air ambulance services" as defined in s. 1 of the Ambulance Act includes all services provided by an ambulance service in connection with the transportation of persons by land and air respectively. The definitions would not include a patient transfer service that provides transportation only for medically stable patients not suffering from a trauma or an acute onset of illness that could endanger their life, limb or function.

Emergency Medical Attendant

1 In this Regulation,

"emergency medical attendant" and "paramedic" have the same meanings as in the Ambulance Act.

Section 1 of the Ambulance Act defines "emergency medical attendant" as a person employed by or a volunteer in an ambulance service who meets the qualifications for an emergency medical attendant as set out in the regulations, but does not include a paramedic or a physician, nurse or other health care provider who attends on a call for an ambulance.

Paramedic

1 In this Regulation,

"emergency medical attendant" and "paramedic" have the same meanings as in the Ambulance Act.

Section 1 of the Ambulance Act defines "paramedic" as a person employed by or a volunteer in an ambulance service who meets the qualifications for an emergency medical attendant as set out in the regulations, and who is authorized to perform one or more controlled medical acts under the authority of a base hospital medical director, but does not include a physician, nurse or other health care provider who attends on a call for an ambulance.

O Reg 491/06 Section 2 – Scope

2 This Regulation is restricted in its application to,

(a) employees in the defined industry who work as emergency medical attendants and are represented by a bargaining agent under the Labour Relations Act, 1995;

(b) employees in the defined industry who work as paramedics and are represented by a bargaining agent under the Labour Relations Act, 1995; and

(c) employers of employees described in clauses (a) and (b).

Section 2 narrows the scope of O Reg 491/06 by restricting its application to unionized employees who work as emergency medical attendants or paramedics as defined in the Ambulance Act, RSO 1990, c A.19. The regulation does not apply to other employees in the industry such as dispatchers or clerical workers, and would not apply to emergency medical attendants or paramedics who are not represented by a union.

O Reg 491/06 Section 3 – Terms and Conditions of Employment

3 This Regulation sets out terms and conditions of employment that apply to employees and employers described in section 2.

Section 3 states that O Reg 491/06 sets out terms and conditions of employment that apply to employers and employees in the defined industry of ambulance services.

O Reg 491/06 Section 4 – Hours Free from Work

Hours Free From Work – ss. 4(1) & (2)

4(1) If an employer and the bargaining agent that represents an employee agree, subsection (2) applies to that employer and employee instead of subsection 18 (1) of the Act.

4(2) An employer shall give an employee a period of at least eight consecutive hours free from performing work in each day.

Section 4(1) of O Reg 491/06 provides that, where the employer and the bargaining agent in the defined industry agree, s. 4(2) applies instead of s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000. Section 18(1) reads as follows:

18(1) An employer shall give an employee a period of at least 11 consecutive hours free from performing work in each day.

Under s. 4(2) of O Reg 491/06, the period of at least 11 consecutive hours free from performing work in each day (in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000) is replaced by a period of at least eight consecutive hours free from performing work in each day. See ESA Part VII, s. 18(1) for a discussion of the meaning of "day".

There can be no substitution of s. 4(2) for s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000 unless the employer and the bargaining agent agree. Agreements to substitute s. 4(2) for s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000 must be in writing in order to be valid. See ESA Part I, s. 1(3) and s. 1(3.1) for a discussion of the requirements regarding written agreements.

Like s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000, which it replaces, the provision for daily rest in s. 4(2) of O Reg 491/06 is an employment standard as defined in s. 1(1) of the ESA 2000 and cannot be contracted out of or waived (s. 5(1)). The employer and the bargaining agent could not, for example, agree to a daily rest period of six hours.

For a discussion on how the 11-hour daily rest operates, see ESA Part VII, s. 18(1). Substitute "8 hours" for "11 hours" each time it appears in order to understand the operation of the eight-hour daily rest period under s. 4(2) of O Reg 491/06.

Interaction With Other Hours of Work Provisions

The requirement in s. 4(2) for at least eight consecutive hours off work in each day operates together with the hours of work provisions in sections 17, 18 and 19 of Part VII of the ESA 2000.

On-Call Exception

Section 18(2) of the ESA 2000 sets out an "on-call exception" to s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000. This exception also applies if the daily rest period is eight consecutive hours as per s. 4(2) of O Reg 491/06, when it replaces the 11-hour daily rest requirement in s. 18(1) in the defined industry.

Under s. 18(2), the requirement that an employee have at least 11 hours free from performing work in each day (in accordance with s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000) or at least eight hours free from performing work in each day (in accordance with s. 4(2) of O Reg 491/06) does not apply to an employee who is on call and is called in during a period the employee would not otherwise have been expected to work. The on-call exception is an exception only to the requirement to provide 11 or eight consecutive hours free from work each day as per s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000 or s. 4(2) of O Reg 491/06. It does not operate as an exception to any other hours of work provisions.

For a discussion of the on-call exception, see ESA Part VII, s. 18(2). Substitute s. 4(2) of O Reg 491/06 for s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000, and substitute eight hours for 11 hours, wherever the references appear.

Maximum Daily Hours

Section 17(1) of the ESA 2000 provides for maximum daily hours of work of eight hours per day or, if there is an established workday that is longer than eight hours, the number of hours in that work day.

However, under s. 17(2) of the ESA 2000, employers and employees (or bargaining agents) can agree, in writing, that the employee will work up to a specified number of hours in excess of the daily limit. For such an agreement to be valid, s. 17(5) requires that non-unionized employees first be provided with a copy of the Ministry of Labour's information sheet on hours of work and overtime and that the agreement contains a statement by the employee acknowledging such receipt.

For further details about the maximum daily hours of work, agreements to vary from the maximum daily hours and the requirement to provide the Ministry's information sheet, see ESA Part VII, s. 17.

Maximum Weekly Hours

Section 17(1) of the ESA 2000 provides for maximum weekly hours of work of 48 hours. In order for hours in excess of 48 hours to be worked, the employer and employee (or bargaining agent) must agree, in writing, that the employee will work up to a specified number of hours in excess of the weekly limit. For such an agreement to be valid, s. 17(5) requires that non-unionized employees first be provided with a copy of the Ministry of Labour's information sheet on hours of work and overtime and that the agreement contains a statement by the employee acknowledging such receipt.

For further details about the maximum weekly hours, agreements to vary from the maximum weekly hours and the requirement to provide the Ministry's information sheet, see ESA Part VII, s. 17.

Free From Work Between Shifts

Section 18(3) of the ESA 2000 requires employers to provide employees with a minimum period free from work of eight hours between successive shifts, with two exceptions. First, an employee may work successive shifts without the eight-hour free period if the total number of hours worked on the successive shifts is 13 or less. Second, the employer and employee (or bargaining agent) can agree, in writing, to forego the eight-hour period entirely or to reduce its length. For a discussion of the interaction of s. 18(3) with the required daily rest in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000, see ESA Part VII, s. 18(3).

Per s. 4 of O Reg 491/06, a bargaining agent and employer in the defined industry could agree in writing to a minimum daily rest of 8 eight hours (instead of the 11 hours in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000). The bargaining agent could then agree in writing to work an eight and a 10-hour shift back to back, without any break between them. The agreement in writing would comply with s. 18(3) of the ESA 2000, but if it resulted in employees receiving a daily rest of less than eight consecutive hours (per the agreement under s. 4 of O Reg 491/06), the schedule would be in violation of O Reg 491/06 and, therefore, would not be permitted. In other words, the bargaining agent in the defined industry cannot agree to have employees work hours under s. 18(3) of the ESA 2000 that would result in the employee getting less than the eight consecutive hours free from work each day stipulated in s. 4(2) of O Reg 390/05.

Weekly/Bi-weekly Rest Periods

Section 18(4) of the ESA 2000 establishes weekly or bi-weekly free time requirements for employees. The free time periods must be at least either 24 consecutive hours in every "work week" or 48 consecutive hours in every two consecutive "work weeks".

See ESA Part VII, s. 18(4) for a discussion of the weekly/bi-weekly rest period provisions.

Exceptional Circumstances

Section 19 of the ESA 2000 allows employers to require employees to work more daily or weekly hours than are permitted under s. 17 of the ESA 2000, or to work during a free period (daily, in between shifts and weekly or bi-weekly) as required by s. 18 of the ESA 2000 (and s. 4(2) of O Reg 491/06) in any of the specified circumstances, but only so far as is necessary to avoid serious interference with the ordinary working of the employer's establishment or operations.

For a discussion of the exceptional circumstances, see ESA Part VII, s. 19.

O Reg 491/06 Section 5 – Eating Periods

5(1) If an employer and the bargaining agent that represents an employee agree to a term that addresses the employee's entitlement to an eating period as described in subsection (2), that term applies to that employer and employee instead of section 20 of the Act.

5(2) For the purpose of subsection (1), an employer and bargaining agent may agree to any of the following terms:

1. A term that entitles an employee to one or more eating periods that are or may be shorter than or at intervals that are or may be longer than are required by section 20 of the Act, including a term that does not specify the intervals.
2. A term that entitles an employee to fewer eating periods than are required by section 20 of the Act.
3. A term that entitles an employee to eating periods or to compensation or time free from performing work if the employee does not receive an eating period.
4. A term that provides that an employee is not entitled to eating periods, but provides that the employer shall make efforts to enable the employee to receive eating periods, whether or not the term entitles the employee to compensation or time free from performing work if the employee does not receive an eating period.
5. A term that provides that an employee is not entitled to eating periods.
6. A term that entitles an employee to eating periods or provides that an employee may be given an eating period, but provides that any eating period may be interrupted or missed.
7. A term that combines elements of two or more terms described in paragraphs 1 to 6.

Section 5 of O Reg 491/06 provides that s. 20 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 does not apply in certain circumstances. Section 20 of the ESA 2000 states:

20(1) An employer shall give an employee an eating period of at least 30 minutes at intervals that will result in the employee working no more than five consecutive hours without an eating period.

Under s. 20, an employer is required to provide an eating period of at least 30 minutes, timed so that no employee works longer than five consecutive hours without receiving an eating period, or, if the employer and employee agree (not necessarily in writing), two eating periods that together total at least 30 minutes within the same period of five consecutive hours.

Section 5(1) of O Reg 491/06 provides that the requirement under s. 20 of the ESA 2000 does not apply if the employer and bargaining agent agree in writing to a term that addresses the employees' entitlements to an eating period in one of the ways described in s. 5(2).

Ontario Regulation 502/06 – Terms and Conditions of Employment in Defined Industries – Automobile Manufacturing, Automobile Parts Manufacturing, Automobile Parts Warehousing and Automobile Marshalling

This regulation sets out special rules regarding the terms and conditions of employment for employees employed in the automobile manufacturing, automobile parts manufacturing, automobile parts warehousing and automobile marshalling industries. Currently, the regulation's scope is limited to hours free from work and personal emergency leave.

O Reg 502/06 Section 1 – Definitions

Definitions – s. 1(1)

O Reg 502/06 came into effect on November 3, 2006. Section 1(1) sets out the definitions for the purposes of the regulation.

Defined Industries

"defined industries" means the automobile manufacturing industry, the automobile parts manufacturing industry, the automobile parts warehousing industry and the automobile marshalling industry;

Section 1(1) defines the industries to which O Reg 502/06 applies, to mean the industries of automobile manufacturing, automobile parts manufacturing, automobile parts warehousing, and automobile marshalling. See, however, O Reg 502/06, s. 2, which narrows the scope of application of the regulation to employees in the defined industries who are directly involved in the activities set out in the industry definitions.

Automobile Manufacturing

"automobile manufacturing" means assembling automobiles;

Section 1(1) defines "automobile manufacturing" to mean assembling automobiles. Automobile has its regularly understood meaning, but also includes vans and trucks with a Gross Vehicle Weight Rating of 14,000 pounds (6350 kg) or less.

Automobile Marshalling

"automobile marshalling" means receiving assembled automobiles from employers in the automobile manufacturing industry, storing the automobiles before delivery to purchasers or persons who sell to purchasers, organizing them for delivery and arranging for delivery;

Section 1(1) defines "automobile marshalling" to mean the receiving of assembled automobiles from automobile manufacturers, storing the automobiles before delivery to purchasers or persons who sell to purchasers, organizing automobiles for delivery and arranging for delivery.

Automobile Parts Manufacturing

"automobile parts manufacturing" means,

(a) producing automobile parts that are supplied directly to employers in the automobile manufacturing industry or in the automobile parts warehousing industry, and

(b) producing elements of automobile parts where those elements are supplied directly to employers who produce automobile parts as described in clause (a);

Section 1(1) defines "automobile parts manufacturing" to mean producing automobile parts that are supplied directly to employers in the automobile manufacturing industry or the automobile parts warehousing industry. It also includes producing elements of automobile parts that are supplied directly to automobile parts producers. An example of a part supplied to an automobile manufacturer might be a tire. An example of an element of a part supplied to parts manufacturer might be a rim that is supplied to the tire manufacturer. In the industry, those who produce parts supplied directly to automobile manufacturers are commonly called "Tier One" parts manufacturers, while those who produce elements of parts supplied to Tier One manufacturers are commonly called "Tier Two" parts manufacturers.

Automobile Parts Warehousing

"automobile parts warehousing" means receiving automobile parts from employers in the automobile parts manufacturing industry, storing the parts before delivery to employers in the automobile manufacturing industry, organizing them for delivery, and delivering them or arranging for delivery;

Section 1(1) defines "automobile parts warehousing" to mean receiving automobile parts from automobile parts manufacturers, storing the parts before delivery to employers in the automobile manufacturing industry, organizing the parts for delivery and delivering them or arranging for delivery.

Qualified Health Practitioner (Revoked)

The definition of “Qualified Health Practitioner” was revoked effective January 1, 2019. The discussion of this definition is being maintained in this publication since employees may still have a complaint relating to a situation that arose when the definition was in force. The text appears in red to highlight that it has been revoked.

“qualified health practitioner” means a person who is qualified to practise as a physician, a registered nurse or a psychologist under the laws of the jurisdiction in which care or treatment is provided to the employee or to an individual described in subsection 4(4).

Section 1(1) defines “qualified health practitioner” to mean a person who is qualified to practise as a physician (a medical doctor), a registered nurse or a psychologist either under the laws of Ontario or another jurisdiction in which care or treatment is being provided to the employee or a relative of the employee.

Where care or treatment is provided in Ontario:

- "A person who is qualified to practise as a physician" means a member of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario (this includes psychiatrists);
- "A person who is qualified to practise as a registered nurse" means, pursuant to O Reg 275/94 of the Nursing Act, 1991, SO 1991, c 32, a member of the College of Nurses of Ontario who holds a general or extended certificate of registration as a registered nurse (nurse practitioners hold extended certificates); and
- "A person who is qualified to practise as a psychologist" means an individual who is a member of the College of Psychologists of Ontario.

Where care or treatment is provided in a jurisdiction other than Ontario, the question of whether the person providing it is a “qualified health practitioner” is determined with reference to the laws of that other jurisdiction.

Definitions for the Purposes of O Reg 502/06 – s. 1(2)

1(2) For the purposes of this Regulation,

(a) an employee of an employer who carries on any activity described in the definition of "automobile marshalling" in subsection (1) is employed in the automobile marshalling industry even if other activities constitute the majority of the employer's activities;

(b) an employee of an employer who produces any automobile parts or elements of automobile parts that are supplied as described in clauses (a) and (b) of the definition of "automobile parts manufacturing" in subsection (1) is employed in the automobile parts manufacturing industry even if the production of other things constitutes the majority of the employer's production; and

(c) an employee of an employer who carries on any activity described in the definition of "automobile parts warehousing" in subsection (1) is employed in the automobile parts warehousing industry even if other activities constitute the majority of the employer's activities.

Section 1(2) states that for the purposes of O Reg 502/06, a person is employed in the defined industries if their employer engages in the activities as set out in the definition of automobile marshalling industry and the automobile parts warehousing industry, even if other activities constitute the majority of the employer's activities. It similarly states that a person is employed in the automobile parts manufacturing industry if their employer produces any automobile parts or elements of automobile parts that are supplied as described in the definition of automobile parts manufacturing, even if the production of other things constitutes the majority of the employer's production.

O Reg 502/06 Section 2 – Scope

2 This Regulation is restricted in its application to,

(a) employees employed in the defined industries,

(i) who are directly involved in any of the activities mentioned in the definition of the respective defined industry, or

(ii) whose attendance at the workplace during any of the activities mentioned in the definition of the respective defined industry is essential to that activity; and

(b) employers of the employees described in subclauses (a)(i) and (ii).

Section 2 narrows the scope of O Reg 502/06 by restricting its application to employees employed in the defined industries:

- Who are directly involved in any of the activities set out in the definition of the defined industry; or
- Whose attendance at the workplace during such activities is essential to the activity.

While generally it will be fairly obvious whether an employee is directly involved in an activity referred to in the industry definition, determining whether an employee who is not directly involved is nevertheless doing work that is essential to such an activity can be more difficult. Examples of employees who may be considered to be doing such work include:

- Skilled tradespeople or others involved in the maintenance or repair of equipment; and
- Employees who collect the debris from around the assembly lines in order to keep the lines running.

Examples of employees who would generally not be considered to be doing work that is essential to activity referred to in the industry definition include employees who:

- Work in the workplace cafeteria; or
- Work as a janitor/custodian.

O Reg 502/06 Section 3 – Hours Free from Work

Hours Free from Work – ss. 3(1), (2) & (3)

3(1) If an employer and an employee agree, subsections (2) and (3) apply instead of subsection 18 (1) of the Act.

3(2) The employer shall give the employee a period of at least 11 consecutive hours free from performing work in each day, subject to subsection (3).

3(3) On one day in each work week, the period that is free from performing work may be shorter than 11 consecutive hours but shall be at least eight consecutive hours.

Section 3(1) of O Reg 502/06 provides that, where the employer and employee in the defined industries agree, ss. 3(2) and (3) applies instead of s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000. Section 18(1) reads as follows:

18(1) An employer shall give an employee a period of at least 11 consecutive hours free from performing work in each day.

Under ss. 3(2) and (3), if the employer and the employee (or bargaining agent representing employees) agree in writing, the daily rest period on one day in each work week may be shorter than eleven consecutive hours but must be at least eight consecutive hours. On all other days of the work week, the daily rest period must be at least eleven consecutive hours.

Like s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000, the daily rest requirements in s. 3(2) and s. 3(3) of O Reg 502/06 constitute an employment standard as defined in s. 1(1) of the ESA 2000 and cannot be contracted out of or waived (s. 5(1)). For example, an employer and employee (or bargaining agent) in the defined industries could not agree to a six-hour daily rest period on one day in each work week or to have two days each work week with an eight-hour daily rest period.

For a discussion on how the 11-hour daily rest operates, see ESA Part VII, s. 18(1).

Interaction with other Hours of Work Provisions

The requirement in s. 3(2) and s. 3(3) to allow for at least eight consecutive hours off work on one day in a work week and 11 consecutive hours off on all other days in that work week operates simultaneously with the hours of work provisions in Part VII of the ESA 2000, as follows:

On-Call Exception

Section 18(2) of the ESA, 2000 sets out an "on-call exception" to s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000. This exception also applies if the daily rest period for one day in the work week is between eight and 11 consecutive hours and 11 consecutive hours for all other days in the work week in accordance with s. 3(2) and s. 3(3) of O Reg 502/06.

Under s. 18(2), the requirement that an employee have at least 11 hours free from performing work in each day (in accordance with s. 3(2) of O Reg 502/06) and at least eight hours free from performing work on one day each work week (in accordance with s. 3(3) of O Reg 502/06) does not apply to an employee who is on call and is called in during a period the employee would not otherwise have been expected to work. The on-call exception is an exception only to the requirement to provide 11 or eight consecutive hours free from work each day as per s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000 or s. 3(2) and s. 3(3) of O Reg 502/06. It does not operate as an exception to any other hours of work provisions.

For a discussion of the on-call exception, see ESA Part VII, s. 18(2).

Maximum Daily Hours

Section 17(1) of the ESA 2000 provides for maximum daily hours of work of eight hours per day or, if there is an established workday that is longer than eight hours, the number of hours in that work day. However, under s. 17(2) of the ESA 2000, employers and employees can agree, in writing, that the employee will work up to a specified number of hours in excess of the daily limit. For such an agreement to be valid, s. 17(5) requires that non-unionized employees first be provided with a copy of the Ministry of Labour's information sheet on hours of work and overtime and that the agreement contains a statement by the employee acknowledging such receipt.

For further details about the maximum daily hours of work, agreements to vary from the maximum daily hours and about the requirement to provide the Ministry's information sheet, see ESA Part VII, s. 17.

Maximum Weekly Hours

Section 17(1) of the ESA 2000 provides for maximum weekly hours of work of 48 hours. However, under s. 17(3) of the ESA 2000, employers and employees can agree, in writing, that the employee will work up to a specified number of hours in excess of the weekly limit. For such an agreement to be valid, s. 17(5) requires that non-unionized employees first be provided with a copy of the Ministry of Labour's information sheet on hours of work and overtime and that the agreement contains a statement by the employee acknowledging such receipt.

For further details about the maximum weekly hours, see ESA Part VII, s. 17(1). For a discussion of agreements to work in excess of 48 hours per week, agreements to vary from the maximum weekly hours and about the requirement to provide the Ministry's information sheet, see ESA Part VII, s. 17.

Free From Work Between Shifts

Section 18(3) of the ESA 2000 requires employers to provide employees with a minimum period free from work of eight hours between successive shifts, with two exceptions. First, an employee may work successive shifts without the eight-hour free period if the total number of hours worked on the successive shifts is 13 or less. Second, the employer and employee can agree, in writing, to forego the eight-hour period entirely or to reduce its length. For a discussion of the interaction of s. 18(3) with the required daily rest in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000, see ESA Part VII, s. 18(3).

Per s. 3 of O Reg 502/06, an employee and employer in the defined industry could agree in writing to a minimum daily rest of 8 eight hours on one day during each work week and 11 hours of daily rest on all other days in the work week (instead of the 11 hours in s. 18(1) of the ESA 2000). That employee could, under s. 18(3) of the ESA 2000, then agree in writing to work an eight and a 10-hour shift back to back, without any break between them. The agreement in writing would comply with s. 18(3) of the ESA 2000, but if it resulted in the employee receiving a daily rest of less than eight consecutive hours on the one day or 11 consecutive hours on the other days in the work week (per the agreement under s. 3 of O Reg 502/06), the schedule would be in violation of O Reg 502/06 and, therefore, would not be permitted. In other words, an employee in the defined industry cannot agree to work hours under s. 18(3) of the ESA 2000 that would result in the employee getting less than the eight consecutive hours free from work on one day and 11 consecutive hours free from work on all other days during the work week as stipulated in s. 3(2) and s. 3(3) of O Reg 502/06.

Weekly/Bi-weekly Rest Periods

Section 18(4) of the ESA 2000 establishes weekly or bi-weekly free time requirements for employees. The free time periods must be at least either 24 consecutive hours in every "work week" or 48 consecutive hours in every two consecutive "work weeks".

See ESA Part VII, s. 18(4) for a discussion of the weekly/ biweekly rest period provisions.

Exceptional Circumstances

Section 19 of the ESA 2000 allows employers to require employees to work more daily or weekly hours than are permitted under s. 17 of the ESA 2000, or to work during a free period (daily, in between shifts and weekly or biweekly) as required by s. 18 of the ESA 2000 (and s. 3(2) and 3(3) of O Reg 502/06) in any of the specified circumstances, but only so far as is necessary to avoid serious interference with the ordinary working of the employer's establishment or operations.

For a discussion of the exceptional circumstances, see ESA Part VII, s. 19.

Eating Periods

Under s. 20 of the ESA 2000, an employer is required to provide an eating period of at least 30 minutes, timed so that no employee works longer than five consecutive hours without receiving an eating period, or, if the employer and employee agree (not necessarily in writing), two eating periods that together total at least 30 minutes within the same period of five consecutive hours.

For further details about eating periods, see ESA Part VII, s. 20.

O Reg 502/06 Section 4 – Personal Emergency Leave (REVOKED)

Note that this section was revoked effective January 1, 2019. As of January 1, 2019, the provisions of s. 50 (sick leave), s. 50.0.1 (family responsibility leave) and s. 50.0.2 (bereavement leave) apply to employees within the defined industries as established by s. 1.

The discussion of this section – which established special rules relating to the now-repealed personal emergency leave standard that was formerly in s. 50 – is being maintained in this publication since employees may still have a complaint relating to a situation that arose when section 4 was in force. The text appears in red to highlight that this section has been revoked.

Note that this text relates to s. 4 as it read from January 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018. (Section 4 read differently prior to January 1, 2018.)

Section 4(1)

4(1) This section modifies the application of section 50 of the Act.

Subsection 4(1) of O Reg 502/06 specifies that s. 4 creates special rules relating to personal emergency leave for employees employed in the defined industries.

For employees in the defined industries who are eligible for personal emergency leave, the special rules modify the number of days to which they are entitled and provides an exemption from the right to be paid for the first two days of personal emergency leave in each calendar year if certain criteria are met. All the other aspects of personal emergency leave will apply, such as the right of reinstatement to the same job after the leave, anti-reprisal protection and the requirement of the employer to continue benefit contributions, etc., as specified in ESA Part XIV, ss. 51-53.

Like ESA Part XIV, s. 50, which it modifies, the provision for personal emergency leave in O Reg 502/06, s. 4 is an employment standard as defined in ESA Part I, s. 1(1) and cannot be contracted out of or waived as per ESA Part III, s. 5(1). However, this prohibition is subject to the greater right or benefit provision established by ESA Part III, s. 5(2). Accordingly, an employment standard need not be complied with if the employee is receiving a greater right or benefit with respect to that particular standard. The principle that applies in making the determination is the same principle that governs in any greater right or benefit determination, i.e., do the relevant contractual provisions, taken in their entirety, give the employee a better deal than the corresponding employment standard taken in its entirety.

If an employer's benefit is considered a greater right or benefit than that created under O Reg 502/06 it will be enforced by the Program. For more information on the greater right or benefit analysis, see ESA Part III, s. 5(2) and the specific commentary on greater right or benefit in the context of personal emergency leave.

Note that if an employer offers a benefit plan for sick days, bereavement days, etc., and the employee opts to claim benefits under that plan, it is Program policy that the employee has in effect designated the absence also as a personal emergency leave day (unless the employee is also entitled to another leave under the ESA 2000, e.g., domestic or sexual violence leave. In that case, the employee is free to decide which leave to designate) and it will reduce the employee's personal emergency leave entitlement accordingly. For example, if an employer offers three paid sick days under a benefits plan and the employee is absent three days because of the flu and claims benefits under the plan, the employee is considered to have used three of their personal emergency leave days.

Note also that there is nothing in the ESA 2000 or O Reg 502/06 that would prohibit an employer from subtracting any personal emergency leave days that are taken from any paid days provided by a benefit plan offered by an employer. Notably, while this is not prohibited under the ESA 2000, an employment contract may address the issue of whether any personal emergency days count against any contractual leave entitlements.

Section 4(2)

4(2) An employee is entitled to take a total of seven days of leave in each calendar year because of any of the following:

1. A personal illness, injury or medical emergency.

2. The illness, injury or medical emergency of an individual described in subsection (4).

3. An urgent matter that concerns an individual described in subsection (4).

Employees in the defined industries are entitled to a maximum limit of seven days of personal emergency leave per calendar year as a result of any of the events in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 occurring. The triggering events are the same as those established in ESA Part XIV, s. 50. For more information regarding the definition of a "personal illness, injury or medical emergency" or "urgent matter", please refer to ESA Part XIV, s. 50(1), paras 1 to 3.

The question arises as to whether the seven day entitlement should be prorated for employees who started their employment partway through a calendar year. As per ESA Part XIV, s. 50, which it modifies, there is nothing in O Reg 502/06, s. 4 to suggest that employees who are eligible for personal emergency leave should be entitled to less than seven days a calendar year in this situation. Accordingly, it is Program policy that there should be no pro-rating of the seven day entitlement.

Section 4(3)

4(3) In addition to the entitlement under subsection (2), an employee is entitled to take up to three days of leave because of the death of an individual described in subsection (4) each time there is such a death.

In addition to the entitlement of up to seven days of personal emergency leave within a calendar year because of personal illness, injury or medical emergency, or the illness, injury, medical emergency or urgent matter of a specified list of relatives, employees are entitled to take personal emergency leave of up to 3 days because of the death of a person described in paragraphs 1 to 7 of s. 4(4). Note that as in the general personal emergency leave provisions outlined in ESA Part XIV, s. 50, this group of relatives does not include an uncle or an aunt of the employee, unless that individual is dependent on the employee for care and assistance.

The entitlement to a leave "because of the death of an individual" is up to three days per incident: if an employee's brother and parent died in the same calendar year, the employee would be entitled to up to six days of unpaid personal emergency leave. If the same employee had a health crisis and needed to take seven days of leave due to a medical emergency, they would be entitled to a total of 13 days of personal emergency leave within a calendar year, instead of the 10 days that the employee would have normally been entitled to per ESA Part XIV, s. 50. If no death of any person described in s. 4(4) occurs within a calendar year, the maximum entitlement to personal emergency leave for reasons other than a death as specified in s. 4(2) is seven days. The employee would not be entitled to "use" the bereavement portion of the personal emergency leave for any other purpose than the death of an individual described in s. 4(4).

Section 4(4)

4(4) Paragraphs 2 and 3 of subsection (2) and subsection (3) apply with respect to the following individuals:

1. The employee's spouse.

2. A parent, step-parent or foster parent of the employee or the employee's spouse.

3. A child, step-child or foster child of the employee or the employee's spouse.

4. A grandparent, step-grandparent, grandchild or step-grandchild of the employee or of the employee's spouse.

5. The spouse of a child of the employee.

6. The employee's brother or sister.

7. A relative of the employee who is dependent on the employee for care or assistance.

This subsection defines the group of individuals who will be considered a "relative" for the purposes of O Reg 502/06. It is identical to the list of relatives found at ESA Part XIV, s. 50(2).

Sections 4(5) & (6)

(5) An employee who wishes to take leave under this section shall advise his or her employer that he or she will be doing so.

(6) If the employee must begin the leave before advising the employer, the employee shall advise the employer of the leave as soon as possible after beginning it.

Subsection 4(5) requires employees to notify their employers ahead of time that they will be taking personal emergency leave. If the employee is not able to provide notice before taking the leave, they will be required to notify the employer "as soon as possible" after commencing the leave. The same requirements exist in relation to the general provisions of personal emergency leave at ESA Part XIV, s. 50; similarly, the Program takes the position that if an employee fails to provide notice to the employer (either before or after starting the leave), the entitlement to the leave will not be invalidated. For more information on these sections, please see the commentary at ESA Part XIV, s. 50(3).

Sections 4(7), (8) and (9)

4(7) Subject to subsection (8), an employee is entitled to take a total of two days of paid leave under this section in each calendar year and the balance of his or her entitlement under this section as unpaid leave.

4(8) If an employee has been employed by an employer for less than one week, the following rules apply:

1. The employee is not entitled to days of paid leave under this section.
2. Once the employee has been employed by the employer for one week or longer, the employee is entitled to days of paid leave under subsection (7), and any days of unpaid leave that the employee has already taken in the calendar year shall be counted against the employee's entitlement under that subsection.

3. Subsection (9) does not apply until the employee has been employed by the employer for one week or longer.

4(9) The two days of paid leave mentioned in subsection (7) must be taken first in a calendar year before any of the days of unpaid leave can be taken under this section.

Subsections (7), (8) and (9) are nearly identical to ESA Part XIV, ss. 50(5), (6) and (8). Subsection 4(7) specifies that the first two days of personal emergency leave taken in the calendar year must be paid, while the remainder of the days taken are unpaid. Subsection 4(8) establishes the rule for new employees who have been employed by the employer for less than one week, and s. 4(9) clarifies that the paid days of leave are to be taken before the unpaid days in a calendar year in the case of employees who have been employed for one week or longer. See the commentary at ESA Part XIV, ss. 50(5), (6) and (8).

Section 4(10)

4(10) Despite subsections (7) and (8), an employee is not entitled to take two days of paid leave under this section if the following applies under the terms and conditions of his or her employment:

1. The employee is entitled to receive a total of two or more days as one or more of the following:
    i. Vacation days in excess of the employee's entitlement under Part XI of the Act.
    ii. Holidays in excess of the employee's entitlement under Part X of the Act.
    iii. Days off for personal illness or personal medical appointments in each calendar year.
2. The employee is entitled to be paid, for at least two of the days described under paragraph 1, an amount for each day equal to,
    i. The total amount of regular wages earned in the pay period immediately preceding that day, divided by the number of days the employee worked in that period, or
    ii. If the employee was on vacation for the entire pay period referred to in subparagraph i, the total amount of regular wages earned in the pay period immediately preceding the vacation, divided by the number of days the employee worked in that period.

Subsection 4(10) provides a special rule that applies when a contract of employment contains particular terms. If the contract of employment provides for the entitlements in ss. 4(10) paragraphs 1(i), 1(ii) or 1(iii), paid in accordance with paragraph 2, then the employer is not obligated to pay the employee for the first two days of personal emergency leave taken within a calendar year.

Note that the contract of employment may contain "two or more days as one or more of the following", meaning that the contract can "mix and match", and meet the requirement by providing one extra day of vacation and one personal sick day, for example. At least two days in total must be given by the contract, but they can be any combination of vacation, holiday or days for personal illness/personal medical appointments so long as they are paid in accordance with s. 4(10) paragraph 2.

Vacation days

Section 4(10) paragraph 1(i) refers to paid vacation days in excess of the basic entitlements of ESA Part XI. If a contractual entitlement provides something less than what an employee would get under ESA Part XI in terms of the number of days (for example, a paid vacation day subject to a "use it or lose it" requirement), then it will not meet the requirements of s. 4(10) paragraph 1(i) and those days cannot be used when determining whether this special rule applies to disentitle the employee from paid personal emergency leave.

Holidays

Section 4(1) paragraph 1(ii) refers to "holidays in excess of the employee's entitlement under Part X of the Act". This may include additional holidays that are not defined public holidays under the ESA 2000, such as the August Civic holiday or Remembrance Day, or company holidays, for example, when an employer shuts down operations between Christmas Day and New Year's Day, or provides an additional company-wide holiday on the Friday before a public holiday under the ESA 2000.

However, for an employer to rely on s. 4(10) paragraph 1(ii), note that the employee must be entitled to be paid at least the amount specified in the formula set out in s. 4 (10) paragraph 2. The formula set out in this provision is an “averaging” formula, while the public holiday pay formula under Part X of the ESA 2000 is a “pro-rating” formula. Accordingly, employees who are subject to this regulation must be entitled to an “average” day’s pay as described in s. 4(10), paragraph 2 for any extra holidays that the employer is relying on in order to have the special rule for personal emergency leave pay to apply, while the employee is entitled to a “pro-rated” amount of a day’s pay for public holidays under Part X.

It is Program policy that extra holidays that have conditions attached to them will not count towards having the special personal emergency leave pay rule apply. For example, if an employee is entitled to the Civic Holiday only if they work the day before or after that day (or have reasonable cause if they fail to do so) the Civic Holiday will not be considered to be a holiday in excess of the employee’s entitlement under Part X because the employee is not automatically “entitled” to receive that day off.

Days off for personal illness or personal medical appointments

If the contract of employment contains one or more days for the employee to take a day off due to personal illness or to attend a personal medical appointment, and the day is paid in accordance with s. 4(10) paragraph 2, the employee will not be entitled to paid personal emergency leave. In order to qualify, the day or days provided by the contract of employment must include personal illness or a personal medical appointment as a valid use, but can include other purposes (for example, for the illness of a child or for a non-medical use).

Amount paid in order for a day under paragraph 1 of s. 4(10) to qualify for special rule

If an employment contract provides for excess vacation days, company holidays or personal illness days, the employer will not be able to rely on the exemption from paid days of personal emergency leave unless the days provided by the contract are paid. Section 4(10) paragraph 2 specifies how much the employee must be paid for these days in order for them to qualify. The amount of pay for the day must be something similar to what the employee would be paid for a regular day of work: it must be no less than the regular wages earned in the pay period before the day (whether it is a company holiday, vacation day, or personal illness day) divided by the number of days the employee worked in that period.

As per s. 4(10), paragraph 2(ii), if the employee was on vacation for the entire pay period prior to the day off, the employee must be entitled to be paid the amount of regular wages earned in the pay period immediately preceding the vacation, divided by the number of days the employee worked in that period. Paragraph 2(ii) applies only if the employee is on vacation the entire pay period. If the employee is away from work for any other reason, the formula set out in 2(i) applies. For example, an employee is entitled to the Civic Holiday and was on unpaid leave the entire pay period prior to the Civic Holiday and did not earn any regular wages. The employer could count the Civic Holiday towards paragraph 1(ii) as a "holiday in excess of the employee's entitlement under Part X of the Act" in applying the exemption even though the employee would not be entitled to be paid anything for that day under this formula.

As "regular wages" is a defined term and does not include vacation pay, if the employee is on vacation for the entire pay period preceding the day, then the amount the employee must be paid will be based on the regular wages earned in pay period prior to the vacation.

Section 4(11)

4(11) An employee who is not entitled to take two days of paid leave because of subsection (10) continues to be entitled under subsections (2) and (3) to take the leave as unpaid leave.

This subsection clarifies that if an employee is not entitled to be paid for the first two days of personal emergency leave taken in the calendar year because the employee's contract of employment contains at least two of the days described in s. 4(10), the employee still has the right to take personal emergency leave without pay.

Section 4(12)

4(12) If an employee takes any part of a day as paid or unpaid leave under this section, the employer may deem the employee to have taken one day of paid or unpaid leave on that day, as applicable, for the purposes of subsections (7) and (8).

This subsection allows the employer to count any part of a day taken as personal emergency leave as a full day for the purpose of determining how much leave an employee has taken, and how much leave they have remaining in a calendar year. The employer is not obligated to do so: for example, if an employee takes half of a day to attend a funeral of a relative who meets any of the requirements determined by O Reg 502/06, the employer may either consider the employee to have taken the exact number of hours the employee was absent, or the entire day. If the employer chooses to designate the absence as a full day of personal emergency leave, the employee would, of course, remain entitled to be paid wages for any hours actually worked on the day of deemed leave. If the day of leave was one of the first two taken in the calendar year, the employee would be entitled to be paid personal emergency leave pay only for the hours taken as leave.

This subsection is identical to ESA Part XIV, s. 50(7) – refer to commentary on that section for more information.

Section 4(13)

4(13) Subject to subsections (14) and (15), if an employee takes a day of paid leave under this section, the employer shall pay the employee either,

a. the wages the employee would have earned had they not taken the leave; or

b. if the employee receives performance-related wages, including commissions or a piece work rate, the greater of the employee's hourly rate, if any, and the minimum wage that would have applied to the employee for the number of hours the employee would have worked had they not taken the leave.

This subsection defines the amount of personal emergency leave pay an employee who is eligible for paid leave is entitled to.

Subsection 4(13) is identical to the provisions of ESA Part XIV, s. 50(9). For more information on this section and examples of personal emergency leave pay calculation, see the commentary at ESA Part XIV, s. 50(9).

Sections 4(14) and (15)

4(14) If a day of paid leave under this section falls on a day or at a time of day when overtime pay, a shift premium or both would be payable by the employer,

a. the employee is not entitled to more than his or her regular rate for any leave taken under this section; and

b. the employee is not entitled to the shift premium for any leave taken under this section.

4(15) If a day of paid leave under this section falls on a public holiday, the employee is not entitled to premium pay for any leave taken under this section.

Subsection 4(14) excludes overtime pay or a shift premium (for example, an extra amount paid for working evenings or weekends) from inclusion when calculating personal emergency leave pay. The employee would be entitled to be paid for hours of personal emergency leave using their regular rate of pay, and not for example 1.5 times their regular rate per the overtime provisions of the ESA 2000.

Under ESA Part X Public Holidays, employees who agree to, or are required to work on a public holiday may be entitled to receive premium pay of at least one and one half times their regular rate for hours worked on that day. The effect of this subsection is that, despite the entitlement in s. 4(13) to be paid "the wages the employee would have earned had they not taken the leave", the employee is not entitled to any premium pay that they would have earned by working on the public holiday had the leave not been taken.

Subsections 4(14) and (15) are identical to the provisions of ESA Part XIV, s. 50(10) and (11). For more information on these sections and examples of personal emergency leave pay calculations involving overtime pay and shift premiums, see the commentary at ESA Part XIV, s. 50(10) and for examples of personal emergency leave pay calculations involving public holiday premium pay, see the commentary at ESA Part XIV, s. 50(11).

Sections 4(16) and (17)

4(16) Subject to subsection (17), an employer may require an employee who takes leave under this section to provide evidence reasonable in the circumstances that the employee is entitled to the leave.

4(17) An employer shall not require an employee to provide a certificate from a qualified health practitioner as evidence under subsection (16).

These subsections are identical to ESA Part XIV s. 50(12) and (13) – refer to "personal emergency leave" commentary on those sections for more information.

Ontario Regulation 535/17 – Family Medical Leave and Critical Illness Leave

This regulation sets out the conditions for when an employee takes family medical leave or critical illness leave with respect to a person who considers the employee to be like a family member.

O Reg 535/17 Section 1 – Condition re Family Member

1 For the purposes of paragraph 12 of subsection 49.1 (3) of the Act and paragraph 12 of the definition of "family member" in subsection 49.4 (1) of the Act, the prescribed condition is that the employee must, on the employer's request, provide the employer with a copy of the document provided to an agency or department of the Government of Canada for the purpose of claiming benefits under the Employment Insurance Act (Canada) in which it is stated that the employee is considered to be like a family member.

The family medical leave provision in ESA Part XIV, s. 49.1(3) paragraph 12 and critical illness leave in the definition of family member at ESA Part XIV, s. 49.4(1) both define "family member" for the purpose of determining eligibility for the leave, and include "a person who considers the employee to be like a family member."

If an employee wishes to take either critical illness leave or family medical leave to care for such a person, the employee must provide a copy of a "document provided to an agency or department of the Government of Canada for the purposes of claiming benefits under the Employment Insurance Act" to the employer if the employer requests it. At the time of writing, the Employment Insurance ("EI") benefit that is available to employees who wish to take family medical leave is the compassionate care EI benefit, and in order to qualify for EI benefits when an employee takes family medical leave to care for someone who considers the employee to be like a family member, the employee must complete an attestation form for Service Canada. Whether or not the employee intends to apply for the EI benefit, it is this form that must be provided to the employer if the employer asks for it.

In the case of critical illness leave, the requirement is the same: if the employer requests a copy of the document that the employee provided to Service Canada to support an application for EI benefits to care for a critically ill family member when that person is someone who considers the employee to be like a family member, then the employee must provide it to the employer.

Ontario Regulation 764/20 - Terms and conditions of employment in defined industries - hospitality, tourism and convention and trade show industries

O. Reg. 764/20 – Terms and Conditions of Employment in Defined Industries – Hospitality, Tourism and Convention and Trade Show Industries– came into effect on December 17, 2020. It was originally set to self-revoke on December 17, 2021, but was later extended to self-revoke on July 31, 2022.

O. Reg. 764/20 applies only to employees who are represented by a trade union, and employers of those employees, in the following industries: hospitality, tourism, and convention and trade show industries. It does not apply to the Crown and certain public bodies as defined in the regulation.

O. Reg. 764/20 creates a special rule that permits employers and trade unions to agree that the regulation applies instead of some of the provisions in s. 67 of the ESA. Section 67 of the ESA governs the interaction between recall rights, termination and severance pay and establishes a requirement for payment of termination pay and severance pay into trust where recall rights are retained. The agreement can be made with respect to a single employee, a group or groups of employees, or all employees.

Regulation Does Not Require Payment Into Trust

If the employer and the trade union agree to have the regulation apply with respect to an employee, the requirement in s. 67(7) of the ESA that the employer pay the termination pay and severance pay to which the employee is entitled into trust will not apply. This exemption from the requirement to pay the money into trust happens automatically when the employer and trade union agree to apply the special industry rule.

Note that although the regulation does not require the employer to pay into trust the termination pay and severance pay to which the employee is entitled, the trade union and employer are not prohibited by the regulation from bargaining a trust arrangement with respect to any or all of the pay to which the employee is entitled. Unlike s. 67(7), the regulation does not contemplate that any such trust arrangement would involve paying the money into trust with the Director of Employment Standards. Therefore, the Director will not accept any money into trust where the regulation applies.

Scheme re: Retention of Recall Rights

In addition, where the employer and the trade union agree to have the regulation apply with respect to an employee:

- the trade union may elect to retain recall rights on behalf of some or all of the employees it represents, so long as the employee has not already elected to be paid termination and severance pay and abandon their recall rights. The union may make this election even if the employee had already elected to retain recall rights.
- if the trade union on behalf of the employee elects to retain recall rights, the employee may not renounce the right to be recalled – and be paid termination and severance pay - before a date agreed upon by the union and employer.
- the trade union may not renounce the recall right on behalf of an employee.

Where a trade union and employer agree to have the regulation apply with respect to an employee, if the employee individually elects to retain recall rights and the trade union does not elect to retain the right to recall on behalf of that employee, the only practical difference for that employee between being subject to the regulation and being governed by s. 67 is that there is no obligation on the employer to pay into trust the termination pay and severance pay to which the employee is entitled. (Note, however, that if the employee elected to retain recall rights before the trade union and employer agreed to have the regulation apply to that employee, the employer may have already paid the termination pay and severance pay into trust. In that case, where the money was paid to the Director of Employment Standards in trust, it will be held and released in accordance with s. 67 of the ESA. Where the money is being held in a private trust, it will be held and paid in accordance with the trust arrangement.)

O. Reg. 764/20 – Section 1 – Definitions

1. In this Regulation,

“convention and trade show industry” includes businesses engaged in organizing, promoting or supporting conventions or trade shows, whether or not they operate the facilities in which these events take place;

“defined industries” means the hospitality industry, the tourism industry and the convention and trade show industry;

“hospitality industry” includes businesses that provide accommodation, lodging, meals or beverages for payment, and includes hotels, motels, motor hotels, tourist homes, tourist camps, tourist cabins and cottages, tourist inns, restaurants, bars, catering services and all other businesses of a similar nature;

“tourism industry” includes businesses engaged in,

(a) travel arrangement, reservation services or tour operations,

(b) producing, organizing or promoting live presentations that involve the performances of actors, singers, dancers, musical groups, artists, athletes or other entertainers,

(c) preserving or exhibiting objects, sites or natural wonders of historical, cultural or educational value, or

(d) operating recreation, amusement or gambling facilities or services, including casinos.

Section 1 defines the industries to which O. Reg 764/20, pursuant to s. 2, applies.

Section 1 provides a definition of “defined industries” (as referenced in s. 2) to mean the hospitality industry, the tourism industry and the convention and trade show industry. It also defines each of those industries.

The definitions of those three industries are inclusive. This means that there may be activities or businesses that are not explicitly set out within the definitions that fall within them.

O. Reg. 764/20 – Section 2 - Scope

2. (1) This Regulation is restricted in its application to,

(a) employees in the defined industries who are represented by a trade union; and

(b) employers of employees described in clause (a).

(2) This Regulation does not apply to the Crown, a Crown agency or an authority, board, commission or corporation at least one of whose members is appointed by the Crown, or to any employees of such an employer.

Subsection 2(1) narrows the scope of O. Reg. 764/20 by restricting its application to employees in the defined industries who are represented by a trade union, and to their employers.

It does not matter for the purpose of s. 2 whether or not the unionized employees are covered by a collective agreement. So long as the employees are represented by a trade union, the regulation applies.

If a trade union representing employees in one of the defined industries enters into an agreement with the employer pursuant to ss. 4(1) of this regulation and is subsequently decertified while this regulation is still in effect, the regulation would stop applying with respect to the employees who are no longer represented by a trade union on the date of the decertification, and s. 67 of the ESA 2000 would apply to the employees and employer as of that date.

Section 1 of the ESA 2000 defines "trade union" to be an organization that represents employees in collective bargaining under a number of labour relations statutes. See s. 1 of the ESA 2000 for details.

Subsection 2(2) further narrows the scope of O. Reg. 764/20 by providing that it does not apply to the Crown, a Crown agency or an authority, board, commission or corporation, at least one of whose members is appointed by the Crown, or to any employees of such an employer.

For a discussion of the exemption that applies to the Crown and certain public bodies in the context of ss. 4(4.1) of the ESA 2000 and s. 2.1 of O. Reg. 285/01, see O Reg 285/01 s. 2.1. Note, however, that the exemption in this regulation differs from the exemptions for the Crown and certain public bodies in the context of ss. 4(4.1) of the ESA 2000 and s. 2.1 of O. Reg. 285/01. In those contexts, all of the members of an authority, board, commission or corporation must be appointed by the Crown for the exemption to apply. Here, the regulation will not apply so long as at least one of the members has been appointed by the Crown.

O. Reg. 764/20 – Section 3 – Terms and conditions of employment

3. This Regulation sets out terms and conditions of employment that apply to employees and employers described in section 2.

Section 3 states that O. Reg. 764/20 sets out terms and conditions of employment that apply to unionized employees and their employers in the industries defined in s. 1.

This section must be read in conjunction with ss. 4(1) of O. Reg. 764/20, which provides that the special rules regarding the application of recall rights in the regulation applies with respect to an employee only if the trade union and employer agree that it applies. If there is no such agreement, s. 67 of the ESA 2000 applies with respect to that employee. Depending on the agreement negotiated by the employer and trade union, it is possible that some unionized employees of an employer are governed by this regulation while other employees of the employer who are represented by the same trade union are governed by s. 67 of the ESA 2000.

O. Reg. 764/20 – Section 4 - Elections re recall rights

4. (1) If an employer and the trade union that represents an employee agree, subsections (2) to (7) apply to that employer and employee instead of subsections 67 (3) to (5) and (7) to (9) of the Act.

Subsection 4(1) of O. Reg. 764/20 provides that, if the employer and the trade union that represents an employee in the defined industries agree, subsections (2) to (7) of this regulation apply to that employer and employee instead of subsection 67 (3), (4), (5), (7), (8) and (9).

The trade union and employer can enter into an agreement with respect to a single employee, a group or groups of employees, or all employees: the regulation does not impose any restrictions in this regard.

Regulation Does Not Require Payment Into Trust Where Election made to Retain Recall Rights

If the employer and the trade union agree to have the regulation apply with respect to an employee, where an election to retain recall rights has been made the requirement in s. 67(7) of the ESA that the employer pay the termination pay and severance pay to which the employee is entitled into trust will not apply. This exemption from the requirement to pay money into trust happens automatically when the employer and trade union agree to apply the special industry rule.

Note that although the regulation does not require the employer to pay into trust the termination pay and severance pay to which the employee is entitled, the trade union and employer are not prohibited by the regulation from bargaining a trust arrangement with respect to any or all of the pay to which the employee is entitled. Unlike s. 67(7), the regulation does not contemplate that any such trust arrangement involves paying the money into trust with the Director of Employment Standards. Therefore, the Director will not accept any money into trust where the regulation applies.

Scheme re: Retention of Recall Rights

In addition, where the employer and the trade union agree to have the regulation apply with respect to an employee:

- the trade union may elect to retain recall rights on behalf of some or all of the employees it represents, so long as the employee has not already elected to be paid termination and severance pay and abandon their recall rights. The union may make this election even if the employee had already elected to retain recall rights.
- if the trade union on behalf of the employee elects to retain recall rights, the employee may not renounce the right to be recalled – and be paid termination and severance pay - before a date agreed upon by the union and employer.
- the trade union may not renounce the recall right on behalf of an employee.

Where a trade union and employer agree to have the regulation apply with respect to an employee, if the employee individually elects to retain recall rights and the trade union does not elect to retain the right to recall on behalf of that employee, the only practical difference for that employee between being subject to the regulation and being governed by s. 67 is that there is no obligation on the employer to pay into trust the termination pay and severance pay to which the employee is entitled.

The employer and trade union can enter into an agreement under this subsection with respect to an employee even if that employee already made an election to retain recall rights, and even if that employee made the election before O. Reg. 764/20 came into force. For example, if an employee elected to retain recall rights while subject to s. 67, the employer and trade union can subsequently enter into an agreement under this subsection with respect to that employee. If they do, the regulation applies rather than the system set out in s. 67. This means, for example, that upon entering into the agreement the employer is no longer subject to the requirement in ss. 67(7) to pay the employee's termination and severance pay into trust, and as per ss. 4(4) of this regulation, where the union has made an election on behalf of some or all of the employees it represents, the employees may not renounce the employees' right to be recalled and be paid termination and severance pay to which the employee is entitled before the date agreed to by the employer and union. Note that where money is already being held in trust by the Director of Employment Standards pursuant to s. 67 in respect of a particular employee, there is no authority for the Director to return those funds to the employer if the employer and union come to an agreement under this regulation in respect of that employee's recall rights; the Director can only pay out the funds in accordance with s. 67 of the Act. Where money is being held in a private trust, it will be held and paid in accordance with the trust arrangement.

Consolidation of the Provisions of s. 67 of the ESA 2000 and of O. Reg. 76420 that Apply if the Union and Employer Enter into an Agreement under ss. 4(1) of O. Reg. 764/20

If the employer and trade union enter into an agreement under ss. 4(1) with respect to an employee, the provisions of the ESA 2000 and this regulation governing the interaction between recall rights and termination pay and severance pay that would apply to the employer and employee affected by the agreement are as set out below.

(Note: although ss. 67(6) of the ESA 2000 is not displaced when the employer and trade union enter into an agreement under ss. 4(1) of O. Reg. 764/20, the text of ss. 67(6) is not set out below because it applies only to non-unionized employees and as such is not relevant.)

Where election may be made

ss. 67(1) of ESA 2000 This section applies if an employee who has a right to be recalled for employment under his or her employment contract is entitled to,

(a) termination pay under section 61 because of a lay-off of 35 weeks or more; or

(b) severance pay.

Exception

ss. 67(2) of ESA 2000 Clause (1) (b) does not apply if the employer and employee have agreed that the severance pay shall be paid in instalments under section 66.

4. (2) Subject to subsections (3) and (4), the employee may elect to be paid the termination pay or severance pay forthwith or to retain the right to be recalled.

4. (3) If the employee is entitled to both termination pay and severance pay, the same election shall be made in respect of each.

4. (4) A trade union may elect to retain the right to be recalled on behalf of some or all of the employees it represents and if such an election is made, the following rules apply:

1. The election is binding on the employee in respect of whom it is made unless the employee elected to be paid prior to the trade union's election.

2. The employee may not renounce the right to be recalled before the date agreed to by the employer and the trade union.

3. The trade union may not renounce the right to be recalled on behalf of the employee.

4. (5) If no election is made on an employee's behalf under subsection (4) and the employee elects to be paid under subsection (2), the employee shall be deemed to have abandoned the right to be recalled.

4. (6) If the employee accepts employment made available under the right of recall, the employee shall be deemed to have abandoned the right to termination pay and severance pay.

4. (7) Subject to the limit set out in paragraph 2 of subsection (4), if the employee renounces the right to be recalled or the right expires, the employer shall pay the termination pay and severance pay to which the employee is entitled forthwith to the employee and, if the right to be recalled had not expired, the employee shall be deemed to have abandoned the right.

Because ss. 4 (2)-(7) of O. Reg. 764/20 replace certain subsections of s. 67, the reference in ss. 67(1) of the ESA to "This section" means s. 67 and ss. 4(2)-(7) of O. Reg. 764/20.

Section 67 of ESA 2000 - Where Election May Be Made

67(1) This section applies if an employee who has a right to be recalled for employment under his or her employment contract is entitled to,

(a) termination pay under section 61 because of a lay-off of 35 weeks or more; or

(b) severance pay.

Subsection 67(1) sets out the circumstances in which the provisions regarding the election of recall rights apply. This section is subject to s. 67(2) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, discussed in subsection (2) below.

Subsection 67(1) states that s. 67 will apply where an employee has the right to be recalled for employment under a contract of employment (which includes a collective agreement) and either a) or b) below applies. (Where a trade union and employer agree to have O. Reg. 764/20 apply to an employee who falls under ss. 67(1), the reference in ss. 67(1) to "This section" means ss. 67(1), (2) and ss. 4(2)-(7) of O. Reg. 764/20.)

Termination pay is due under section 61 because of a lay-off of 35 weeks or more - s. 67(1)(a)

Employees who are entitled to termination pay because of a temporary lay-off that equals or exceeds 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks (ss. 56(2)(b) or ss. 56(2)(c)) are subject to s. 67. In that case, the employer of such an employee is also subject to s. 67.

This section does not apply if the termination pay comes due for reasons other than as a result of a lay-off that equals or exceeds 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks. Therefore, it will not apply where, for example, there is a termination because of a lay-off that exceeds 13 weeks in a 20-week consecutive period (ss. 56(2)(a)). In that case, the employee is not required under the Act to make an election in order to receive termination pay after 13 weeks of lay-off and will not be deemed under the Act to have abandoned the right to be recalled in accepting that payment. If the employee is entitled to severance pay, however, he or she will be required to make an election with respect to the payment of the severance pay and the retention of recall rights. It should also be noted that a collective agreement or contract of employment may provide for the loss of recall rights as a consequence of an employee's acceptance of termination pay that comes due other than as a result of a lay-off that equals or exceeds 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks.

Severance pay is due – s. 67(1)(b)

Subject to ss. 67(2), employees who are entitled to severance pay under ss. 64(1) of the Act are subject to the provisions of s. 67. The employee's employer is likewise subject to the provisions of s. 67.

Exception - s. 67(2) of ESA 2000

67(2) Clause (1)(b) does not apply if the employer and employee have agreed that the severance pay shall be paid in instalments under section 66.

Section 67(2) provides that, despite ss. 67(1)(b), the provisions of s. 67 (and of ss. 4(2)-(7) of O. Reg. 764/20) will not apply with respect to the severance entitlement where an employer and an employee have agreed to pay an employee severance pay in instalments under s. 66. See ESA Part XV, s. 66 for a detailed discussion of severance instalment plans under s. 66 of the Act. As such, an employee who agrees to accept severance pay by instalment will not be required to make an election as between the payment of his or her severance pay and retaining the right to recall, and the employer will not be required to pay the severance pay into trust.

However, s. 67 and ss. 4(2)-(7) of O. Reg. 764/20 will apply where an instalment plan is in place because the Director has approved the payment of severance pay by instalments (as opposed to it being in place as a result of employee agreement). Accordingly, in that case, the employee must elect either to be paid the severance pay (by instalment) or retain his or her recall rights. If that employee also has the right to termination pay because of a lay-off of 35 weeks or more, the same election must be made with respect to both the termination pay and severance pay entitlements - see ss. 4(3) of O. Reg. 764/20. Note that if that employee does not make an election, or elects to be recalled, it is Program Policy that the employee has not abandoned the right to be recalled even though the employer pays the employee severance pay by instalment under a plan approved by the Director, since the employee has not expressly elected to be paid the severance pay under ss. 4(2) of O. Reg. 764/20.

4. (2) Subject to subsections (3) and (4), the employee may elect to be paid the termination pay or severance pay forthwith or to retain the right to be recalled.

This subsection provides that subject to ss. 4(3) and (4) of O. Reg. 764/20, an employee may choose to have the termination pay or severance pay to which the employee is entitled paid to him or her immediately, or instead may choose to retain the right to be recalled.

Subsection (3) provides that where an employee is entitled to both termination pay and severance pay, the employee must make the same election in respect of both of those payments.

Subsection (4) provides that a trade union may elect to retain the right to be recalled on behalf of some or all of the employees it represents, so long as the employee has not already elected to be paid termination or severance pay.

This provision does not apply with respect to the employee's severance pay entitlement if the employee and employer have agreed to (as opposed to the Director approving) the payment of severance pay by instalment under s. 66 of the Act. In that event, ss. 67(2) of the Act provides that the provisions of s. 67 - and ss. 4(2) of this regulation since it only applies where s. 67 is triggered - do not apply with respect to the severance pay entitlement.

As noted earlier, there is no provision in the regulation corresponding to the obligation in ss. 67(7) of the ESA 2000 requiring that, where recall rights are retained, the employer pay the termination pay and severance pay to which the employee is entitled into trust.

4. (3) If the employee is entitled to both termination pay and severance pay, the same election shall be made in respect of each.

This subsection, combined with ss. 67(1), provides that if an employee is entitled to termination pay on or after 35 weeks of lay-off in a period of 52 consecutive weeks and to severance pay, the employee must make the same election with respect to both.

Note, however, that this requirement does not apply if the employee and employer have agreed to (as opposed to the Director approving) the payment of severance pay by instalment under s. 66 of the Act. In that event, ss. 67(2) of the Act provides that the provisions of s. 67 - and ss. 4(2) of this regulation since it only applies where s. 67 is triggered - do not apply with respect to the severance pay entitlement.

4. (4) A trade union may elect to retain the right to be recalled on behalf of some or all of the employees it represents and if such an election is made, the following rules apply:

1. The election is binding on the employee in respect of whom it is made unless the employee elected to be paid prior to the trade union's election.

2. The employee may not renounce the right to be recalled before the date agreed to by the employer and the trade union.

3. The trade union may not renounce the right to be recalled on behalf of the employee.

This subsection provides that the trade union may elect to retain the recall rights on behalf of one, some or all of the employees it represents, and establishes rules in paragraphs 1-3 with respect to that election.

Paragraph 1 of ss. 4(4) provides that such an election is binding on the employee in respect of whom the election is made unless the employee elected to be paid the termination and severance pay to which the employee is entitled before the trade union made the election. If an employee made the election to be paid first, that election stands and cannot be overridden by the trade union's election.

That is the only situation under the regulation where the trade union's election to retain the right of recall on behalf of an employee is not binding. A trade union may elect to retain the right of recall on behalf of an employee – and have the rules set out in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of this subsection apply – even if the employee had already elected to retain those rights pursuant to ss. 4(2) of this regulation or ss. 67(3) of the ESA (in the case where the employee made the election before the trade union and employer entered into an agreement under ss. 4(1) of this regulation to have the regulation apply to that employee, including a situation where the election was made before this regulation came into force).

Paragraph 2 of ss. 4(4) provides that if the trade union elects to retain the right to be recalled on behalf of an employee, that employee cannot renounce the right to be recalled before the date agreed to by the employer and the trade union.

If the employer and trade union do not agree on such a date, the employee may renounce the recall right and elect to be paid termination pay and severance pay at any time.

Because this regulation revokes on July 31, 2022 as per s. 5 of the regulation, an employee will be able to renounce the recall rights as of July 31, 2022. An employer and trade union cannot agree to restrict the ability to renounce recall rights beyond that date. See the discussion of s. 5 below.

Paragraph 3 of ss. 4(4) provides that the trade union cannot renounce an employee's right of recall on behalf of that employee. The regulation only authorizes the trade union to retain an employee's right of recall on the employee's behalf.

Note that although there is no requirement in the regulation corresponding to the requirement in ss. 67(7) of the ESA 2000 that the employer pay the termination pay and severance pay to which the employee is entitled into trust where either the employee or the union on behalf of an employee elects to retain recall rights under this regulation, the trade union and employer are not prohibited by the regulation from bargaining a trust arrangement with respect to any or all of the pay to which the employee is entitled. Unlike s. 67(7), the regulation does not contemplate that any such trust arrangement would involve paying the money into trust with the Director of Employment Standards. Therefore, the Director will not accept any money into trust where the regulation applies.

4. (5) If no election is made on an employee's behalf under subsection (4) and the employee elects to be paid under subsection (2), the employee shall be deemed to have abandoned the right to be recalled.

Subsection 4(5) provides that where the union did not elect to retain recall rights on an employee's behalf and the employee elects to be paid termination pay that became due because of a lay-off of 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks, or severance pay, the employee will be deemed to have abandoned his or her right to be recalled.

Note, however, that this provision does not apply if the employee and employer have agreed to (as opposed to the Director approving) the payment of severance pay by instalment under s. 66 of the Act. In that event, ss. 67(2) provides that the provisions of s. 67 (including ss. 4(5) of this regulation) do not apply with respect to the severance pay entitlement.

4. (6) If the employee accepts employment made available under the right of recall, the employee shall be deemed to have abandoned the right to termination pay and severance pay.

Subsection (6) provides that where the employee accepts a recall to work, the employee is deemed to have abandoned the right to termination pay and severance pay.

Subsection (6) deals only with the issue of what happens to the entitlement to termination and severance pay when an employee accepts a recall; neither it, nor any other provision in s. 67 or Reg. 764/20, has any bearing on what constitutes a termination within the meaning of s. 56 or what constitutes a severance within the meaning of s. 63. See the Court of Appeal decision in United Steel v National Steel Car Limited, 2013 ONCA 401 (CanLII), where the Court rejected the employer's argument that s. 67 means that an employee who accepts a recall cannot have any of the time spent on lay-off prior to the recall taken into account in determining whether there was a subsequent termination or severance. See ESA Part XV, s. 63(1) of the Manual for further discussion of this case.

Employee Refuses to Return to Work

Sometimes situations will arise in which the employer recalls an employee who had elected to retain recall rights – or on whose behalf the union had elected to retain recall rights - and the employee refuses to return to work. Because the employee's refusal occurs after the point at which the employee became entitled to termination pay or severance pay, the employee's refusal to accept the recall cannot disentitle him or her to that termination pay or severance pay. Specifically, none of the exemptions in ss. 2(1) or 9(1) of O. Reg 288/01 apply to exempt such an employee from termination or severance pay to which he or she is already entitled. While paragraph 7 of s. 2(1) of O. Reg 288/01 provides that an employee on a temporary lay-off is exempt from the termination provisions if he or she does not return to work when recalled, it does not apply to a refusal to return to work that occurs after the point at which the right to termination pay has crystallized. Further, there is no exemption from severance pay in O. Reg 288/01 that corresponds to paragraph 7 of s. 2(1) of that regulation.

Accordingly, an employee who has been recalled after his or her termination or severance entitlements have crystallized may refuse to return to work and then - subject to the restriction in paragraph 2 of ss. 4(4) of this regulation that prevents an employee on whose behalf the trade union elected to retain the right to be recalled from renouncing that right before the date agreed upon by the employer and trade union – the employee may renounce his or her recall rights, in which case he or she will be entitled to receive his or her termination or severance pay.

Alternatively, an employee could refuse the recall but retain the recall rights (if he or she did not lose them under the terms of the contract or collective agreement for having refused to return to work when recalled). If the employee's refusal resulted in the automatic termination of recall rights under the terms of the contract or collective agreement, then the result would be the same as if the recall rights had expired, i.e., the employer would have to pay the employee the termination and severance pay to which the employee is entitled.

Period of Employment Calculation When Termination After Recall

Situations may also arise in which a long service employee who had been laid off for 35 weeks in a period of 52 consecutive weeks elects to retain recall rights - or the union elects to retain them on the employee’s behalf - and then, after more than 13 weeks elapse, accepts a recall, only to have the employer terminate the employee's employment two weeks later. How is the employee's length of service calculated for purposes of notice of termination in this case? Because of the "period of employment" rule in s. 8 of O Reg 288/01, only the last two weeks of employment would be considered in calculating the employee's period of employment. As a result, the employee would be entitled under the ESA to one week's notice or one week's termination pay. (Note: While the employee's period of employment is only two weeks, the employee was "continuously employed for three months or more" within the meaning of s. 54 and so meets the s. 54 threshold for being ~~is~~ entitled to notice or termination pay in accordance with s. 57(a).)

4. (7) Subject to the limit set out in paragraph 2 of subsection (4), if the employee renounces the right to be recalled or the right expires, the employer shall pay the termination pay and severance pay to which the employee is entitled forthwith to the employee and, if the right to be recalled had not expired, the employee shall be deemed to have abandoned the right.

Subsection 4(7) provides that where the employee renounces the right to be recalled (subject to the restriction in paragraph 2 of ss. 4(4) that prevents an employee on whose behalf the trade union elected to retain the right to be recalled from renouncing that right before the date agreed upon by the employer and trade union), or the rights expire, the employer is required to pay the employee the termination pay and severance pay to which the employee is entitled immediately, and the employee is deemed to have abandoned the right to be recalled.

O. Reg. 764/20 – Section 5 - Revocation

5. This Regulation is revoked on July 31, 2022.

Section 5 of O. Reg. 764/20 provides that Reg. 764/20 is revoked on July 31, 2022.

The regulation was originally set to automatically revoke on December 17, 2021 (the first anniversary of the day the regulation was filed) but was later extended.

As such, employees, unions and employers who had been operating under the terms of this regulation will be subject to the provisions in s. 67 of the ESA 2000 as of July 31, 2022.

This means, for example, that as of July 31, 2022, employees have the exclusive right to elect to retain their recall rights, employers are required to pay the termination pay and severance pay of employees who have retained their recall rights into trust in accordance with s. 67(7), and employees’ ability to renounce their recall rights and be paid termination and severance pay will no longer be restricted by any agreement that may have been entered into by the union and the employer under this regulation establishing a date before which those rights could not be renounced.

O. Reg. 764/20 – Section 6 - Commencement

6. This Regulation comes into force on the day it is filed.

Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 (EPFNA)

EPFNA Section 1- Interpretation

Definitions - s. 1(1)

This section contains definitions for certain terms used in the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009.

Note that EPFNA was amended effective November 20, 2015 by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014, SO 2014, c 10 to broaden the scope of the legislation. Prior to November 20, 2015, EPFNA's name was the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act (Live-in Caregivers and Others), 2009, and it applied only to foreign nationals employed or attempting to find employment in Ontario as live-in caregivers. Effective November 20, 2015, the newly named EPFNA applies to all foreign nationals employed in Ontario or attempting to find employment in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program.

Some of the defined terms in the EPFNA have the same meaning as in the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Director

"director" means a director of a corporation and includes a shareholder who is a party to a unanimous shareholder agreement;

For the purposes of EPFNA, the term "director" is defined in the same way as in ESA Part XX, s. 79. See ESA Part XX, s. 79.

Director of Employment Standards

"Director of Employment Standards" has the same meaning as in the Employment Standards Act, 2000;

Similarly, the use of the term "Director of Employment Standards" in EPFNA has the same meaning as "Director" in the ESA 2000. See ESA Part I, s. 1 for more information.

Employment Standards Officer

"employment standards officer" has the same meaning as in the Employment Standards Act, 2000;

"Employment standards officer" has the same meaning in both acts. An employment standards officer is someone appointed under Part III of the Public Service of Ontario Act, 2006, SO 2006, c 35, Sch A. For a discussion on the authority to appoint employment standards officers, please see ESA Part XXI, s. 86.

Foreign National

"foreign national" means an individual who is not,

(a) a Canadian citizen, or

(b) a permanent resident within the meaning of the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act (Canada);

A "foreign national" is defined as an individual who is neither a Canadian citizen nor a permanent resident within the meaning of the federal Immigration and Refugee Protection Act, SC 2001, c 27 ("IRPA"). IRPA defines a permanent resident as a person who has acquired permanent resident status and has not subsequently lost that status per s. 46 of IRPA. The issue of whether a person is a Canadian citizen or a permanent resident can be assessed by requesting and reviewing certain documentation.

Prescribed

"prescribed", unless otherwise indicated, means prescribed by the regulations made under this Act;

EPFNA defines the term "prescribed" as meaning established by regulations under EPFNA.

Recruiter

"recruiter" means a person who is acting as a recruiter as described in section 2.

The term "recruiter" means a person who meets the criteria of acting as a recruiter as described in s. 2 of EPFNA. See the discussion of s. 2 of EPFNA for more information.

Incorporation by Reference – s. 1(2)

1(2) Where this Act incorporates by reference a provision of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, the provision is incorporated with necessary modifications that include the following:

1. References in that Act to a complaint filed under section 96 of that Act shall be read as references to a complaint filed under section 20 of this Act.

2. References in that Act to an order under section 103, 104, 106, 107 or 108 of that Act shall be read as references to the corresponding order described in section 24 of this Act.

3. For greater certainty, references in that Act to an order to pay wages owing by an employer shall be read as references to the following in this Act:

- i. In connection with the prohibitions in section 7 of this Act against a recruiter charging fees or another person collecting fees, the references shall be read as an order to repay fees charged by a recruiter or collected by a person on behalf of a recruiter, and read as if the fees were wages under that Act and as if the recruiter or person were an employer under that Act.
- ii. In connection with the prohibition in section 8 of this Act against an employer recovering costs, the references shall be read as an order to repay costs recovered by an employer, and read as if the costs were wages under that Act.

4. For greater certainty, references in section 88 of that Act to an amount owing under the provisions of that Act or the regulations shall be read as references to an amount owing under the provisions of this Act or its regulations.

Subsection 1(2) clarifies how certain provisions of the ESA 2000, which are incorporated into EPFNA by reference, are to be interpreted. The subsection provides that where EPFNA incorporates a reference to a provision of the ESA 2000, the provision must be incorporated with necessary modifications. Subsection 1(2) goes on to specify that those modifications include the following:

- References in the ESA 2000 to a complaint filed under ESA Part XXII, s. 96 are to be read as references to a complaint filed under s. 20 of EPFNA;
- References in the ESA 2000 to an order issued under any of the ESA 2000 sections outlined below are to be read as references to the corresponding order set out in s. 24 of EPFNA:
    - Section 103 order to pay wages;
    - Section 104 order to reinstate, pay compensation or both;
    - Section 106 or 107 order to pay wages against directors; or
    - Section 108 order to comply;
- References in the ESA 2000 to an order to pay wages owed by an employer, when read in the context of a prohibition under s. 7 of EPFNA, are to be read as an order to repay fees charged by a recruiter or collected by a person on behalf of a recruiter as if the fees were wages under the ESA 2000. Furthermore, when applying s. 7 of EPFNA, references to an employer under the ESA 2000 are to be read as a reference to a recruiter or other person.
- References in the ESA 2000 to an order to pay wages owed by an employer, when read in the context of a prohibition under s. 8 of EPFNA, are to be read as an order to repay costs recovered by an employer as if the costs were wages under the ESA 2000.
- ESA Part XX, s. 88(5) allows the Director of Employment Standards to set multiple rates of interest for any amounts owing under the ESA 2000 and its regulations, as well as money held in trust by the Director. This section is incorporated for the purposes of amounts owing under the EPFNA.

Delegation of Powers (EPFNA)

For more information on the Director of Employment Standard's ability to delegate under EPFNA, see Delegation of Powers for further information.

EPFNA Section 2 – Acting as Recruiter

2. For the purposes of this Act, a person is acting as a recruiter,

(a) if the person finds, or attempts to find, an individual for employment;

(b) if the person finds, or attempts to find, employment for an individual;

(c) if the person assists another person in doing the things described in clause (a) or (b); or

(d) if the person refers an individual to another person to do any of the things described in clause (a) or (b).

Section 2 establishes when a person is "acting as a recruiter" for the purposes of the Act. A person is acting as a recruiter for the purposes of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 if he or she:

- Finds or attempts to find an individual for employment or assists another person in doing so;
- Finds or attempts to find employment for an individual or assists another person in doing so; or

- Refers an individual to another person to find or to attempt to find an individual for employment or to find or attempt to find employment for an individual.

In terms of distinguishing the first two bullets above, the first relates to a person finding or attempting to find or assisting in finding or attempting to find an individual for a position, whereas the second bullet relates to a person finding or attempting to find or assisting in finding or attempting to find a position for an individual.

As set out in clause (d), a person is acting as a recruiter for the purposes of EPFNA if he or she refers another person to someone who finds, or attempts to find, either an individual for employment or employment for an individual. This may arise, for example, where a person refers a potential employer to a recruitment agency for assistance in finding a foreign national for employment as a live-in caregiver.

EPFNA Section 3 – Application

Application - s. 3(1)

3(1) This Act applies to the following persons:

1. Every foreign national who, pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program, is employed in Ontario or is attempting to find employment in Ontario.

2. Every person who employs a foreign national in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program.

3. Every person who acts as a recruiter in connection with the employment of a foreign national in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program.

4. Every person who acts on behalf of an employer described in paragraph 2 or a recruiter described in paragraph 3.

This provision was amended by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014, SO 2014, c 10, effective November 20, 2015 to reflect the broadened scope of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009. EPFNA formerly applied only to foreign nationals employed or attempting to find employment as live-in caregivers. (Prior to its amendment, this section also provided for the application of the Act to foreign nationals in other prescribed employment but none was prescribed prior to the amendment of this section.)

This provision lists the persons to whom the EPFNA applies. It must be read in conjunction with ss. 3(2) and 3(3) which provide that the EPFNA does not apply to employers or recruiters if the Employment Standards Act, 2000 would not apply in respect of the employment of the foreign national. Note also that s. 3(4) provides that EPFNA applies to the Crown only in such circumstances as are prescribed, and that at the time of writing, no regulation to prescribe such application has been made.

Subsection 3(1) sets out the persons to whom the EPFNA applies (subject to ss. 3(2), (3) and (4)) as follows:

- Every foreign national who is employed in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program;
- Every foreign national who is attempting to find employment in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program;
- Every person who employs a foreign national in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program;
- Every person who acts on behalf of an employer described in the immediately preceding bullet;
- Every person who acts as a recruiter in connection with the employment of a foreign national in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program; and
- Every person who acts on behalf of a recruiter described in the immediately preceding bullet.

Subsection 3(1) is intended to capture employment that is or would be permitted to be performed by a foreign national in Ontario under an immigration or temporary foreign employee program. It therefore refers to foreign nationals who are employed pursuant to such programs or who are attempting to find employment pursuant to such programs.

Employed Pursuant to an Immigration or Temporary Foreign Employee Program

Generally, foreign nationals employed in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program will require a work permit to work in Ontario. As a result, a foreign national as defined in s. 1(1) of the EPFNA who has a work permit allowing him or her to work in Ontario would be covered under the EPFNA (subject to ss. 3(2), 3(3) and 3(4)).

Immigration programs are administered by the federal government and would generally refer to programs that enable foreign nationals to obtain permanent residency in Canada. Under these programs, a foreign national may be permitted to apply for a work permit while their Permanent Resident (PR) application is being finalized, which would enable them to obtain employment in Ontario. For example, this would include the Family Sponsorship Program.

It should be noted that there may be immigration programs that permit a foreign national to work in Ontario without a work permit. Whether or not such a foreign national is working pursuant to an "immigration program" would have to be determined on a case by case basis. Further, even where the work is performed pursuant to an immigration program, the application of EPFNA is subject (as noted above) to ss. 3(2), 3(3) and 3(4). Of particular note in these situations would be ss. 3(2) and 3(3), which limit the application of EPFNA to foreign nationals whose employment would be covered under the ESA 2000. See above and below sections for a discussion of those subsections.

Foreign temporary employee programs refer generally to programs administered by the federal government intended to enable foreign nationals to obtain work permits so that they may legally perform work in Ontario on a temporary basis. A work permit will therefore be determinative evidence that a foreign national is employed pursuant to such a program. Some of the foreign temporary employee programs administered by the federal government at the time of writing are described below:

1. Seasonal Agricultural Program ("SAWP"): This program is based on bilateral agreements with Mexican and Caribbean governments and allows employers engaged in the production of specific agricultural products to hire foreign nationals for up to 8 months per year for on-farm work.
2. Agricultural Stream: This program allows employers engaged in the production of specific agricultural products to hire foreign nationals for a maximum of 24 months for on-farm work.
3. In-Home Caregiver Program: This program provides employment positions for foreign nationals who work in a home providing care for children, elderly family members, or family members with disabilities. They may be live-in or live-out. Formerly, the federal program for caregivers required such employees to live in the residence of the employer. These employees were captured under the former EPFNA as live-in caregivers. However, with the expanded scope of EPFNA, both live-in and live-out caregivers under the "new" federal program now fall under EPFNA.
4. Stream for Low-wage Positions: This category includes positions that are below the provincial/territorial median wage. Examples of low-wage occupations include general labourers, food counter attendants, and sales and service personnel.
5. Stream for High-wage Positions: This category includes positions at or above the provincial/territorial median wage. Examples of high-wage occupations include managerial, scientific, professional and technical positions as well as the skilled trades.
6. International Mobility Program: This program allows employers to hire or bring in temporary foreign workers without the need to obtain a Labour Market Impact Assessment ("LMIA").

Attempting to Find Employment Pursuant to an Immigration or Foreign Temporary Employee Program

The Program's position is that a foreign national as defined in s. 1(1) of EPFNA will be considered to be attempting to find employment pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program if the individual possesses a work permit, has made an application for a work permit or there is evidence to demonstrate that the foreign national has communicated with a recruiter about finding employment in Ontario.

Every person who employs a foreign national in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program and every person acting on behalf of such an employer

In order for the EPFNA to apply to an “employer”, that employer must ultimately employ a foreign national pursuant to an immigration or temporary foreign national employee program (or person acting on their behalf).

In other words, the obligations of an employer under the EPFNA apply only with respect to foreign nationals that are actually employed by the employer. For example, the prohibitions against cost recovery in s. 8 apply only to prohibit an employer from recovering costs incurred in employing or attempting to employ a foreign national who is (or was) in fact employed by the employer.

Every person who acts as a recruiter in connection with the employment of a foreign national in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program and every person acting on behalf of such a recruiter

In order for the EPFNA to apply to a “recruiter”, that recruiter must be acting as such in connection with the employment of a foreign national in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program.

One question that has arisen related to the application of the EPFNA to “recruiters” is whether a foreign government that participates in arranging for its own citizens to work in Ontario as foreign nationals could be considered a “recruiter” and therefore subject to the EPFNA as such. While a foreign government could, depending on the circumstances, be considered a “recruiter” as described in the EPFNA, the EPFNA (as provincial legislation) cannot generally be enforced against a foreign government because of the application of the federal State Immunity Act, RSC 1985, c S-18.

Prerequisite - s. 3(2)

3(2) This Act applies to an employer described in paragraph 2 of subsection (1) unless the Employment Standards Act, 2000 does not apply in respect of the employment.

Subsection 3(2) specifies that EPFNA applies to every person who employs a foreign national in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program if the ESA 2000 applies or would apply in respect of the employment of the foreign national. In determining whether the ESA 2000 applies or would apply in respect of employment, reference must be made to s. 3 of the ESA 2000, which sets out to whom the Act applies. Generally, the ESA 2000 applies with respect to an employee and his or her employer if the employee's work is performed in Ontario or if work outside of Ontario is a continuation of the work performed in Ontario, and the employer's undertaking falls within provincial employment law jurisdiction and the employer does not enjoy diplomatic immunity. See ESA Part III, s. 3 for more information on the application of the ESA 2000.

Application to Recruiters - s. 3(3)

3(3) This Act applies to a recruiter described in paragraph 3 of subsection (1) unless the Employment Standards Act, 2000 would not apply in respect of the employment.

Subsection 3(3) specifies that EPFNA applies to every person who acts as a recruiter in connection with the employment of a foreign national in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program if the ESA 2000 would apply in respect of the employment of the foreign national. In determining whether the ESA 2000 applies or would apply in respect of employment, reference must again be made to s. 3 of the ESA 2000 which sets out to whom the Act applies. Generally, the ESA 2000 applies with respect to an employee and his or her employer if the employee's work is performed in Ontario or if work outside of Ontario is a continuation of the work performed in Ontario, and the employer's undertaking falls within provincial employment law jurisdiction and the employer does not enjoy diplomatic immunity. See ESA Part III, s. 3 for more information on the application of the ESA 2000.

Application to the Crown - s. 3(4)

3(4) This Act applies to the Crown in such circumstances as may be prescribed.

Subsection 3(4) establishes that EPFNA applies to the Crown in such circumstances as may be prescribed by regulation. However, at the time of writing, no regulations have been made pursuant to this provision; therefore, unless a regulation is made, EPFNA does not apply to employment with the Crown. For information on the meaning of the Crown, see ESA Part III, s. 3(4).

EPFNA Section 4 – Separate Persons Treated as One Entity

4(1) Subsection (2) applies if associated or related activities or businesses are or were carried on by or through an employer or recruiter and one or more other persons.

(2) The employer or recruiter, as the case may be, and the other person or persons described in subsection (1) shall all be treated as a single entity for the purposes of this Act, even if the activities or businesses are not carried on at the same time.

(3) Subsection (2) does not apply with respect to a corporation and an individual shareholder of the corporation unless the individual is a member of a partnership and the shares are held for the purposes of the partnership.

(4) Persons who are treated as one entity under this section are jointly and severally liable for any contravention of this Act and for any amounts owing to a foreign national by any of them for the contravention.

On January 1, 2018, the Fair Workplaces, Better Jobs Act, 2017, SO 2017, c 22 amended s. 4 of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 to remove the requirement that the intent or effect of the arrangement as previously described in s. 4(1) must be to defeat, either directly or indirectly, the purpose of the EPFNA. This provision is analogous to ESA Part III, s. 4 which the Fair Workplaces, Better Jobs Act, 2017 similarly amended. Some small differences in wording are as follows:

- EPFNA s. 4 makes reference to recruiters in addition to employers
- EPFNA s. 4(2) combines the substance of ESA Part III, s. 4(2) and 4(3) into one provision (this is not legally significant)
- EPFNA refers to "amounts owing" versus "wages", which is the term used in the ESA 2000.

Because of the substantial similarity between EPFNA s. 4 and ESA Part III, s. 4, the Program's policies with respect to the interpretation of ESA Part III, s. 4 may be applied to this provision with necessary modifications.

EPFNA Section 5 – No Contracting Out

No Contracting Out - s. 5(1)

5(1) No person shall contract out of or waive a protective measure under this Act and any such contracting out or waiver is void.

Subsection 5(1) prohibits contracting out of or waiving of any requirement or prohibition in the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 that is for the benefit of a foreign national. Any such contracting out or waiver would be void. This provision must be read in conjunction with s. 5(2), which defines the term "protective measure".

For a discussion of the similarly-worded "no contracting out" provision in the Employment Standards Act, 2000, see ESA Part III, s. 5 of this Manual; that discussion applies to the interpretation of this provision with necessary modifications.

Definition - s. 5(2)

5(2) In this section, "protective measure" means a requirement or prohibition under this Act that applies to an employer, recruiter or person acting on behalf of an employer or recruiter for the benefit of a foreign national.

This provision defines the term "protective measure" to mean a requirement or prohibition under EPFNA that applies to an employer, recruiter or person acting on behalf of an employer or recruiter, for the benefit of a foreign national.

The protective measures are found in ss. 7 to 13 of EPFNA.

EPFNA Section 6 – Civil Proceedings Not Affected

6(1) Subject to section 21, no civil remedy of a foreign national against his or her employer or against a recruiter is affected by this Act.

(2) If a foreign national commences a civil proceeding against his or her employer or against a recruiter under this Act, notice of the proceeding shall be served on the Director of Employment Standards on a form approved by the Director on or before the date the civil proceeding is set down for trial.

(3) Subsections 8 (3) to (5) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to service of the notice.

The provisions in s. 6 of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 are analogous to those contained in s. 8 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. Subsection 6(1) provides that subject to s. 21, EPFNA does not affect any civil remedy available to a foreign national against his or her employer or against a recruiter. Subsection 6(2) establishes the requirement that notice of a civil proceeding against an employer or recruiter under EPFNA be served on the Director of Employment Standards on an approved form before the proceeding is set down for trial. Subsection 6(3) incorporates provisions of the ESA 2000 which set out how the notice of civil proceeding must be served and when the service is effective.

The Program's policy with respect to the interpretation of s. 8 of the ESA 2000 applies to s. 6 of EPFNA with necessary modifications. See ESA Part III, s. 8 for more information.

EPFNA Section 7 – Prohibition Against Charging Fees

Prohibition Against Charging Fees - s. 7(1)

7(1) No person who acts as a recruiter in connection with the employment of a foreign national shall directly or indirectly charge the foreign national or such other persons as may be prescribed a fee for any service, good or benefit provided to the foreign national.

Subsection 7(1) prohibits a recruiter from directly or indirectly charging any fee to a foreign national employed or attempting to find employment pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program for any service, good or benefit provided to the foreign national. This prohibition therefore includes fees charged by a recruiter for both "optional" and "mandatory" services such as orientation sessions, assistance or instruction with respect to resume or job interview preparation, image consulting, first aid training sessions, and cooking classes. Where such services are provided by a recruiter to a foreign national, they must be provided free of charge.

The Act does not restrict recruiters from charging fees to employers or prospective employers for recruitment services or for other services. Note, however, where such arrangements are made, the fees must be recorded in compliance with the record-keeping requirements as set out in ss. 14 and 15 of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009.

As noted, s. 7(1) prohibits recruiters from “directly” charging any fee as well as “indirectly” charging any fee to a foreign national. An example of a situation where a recruiter “indirectly” charges a fee would include a situation where the recruiter charges a fee for services related to obtaining a work permit for the foreign national but asks the employer of the foreign national to collect those fees on its behalf through payroll deductions. Not only would the recruiter in this situation be in contravention of s. 7(1) but the employer making the deductions on behalf of the recruiter would be in contravention of s. 7(3).

Finally, as noted in the discussion of the scope of the EPFNA and specifically, s. 3(1) of the Act, a foreign government acting as a “recruiter” as described in the EPFNA is (unless certain exceptions under the State Immunity Act apply) immune from liability for any contraventions of the EPFNA including the prohibition against charging fees. As a result, a foreign government charging fees to its citizens who, as foreign nationals are seeking employment in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or temporary foreign employee program, would not be liable for a contravention of s. 7(1). In addition, a person acting on behalf of such a foreign government is likewise immune. (See the discussions at section 3(1) of the EPFNA and subsection 7(3) below.)

Prescribed Exceptions - s. 7(2)

7(2) Subsection (1) does not apply with respect to such fees as may be prescribed.

Subsection 7(2) provides that a recruiter would be permitted to charge a fee if it was permitted by regulation.

At the time of writing, no fees have been prescribed. Recruiters are therefore prohibited from charging fees of any kind to any foreign nationals employed or seeking employment pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program.

Prohibition Against Collecting Fees - s. 7(3)

7(3) No person acting on behalf of a recruiter shall collect a fee charged by the recruiter in contravention of subsection (1).

Subsection 7(3) prohibits a person acting on behalf of a recruiter from collecting a fee illegally charged by the recruiter. Whether a person is acting on behalf of a recruiter is a question of fact.

At the time of writing, recruiters are prohibited from charging fees of any kind to foreign nationals employed or attempting to find employment pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program. Therefore, persons acting on behalf of a recruiter are prohibited from collecting any fee on behalf of the recruiter.

An example of someone acting on behalf of a recruiter would arise where a recruiter charges a fee for services related to obtaining a work permit for a foreign national but asks the employer of the foreign national to collect those fees on its behalf through payroll deductions. In that case, the employer making the deductions on behalf of the recruiter would be in contravention of s. 7(3). (Note as well the recruiter in this situation would be in contravention of s. 7(1).

Finally, as noted in the discussion of the scope of the EPFNA and specifically, s. 3(1) of the Act, a foreign government acting as a "recruiter" as described in the EPFNA is (unless certain exceptions under the State Immunity Act apply) immune from liability for any contraventions of the EPFNA including the prohibition against charging fees. Further, a person acting on behalf of such a foreign government is similarly immune from liability under s. 7(3). (See the discussions at section 3(1) of the EPFNA and subsection 7(1) above.)

EPFNA Section 7.1 – Prohibition against using recruiters that charge fees

7.1 No recruiter or employer shall, in connection with the recruitment or employment of a foreign national, knowingly use the services of a recruiter who has charged a fee to a foreign national in contravention of subsection 7 (1).

Section 7.1 was added to the EPFNA by the Working for Workers Act, 2021, effective December 2, 2021.

Subsection 7.1 prohibits employers and recruiters from using the services of a recruiter in connection with the recruitment or employment of a foreign national where the employer or recruiter knows that the recruiter providing them services has charged a fee to a foreign national in contravention of ss. 7(1).

The prohibition applies regardless of whether the foreign national that was charged a fee in contravention of ss. 7(1) was the same foreign national the recruiter or employer is recruiting, or a different foreign national.

Note that the phrase "in connection with the recruitment or employment of a foreign national" is used in this provision, while other EPFNA provisions use the phrase "in connection with the employment of a foreign national" without explicit reference to "recruitment" – see for example ss. 7(1), 9(2), and 10(2). The Program has not identified any activities that are captured by "recruitment" that would not already have been captured by "employment" in the EPFNA context and considers the explicit inclusion of "recruitment" in s. 7.1 to be for greater certainty. As such it is Program policy that the inclusion of "recruitment' here does not change the interpretation of the scope "in connection with the employment of a foreign national" in the other EPFNA provisions.

EPFNA Section 8 – Prohibition Against Cost Recovery by Employers

Prohibition Against Cost Recovery by Employers - s. 8(1)

8(1) No employer shall directly or indirectly recover or attempt to recover from a foreign national or from such other persons as may be prescribed,

(a) any cost incurred by the employer in the course of arranging to become or attempting to become an employer of the foreign national; or

(b) any other cost that is prescribed.

This provision prohibits employers from recovering or attempting to recover (either directly or indirectly), any costs incurred in hiring, or attempting to hire, a foreign national pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program. Employers are therefore prohibited from passing on to the foreign national any recruitment costs and other costs incurred in arranging to become or attempting to become the foreign national's employer; employers would also be prohibited from recovering any prescribed costs (though no other costs have been prescribed as of the time of writing). The provision must be read subject to s. 8(2) which permits costs prescribed by regulation to be recovered. Ontario Regulation 348/15, which came into force on November 26, 2015, provides certain exceptions to the prohibition against cost recovery by employers.

Recovering or attempting to recover a cost indirectly could include, for example, ostensibly charging the foreign national a fee for something that was not a cost incurred in the course of arranging to become the employer but which in fact was intended to reimburse the employer for such a cost under another name. It could also include having another person recover the cost on behalf of an employer.

It should be noted that although the provision states that it prohibits recovery of costs incurred in "attempting to become an employer," the prohibition does not apply with respect to costs incurred by a prospective employer unless the employer ultimately employs the foreign national. That is because the scope of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 is limited in its application under paragraph 2 of s. 3(1) to "a person who employs a foreign national."

Prescribed Exceptions - s. 8(2)

8(2) Subsection (1) does not apply with respect to such costs as may be prescribed.

Subsection 8(2) provides that the prohibition against cost recovery by employers would does not apply with respect to costs that are permitted by regulation. Ontario Regulation 348/15, which came into force on November 26, 2015, provides that employers who employ a foreign national in Ontario under an employment contract made pursuant to the federal government's "Seasonal Agricultural Worker Program" (SAWP) are permitted to recover from the foreign national costs of air travel and of work permits, if the contract allows for these deductions. Please note that any such cost recovery is limited to the amounts as specified within the contract.

EPFNA Section 9 – Prohibitions Against Taking, Retaining Property

Employer - s. 9(1)

9(1) No person who employs a foreign national, and no person acting on the employer's behalf, shall take possession of, or retain, property that the foreign national is entitled to possess.

Subsection 9(1) provides that an employer of a foreign national employed pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program, or anyone acting on the employer's behalf, is prohibited from taking or keeping property that the foreign national is entitled to possess. The prohibition in s. 9(1) applies even if the property is taken or retained with the consent of the employee. Subsection 9(3) gives two examples of property that cannot be taken or kept: a passport and a work permit.

Subsection 9(2) establishes the same prohibition against taking and retaining property for a recruiter or person acting on the recruiter's behalf.

Recruiter - s. 9(2)

9(2) No person acting as a recruiter in connection with the employment of a foreign national, and no person acting on the recruiter's behalf, shall take possession of, or retain, property that the foreign national is entitled to possess.

Subsection 9(2) provides that a recruiter, or anyone acting on the recruiter's behalf in connection with the employment of a foreign national pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program, is prohibited from taking or keeping property that the foreign national is entitled to possess. This prohibition applies even if the property is taken or retained with the consent of the employee. Subsection 9(3) gives two examples of property that cannot be taken or kept: a passport and a work permit.

Subsection 9(1) establishes the same prohibition against taking and retaining property for an employer or person acting on the employer's behalf.

Example: Passports, etc. - s. 9(3)

9(3) For example and without limiting the generality of subsections (1) and (2), a person described in subsection (1) or (2) is not permitted to take possession of, or retain, a foreign national's passport or work permit.

Subsection 9(3) provides two examples of property that employers, recruiters, and persons acting on their behalf are prohibited from taking or keeping from a foreign national who is employed or attempting to find employment pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program. The examples provided are a passport and work permit. It is important to note that this provision does not purport to limit the property described in ss. (1) and (2) to these two documents. Employers, recruiters, and those acting on their behalf are prohibited from taking or keeping any property the foreign national is entitled to possess.

While a passport may be the property of the issuing country, the person to whom the passport is issued is generally entitled to possess the document.

EPFNA Section 10 – Prohibitions Against Reprisal

Reprisal by Employer - s. 10(1)

10(1) No person who employs a foreign national, and no person acting on the employer's behalf, shall intimidate or penalize or attempt or threaten to intimidate or penalize the foreign national because he or she,

(a) asks any person to comply with this Act;

(b) makes inquiries about his or her rights under this Act;

(c) files a complaint with the Ministry under this Act;

(d) exercises or attempts to exercise a right under this Act;

(e) gives information to an employment standards officer; or

(f) testifies or is required to testify or otherwise participates or is going to participate in a proceeding under this Act.

Subsection 10(1) prohibits employers and anyone acting on their behalf from reprising against foreign nationals employed pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program for asking a person to comply with the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009, for making inquiries about, exercising or seeking the enforcement of their rights under EPFNA, for giving information to an employment standards officer or for participating in a proceeding under EPFNA. This includes intimidating, penalizing or attempting or threatening to intimidate or penalize the employee for doing any of the activities listed in clauses (a) to (f) above.

Subsection 10(1) is very similar to s. 74 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, except that it contains no clauses corresponding to those ESA 2000 clauses that are not relevant to EPFNA (i.e., the clauses dealing with proceedings under the Retail Business Holidays Act, RSO 1990, c R.30, leaves of absence and garnishment orders).

It is important to note that foreign nationals who are employed pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program have protection from reprisals related to the ESA 2000 (including the provisions related to the Retail Business Holidays Act, etc.) through s. 74 of the ESA 2000 because they are "employees" under the ESA 2000.

In the ESA 2000 context, the Program applies a four-step test for determining whether an employer or a person acting on behalf of the employer has committed an act of reprisal. The test has been modified to fit the context of EPFNA as set out below:

1. Is the person alleged to have been the subject of a reprisal a foreign national employed in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program?
2. Is the person alleged to have committed an act of reprisal the foreign national's employer or a person acting on behalf of his or her employer?
3. Did the employer intimidate or penalize or attempt or threaten to intimidate or penalize the foreign national?
4. Did the foreign national engage in any of the protected activities set out paragraphs (a) to (f) of s. 10(1)?

5. Did the employer or person acting on behalf of the employer intimidate or penalize or attempt or threaten to intimidate or penalize the foreign national because he or she engaged in the protected activities referred to in step 4?

If all five questions are answered in the affirmative, a breach of s. 10(1) is established. (Note that s. 10(3) places the burden of proof on the employer in a proceeding involving an alleged reprisal, except where the burden of proof relates to a review of a notice of contravention at the Ontario Labour Relations Board or a prosecution in court).

Information on ESA 2000 reprisal can be found in ESA Part XVIII of this Manual. In particular, four of the five steps outlined here are discussed in further detail. The discussion of reprisals under the ESA 2000, including the discussion of enforcement and heads of damage, can be applied to this provision with necessary modifications.

Reprisal by Recruiter - s. 10(2)

10(2) No person acting as a recruiter in connection with the employment of a foreign national, and no person acting on the recruiter's behalf, shall intimidate or penalize or attempt or threaten to intimidate or penalize the foreign national because he or she,

(a) asks any person to comply with this Act or the Employment Standards Act, 2000;

(b) makes inquiries about his or her rights under this Act or the Employment Standards Act, 2000;

(c) files a complaint with the Ministry under this Act or the Employment Standards Act, 2000;

(d) exercises or attempts to exercise a right under this Act or the Employment Standards Act, 2000;

(e) gives information to an employment standards officer; or

(f) testifies or is required to testify or otherwise participates or is going to participate in a proceeding under this Act or the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Subsection 10(2) establishes an anti-reprisal scheme respecting recruiters and those acting on their behalf. It prohibits recruiters and anyone acting on their behalf from reprising against foreign nationals employed or seeking employment pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program for asking a person to comply with EPFNA or the ESA 2000, for making inquiries about, exercising or seeking the enforcement of their rights under EPFNA or the ESA 2000, for giving information to an employment standards officer or for participating in a proceeding under EPFNA or the ESA 2000. This includes intimidating, penalizing or attempting or threatening to intimidate or penalize the foreign national for doing any of the listed activities in clauses (a) to (f) above.

Note that in addition to prohibiting reprisals related to EPFNA, this subsection specifically prohibits recruiters and persons acting on their behalf from reprising against foreign nationals for reasons related to inquiries about, exercising or enforcing their rights under the ESA 2000. This latter prohibition is necessary because section 74 of the ESA 2000 (which prohibits reprisals related to the ESA 2000) would not otherwise apply to recruiters or persons acting on their behalf, because they are not "employers".

In the ESA 2000 context, the Program applies a four-step test for determining whether an employer, or a person acting on behalf of the employer, has committed an act of reprisal. The test has been modified to fit the context of EPFNA in relation to recruiters or persons acting on behalf of recruiters as set out below:

1. Is the person alleged to have been the subject of a reprisal a foreign national employed or seeking employment in Ontario pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program?
2. Is the person alleged to have committed an act of reprisal a person acting as recruiter in connection with the employment of a foreign national pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program or someone acting on the recruiter's behalf?
3. Did the recruiter or person acting on a recruiter's behalf intimidate or penalize or attempt or threaten to intimidate or penalize the foreign national?
4. Did the foreign national engage in any of the protected activities set out paragraphs (a) to (f) of subsection 10(2)?
5. Did the recruiter or person acting on behalf of a recruiter intimidate or penalize or attempt or threaten to intimidate or penalize the foreign national because he or she engaged in the protected activities referenced in step 4?

If all five questions are answered in the affirmative, a breach of s. 10(2) is established.

Information on ESA 2000 reprisal can be found in ESA Part XVIII of this Manual. In particular, four of the five steps outlined here are discussed in further detail. The discussion of reprisals under the ESA 2000, including the discussion of enforcement and heads of damage, can be applied to this provision with necessary modifications.

Onus of Proof - s. 10(3)

10(3) In a proceeding for the contravention of this section, other than a proceeding described in subsection (4), the burden of proof that a person did not contravene this section lies on that person.

This provision places the legal burden of proof that a person did not contravene s. 10 on that person, except in proceedings referred to in s. 4 (which are Ontario Labour Relations Board reviews of notices of contravention and prosecutions). Subject to s. 10(4), the effect of this provision is to require the employer, recruiter, or person acting on behalf of the employer or recruiter, to rebut the claim of the foreign national that he or she has been the subject of a reprisal. The person (which includes a corporation) against whom the contravention is alleged must establish, on a balance of probabilities, that he, she, or it did not contravene s. 10 of EPFNA.

Exceptions - s. 10(4)

10(4) Subsection (3) does not apply with respect to the burden of proof in a review under section 30 of a notice of contravention of this section or the burden of proof in a prosecution for a contravention of this section.

Subsection 10(4) provides that a person who is alleged to have contravened the anti-reprisal provisions does not have the burden of proof to establish that he or she did not contravene s. 10 in two situations:

1. In a hearing before the Ontario Labour Relations Board arising from a review of a notice of contravention.
    - If a notice of contravention has been issued with respect to a contravention of s. 10 of EPFNA and the person against whom the notice was issued files an application for review of the notice, the onus is on the Director of Employment Standards to show, on a balance of probabilities, that the employer or recruiter (or person acting on his, her or its behalf) contravened s. 10. The placement of the burden of proof on the Director is effected by s. 30 of EPFNA, which incorporates s. 122(4) of the ESA 2000 by reference.

2. In a prosecution arising for a contravention of s. 10.

Where a person is prosecuted for contravening s. 10, the onus of proof that applies is set out in s. 43 of EPFNA.

EPFNA Section 11 – Duty to Provide Documents to Foreign Nationals

Employer's Duty - s. 11(1)

11(1) A person who employs a foreign national shall give him or her a copy of the most recent documents published by the Director of Employment Standards under section 12 before the employment commences if the employer did not use the services of a recruiter in connection with the employment.

This section was amended by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014, SO 2014, c 10, to reflect the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act's broader scope, effective November 20, 2015.

Subsection 11(1) provides that an employer who does not use the services of a recruiter in hiring a foreign national pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program is required to give certain information documents published by the Director of Employment Standards under s. 12 to the foreign national before his or her employment starts.

The documents published by the Director describe the rights and obligations of foreign nationals under EPFNA, the obligations of their employers and recruiters under EPFNA, and certain rights and obligations of foreign nationals and their employers under the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Recruiter's Duty - s. 11(2)

11(2) If a recruiter contacts or is contacted by a foreign national in connection with employment, the recruiter shall give the foreign national a copy of the most recent documents published by the Director under section 12 as soon as is practicable after first making contact with him or her.

Subsection 11(2) provides that if a recruiter contacts, or is contacted by, a foreign national regarding employment pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program, the recruiter is required to give certain information documents published by the Director of Employment Standards under s. 12 to the foreign national. The documents must be provided as soon as is practicable after the recruiter first makes contact with the foreign national. What is "as soon as is practicable" will depend upon the circumstances.

The documents published by the Director describe the rights and obligations of foreign nationals under EPFNA, the obligations of their employers and recruiters under EPFNA, and certain rights and obligations of foreign nationals and their employers under the ESA 2000.

Duties re: Languages Other Than English - s. 11(3)

11(3) If the language of the foreign national is a language other than English, the employer or recruiter, as the case may be, shall make enquiries as to whether the Director has prepared a translation of the documents published under section 12 into that language and, if the Director has done so, the employer or recruiter shall also provide a copy of the translation to the foreign national.

This provision states that where the language of a foreign national is a language other than English, the employer or recruiter is required to enquire as to whether the Director of Employment Standards has prepared a translation of the documents published under s. 12 into that language. If the documents have been translated into that language, the employer or recruiter is required to provide a copy of the translation together with the English version to the foreign national.

Transition, Employer's Duty - s. 11(4)

11(4) If the foreign national is employed by the employer on the day subsection 8(2) of Schedule 1 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014 comes into force, the employer shall give him or her a copy of the documents published by the Director under section 12 as soon after subsection 8(2) of Schedule 1 to the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014 comes into force as is practicable.

This provision is a transitional provision that requires an employer to provide certain information documents to all foreign nationals who are covered under the "new" EPfNA effective on November 20, 2015 and who are employed by the employer on that date.

This provision requires the employer to give such employees a copy of the documents published under s. 12 as soon as is practicable after that date. What is "as soon as is practicable" will depend upon the circumstances.

In accordance with s. 11(3), if the foreign national's language is a language other than English, the employer would be required to provide the foreign national with a translated copy, if a translation is available, as well as the English version of the documents published under s. 12.

Different Categories - s. 11(5)

11(5) If the Director has prepared and published different documents for different categories of foreign nationals employed in Ontario or attempting to find employment in Ontario, and a foreign national who is employed by an employer or who contacts a recruiter is in a category for whom a document was prepared and published, the provisions of this section shall be applied as if they referred to the documents prepared and published for that category.

This amended subsection provides that if the Director has published different information documents for different categories of foreign nationals under s. 12(3), such foreign nationals are entitled to be provided with the appropriate information documents in accordance with s. 11.

EPFNA Section 12 – Director's Duty to Publish Documents

Director's Duty to Publish Documents - s. 12(1)

12(1) The Director of Employment Standards shall prepare and publish documents providing such information as the Director considers appropriate about the rights and obligations under this Act of,

(a) foreign nationals who are employed or who are attempting to find employment;

(b) employers of foreign nationals; and

(c) persons acting as recruiters in connection with the employment of foreign nationals.

Subsection 12(1) provides that the Director of Employment Standards must prepare and publish a document that provides information about the rights under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 of foreign nationals and the responsibilities of employers and recruiters of such foreign nationals.

Rights Under the Employment Standards Act, 2000 - s. 12(2)

12(2) The Director shall prepare and publish a document providing such information about the rights and obligations of employees and employers under the Employment Standards Act, 2000 as the Director considers of particular relevance to foreign nationals and their employers, and such other information as the Director considers appropriate.

Subsection 12(2) provides that the Director of Employment Standards must prepare and publish a document that outlines the rights and responsibilities of employees and employers under the Employment Standards Act, 2000 that are particularly relevant to foreign nationals employed pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program and the employers of such foreign nationals.

Different Categories - s. 12(3)

12(3) If the Director considers it appropriate, he or she may prepare and publish different documents under this section for different categories of foreign nationals and their employers.

This provision was added to s. 12 by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014, SO 2014, c 10, effective November 20, 2015. It enables the Director of Employment Standards to prepare and publish different documents for different categories of foreign nationals and their employers.

If Information Out of Date - s. 12(4)

12(4) If the Director believes that a document prepared under this section has become out of date, he or she shall prepare and publish a new document.

This subsection provides that if the Director believes that the document published under this section regarding rights and obligations is out of date, he or she will prepare and publish a new document.

EPFNA Section 13 – Director's Authority to Publish Names of Offenders, etc.

Director's Authority to Publish Names of Offenders, etc., Internet Publication – ss. 13(1), (2)

13(1) If a person, including an individual, is convicted of an offence under this Act, the Director of Employment Standards may publish or otherwise make available to the general public the name of the person, a description of the offence, the date of the conviction and the person's sentence.

(2) Authority to publish under subsection (1) includes authority to publish on the Internet.

Where a person has been convicted of an offence under the Employment Protections for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009, this section authorizes the Director to publish or otherwise make available to the public including publication on the internet the name of the convicted person, a description of the offence, the date of the conviction, and the sentence received by the person.

Disclosure – s. 13(3)

(3) Any disclosure made under subsection (1) is deemed to be made in compliance with clause 42 (1) (e) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

Subsection (3) deems any disclosure made under subsection (1) to be in compliance with s. 42(e) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, RSO 1990, c F.31. That provision reads as follows:

42. An institution shall not disclose personal information in its custody or under its control except,

(e) for the purpose of complying with an Act of the Legislature or an Act of Parliament or a treaty, agreement or arrangement thereunder;

EPFNA Section 14 – Employer's Duty to Keep Records

Employer's Duty to Keep Records - s. 14(1)

14(1) A person who employs a foreign national shall record the name and address of any person to whom the employer made a payment for finding the foreign national for employment or for finding employment for the foreign national, the date and amount of the payment and such other information as may be prescribed.

An employer of a foreign national who is employed pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program is required to record the following information:

- The name of any person to whom the employer made a payment for finding a foreign national for employment or for finding employment for a foreign national;
- The address of any person for whom the employer made a payment for finding a foreign national for employment or for finding employment for a foreign national;
- The date of the payment;
- The amount of the payment; and
- Other information prescribed by regulation.

This provision should be read with in conjunction with s. 14(2) which establishes how long the records must be kept and s. 14(3) which requires that all records be readily available for inspection by an employment standards officer.

At the time of writing, regulations have not been made under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 prescribing other employment or additional information that must be recorded.

Records Retention - s. 14(2)

14(2) The employer shall retain, or shall arrange for some other person to retain, the records for seven years after the earliest of,

(a) the date on which the employee ceases to be employed by the employer; or

(b) the date on which the employee becomes a permanent resident, within the meaning of the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act (Canada), or a Canadian citizen.

Subsection 14(2) requires an employer to retain, or arrange for another person to retain, the required records for a period of seven years after the earlier of the following two events:

- The foreign national ceases to be employed by the employer pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program; or
- The employee becomes a permanent resident of Canada or a Canadian citizen.

The federal Immigration and Refugee Protection Act, SC 2001, c 27 and its regulations govern the process by which a person may be granted permanent resident status or Canadian citizenship.

It is the responsibility of the employer to record and retain information for record-keeping purposes. Where an employer makes an arrangement for another person, such as a bookkeeper or accountant, to retain the records, the employer's responsibility to create the records is not removed.

This provision should be read in conjunction with s. 14(3) which requires that records be readily available for inspection by an employment standards officer, even where another person retains the records.

Availability for Inspection - s. 14(3)

14(3) The employer shall ensure that the records required by this section are readily available for inspection as required by an employment standards officer, even if the employer has arranged for another person to retain them.

Subsection 14(3) is intended to prevent unnecessary delays in the production of an employer's records during an investigation under EPFNA. The provision therefore requires the employer to ensure the records made under s. 14(1) are "readily available for inspection", even if the employer has arranged for another person to retain the records.

Where an employer has arranged for another person to retain the records, it remains the employer's responsibility to make them readily available, upon the request of an employment standards officer.

EPFNA Section 15 – Recruiter's Duty to Keep Records

Recruiter's Duty to Keep Records - s. 15(1)

15(1) A person who acts as a recruiter in connection with the employment of a foreign national shall record the following information:

1. The name of the foreign national.

2. The amount of any fees paid to the recruiter by the foreign national or other prescribed person that are permitted under subsection 7(2), the date of the payment and the reason for the payment.

3. The name and address of each employer for whom the recruiter found, or attempted to find, foreign nationals to be employed.

4. The name and address of each employer with whom the recruiter placed, or attempted to place, foreign nationals in employment.

5. The amount of any money paid to the recruiter by an employer of the foreign national, the date of the payment and the reason for the payment.

6. Such other information as may be prescribed.

A recruiter of a foreign national for employment pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program is required to record the following information:

- The name of the foreign national to whom the recruitment activity relates;
- The amount of any allowable fees charged to the foreign national and the date and reason for payment (fees would be allowed only if prescribed by regulation);
- The name and address of each employer for whom he or she attempted to find, or found, a foreign national for employment pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program;
- The name and address of each employer with whom he or she attempted to place, or placed, a foreign national in employment pursuant to an immigration or foreign temporary employee program;
- The amount of money paid to him or her by an employer and the date and reason for payment; and
- Any other information prescribed by regulation.

This provision should be read in conjunction with s. 15(2) which establishes a duty to keep certain documents associated with charging an allowable prescribed fee, s. 15(3) which establishes how long the records must be kept, and s. 15(4) which requires that all records be readily available for inspection by an employment standards officer.

At the time of writing, regulations have not been made under the Employment Protections for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 prescribing allowable fees, or additional information that must be recorded.

Duty to Keep Documents - s. 15(2)

15(2) If the recruiter charges the foreign national or other prescribed person a fee that is permitted under subsection 7(2), the recruiter shall retain or arrange for some other person to retain all invoices, statements of account and other documents related to the fee.

If a regulation was to be made allowing a fee under s. 7(2), s. 15(2) would require a recruiter who charged such a fee to retain any documents related to the fee, such as invoices and statements of account.

This provision would only be relevant if an allowable fee was prescribed. At the time of writing, no such regulation exists. At the time of writing, EPFNA prohibits recruiters from charging any fees to foreign nationals to whom EPFNA applies.

Records Retention - s. 15(3)

15(3) The recruiter shall retain or arrange for some other person to retain the records and documents for seven years after the services are provided in connection with the employment of the foreign national.

Subsection 15(3) requires a recruiter to retain, or arrange for another person to retain, the required records and documents for a period of seven years after the recruitment services have been provided.

It is the responsibility of the recruiter to ensure the information in s. 15(1) is recorded and that this information and any documents described in s. 15(2) are retained, whether or not the recruiter makes arrangements for another person, such as a bookkeeper or accountant, to retain the records or documents.

This provision should be read in conjunction with s. 15(3) which requires that records and documents be readily available for inspection by an employment standards officer, even if another person retains them.

Availability for Inspection - s. 15(4)

15(4) The recruiter shall ensure that the records and documents required by this section are readily available for inspection as required by an employment standards officer, even if the recruiter has arranged for another person to retain them.

Subsection 15(4) is intended to prevent unnecessary delays in the production of a recruiter's records during an investigation under EPFNA. The provision therefore requires the recruiter to ensure the records and documents required to be kept under ss. 15(1) and 15(2) respectively are "readily available for inspection", even if the recruiter has arranged another person to retain the records and documents.

Where a recruiter has arranged for another person to retain the records or documents, it remains the recruiter's responsibility to make them readily available, upon the request of an employment standards officer.

EPFNA Section 16 – Prohibition Re Record Keeping

16 No person shall make, keep or produce false records or other documents that are required to be kept under this Act or participate or acquiesce in the making, keeping or producing of false records or other documents that are required to be kept under this Act.

This provision is substantially the same as s. 131(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. It prohibits a person from making, keeping or producing false records or other documents required to be kept under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009; it also prohibits a person from "going along with" making, keeping or producing such documents.

The Program's interpretation of s. 131(1) of the ESA 2000 can be applied to this provision with the necessary modifications. See ESA Part XXV, s. 131 for more information.

EPFNA Section 17 – Restricted Application of ss. 18, 18.1 and 19

Restricted Application of ss. 18, 18.1 and 19 - s. 17(1)

17(1) Sections 18, 18.1 and 19 do not apply with respect to an individual described in subsection 80 (2), (3) or (4) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Subsection 17(1) provides that ss. 18, 18.1 and 19 of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 (director liabilityand indemnification of directors) do not apply with respect to persons described in ss. 80(2), (3), or (4) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. This exempts the following people from the application of ss. 18, 18.1 and 19:

- Directors of corporations to which the Not-for-Profit Corporations Act, 2010 S.O. 2010, c. 15 applies, or to which the Co-operative Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c C.35 applies;
- Directors, or persons performing similar functions as a director, of a college of a health profession or group of health professions established or continued under an Ontario statute; and
- Directors of corporations that are incorporated in another jurisdiction where the corporation is of a charitable or non-profit nature and has purposes similar to a corporation described in the first bullet above.

For a discussion of ss. 80(2), (3) and (4) of the ESA 2000 please see ESA Part XX.

Application to Certain Shareholders - s. 17(2)

17(2) Sections 18, 18.1 and 19 apply to a shareholder who is a party to a unanimous shareholder agreement to the extent that the agreement restricts the discretion or powers of the directors to manage or supervise the management of the business and affairs of the corporation in relation to duties and liabilities under this Act.

Subsection 17(2) indicates that shareholders who are parties to a unanimous shareholder agreement may be considered directors for the purposes of ss. 18, 18.1 and 19 of EPFNA to the extent that they have control over the affairs of the corporation relating to obligations under EPFNA. The shareholders are considered to have the discretion or power to manage or supervise the management of the business and affairs of the corporation where the unanimous shareholder agreement restricts the directors' powers to supervise or manage the same activities.

EPFNA Section 18 – Director's Liability to Repay Fees, etc.

Employer - s. 18(1)

18(1) The directors of an employer are jointly and severally liable to repay costs recovered by the employer from a foreign national in contravention of section 8,

(a) if the employer is insolvent, the foreign national has caused a claim for repayment of the costs to be filed with the receiver appointed by a court with respect to the employer or with the employer's trustee in bankruptcy and the claim has not been paid;

(b) if an employment standards officer has made an order requiring the employer to repay the costs, unless the amount set out in the order has been paid or the employer has applied to have it reviewed;

(c) if an employment standards officer has made an order that a director is liable to repay the costs, unless the amount set out in the order has been paid or the employer or the director has applied to have it reviewed; or

(d) if the Ontario Labour Relations Board has issued, amended or affirmed an order under section 29, the order, as issued, amended or affirmed, requires the employer or the directors to repay the costs and the amount set out in the order has not been paid.

This provision is similar to s. 81(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, the major difference being that it applies in respect of illegally recovered costs rather than wages. The Program's interpretation of s. 81(1) of the ESA 2000 can be applied to this provision with necessary modifications. See ESA Part XX, s. 81.

Recruiter - s. 18(2)

18(2) The directors of a recruiter or person acting on behalf of the recruiter, as the case may be, are jointly and severally liable to repay fees charged in contravention of subsection 7(1) or (3), respectively,

(a) if the recruiter or person, as the case may be, is insolvent, the foreign national has caused a claim for repayment of the fees to be filed with the receiver appointed by a court with respect to the recruiter or person or with the recruiter's or person's trustee in bankruptcy and the claim has not been paid;

(b) if an employment standards officer has made an order requiring the recruiter or person, as the case may be, to repay the fees, unless the amount set out in the order has been paid or the recruiter or person has applied to have it reviewed;

(c) if an employment standards officer has made an order that a director is liable to repay the fees, unless the amount set out in the order has been paid or the recruiter or person, as the case may be, or the director has applied to have it reviewed; or

(d) if the Ontario Labour Relations Board has issued, amended or affirmed an order under section 29, the order, as issued, amended or affirmed, requires the recruiter or person, as the case may be, or the directors to repay the fees and the amount set out in the order has not been paid.

This provision is also similar to s. 81(1) of the ESA 2000, the major differences being that it applies to the directors of a recruiter or the directors of a corporation acting on behalf of the recruiter rather than the directors of an employer and that it applies in respect of illegally charged fees rather than wages. The Program's interpretation of s. 81(1) of the ESA 2000 can be applied to this provision with necessary modifications. See ESA Part XX, s. 81..

Primary Responsibility - s. 18(3)

18(3) Despite subsections (1) and (2), the employer, recruiter or person acting on behalf of the recruiter, as the case may be, is primarily responsible to repay the costs or fees, but proceedings against the employer, recruiter or person do not have to be exhausted before proceedings may be commenced to collect those costs or fees from directors under this section.

This provision is similar to s. 81(2) of the ESA 2000, the major differences being that it applies to directors of recruiters or corporations acting on behalf of recruiters, as well as employers, and that it applies in respect of illegally charged fees or illegally recovered costs. The Program's interpretation of s. 81(2) of the ESA 2000 can be applied to this provision with necessary modifications. ESA Part XX, s. 81..

Contribution from Other Directors - s. 18(4)

18(4) A director who has satisfied a claim to repay costs or fees is entitled to contribution in relation to the repaid costs or fees from other directors who are liable for the claim.

This provision is similar to s. 81(9) of the ESA 2000, the major difference being that it applies in respect of illegally charged fees and illegally recovered costs. The Program's interpretation of s. 81(9) can be applied to this provision with necessary modifications. See ESA Part XX, s. 81.

Limitation Periods - s. 18(5)

18(5) A limitation period established under section 28 prevails over a limitation period in any other Act, unless the other Act states that it is to prevail over this Act.

This provision is substantially the same as s. 81(10) of the ESA 2000. The Program's interpretation of s. 81(10) can be applied to this provision with the necessary modifications. See ESA Part XX, s. 81.

EPFNA Section 18.1 – Recruiters' liability to repay fees, etc.

Recruiters' liability to repay fees, etc. – s. 18.1(1)

18.1 (1) A recruiter who uses the services of another recruiter in connection with the recruitment or employment of a foreign national, and if the recruiter who uses those services is a corporation, the directors of that recruiter, are jointly and severally liable to repay fees charged to the foreign national by the other recruiter in contravention of subsection 7 (1).

Section 18.1 was added to the ESA effective December 2, 2021.

Subsection 18.1(1) provides that where a recruiter uses the services of another recruiter in connection with the recruitment or employment of a foreign national, and where that other recruiter charged fees to a foreign national in contravention of ss. 7(1) of EPFNA:

- the recruiter who used the other recruiter's services is jointly and severally liable to repay the fees unlawfully charged by the other recruiter, and
- if the recruiter who used the other recruiter's services is a corporation, the directors of the corporate recruiter are also jointly and severally liable to repay the fees unlawfully charged by the other recruiter.

Primary responsibility – s. 18.1(2)

18.1 (2) Despite subsection (1), the recruiter that charged the fee is primarily responsible to repay the fee, but proceedings against the recruiter that charged the fee do not have to be exhausted before proceedings may be commenced to collect the fees from the other recruiter and the directors, if any.

Subsection 18.1(2) provides that the recruiter that charged the unlawful fee is primarily responsible for its repayment, but that proceedings against that recruiter do not have to run their full course before an order can be issued against the recruiter who used that recruiter (or the directors of a corporate recruiter who used that recruiter).

This provision is similar to s. 81(2) of the ESA 2000, the major differences being the entities to whom it applies and that it applies in respect of illegally charged fees. The Program's interpretation of s. 81(2) of the ESA 2000 can be applied to this provision with necessary modifications. See ESA Part XX, s. 81.

Contribution from other directors – s. 18.1(3)

18.1 (3) A director who has satisfied a claim to repay fees is entitled to contribution in relation to the repaid fees from other directors who are liable for the claim.

This provision is similar to ss. 81(9) of the ESA 2000, the major difference being that it applies in respect of illegally charged fees. The Program's interpretation of ss. 81(9) can be applied to this provision with necessary modifications. See ESA Part XX, s. 81.

Limitation periods - s. 18.1(4)

18.1 (4) A limitation period established under section 28 prevails over a limitation period in any other Act, unless the other Act states that it is to prevail over this Act.

This provision is substantially the same as ss. 81(10) of the ESA 2000. The Program's interpretation of ss. 81(10) can be applied to this provision with the necessary modifications. See ESA Part XX, s. 81.

Order to repay fees – s.18.1(5)

18.1 (5) For the purposes of enforcing this section, an employment standards officer may make an order in respect of both recruiters and the directors, if any, described in subsection (1), and subsections 24 (2) and (7) apply with necessary modifications.

Subsection 18.1(5) creates the authority for an employment standards officer to issue an order to repay fees to recruiters and directors (if any) who have liabilities under s. 18.1.

It provides that ss. 24(2) (Order to repay fees) and ss. 24(7) (Orders against directors) apply with necessary modifications. See EPFNA, s. 24.

EPFNA Section 19 – Indemnification, etc., of Directors

19 Sections 82 and 83 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to the liability of directors under this Act.

Section 19 provides that ss. 82 and 83 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to director liability under the Employment Protections for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009.

Sections 82 and 83 of the ESA 2000 prohibit contractual and corporate governance provisions purporting to relieve directors from the duty to act in accordance with the ESA 2000 or purporting to relieve directors from liability for breach of the ESA 2000, allow (subject to certain restrictions and conditions) indemnification of directors, and provide that the ESA 2000 does not affect any civil remedies that a director may have against a person or vice versa. See ESA Part XX for a more detailed discussion of these provisions.

EPFNA Section 20 – Complaints

Complaints - s. 20(1)

20(1) A person alleging that this Act has been or is being contravened may file a complaint with the Ministry of Labour in a written or electronic form approved by the Director of Employment Standards.

Subsection 20(1) provides that a person who wishes to file a complaint with the Ministry of Labour alleging a violation of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 must do so using a form approved by the Director of Employment Standards. This provision is substantially the same as s. 96(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. For a discussion of the Program's interpretation of s. 96(1) of the ESA 2000, which can be applied to this provision with necessary modifications, see ESA Part XXII, s. 96.

The EPFNA claim form may be filed online and is also available for download on the Ministry of Labour website and can be ordered through Publications Ontario.

Effect of Failure to Use Form - s. 20(2)

20(2) A complaint that is not filed in a form approved by the Director is deemed not to have been filed.

This provision states that if the complaint is not filed in the approved form, then the complaint shall be deemed not to have been filed.

This provision is substantially the same as s. 96(2) of the ESA 2000. The Program's interpretation of s. 96(2) of the ESA 2000 can be applied to this provision with the necessary modifications. See ESA Part XXII, s. 96.

When Complaint not Permitted - s. 20(3)

20(3) A person who commences a civil proceeding with respect to an alleged contravention of this Act is not permitted to file a complaint with respect to the same matter.

Subsection 20(3) establishes a prohibition against a person filing a complaint with the Ministry under EPFNA where the employee has previously commenced a civil proceeding in court seeking a remedy for the same matter. (Section 21 establishes the converse prohibition, i.e., the barring of a person from commencing a civil action where the person has previously filed a complaint with the Ministry under EPFNA in respect of the same matter). This provision is similar to s. 98(1) of the ESA 2000. The Program's interpretation of s. 98(1) of the ESA 2000 can be applied to this provision with necessary modifications. See ESA Part XXII, s. 98.

Limitation Period for Complaint - s. 20(4)

20(4) A complaint regarding a contravention that occurred more than three and one half years before the day on which the complaint was filed is deemed not to have been filed.

Subsection 20(4) imposes a three and a half year limitation period on filing a complaint under EPFNA.

Same - s. 20(5)

20(5) A regulation may change the limitation period set out in subsection (4) and may prescribe different limitation periods for different classes of complaints.

Subsection 20(5) allows a regulation to be made that would change the general limitation period for filing a complaint, as set out in s. 20(4). It also allows for different limitation periods to be established by regulation for different classes of complaints. At the time of writing, no such regulation has been made.

EPFNA Section 21 – Effect of Filing Complaint

Effect of Filing Complaint - s. 21(1)

21(1) A person who files a complaint under this Act with respect to an alleged contravention of this Act is not permitted to commence a civil proceeding with respect to the same matter.

Subsection 21(1) establishes that a person who files a complaint with the Ministry of Labour under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 is not allowed to commence a civil action in court seeking a remedy for the same matter (but see s. 21(2)). This prevents a person from seeking a remedy with both the Ministry and the courts in relation to the same matter.

This provision is similar to s. 97(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. The Program's interpretation of s. 97(1) can be applied to this provision with necessary modifications. See ESA Part XXII, s. 97.

Withdrawal of Complaint - s. 21(2)

21(2) Despite subsection (1), a person who has filed a complaint may commence a civil proceeding with respect to a matter described in that subsection if he or she withdraws the complaint within two weeks after it is filed.

Subsection 21(2) provides a two-week "cooling off" period in which the foreign national can withdraw the EPFNA complaint that he or she has filed with the Ministry, and thus preserve his or her right to commence a civil action in court. This two-week period could be used by the foreign national to consult a lawyer to determine whether the filing of the EPFNA complaint is advisable, given the potential impact on the complainant's right to file a civil action.

This provision is similar to s. 97(4) of the ESA 2000. The Program's interpretation of s. 97(4) can be applied to this provision with necessary modifications. See ESA Part XXII, s. 97.

EPFNA Section 22 – Meetings Required by Employment Standards Officer

Meetings Required by Employment Standards Officer - s. 22(1)

22(1) An employment standards officer may, after giving written notice, require any of the persons referred to in subsection (2) to attend a meeting with the officer in any of the following circumstances:

1. The officer is investigating a complaint against a person.

2. While inspecting a place, the officer comes to have reasonable grounds to believe that a person has contravened this Act with respect to a foreign national.

3. The officer acquires information that suggests to him or her the possibility that a person may have contravened this Act with respect to a foreign national.

4. The officer wishes to determine whether an employer is complying with this Act.

5. The officer wishes to determine whether a recruiter or a person acting on behalf of a recruiter is complying with this Act.

This provision is similar to s. 102 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Note that the language of s. 22(1) is permissive as far as the employment standards officer is concerned: the officer may require the persons listed in s. 22(2) to attend the meeting. The officer is not required by legislation to hold s. 22 meetings in preference to other methods of resolving claims or conducting an inspection.

That said, it is important to recognize that if a foreign national is employed as a live-in caregiver, the foreign national will both work and reside in a private residence. As per s. 34(2) of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009, which incorporates s. 91(3) of the ESA 2000, certain rules apply to an employment standards officer seeking to enter premises used as a dwelling or living quarters. If the premises are used as a dwelling or living quarters, then the officer must have the consent of the person occupying the premises or must obtain a search warrant under s. 92 of the ESA 2000 before entering and inspecting.

For this and other reasons, an officer may find it preferable in such situations to conduct the investigation at a place other than the private residence. In that regard, s. 22(1) provides the authority to require attendance at a meeting, (which could be held at a government office) as long as written notice of the meeting is provided and the reason for the meeting is captured by one of the five listed circumstances:

1. The officer is investigating a complaint;
2. The officer inspects a place and comes to have reasonable grounds to believe that a person contravened EPFNA in respect of a foreign national;
3. The officer acquired information suggesting the possibility that a person may have contravened EPFNA with respect to a foreign national (this may be a "tip");
4. The officer wishes to determine whether an employer is complying with EFPNA; and

5. The officer wishes to determine whether a recruiter or person acting on behalf of a recruiter is complying with EPFNA.

The Statutory Powers Procedure Act, RSO 1990, c S.22 does not apply to meetings convened under s. 22(1), although the rules of natural justice generally do apply (as they generally do to any other aspect of the investigation process).

Attendees - s. 22(2)

22(2) Any of the following persons may be required to attend the meeting:

1. The foreign national who is employed or who is attempting to find employment, as the case may be.

2. The employer.

3. The recruiter.

4. The person acting on behalf of the recruiter.

5. If the employer, recruiter or person acting on behalf of the recruiter, as the case may be, is a corporation, a director or employee of the corporation.

This provision describes the persons who may be required to attend a meeting held under s. 22(1).

Requirements - s. 22(3)

22(3) Subsections 102 (3) to (9) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply in connection with the meeting.

This provision states that ss. 102(3) to (9) of the ESA 2000 apply with respect to s. 22 meetings. Those subsections deal with topics such as requirements for notice of the meeting, the requirement to bring or make available documents or other records for the meeting, and direction on the use of technology during a meeting. For a discussion of ss. 102(3) to (9) of the ESA 2000 see ESA Part XXII, s. 102.

EPFNA Section 23 – Settlement

23. If a foreign national and another person who have agreed to a settlement respecting a contravention or alleged contravention of this Act inform an employment standards officer in writing of the terms of the settlement, section 112 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies with respect to the settlement.

Section 23 provides that s. 112 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies if a foreign national and another person reach a settlement with regard to a contravention or alleged contravention of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009, and they inform an employment standards officer of the terms of the settlement in writing.

Section 112 of the ESA 2000 provides that where an employee and an employer enter into a settlement, inform an employment standards officer of the settlement in writing and do what they agreed to do under the settlement, the settlement is binding but may be overturned by the Ontario Labour Relations Board where it can be established that fraud or coercion was involved.

Please see ESA Part XXII, s. 112 for a discussion of s. 112 of the ESA 2000.

EPFNA Section 24 – Authority to Make Orders

Authority to Make Orders - s. 24(1)

24(1) An employment standards officer has the authority to make the orders and arrangements set out in this section in connection with a contravention of this Act.

Employment standards officers have the authority to make orders and other arrangements described in s. 24 when it is determined that there has been a contravention of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009.

Order to Repay Fees - s. 24(2)

24(2) If the employment standards officer finds that a recruiter or other person has contravened section 7 (prohibition against charging fees), the officer may order the recruiter or other person to pay the amount of the fees to the foreign national or prescribed person or to the Director of Employment Standards in trust, in accordance with subsections 103 (1) to (3) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, or the officer may make the arrangements described in those subsections for the fees to be repaid. Subsections 103 (5) to (10) and section 105 of that Act apply with respect to the order or arrangement.

Subsection 24(2) establishes an employment standards officer's power to issue an order or make arrangements with a recruiter or other person to repay fees to a foreign national or prescribed person if they find that a recruiter or other person has contravened EPFNA s. 7, which prohibits the charging of fees. At the time of writing no persons were prescribed.

Specifically, an officer can:

1. Issue an order requiring the recruiter or other person to:
    - pay the amount of the fees directly to the foreign national or a person as prescribed by regulation (none have been prescribed at the time of writing)
    - pay the amount of the fees to the Director of Employment Standards in trust,

    OR
2. Arrange for a recruiter or other person to repay the amount of the fees directly to the foreign national (voluntary compliance).

Where an order is issued or an arrangement made to repay the amount of the fees directly to the foreign national, it must be done in accordance with ESA Part XXII, ss. 103(1) to 103(3). Those subsections establish the circumstances in which an officer may arrange direct payment to the employee or issue an order to pay, set out the administrative costs that must be paid when an order is issued requiring payment to the Director in trust and provide that a single order may be issued where monies are owing to more than one employee.

ESA Part XXII, ss. 103(5) to (10) and s. 105 apply with respect to an order or arrangement for the repayment of illegally charged fees. Those provisions address the contents of the order, service of the order, notice to the employee about the order, compliance requirements and the effect of the order and also provide that where an arrangement for repayment is made (i.e., where no order is issued) and the employee cannot be located, the employer must pay the amount owing to the Director of Employment Standards in trust.

Subsection 24(2) must be read in conjunction with EPFNA s. 1(2) which provides some guidance on what modifications must be read in where provisions of the ESA 2000 are incorporated into EPFNA by reference. In the context of a contravention of the prohibition against the charging of fees, a reference in the ESA 2000 to an order to pay wages under ESA Part XXII, s. 103 is to be read as a reference to an order to repay fees and a reference to an employer is to be read as a reference to a recruiter or person collecting fees on behalf of a recruiter.

Order to Repay Costs - s. 24(3)

24(3) If the employment standards officer finds that an employer has contravened section 8 (prohibition against cost recovery by employers), the officer may order the employer to pay the amount of the costs to the foreign national or prescribed person or to the Director of Employment Standards in trust, in accordance with subsections 103 (1) to (3) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, or the officer may make the arrangements described in those subsections for the costs to be repaid. Subsections 103 (5) to (10) and section 105 of that Act apply with respect to the order or arrangement.

Subsection 24(3) establishes an employment standards officer's power to issue an order or make arrangements to repay costs recovered by an employer where they find that the employer has contravened EPFNA s. 8, which prohibits employers' recovery of certain costs.

Specifically, an officer can:

1. Issue an order requiring the employer to:
    - pay the amount of the costs recovered by the employer directly to the foreign national or a person as prescribed by regulation (none have been prescribed at the time of writing)
    - pay the amount of the costs recovered by the employer to the Director of Employment Standards in trust

    OR
2. Arrange for an employer to pay the amount of the costs recovered by the employer directly to the foreign national ("voluntary compliance").

Where an order is issued or an arrangement made to pay the amount of the costs recovered by the employer directly to the foreign national, it must be done in accordance with ESA Part XXII, ss. 103(1) to 103(3). Those subsections establish the circumstances in which an officer may arrange direct payment to the employee or issue an order to pay, set out the administrative costs that must be paid when an order is issued requiring payment to the Director in trust and provide that a single order may be issued where monies are owing to more than one employee.

ESA Part XXII, ss. 103(5) to (10) and s. 105 apply with respect to an order or arrangement for the repayment of illegally recovered costs. Those provisions address the contents of the order, service of the order, notice to the employee about the order, compliance requirements and the effect of the order and also provide that where an arrangement for repayment is made (i.e., where no order is issued) and the employee cannot be located, the employer must pay the amount owing to the Director of Employment Standards in trust.

Subsection 24(3) must be read in conjunction with EPFNA s. 1(2) which provides some guidance on what modifications must be read in where provisions of the ESA 2000 are incorporated into the EPFNA by reference. In the context of a contravention of the prohibition against recovering certain costs, a reference in the ESA 2000 to an order to pay wages under ESA Part XXII, s. 103 is to be read as a reference to an order to repay illegally recovered costs.

Order for Compensation - s. 24(4)

24(4) If the employment standards officer finds that a person has contravened section 10 (prohibitions against reprisal), the officer may make an order that the foreign national be compensated for any loss he or she incurred as a result of the contravention. Subsections 104 (3) and (4) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to the order.

Subsection 24(4) establishes an employment standards officer's power to issue an order for compensation if they find that any person has contravened the anti-reprisal provisions contained in EPFNA s. 10. The officer can order the foreign national to be compensated for any loss they incurred as a result of the contravention.

See ESA Part XVIII for a discussion of compensation orders in the context of the ESA 2000.

This provision also states that ESA Part XXII, ss. 104(3) and (4) apply to compensation orders issued under EPFNA s. 24(4). Section 104(3)(a) provides that an order may be issued requiring a person to pay the amount of compensation to the Director in trust and such order will include administrative costs as set out in s. 104(3)(a)(ii). As a result, an order issued under s. 24(4) requiring the payment of compensation to the Director in trust will include administrative costs. However, no administrative costs are attached to an order issued under s. 104(3)(b) which requires the person to pay the amount of the compensation directly to the employee. As a result, there are no administrative costs included in an order issued under s. 24(4) if it requires the person to pay the amount of compensation directly to the foreign national.

Further, ESA Part XXII, ss. 103(3) and (5) to (9) also apply to orders under EPFNA s. 24(4). Subsection 103(3) provides that a single order can be issued with respect to more than one employee. Subsections 103(5) to (9) address the contents of the order, service of the order, notice to the employee about the order, compliance requirements and the effect of an order.

Subsection 24(4) must be read in conjunction with EPFNA s. 1(2) which provides some guidance on what modifications must be read in where provisions of the ESA 2000 are incorporated into EPFNA by reference. In the context of a contravention of the anti-reprisal provision of EPFNA, a reference in the ESA 2000 to an order under ESA Part XXII, s. 104 is to be read as a reference to the corresponding order described in EPFNA ss. 24(4) or 24(5).

Order for Reinstatement - s. 24(5)

24(5) If the employment standards officer finds that an employer or a person acting on behalf of an employer has contravened section 10 (prohibitions against reprisal), the officer may make an order that the foreign national be reinstated. This order may be made in addition to an order for compensation. Subsection 104 (4) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies with respect to the order.

Subsection 24(5) establishes an employment standards officer's power to issue a reinstatement order if they find that an employer or person acting on behalf of an employer has contravened the anti-reprisal provisions contained in EPFNA s. 10. Where a reprisal under EPFNA has been found, the officer can issue an order requiring the foreign national to be reinstated into their position. The provision states that an officer may issue a reinstatement order in addition to an order for compensation. Thus, in addressing a contravention of the anti-reprisal provisions, an officer may issue an order for compensation, an order for reinstatement or both.

For a discussion of reinstatement orders in the context of the ESA 2000, including when an order for reinstatement is appropriate, see ESA Part XVIII.

This provision states that ESA Part XXII, s. 104(4) applies to a reinstatement order issued under EPFNA s. 24(5). As a result, ESA Part XXII, ss. 103(3) and (5) to (9) also apply with respect to orders under EPFNA s. 24(5). Subsection 103(3) provides that a single order can be issued with respect to more than one employee. Subsections 103(5) to (9) address the contents of the order, service of the order, notice to the employee about the order, compliance requirements, and the effect of an order.

Subsection 24(5) must be read in conjunction with EPFNA s. 1(2) which provides some guidance on what modifications must be read in where provisions of the ESA 2000 are incorporated into EPFNA by reference. In the context of a contravention of the anti-reprisal provisions of EPFNA, a reference in the ESA 2000 to an order under ESA Part XXII, s. 104 is to be read as a reference to the corresponding order described in EPFNA s. 24(4) or s. 24(5).

Compliance Order - s. 24(6)

24(6) If the employment standards officer finds that a person has contravened a provision of this Act, the officer may make a compliance order respecting the contravention. Section 108 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies with respect to the order.

Subsection 24(6) establishes an employment standards officer's power to issue a compliance order if they determine that a person has contravened a provision of EPFNA.

ESA Part XXII, s. 108 applies with respect to a compliance order under EPFNA. It empowers an employment standards officer to order that the person stop violating the legislation or take or stop taking action specified in the order by a date specified in the order. Section 108 provides that a compliance order cannot require the payment of wages or compensation. By referentially incorporating ESA Part XXII, ss. 103(6) to (9), s. 108 also addresses service of the order, notice to the employee about the order, compliance requirements and the effect of the order. Further, s. 108 provides that other orders may be issued in addition to a compliance order and provides that the Director of Employment Standards may apply to court for an injunction to enforce the order.

Subsection 24(6) must be read in conjunction with EPFNA s. 1(2) which provides some guidance on what modifications must be read in where provisions of the ESA 2000 are incorporated into EPFNA by reference. In the context of a compliance order, a reference to an order under ESA Part XXII, s. 108 is to be read as a reference to the corresponding order described in in EPFNA s. 24(4) or s. 24(5).

Orders against Directors - s. 24(7)

24(7) If the employment standards officer finds that a corporation has contravened section 7 or 8, the officer may make orders against some or all of the directors of the corporation to pay amounts for which the directors are liable under section 18 (directors' liability to repay fees, etc.). Sections 106 and 107 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to the orders.

Subsection 24(7) establishes an employment standards officer's power to issue orders against a director or directors if they find that a corporation has contravened the prohibition against charging fees in EPNFA s. 7 or the prohibition against cost recovery by employers in EPFNA s. 8 and the directors are liable per EPFNA s. 18.

ESA Part XXII, ss. 106 and 107 apply with respect to the s. 24(7) order. ESA Part XXII, s. 106 provides for the issuance of orders against directors for wages owed by employers. Where an order to pay wages has been made against the employer, or where the employer is insolvent and a claim has been filed with a court-appointed receiver or trustee in bankruptcy, an employment standards officer can issue an order against some or all of the employer's directors for amounts for which directors are liable. ESA Part XXII, s. 107 provides for the issuance of orders against any directors who were not the subject of an order issued under s. 106 where the order against the employer and the directors who were subject of the s. 106 order remains unpaid and there has been no application for review.

Subsection 24(7) must be read in conjunction with EPFNA s. 1(2) which provides some guidance on what modifications must be made where provisions of the ESA 2000 are incorporated into EPFNA by reference. References in the ESA 2000 to an order under ESA Part XXII, ss. 106 or s. 107 are to be read as a reference to the corresponding order described in s. 24(7).

Money Paid when no Review - s. 24(8)

24(8) Section 109 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies with respect to an order requiring payment to the Director of Employment Standards in trust.

Subsection 24(8) provides that ESA Part XXII, s. 109 applies where an order is issued requiring payment to the Director of Employment Standards in trust.

Section 109 requires the Director of Employment Standards to pay the money received in trust to the employee named in the order, unless the person against whom the order was issued has applied for a review of that order with the Ontario Labour Relations Board. If an order was issued with respect to more than one employee and less than the full amount has been paid, the amount that was paid (including the amount for administrative costs) is distributed proportionately among the employees. No proceeding may be launched against the Director for acting in accordance with s. 109.

Maximum Amount of Order - s. 24(9)

24(9) A regulation may prescribe a maximum amount for an order to repay fees or an order to repay costs and may prescribe different maximum amounts for different classes of contraventions or complaints.

This provision creates the authority to make a regulation that would set a maximum amount for an order to repay fees or an order to repay costs. It also provides that different maximum amounts could be established by regulation for different classes of contraventions or complaints. At the time of writing, no such regulations have been made.

Same - s. 24(10)

24(10) If a maximum amount is prescribed with respect to an order to repay fees or to repay costs, an employment standards officer shall not issue such an order with respect to one foreign national for an amount greater than the prescribed maximum.

This provision indicates that if a maximum amount for an order to repay fees or an order to repay costs is established by regulation, an employment standards officer would be prohibited from issuing an order for an amount greater than the prescribed maximum.

At the time of writing, no such regulation had been made and there is no maximum amount established for an order to repay fees or for an order to repay costs.

EPFNA Section 25 – Time Limits on Recovery

Complaint by Foreign National - s. 25(1)

25(1) If a foreign national files a complaint alleging a contravention of this Act, an employment standards officer investigating the complaint is not permitted to issue an order to repay fees or repay costs if the contravention occurred more than three and one half years before the complaint was filed.

Subsection 25(1) provides that where a foreign national files a complaint, an employment standards officer is prohibited from issuing an order to repay fees or an order to repay costs if the contravention occurred more than three and a half years before the complaint was filed.

It is important to distinguish the limitation periods established under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 from those under the Employment Standards Act, 2000. For example, where a complaint relates to unpaid wages under the ESA 2000, s. 111 of the ESA 2000 provides that an order cannot be issued for wages that came due to the complainant more than six months/one year or up to two years prior to the filing of the complaint. The different recovery periods under the ESA 2000 apply depending upon whether the unpaid wages came due prior to or on or after the date amendments made to s. 111 by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014, SO 2014, c 10 came into force (February 20, 2015).

Complaint by Another Person - s. 25(2)

25(2) If, in the course of investigating a complaint, an employment standards officer finds that a person has contravened this Act with respect to another foreign national who did not file a complaint, the officer is not permitted to issue an order to repay fees or repay costs to that foreign national if the contravention occurred more than three and one half years before the complaint was filed.

This provision establishes a limitation period in respect of the recovery of illegally charged fees and illegally recovered costs through an order to pay where an employment standards officer who is investigating a complaint finds a contravention of the legislation in respect of a non-complainant while conducting the investigation.

It provides that where an officer is investigating a complaint filed by foreign national A, and during the course of that investigation finds a violation in respect of foreign nationals B and C, the officer may issue an order to repay fees or an order to repay costs in relation to foreign nationals B and C only if the contravention occurred in the three and half year period preceding the date foreign national A filed his or her complaint.

This provision is similar to s. 111(2) of the ESA 2000 as amended by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014 although the limitation period in s. 111(2) is two years (with respect to wages that came due on or after February 20, 2015.). The Program's interpretation of s. 112(2) can be applied to this provision with the necessary modifications. See ESA Part XXII.

Inspection, No Complaint - s. 24(3)

25(3) If an employment standards officer finds during an inspection that a person has contravened this Act with respect to a foreign national, the officer is not permitted to issue an order to repay fees or repay costs if the contravention occurred more than three and one half years before the officer commenced the inspection.

Subsection 25(3) provides that where during the course of an inspection (as opposed to the investigation of a complaint), an employment standards officer finds a contravention, he or she may issue an order to repay fees or an order to repay costs only for those contraventions that occurred in the three and a half year period preceding the date the inspection began.

Different Time Limits - s. 25(4)

25(4) A regulation may change a time limit set out in subsection (1), (2) or (3) and may prescribe different time limits for different classes of complaints or contraventions.

This provision allows for the making of a regulation that would extend or shorten the limitation periods that apply to the recovery of illegally charged fees or illegally recovered costs through an order to pay as set out in ss. (1) to (3). It also provides that different time limits could be prescribed for different classes of complaints or contraventions.

At the time of writing, no such regulation has been made.

EPFNA Section 26 – Refusal to Issue Order

Refusal to Issue Order - s. 26(1)

26(1) If, after a foreign national files a complaint alleging a contravention of this Act in respect of which an order described in subsection 24(2), (3), (4), (5) or (6) could be issued, an employment standards officer assigned to investigate the complaint refuses to issue such an order, the officer shall advise the foreign national of the refusal in accordance with subsection 110 (1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Subsection 26(1) imposes an obligation on an employment standards officer to notify a complainant of his or her decision not to issue an order to repay fees or costs, a compensation order, a reinstatement order, or a compliance order in respect of a complaint. The officer must notify the complainant in accordance with s. 110(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 which requires that a letter advising of the refusal be served in accordance with s. 95 of the ESA 2000. (Note that the notification obligation does not apply in the case of non-complainants.)

Note also that this provision does not impose any obligation to notify a complainant of a refusal to issue an order against a director under s. 24(7); this is because there is no right to apply for a review of a refusal to issue an order against a director.

For a discussion of ss. 95 and 110(1) of the ESA 2000, see ESA Part XXI and ESA Part XXII.

Deemed Refusal - s. 26(2)

26(2) If no order is issued with respect to a complaint described in subsection (1) within two years after it was filed, an employment standards officer is deemed to have refused to issue an order and to have advised the foreign national as required by subsection (1) on the last day of the second year.

This provision provides that where no order is issued within two years after the complaint was filed, then the employment standards officer shall be deemed to have refused to issue an order on the day before the two-year limitation period expires. Therefore, if during the two years after the foreign national files a claim, the officer neither issues an order, nor refuses to issue an order, then the officer will be deemed to have refused to issue an order on the day before the two-year period expired.

This provision is meant to address the unfortunate and rare event that an employment standards officer has neither issued an order nor refused to do so during the two-year limitation period set out in s. 28 of the Act. By deeming the officer to have refused to issue an order, the provision triggers the right of the foreign national to apply for a review by the Ontario Labour Relations Board under s. 29(3). The foreign national would have 30 days from the day before the two-year period expires in which to apply for a review of the officer's deemed refusal.

EPFNA Section 27 – Notice of Contravention

Notice of Contravention – s. 27(1)

27(1) If an employment standards officer believes that a person has contravened a provision of this Act, the officer may issue a notice to the person setting out the officer's belief and specifying the amount of the penalty for the contravention.

Section 27(1) permits an employment standards officer to issue a notice of contravention requiring payment of a specified penalty to a person that the officer believes has contravened the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 (EPFNA).

The applicable penalties for a notice of contravention issued under this section are set out in O Reg 47/10.

The officer's power to issue a notice of contravention is discretionary. However, once the officer decides to issue the notice of contravention, the officer must set out the penalty as prescribed in the regulation.

Note that the officer may issue a notice of contravention to any person they believe has contravened the ESA 2000. The word "person" indicates that the notice may be issued against an individual or a corporation. However, s. 27(1) must be read subject to s. 27(2) which states that ESA Part XXII, s. 113(9) applies to the issuance of a notice of contravention. Section 113(9) provides that a notice of contravention may not be issued where the contravention is by a director or officer of a corporation.

Amount of Penalty – s. 27 (1.1)

27(1.1) The amount of the penalty shall be determined in accordance with the regulations.

O Reg 47/10 prescribes penalties for contraventions of the EPFNA as follows:

For a contravention of EPFNA s. 14 or s. 15:

- $250
- $500 for a second contravention of the same provision within a three-year period
- $1000 for a third or subsequent contravention of the same provision in a three-year period.

For a contravention of any other provision of EPFNA, the penalties set out are multiplied by the number of foreign nationals affected.

For contraventions occurring prior to November 28, 2015, this provision applies only if the affected employees are live-in caregivers, as prior to November 28, 2015 the EPFNA only applied to live-in caregivers.

For contraventions occurring on or after November 28, 2015, the regulation permits a single notice of contravention to be issued with a penalty multiplied by the number of affected foreign nationals (whether or not they were live-in caregivers).

Note: the penalty amounts prescribed in O Reg 47/10 were higher from January 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018. (Instead of $250/$500/$1000, the amounts were $350/$700/$1500). Pursuant to subsection 52(5) of the *Legislation Act, those higher amounts apply only if the contravention relating to the Notice of Contravention occurred during the 2018 calendar year AND the Notice of Contravention was issued during the 2018 calendar year. Otherwise, the lower amounts set out in the current O Reg 47/10 apply.

Subsection 52(5) of the Legislation Act provides that if an amendment lowers the amount of a penalty, the lower amount applies when a sanction is imposed (i.e. when the notice is issued) even if it is imposed in respect of a contravention that happened before the amendment.*

Penalty Within Range – s. 27 (1.2)

27(1.2) If a range has been prescribed as the penalty for a contravention, the employment standards officer shall determine the amount of the penalty in accordance with the prescribed criteria, if any.

This section states that if a range has been prescribed as the penalty, the employment standards officer shall determine the amount of the penalty from within that range in accordance with any prescribed criteria. At the time of writing, no range has been prescribed. Accordingly, the penalty amounts are as described in the discussion of s. 27(1.1) above.

Same – s. 27(2)

27(2) Subsections 113 (2), (3), (7) and (9) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to the notice of contravention.

This section provides that ESA Part XXII, ss. 113 (2), (3), (7) and (9) apply to a notice of contravention issued under EPFNA.

Subsections 113(2), (3), (7) and (9) provide that:

- A notice of contravention must contain or be accompanied by an explanation of the nature of the contravention
- The notice must be served in accordance with ESA Part XXI, s. 95
- A notice of contravention can be issued even when an order has been issued or a person has been or may be prosecuted or convicted with respect to the same contravention, and
- A notice of contravention cannot be issued with respect to a contravention by an officer or director of a corporation.

Deemed Contravention – s. 27(3)

27(3) The person is deemed to have contravened the provision set out in the notice if,

(a) the person fails to apply for a review of the notice under section 30 within the period provided under that section; or

(b) the person applies for the review and the Ontario Labour Relations Board finds that the person contravened the provision set out in the notice.

Subsection 27(3) provides that where a notice of contravention is issued against a person, the person is deemed to have contravened the provision in question if that person fails to make an application for a review of the notice of contravention within 30 days after the date of service of the notice, or, where on a review of the notice, the Ontario Labour Relations Board finds that the person contravened the provision. In the latter case, this would occur if the Ontario Labour Relations Board affirms the notice or amends it.

Penalty – s. 27(4)

27(4) A person who is deemed to have contravened this Act shall pay to the Minister of Finance the penalty for the deemed contravention and the amount of any collector's fees and disbursements added to the amount under subsection 128(2) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 and subsection 113(6.1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies with respect to required payment.

Subsection 27(4) creates an obligation to pay the penalty set out in the notice of contravention (either by the officer where there is no review or where there is a review as affirmed or amended by the Ontario Labour Relations Board) to the Minister of Finance if the contravention is deemed to have occurred under s. 27(3).

It also requires payment of any collector's fees and disbursements added to the amount of the penalty under ESA Part XXIV, s. 128(2). In other words, once the notice of contravention has been sent for collection, any authorized collector's fees and disbursements are deemed to have been added to the amount set out in the notice of contravention.

ESA Part XXII, s. 113(6.1) applies to this penalty and establishes the time period within which the payment of the penalty to the Minister of Finance must be made. In the event that the notice is not appealed, the payment is due 30 days after the notice was issued. In the event the notice is appealed, the payment is due 30 days after the Ontario Labour Relations Board has found that there was a contravention.

Publication re Notice of Contraventions – s. 27(5)

27(5) If a person, including an individual, is deemed under subsection (3) to have contravened this Act after being issued a notice of contravention, the Director of Employment Standards may publish or otherwise make available to the general public the name of the person, a description of the deemed contravention, the date of the deemed contravention and the penalty for the deemed contravention.

This section permits the Director of Employment Standards to publish the name of the person or business that a notice of contravention has been issued against, as well as a description of the contravention, the date of the contravention, and the penalty for the contravention.

Note that the publishing of this information is restricted to situations where a person is deemed to have contravened EPFNA in accordance with s. 27(3). Such contraventions only occur when the recipient fails to file for a review of the notice with the Ontario Labour Relations Board within the period set out in EFPNA s. 30, where the person has filed for a review and the Board finds that they did in fact contravene the provision set out in the notice. As a result, the publishing of this information cannot simply occur once the notice was issued, but only after the Board has determined on an application for review that the provision set out in the Notice was contravened, or the period for applying for a review in s. 30 has expired.

Internet Publication – s. 27(6)

27(6) Authority to publish under subsection (5) includes authority to publish on the Internet.

This subsection clarifies that the authority to publish the information set out in s. 27(5) includes authority to publish on the Internet.

Disclosure – s. 27(7)

27(7) Any disclosure made under subsection (5) shall be deemed to be in compliance with clause 42 (1) (e) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

This subsection states that where the Director has published information under s. 27(5) that such publication is deemed to be in compliance with clause 42(1)(e) of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, RSP 1990, c F.31.

EPFNA Section 28 – Limitation Period Re Orders, Notices of Contravention Limitation Period Re Orders, Notices of Contravention - s. 28(1)

28(1) An employment standards officer shall not issue an order to repay fees, an order to repay costs, an order for compensation or a notice of contravention with respect to a contravention of this Act concerning a foreign national,

(a) if the foreign national filed a complaint about the contravention, more than two years after the complaint was filed;

(b) if the foreign national did not file a complaint but another person did file a complaint, more than two years after the other person filed his or her complaint if the officer discovered the contravention with respect to the foreign national while investigating the complaint; or

(c) if clauses (a) and (b) do not apply, more than two years after an employment standards officer commenced an inspection with respect to the applicable person for the purpose of determining whether a contravention occurred.

This provision establishes a two-year limitation period on the Ministry's ability to issue an order to repay fees, an order to repay costs, an order for compensation or a notice of contravention. The two-year period for issuing the above-listed orders commences with the following:

1. If the order is in respect of a foreign national who filed a complaint, on the date the complaint was filed, or
2. If the order is in respect of a foreign national who did not file a complaint but another person did file a complaint and the contravention in respect of the non-complainant was discovered during the investigation of the complaint, on the date the complaint was filed, or
3. If the order is in respect of a foreign national who did not file a complaint and the contravention was discovered during an inspection (rather than an investigation of a complaint), on the date the inspection was commenced.

It should be noted that the legislation does not impose a limitation period with respect to an officer's ability to issue an order for reinstatement or an order for compliance. For more information on the Program's policy around the issuance of those orders, which can be applied in the context of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009, see ESA Part XXII, s. 114.

Requirements - s. 28(2)

28(2) Subsections 114(2) to (5) and section 115 of the Employments Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to the limitation periods described in subsection (1) and with respect to the amendment or rescission of an order or a notice of contravention.

Subsection 28(2) provides that ss. 114 (2) to (5) and s. 115 of the Employments Standards Act, 2000 apply to the limitation periods set out in s. 28(1) and to the amendment or recession of an order or notice of contravention.

Subsection 114(2) provides that where a complaint is filed by one employee and a second employee files a complaint about substantially the same contravention, the second employee is treated as a non-complainant for purposes of the limitation period on the issuance of orders, thus, in the context of EPFNA, attracting the application of s. 28(1)(b); s. 114(3) provides that this rule does not apply if an order had already been issued or notification of a refusal to issue an order had already been made in respect of the first complaint. Subsections 114(4) and (5) provide that orders and notices of contravention, respectively, cannot be amended or rescinded after the expiry of the limitation period applicable to the issuance of orders and notices without the consent of the employer and employee (in the case of orders) or the consent of the employer (in the case of notices of contravention). Subsection 115 addresses the meaning of "substantially the same" as that term is used in s. 114. See ESA Part XXII for a more detailed discussion of these provisions.

EPFNA Section 29 – OLRB Review of Order, etc.

OLRB Review of Order, etc. - s. 29(1)

29(1) A person against whom an order has been issued under this Act is entitled to a review of the order by the Ontario Labour Relations Board in the circumstances described in subsection 116(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Subsection 29(1) provides that a person against whom an order has been issued is entitled to a review of the order by the Ontario Labour Relations Board if he or she meets the conditions set out in s. 116(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. Subsection 116(1) of the ESA, 2000 establishes that a person is entitled to a review if:

- He or she applies to the Board in writing for a review;
- In the case of an order under s. 74.14 or s. 103 (with the corresponding Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009, SO 2009, c 32 order being an order to repay fees or to repay costs), he or she pays the amount owing under the order to the Director in trust or provides the Director with an irrevocable letter of credit acceptable to the Director in that amount; or
- In the case of an order under ss. 74.14, 74.17 or 104 (with the corresponding EPFNA order being a s. 24(4) order for compensation), he or she pays the lesser of the amount under the order and $10,000 to the Director in trust or provides the Director with an irrevocable letter of credit acceptable to the Director in that amount.

For a discussion of s. 116(1) of the ESA 2000, see ESA Part XXIII.

Subsection 29(1) should be read in conjunction with s. 29(5) which incorporates by reference, amongst other ESA 2000 provisions, ss. 116(4) and 116(5) of the ESA 2000. Section 116(4) sets out a 30-day time limit for applying for a review, and s. 116(5) allows the Ontario Labour Relations Board to extend the time allowed to apply for a review, if it considers it appropriate to do so.

Review of Order, Sought by Foreign National - s. 29(2)

29(2) If an order to repay fees, an order to repay costs, an order for compensation or an order for reinstatement has been issued in respect of a foreign national, he or she is entitled to a review of the order by the Board in the circumstances described in subsection 116(2) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

This provision provides that a foreign national in respect of whom an order to repay fees, an order to repay costs, an order for compensation or an order for reinstatement has been issued is entitled to a review of the order by the Ontario Labour Relations Board if he or she fulfils the conditions under s. 116(2) of the ESA 2000.

Subsection 116(2) of the ESA 2000 establishes the right of an employee in respect of whom certain orders have been issued to a review of the order if the application for review is made in writing and is made within thirty days of service of the order. Therefore, a foreign national seeking a review of an order to repay fees, an order to repay costs, an order for compensation or an order for reinstatement must, within thirty days of the service of the order, apply to the Board for a review of the order in writing.

For a more detailed discussion of s. 116(2) of the ESA 2000 see ESA Part XXIII.

Note that foreign nationals have no entitlement to a review of an order issued against a director under s. 24(7) or to a review of a compliance order issued under s. 24(6).

Same, Refusal to Issue Order - s. 29(3)

29(3) In case of a refusal to issue an order described in subsection (2), the foreign national is entitled to a review of the refusal by the Board in the circumstances described in subsection 116(3) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Subsection 29(3) provides that a foreign national who has filed a complaint alleging a contravention of the Act can apply to the Ontario Labour Relations Board for a review the employment standards officer's decision not to issue an order to repay fees, an order to repay costs, an order for compensation or an order for reinstatement if he or she meets the conditions set out in s. 116(3) of the ESA 2000.

Subsection 116(3) of the ESA 2000 provides employees who have filed a complaint alleging a contravention of the ESA 2000 with an entitlement to a review of an employment standards officer's decision not to issue certain orders. The application for a review must be made in writing within thirty days after service of the letter advising the employee of the officer's refusal to issue an order. The 30-day time period applies where an employment standards officer refuses to issue an order, as well as where there is a deemed refusal to issue an order under s. 110(2) (which corresponds to s. 29(2) of EPFNA). It is important to note that subsection 116(3) of the ESA 2000 only applies where the employee in question has filed a complaint. Subsection 29(3) thus makes these principles apply in the context of EPFNA, as well.

See ESA Part XXIII for the Program's interpretation of s. 116(3).

Exceptions, Orders Against Directors - s. 29(4)

29(4) Despite subsections (2) and (3), the foreign national is not entitled to a review of an order under subsection 24(7) or to a review of a refusal to issue such an order.

This subsection provides that even though foreign nationals have the right to a review under subsections (2) and (3), there is no right to a review of an order issued against a director under s. 24(7), nor is there a right to a review of an employment standards officer's refusal to issue an order against a director under s. 24(7). See the discussion at EPFNA s. 24(7).

Requirements - s. 29(5)

29(5) Subsections 116 (4) to (9) and sections 117 and 118 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to the review.

Subsection 29(5) establishes that ss.116 (4) to (9), and ss. 117 and 118 of the ESA 2000 apply with respect to a review.

In very general terms, those provisions address the limitation periods for applications for review to the Ontario Labour Relations Board, allow the Board to extend the limitation period, require the Board to hold review hearings and establish certain requirements for hearings at the Board, specify the parties to the review, allow the Board to establish its own practice and procedure, provide that money held in trust pending a review must be held in an interest-bearing account and paid out with interest in accordance with a settlement or Board decision, and provide that the chair of the Board may make rules of practice and procedure.

For a discussion of these provisions, see ESA Part XXIII.

Powers of the Board - s. 29(6)

29(6) The Board has the powers set out in sections 119 and 120 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 in a review under this section.

Subsection 29(6) provides that the Ontario Labour Relations Board has the powers set out in ss. 119 and 120 of the ESA 2000 on a review of an order or a refusal to issue an order under this Act. Section 119 deals with such matters as quorum, posting of notices and, most importantly, gives the Board the powers conferred on employment standards officers and authorizes the Board to substitute its findings for those of the officer whose decision is under review. Section 120 deals with such matters as interim orders, interest and judicial review of Board decisions.

For a detailed discussion of the powers of the Board, see ESA Part XXIIIl.

EPFNA Section 30 – OLRB Review of Notice of Contravention

OLRB Review of Notice of Contravention - s. 30(1)

30(1) A person against whom a notice of contravention has been issued under this Act may dispute the notice in the circumstances described in subsection 122(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

This provision establishes the right of a person against whom a notice of contravention has been issued to a review of the notice of contravention as provided for in s. 122(1) of the Employment Standards Act 2000. Subsection 122(1) of the ESA 2000 provides that the written application for review must be made within thirty days of the service of the notice, unless the Ontario Labour Relations Board considers it appropriate to extend the time limit.

It is important to note that it is only the person against whom the notice has been issued, and not the foreign national to whom the contravention relates, who can apply for a review.

For a discussion of s. 122(1), see ESA Part XXIII.

Requirements - s. 30(2)

30(2) Subsections 122(2) to (7) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to the review.

Subsections 122(2) to (7) of the ESA 2000 apply to a request for review of a notice of contravention. In very general terms, those provisions relate to reviews of notices of contravention at the Ontario Labour Relations Board and to the powers of the Board on such reviews.

For a more detailed discussion of ss. 122(2) to (7), see ESA Part XXIII.

EPFNA Section 31 – General Provision Respecting the Board

31. Sections 123 and 124 of the Employments Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to the Ontario Labour Relations Board and its duties under this Act.

This provision provides that ss. 123 and 124 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply to the Ontario Labour Relations Board and its duties under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009.

Section 123 of the ESA 2000 provides that a Board member, employee or registrar cannot be compelled to give evidence in a civil proceeding, Board proceeding or other administrative proceeding with respect to information obtained while exercising his or her powers or performing his or her duties under the ESA 2000 unless the Board consents. It also provides that a labour relations officer cannot disclose information or material received under the ESA 2000 without Board authorization.

Section 124 of the ESA 2000 provides that where the Board has not made a decision six months after a proceeding was commenced, a party can apply to terminate the proceeding. If the proceeding is terminated, the chair can reinstitute the proceeding on such terms as he or she considers appropriate.

For a discussion of ss. 123 and 124 of the ESA, 2000 see ESA Part XXIII.

EPFNA Section 32 – Prescribed Arrangements Re Collective Agreements

Prescribed Arrangements Re Collective Agreements – s. 32(1)

32(1) A regulation may prescribe how this Act may be enforced if an employer is bound by a collective agreement.

This provision allows a regulation to be made that prescribes how the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 may be enforced where an employer of a foreign national is bound by a collective agreement. At the time of writing no such regulation has been made.

Effect of Settlement – s. 32(2)

32(2) A regulation may prescribe that a settlement made on an employee's behalf by a trade union that represents the employee is binding on the employee.

This provision allows a regulation to be made that provides that a settlement made on behalf of an employee by a trade union representing the employee is binding. At the time of writing no such regulation has been made.

EPFNA Section 33 – Powers and Duties of Director

Powers and Duties of Director – s. 33(1)

33(1) The Director of Employment Standards may exercise the powers conferred upon the Director under the Act and shall perform the duties imposed on the Director under this Act.

This subsection provides that the Director of Employment Standards may exercise the powers conferred upon him or her under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 and that he or she is required to perform the duties imposed on him or her under this Act.

Application of ss. 85(2) & (3),88 and 88.1 of the ESA 2000 – s.33(2)

33(2) Subsections 85 (2) and (3) and sections 88 and 88.1 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to the Director.

This provision makes ss. 85(2) and (3) and ss. 88 and 88.1 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applicable to the Director of Employment Standards in relation to EPFNA.

Subsections 85(2) and (3) of the ESA 2000 allow the Director or the Deputy Minister, in the Director's absence, to name a Ministry of Labour employee as Acting Director, with the Director's powers and duties, if the Director is absent or unable to act or if the office is vacant.

Section 88 of the ESA 2000 provides for certain powers and duties of the Director of Employment Standards including the making of policies respecting the interpretation, administration and enforcement of the ESA 2000; the delegation of powers and duties to employment standards officers; the establishment of interest rates for purposes of the ESA 2000; and the disbursement of money held in trust in circumstances where no other provision of the ESA 2000 addresses such disbursement. For a more detailed discussion of s. 88 see ESA Part XXI.

Section 88.1 of the ESA 2000 allows the Director of Employment Standards to transfer the investigation of a complaint or inspection from one employment standards officer to another employment standards officer. For a more detailed discussion of s. 88.1, see ESA Part XXI.

EPFNA Section 34 – Powers and Duties of Employment Standards Officers

Powers and Duties of Employment Standards Officers - s. 34(1)

34(1) An employment standards officer may exercise the powers conferred upon employment standards officers under this Act and shall perform the duties imposed on them under this Act.

Subsection 34(1) parallels s. 33(1), concerning, in this case, the powers and duties of employment standards officers. This section provides that employment standards officers may exercise the powers conferred upon them under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009, SO 2009, c 32, and are required to perform the duties imposed on them under EPFNA.

Application of ss. 89 and 90 - s. 34(2)

34(2) Sections 89 and 90 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to employment standards officers.

This provision establishes that ss. 89 and 90 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply to employment standards officers insofar as EPFNA is concerned.

Section 89 of the ESA 2000 requires employment standards officers to follow the policies established by the Director of Employment Standards respecting the interpretation, administration and enforcement of EPFNA and provides that an officer is not required to hold a hearing when exercising those powers or making a decision under EPFNA.

Section 90 of the ESA 2000 establishes that an employment standards officer is not a competent or compellable witness in a civil proceeding. An officer therefore cannot be made to testify in a civil action regarding any information obtained under EPFNA or to produce records or other documents made or received under EPFNA, except insofar as his or her duties under the EPFNA require such testimony or production. For example, if needed in a judicial review proceeding. For a more detailed discussion, see ESA Part XXI.

Prosecution of Employment Standards Officer - s. 34(3)

34(3) No prosecution of an employment standards officer shall be commenced with respect to an alleged contravention of subsection 89(2) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 without the consent of the Deputy Attorney General.

This subsection provides that a prosecution of an employment standards officer for a failure to follow the policies established by the Director, as required by s. 89(2) of the ESA 2000 (which is incorporated into EPFNA by reference through s. 34(2)), may only be commenced if the Deputy Attorney General provides his or her consent.

Proof of Consent - s. 34(4)

34(4) The production of a document that appears to show that the Deputy Attorney General has consented to a prosecution of an employment standards officer is admissible as evidence of his or her consent.

Subsection 34(4) states that a document that appears to be the consent of the Deputy Attorney General to prosecute an employment standards officer is admissible as evidence of his or her consent.

EPFNA Section 35 – Investigation and Inspection Powers

Investigation and Inspection Powers - s. 35(1)

35(1) An employment standards officer may, without a warrant, enter and inspect any place in order to investigate a possible contravention of this Act or to perform an inspection to ensure that this Act is being complied with.

Subsection 35(1) provides that an employment standards officer may enter and inspect any place for the purposes of investigating a possible contravention or to perform an inspection to ensure the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 is being complied with. Nothing in the provision limits the officer to a single visit in carrying out the investigation or inspection.

Note: there are limitations on this right of entry due to the incorporation of certain Employment Standards Act, 2000 provisions as set out in s. 35(2) below.

Requirements - s. 35(2)

35(2) Subsections 91 (2) to (10) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to investigations and inspections under this Act.

This provision provides that ss. 91(2) to (10) of the ESA 2000 which deal with investigation and inspection powers under the ESA 2000, apply with respect to investigations and inspections under EPFNA. Subsection 91(2) limits an officer's right to enter and inspect in the case of any part of a place used as a dwelling to instances in which the occupier of the dwelling consents or a warrant has been issued. Other provisions of s. 91 that apply to EPFNA investigations and inspections require officers to produce evidence of their appointment on request; address the examination, demand and removal of records; and provide that a copy of a record certified by an officer as a true copy has the same evidentiary value as the original. For a more detailed discussion of these provisions, see ESA Part XXI.

EPFNA Section 36 – Warrants

Warrants - s. 36(1)

36(1) A justice of the peace may issue a warrant for the purposes and in the circumstances described in subsection 92(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

Subsection 36(1) provides that a justice of the peace may issue a warrant authorizing an employment standards officer to enter a premises on the same grounds as are set out s. 92(1) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. These grounds are:

- The officer has been prevented from exercising a right of entry;
- The officer has been prevented from exercising any investigation or inspection power;
- There are reasonable grounds to believe that the officer will be prevented from exercising a right of entry or exercising an investigation or inspection power; or
- There are reasonable grounds to believe that an offence under the legislation or regulations has been or is being committed and that information or other evidence will be obtained through the exercise of an investigation or inspection power.
    - This last ground was added to s. 92(1) of the ESA 2000 by an amendment contained in s. 51(1) of the bill that led to the enactment of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009.

For a discussion of an officer's right of entry and investigation and inspection powers under the ESA 2000, see ESA Part XXI.

Requirements - s. 36(2)

36(2) Subsections 92(2) to (6) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to the warrant.

This provision establishes that ss. 92(2) to (6) of the ESA 2000 apply to warrants. Those provisions deal with topics such as expiry of warrants, when warrants may be executed and access to police assistance in executing a warrant, and provide that ss. 91(4) to (13) of the ESA 2000 (which relate investigation and inspection powers) apply to an officer when executing a warrant. For a detailed discussion of ss. 92(2) to (6) see ESA Part XXI.

EPFNA Section 37 – Prohibitions Re Investigations and Inspections

Obstruction - s. 37(1)

37(1) No person shall hinder, obstruct or interfere with or attempt to hinder, obstruct or interfere with an employment standards officer conducting an investigation or inspection under this Act.

This provision mirrors s. 91(11) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 and prohibits any person from hindering, obstructing or interfering with an investigation or inspection being conducted by an employment standards officer.

Refusal or False or Misleading Information - s. 37(2)

37(2) No person shall,

(a) refuse to answer questions on matters that an employment standards officer thinks may be relevant to an investigation or inspection under this Act; or

(b) provide an employment standards officer with information on matters the officer thinks may be relevant to an investigation or inspection that the person knows to be false or misleading.

This provision mirrors s. 91(12) of the ESA 2000 and prohibits a person from refusing to answer an employment standards officer's questions or from providing false or misleading information to the officer.

Separate Inquiries - s. 37(3)

37(3) No person shall prevent or attempt to prevent an employment standards officer from making inquiries of any person separate and apart from another person under clause 91 (6) (e) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000.

This provision is similar to s. 91(13) of the ESA 2000 and ensures that an officer may interview a person separately from any other persons on matters the officer thinks may be relevant to the investigation or inspection; this is intended to help to prevent "tailoring" of evidence or intimidation of persons, by the presence of others, who may have evidence. Clause 91(6)(e) of the ESA 2000 gives an employment standards officer the right to question any person on matters relevant to an investigation or inspection.

False and Misleading Information - s. 37(4)

37(4) No person shall provide false or misleading information under this Act.

This provision is identical to s. 131(2) of the ESA 2000. It prohibits any person from providing false or misleading information under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009. It has a general application in prohibiting any person, whether it is an employer or recruiter (including a corporation), a foreign national, a director or officer or agent, or any other person, from providing false or misleading information under EPFNA. It covers situations where the information is provided voluntarily, as well as pursuant to a demand or a summons, and regardless of whether the information is required to be kept by EPFNA or not.

EPFNA Section 38 – Posting of Notices

38(1) An employment standards officer may require an employer or recruiter to post and to keep posted in or upon his, her or its premises in a conspicuous place or places where it is likely to come to the attention of affected foreign nationals,

(a) any notice relating to the administration or enforcement of this Act that the officer considers appropriate; or

(b) a copy of a report or part of a report made by the officer concerning the results of an investigation or inspection.

This provision allows employment standards officers to require the posting of notices or copies of a report.

The notice referred to in clause (a) might, for example, consist of a general outline of all of the provisions of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 or, on the other hand, may focus on one or more provisions that the officer feels are of particular relevance. The copy of the report or part of a report referred to in clause (b) may be a copy of the officer's report (or excerpts of it) concerning his or her investigation or inspection.

EPFNA Section 39 – Service of Documents

39. Section 95 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies with respect to the service of documents under this Act.

Section 39 provides that s. 95 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies with respect to service of documents under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009. For a discussion of s. 95 of the ESA 2000, which addresses issues such as methods of service, the effective date of service, the Ontario Labour Relations Board's powers around service, and certificates of service, see ESA Part XXI.

EPFNA Section 40 – Collections

40(1) Sections 125 to 129 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 apply with respect to the collection of money which a person is liable to pay under this Act.

Sections 125 to 129 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000, which are all provisions dealing with collections, apply to the collection of money which a person is liable to pay under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009. For a discussion of the Program's interpretation of ss. 125 to 129 of the ESA 2000 see ESA Part XXIV.

EPFNA Section 41 - General Offence

41(1) A person who contravenes this Act or fails to comply with an order under this Act is guilty of an offence and on conviction is liable,

(a) if the person is an individual, to a fine of not more than $50,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than 12 months or to both;

(b) subject to clause (c), if the person is a corporation, to a fine of not more than $100,000; and

(c) if the person is a corporation that has previously been convicted of an offence under this Act,

i. if the person has one previous conviction, to a fine of not more than $250,000, and

ii. if the person has more than one previous conviction, to a fine of not more than $500,000.

Section 41 of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 is similar to s.132 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 and applies to every person (a term which includes a corporation), who violates a provision of EPFNA, or disobeys an order made under EPFNA. An individual who is found guilty of an offence is liable to a fine of not more than $50,000 or 12 months in jail, or both.

A corporation that is found guilty of an offence is liable to a fine of not more than $100,000 for a first conviction, $250,000 for a second conviction, and $500,000 for a third or subsequent conviction.

Prosecutions under EPFNA may be initiated under Part I or Part III of the Provincial Offences Act, RSO 1990, c P.33 ("POA"). A Part I prosecution can only be commenced by a person who has been appointed a provincial offences officer. Part I prosecutions are commenced by filing a certificate of offence with the Ontario Court of Justice and serving the accused with either an offence notice ("ticket") or summons. A ticket may only be used where a set fine for the offence in question has been established by the Chief Justice of the Ontario Court of Justice. At the time of writing, no set fine has been established for offences under EPFNA. However, a provincial offences officer may use the Part I summons procedure for EPFNA offences. The POA provides that where the summons procedure is used in respect of an offence under an Act, the provisions of the Act respecting maximum fines and terms of imprisonment do not apply; instead the POA provides that the maximum fine that can be imposed on conviction is $1,000. A sentence of imprisonment cannot be imposed if the summons procedure is used. If a prosecution is commenced under Part III of the POA, the s. 41 provisions regarding maximum fines and (in the case of an individual) maximum terms of imprisonment would apply.

EPFNA Section 42 – Limitation Period, Prosecution

42(1) No prosecution shall be commenced under this Act more than two years after the date on which the offence was committed or alleged to have been committed.

Section 42 provides that a prosecution cannot be commenced under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 more than two years after the offence was committed or alleged to have been committed.

The date on which an offence has been committed or is alleged to have been committed is a question of fact. For example, a contravention of s. 10 (reprisal) would occur on the date the employer penalized the foreign national for exercising or attempting to exercise a right under EPFNA (e.g., the date the employee was terminated for having refused to pay costs the employer incurred in becoming his or her employer). A contravention of EPFNA's prohibition against a recruiter charging a fee in connection with the employment of a foreign national would occur on the day the fee is charged. A contravention of EPFNA's requirement to comply with an order to pay would occur once the order becomes final and binding (which, in the case where no application for review is made, is at the expiry of the period for applying for a review.)

In the case of a prosecution under Part I of the Provincial Offences Act, RSO 1990, c P.33 ("POA"), the prosecution is considered to commence when a certificate of offence is filed with the court office. In the case of a prosecution under Part III of the POA, the prosecution is considered to commence when a document called an "information" is laid under oath before a provincial judge or a justice of the peace.

EPFNA Section 43 – Onus in Prosecution for Reprisal

43 In a prosecution in which a person is alleged to have contravened subsection 10 (1) or (2) (prohibitions against reprisal), if the prosecutor establishes that the person acted in a way that a reasonable person in the position of the foreign national would in the circumstances find intimidating or punitive or that the person attempted or threatened to act in such a way, the court may, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, find that the person intimidated or penalized or attempted or threatened to intimidate or penalize the foreign national and that the person did so for a reason referred to in subsection 10 (1) or (2), as the case may be.

In a prosecution for a prohibited reprisal, if the prosecutor establishes that the accused acted in a way that a reasonable person in the position of the foreign national would consider intimidating or punitive, or that the accused attempted or threatened to act in that way, the court could find that a person engaged in a prohibited reprisal in the absence of evidence to the contrary. In other words, if the prosecutor establishes those facts, the court can, in its discretion, shift the onus to the person who is alleged to have contravened s. 10.

EPFNA Section 44 – Additional Orders re: Reprisals, Property

Additional Orders Re Reprisals, Property - s. 44(1)

44(1) If a person is convicted of contravening section 9 (prohibitions against taking, retaining property) or section 10 (prohibitions against reprisal), the court shall, in addition to any fine or term of imprisonment that is imposed, order that the person take specific action or refrain from taking specific action to remedy the contravention.

Subsection 44(1) states that where a person is convicted of contravening s. 9 or 10, the justice of the peace or the provincial judge making the conviction shall, in addition to the fine or term of imprisonment, order specific action that the person must take or refrain from taking to remedy the contravention. (Thus, the court could order that the person convicted return the property that was taken or retained to the foreign national who has the right to possess the property.)

Orders May Also Include - s. 44(2)

44(2) Without restricting the generality of subsection (1), in the case of a contravention of section 10, the order may include one or more of the following:

1. A requirement to pay compensation.

2. If the person convicted is an employer, a requirement to pay wages owing to the foreign national.

3. If the person convicted is an employer, a requirement to reinstate the foreign national in employment.

In addition to the powers granted to the court under s. 44(1), if an employer is convicted of contravening s. 10, s. 44(2) authorizes, but does not require, the court to order that the employee be paid any wages that are owing to the employee. The section also authorizes the court to order that the employee be reinstated or compensated by the employer, or both.

Note that pursuant to s. 45(1), where a person is convicted of contravening a provision of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 other than s. 10 (reprisal), the court is required to order the person to pay any amount owing to the foreign national with respect to the contravention.

Failure to Comply with Order - s. 44(3)

44(3) A person who fails to comply with an order issued under subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and on conviction is liable,

(a) if the person is an individual, to a fine of not more than $2,000 for each day during which the failure to comply continues or to imprisonment for a term of not more than six months or to both; and

(b) if the person is a corporation, to a fine of not more than $4,000 for each day during which the failure to comply continues.

Subsection 44(3) sets out the fine for a failure to comply with a court order made under s. 44(1) of EPFNA. For example, if the court, on conviction for a violation of s. 10, orders the employer to reinstate the foreign national with compensation for lost wages and benefits, and the employer fails to comply, the court may further order the person, if an individual, to pay a fine of up to $2,000 for each day that he or she failed to comply with the order of the court. In the case of a corporation, the court could order that a fine of up to $4,000 be paid for each day the person failed to comply with the court's order. For example, if the court orders that a certain amount of money be paid by August 1st, and the person did not do so until September 1st of that same year, the person could be fined up to $124,000, if a corporation, or $62,000, if an individual, for the failure to comply in a timely manner with the order of the court. The fine would be in addition to any fine or term of imprisonment imposed pursuant to s. 41.

EPFNA Section 45 – Additional Orders re: Other Contraventions

Additional Orders Re Other Contraventions - s. 45(1)

45(1) If a person is convicted of contravening a provision of this Act other than section 10 (prohibitions against reprisal), the court shall, in addition to any fine or term of imprisonment that is imposed, assess any amount owing to a foreign national affected by the contravention and order the person to pay the amount assessed to the Director of Employment Standards.

Subsection 45(1) provides that where a person is convicted of contravening a provision of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 other than a conviction for a violation of s. 10 (reprisal), the court is required to assess any amount owing to the affected foreign national(s), in addition to any penalty (i.e., fine or term of imprisonment or both) imposed.

For example, where a recruiter had not paid an order to repay fees and accordingly committed an offence that resulted in a conviction under s. 41, the court is required (in addition to any fine or jail sentence that may be ordered) to assess the amount owing and to order the recruiter to pay the amount owing to the Director of Employment Standards in trust.

The court could not order the person convicted to pay the ten per cent administration costs portion of the order to repay fees, since the section refers specifically to an "amount owing to a foreign national affected by the contravention". However, the court's assessment of the amount owed to the foreign national(s) could include interest.

Collection by Director - s. 45(2)

45(2) The Director shall attempt to collect the amount ordered to be paid under subsection (1) and if he or she is successful shall distribute it to the foreign national.

Subsection 45(2) indicates that the Director of Employment Standards must attempt to collect any money that is ordered to be paid under s. 45(1) and distribute it to the foreign national if the collection action is successful.

Enforcement of Order - s. 45(3)

45(3) An order under subsection (1) may be filed by the Director in a court of competent jurisdiction and on filing is deemed to be an order of that court for the purposes of enforcement.

Subsection 45(3) provides that the Director of Employment Standards may file the court order issued under s. 45(1) in a court of competent jurisdiction. The order then becomes enforceable as an order of the court for the purposes of enforcement. This means, for example, that a writ of seizure and sale could be issued so that the defaulting person's assets could be seized and sold in order to satisfy the amounts owing.

EPFNA Section 46 – Offence re: Directors' Liability

Offence Re Directors' Liability - s. 46(1)

46(1) A director of a corporation is guilty of an offence if the director,

(a) fails to comply with an order under section 18 and has not applied for a review of that order; or

(b) fails to comply with an order under section 18 that has been amended or affirmed by the Ontario Labour Relations Board on a review of the order under section 29 or with a new order issued by the Ontario Labour Relations Board on such a review.

Where a recruiter, person acting on behalf of a recruiter or an employer is a corporation and an order to repay fees or costs has been issued against a director of the corporation, s. 46(1) provides that the director is guilty of an offence if he or she fails to comply with the order, either as issued, where no application for review is made, or as amended or affirmed by the Ontario Labour Relations Board, where a review takes place and the Board amends or affirms the order.

The provision should be read in conjunction with s. 46(2) below which establishes a maximum fine for directors under s. 46.

Penalty - s. 46(2)

46(2) A director convicted of an offence under subsection (1) is liable to a fine of not more than $50,000.

Subsection 46(2) provides that a director convicted under s. 46(1) is liable to a fine of not more than $50,000. (Note that directors convicted under s. 46(1) are not liable to imprisonment.)

EPFNA Section 47 – Offence Re Permitting Offence by Corporation

Offence Re Permitting Offence by Corporation - s. 47(1)

47(1) If a corporation contravenes this Act, an officer, director or agent of the corporation or a person acting or claiming to act in that capacity who authorizes, permits or acquiesces in the contravention is a party to and guilty of the offence and is liable on conviction to the fine or imprisonment provided for the offence.

Same - s. 47(2)

47(2) Subsection (1) applies whether or not the corporation has been prosecuted or convicted of the offence.

Subsection 47(1) provides that where a corporation contravenes any provision of the Act or the regulations, an officer, director or agent of the corporation (or a person acting or claiming to act in such a role) who authorizes, permits or acquiesces in the contravention is a party to and guilty of the offence and is liable on conviction to the penalty provided for the offence, i.e., a maximum of $50,000 fine and/or 12 months' imprisonment. This applies whether the individual's role in relation to the corporation's contravention is active, e.g., authorizing the act that constituted the contravention, or passive, e.g., being aware of the act but failing to take steps that he or she could have taken to prevent it.

Subsection 47(2) provides that the individual officer, director or agent may be convicted under this provision even though the corporation has not been prosecuted or convicted. Thus, a corporate director could be prosecuted under s. 47, even though a prosecution has not been commenced against the corporation under s. 41.

The key to s. 47 is that the officer, director or agent of the corporation must be a person who "authorizes, permits or acquiesces" in a contravention of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 by the corporation.

These provisions have the same wording as ss. 137(1) and (2) of the Employment Standards Act, 2000. For a discussion of the Program's interpretation of those provisions, which can be applied to EPFNA with necessary modifications, see ESA Part XXV.

Additional Penalty - s. 47(3)

47(3) If an individual is convicted under this section, the court may, in addition to any other fine or term of imprisonment that is imposed, assess any amount owing to a foreign national affected by the contravention and order the individual to pay the amount assessed to the Director of Employment Standards.

Collection by Director - s. 47(4)

47(4) The Director shall attempt to collect the amount ordered to be paid under subsection (3) and if he or she is successful shall distribute it to the foreign national.

These provisions indicate that where an individual is convicted of an offence under s. 47, the court may, in addition to any other penalty, assess the amount owed by the corporation in relation to the foreign national(s), and may order the individual to pay the amount assessed to the Director of Employment Standards in trust, who is required to attempt to collect the amount and, if successful, to distribute it to the foreign national(s). Please note that unlike s. 45(1), this section does not require the court to make an assessment and order the payment of wages to the Director upon conviction.

These provisions are similar to ss. 137(4) and (5) of the ESA 2000. For a discussion of the Program's interpretation of those provisions, which can be applied to EPFNA with the necessary modifications, see ESA Part XXV.

No Prosecution Without Consent - s. 47(5)

47(5) No prosecution shall be commenced under this section without the consent of the Director.

Subsection 47(5) provides that a prosecution under s. 47 of an officer, director or agent of a corporation (or person acting or claiming to act in such a capacity) that has contravened the legislation can only be commenced with the consent of the Director of Employment Standards. This power has been delegated pursuant to s. 33(2) of EPFNA which incorporates s. 88 of the ESA 2000 by reference.

Proof of Consent - s. 47(6)

47(6) The production of a document that appears to show that the Director has consented to a prosecution under this section is admissible as evidence of the Director's consent.

This provision states that a document that appears to indicate the consent of the Director of Employment Standards (or his or her delegate pursuant to s. 33 of the Act) to prosecute under s. 47 is admissible as evidence of the Director's consent.

Onus of Proof - s. 47(7)

47(7) In a prosecution in which a person is alleged to have contravened this section, if the prosecutor establishes that the person was aware that the corporation was contravening this Act, the court may, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, find that the person authorized, permitted or acquiesced in the contravention.

In a prosecution under s. 47, where the prosecutor establishes that an officer, director or agent (or person claiming to act in that capacity) was aware of the corporation's contravention of the legislation, the court may conclude that the individual authorized, permitted or acquiesced in the contravention in the absence of evidence to the contrary. In other words, if the prosecutor establishes that the individual was aware of the contravention, the court can, in its discretion, shift the onus to the individual.

EPFNA Section 48 – Where Prosecution May be Heard, etc.

48 Section 138 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies with respect to the prosecution of offences under this Act.

Section 48 indicates that s. 138 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies to prosecutions commenced under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009.

Subsection 138(1) of the ESA 2000 provides that the prosecutor can choose to have the prosecution of an offence conducted in the area where the accused resides or carries on business, rather than where the offence occurred as would normally be the case under the Provincial Offences Act, RSO 1990, c P.33. For example, if the accused is a recruiter who lives in Hamilton and who is alleged to have illegally charged a foreign national a recruitment fee in Toronto, the Crown could require that the case heard in Hamilton.

Subsection 138(2) of the ESA 2000 provides that the Attorney General or his or her agent may, by giving notice to the clerk of the Ontario Court of Justice, require that the prosecution be heard by a judge of that court rather than by a justice of the peace.

EPFNA Section 49 – Copy Constitutes Evidence

49. Section 140 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies with respect to documents, records and certificates of the Director of Employment Standards under this Act.

Section 140 of the Employment Standards Act, 2000 applies with respect to documents, records and certificates of the Director of Employment Standards under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009.

Section 140 of the ESA 2000 states that a copy of an order, notice of contravention ("NOC") or record signed by an employment standards officer or by the Ontario Labour Relations Board constitutes evidence of the order, NOC or record. It also provides that certain certificates (e.g., certificate that an employer failed to pay an order) that appear to be signed by the Director of Employment Standards constitute evidence of facts indicated in the certificate.

See ESA Part XXVI for a more detailed discussion of s. 140 of the ESA 2000.

EPFNA Section 50 – Regulations

Regulations - s. 50(1)

50(1) The Lieutenant Governor may make regulations,

(a) prescribing anything referred to in this Act as prescribed;

(b) providing that any provision of this Act or a regulation does not apply to a person or class of persons or in specified circumstances;

(c) providing that, despite subsection 8(1), an employer may recover from a foreign national or class of foreign nationals or from such other person or class of persons as may be prescribed, such costs as are prescribed;

(d) requiring a person who employs a foreign national or who ceases to employ a foreign national to provide notice to the person or body specified in the regulations of the employment or the end of the employment in a written or electronic form approved by the person or body, and to provide such other information as is required by the regulation:

(e) governing penalties for contraventions for the purposes of subsection 27(1).

This section allows for the making of regulations under the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009. Subsection 50(1) was amended by the Stronger Workplaces for a Stronger Economy Act, 2014, SO 2014, c 10, effective November 20, 2015 with the addition of the reference to a "class of persons" in clause (b) and the addition of clauses (c) and (d). At the time of writing, no regulations have been made pursuant to this subsection. It was further amended by the Fair Workplaces, Better Jobs Act, 2017, SO 2017, c 22 to allow for the making of regulations governing the penalties attached to notices of contravention under EPFNA s. 27(1).

Conditions - s. 50(2)

50(2) A regulation made under this Act may provide that it applies only if one or more conditions specified in it are met.

This subsection allows for any regulations made under s. 50(1) to apply only if certain conditions are met.

Regulations re Penalties for Contraventions – s. 50(3)

50(3) A regulation made under clause (1) (e) may,

(a) establish different penalties or ranges of penalties for different types of contraventions or the method of determining those penalties or ranges;

(b) specify that different penalties, ranges or methods of determining a penalty or range apply to contraveners who are individuals and to contraveners that are corporations; or

(c) prescribe criteria an employment standards officer is required or permitted to consider when imposing a penalty.

This section permits regulations to be made establishing different penalties or ranges of penalties for different contraventions as well as establishing different methods of determining those penalties and ranges. It also permits regulations to be made establishing different penalties, ranges of penalties and methods for establishing such penalties or ranges for contraveners who are individuals and contraveners that are corporations. Finally, it allows regulations to be made that prescribe the criteria an officer shall or may consider when imposing a penalty. At the time of writing, no ranges of penalties, methods, or criteria have been established and officers are therefore required in accordance with EPFNA s. 27(1.1) to apply the penalties prescribed in O Reg 47/10.

Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009 - Regulations

Ontario Regulation 47/10 – Penalties

This regulation sets out penalties that are prescribed for notices of contravention issued pursuant to s. 27 of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009.

O Reg 47/10 Section 1 – Penalties Re Notices of Contravention

1(1) The following penalties are prescribed for the purposes of section 27 of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009:

Item	Column 1 Contravention	Column 2 Penalty, in dollars
1.	If the notice relates to a contravention of section 14 or 15 of the Act	250
2.	If the notice relates to the second contravention of section 14 or 15 of the Act in a three-year period	500
3.	If the notice relates to the third or subsequent contravention of section 14 or 15 of the Act in a three-year period	1,000
4.	If the notice relates to a contravention of a provision of the Act other than section 14 or 15	250
5.	If the notice relates to the second contravention of a provision of the Act other than section 14 or 15 in a three-year period	500
6.	If the notice relates to the third or subsequent contravention of a provision of the Act other than section 14 or 15 in a three-year period	1,000
7.	If the notice relates to a contravention of a provision of the Act other than section 14 or 15 and the contravention affects more than one foreign national	250, multiplied by the number of foreign nationals affected
8.	If the notice relates to the second contravention of a provision of the Act other than section 14 or 15 in a three-year period and the contravention affects more than one foreign national	500, multiplied by the number of foreign nationals affected

9.	If the notice relates to the third or subsequent contravention of a provision of the Act other than section 14 or 15 in a three-year period and the contravention affects more than one foreign national	1,000, multiplied by the number of foreign nationals affected

(2)REVOKED:

2. OMITTED (PROVIDES FOR COMING INTO FORCE OF PROVISIONS OF THIS REGULATION).

See the discussion at section 1 of O Reg 289/01 (Penalties and Reciprocal Enforcement) under the ESA 2000 for information about when the penalty amount escalates and when the multiplier is applied. The principles that are set out there also apply in the EPFNA context.

Ontario Regulation 348/15 – Employer Recovery of Costs

This regulation sets out the exception to the prohibition against cost recovery in s. 8(2) of the Employment Protection for Foreign Nationals Act, 2009.

O Reg 348/15 Section 1 – Exception to Prohibition Against Cost Recovery

1 For the purposes of subsection 8(2) of the Act, the following are prescribed as costs that an employer may recover or attempt to recover from a foreign national or other prescribed persons:

1. Costs of air travel and of work permits, if the employer is permitted to deduct such costs under an employment contract made pursuant to the Government of Canada program known as the "Seasonal Agricultural Worker Program".
2. Omitted (provides for coming into force of provisions of this Regulation).
